Now, we must take up the defence of what is here so sneeringly and unjustly attacked. We pity Mrs. Trollope's taste, that could select nothing amid the beautiful fugitive poetry that crowds the American papers and annuals: in our humble judgment, both the mass of the poetry and tales they have contained would gain by comparison with the best of our own. Bryant's reputation is at this very moment being warmly acknowledged among us; and we have no hesitation in saying, that the slight volume now lying by us by Mr. Halleck, contains poetry of the highest and most vigorous order: we need only instance his noble poem on the "Grave of Robert Burns:" by the by, his name in the work before us is misprinted Hallock. The good sense and feeling, the desire of excellence, and the information contained in the juvenile tales which have been republished in this country, have left on our minds a very favourable impression of the rising style of American literature-" How can we reason but from what we know?" Our own knowledge enables us to convict Mrs. Trollope of prejudice respecting literature, and it is but fair to conclude that she may be mistaken in other matters. Four grand complaints are what she urges against American society. First, their habit of spitting: now that we really do not undertake to defend, but recommend them to abandon as rapidly as possible; merely observing, that they are not the only people against whom such a charge may be brought. Secondly, their love of ardent spirits: to this certainly worst among vices they are themselves applying a remedy the decrease in the sale of whisky, &c. since the establishment of the Temperance Societies, has been quite unexampled. Thirdly, their boastful arrogance: this, we do own, "is a custom more honoured in the breach than in the observance;" still, it must be confessed, an American has much to be proud of in his country; though decrying the merits of every other, is not the most ready method to get those of his own acknowledged. Fourthly, the want of grace and courtesy in their general demeanour: of all faults, this is one to which time will bring the most certain remedy; politeness is only another word for restraint; and in proportion as the relations of society become narrower, that restraint will be imposed - every one feels the necessity of giving way in a crowd. The impression left on us by this work is, that Mrs. Trollope has never been in the best American society: now, we ask, what impression would be given of English manners by a stranger who went from remote village to village, or from boarding-house to boarding-house? We think much more highly of Mrs. Trollope's talents than we do of her work; she is evidently a clever, well-informed, lively woman; but one carried away by impulse, and, in this instance, notions of republican perfection, and excited expectations of finding what the surface of the globe cannot show. We, therefore, read the laughable caricatures which fill her pages with much the same feeling as we do those in An. stey's Bath Guide, or the Fudge Family in Paris.

Conversation...." I will give the minutes of a conversation which I once set down after one of their visits, as a specimen of their tone and manner of speaking and thinking. My visitor was a milkman. 'Well now, so you be from the old country? Ay—you'll see sights here, I guess.' 'I hope I shall see many.' 'That's a fact. I expect your little place of an island don't grow such dreadful fine corn as you sees here?' 'It grows no corn's at all, sir.' 'Possible! no wonder, then, that we reads such awful stories in the papers of your poor people being starved to death.' 'We have wheat, however.' 'Ay, for your rich folks : but I calculate the poor seldom gets a bellyful.' 'You have certainly much greater abundance here.'
I expect so. Why they do say, that if a poor body contrives to be smart enough to scrape together a few dollars, that your King George always comes down upon 'em, and takes it all away. Don't he?' 'I do not remember hearing of such a transaction.' 'I guess they be pretty close about it. Your papers ben't like ourn, I reckon? Now we says and prints just what we likes. 'You spend a good deal of time in reading the newspapers.' 'And I'd like you to tell me how we can spend it better. How should freemen spend their time, but looking after their government, and watching that them fellers as we gives offices to, doos their duty, and gives themselves no airs?' But I sometimes think, sir, that your fences might be in more thorough repair, and your roads in better order, if less time was spent in politics.' The Lord! to see how little you knows of a free country! Why, what's the smoothness of a road, put against the freedom of a free-born American? And what does a broken zig-zag signify, comparable to knowing that the men what we have been pleased to send up to Congress speaks handsome and straight, as we chooses they should?' 'It is from a sense of duty, then, that you all go to the liquor-store to read the papers?' To be sure it is, and he'd be no true-born American as didn't. don't say that the father of a family should always be after liquor; but I do say that I'd rather have my son drunk three times in a week, than not look after the affairs of his country.'

Notions of Decorum.—" At Cincinnati there is a garden where the people go to eat ices and to look at roses. For the preservation of the flowers, there is placed at the end of one of the walks a sign-post sort of daub, representing a Swiss peasant girl, holding in her hand a scroll, requesting that the roses might not be gathered. Unhappily for the artist, or for the proprietor, or for both, the petticoat of this figure was so short as to shew her ancles. The ladies saw, and shuddered; and it was formally intimated to the proprietor, that if he wished for the patronage of the ladies of Cincinnati, he must have the petticoat of this figure lengthened. The affrighted purveyor of ices sent off an express for the artist and his paint-pot. He came, but unluckily not provided with any colour that would match the petticoat; the necessity, however, was too urgent for delay, and a flounce of blue was added to the petticoat of red, giving bright and shining evidence before all men of the immaculate delicacy of the Cincinnati ladies."

o as Corn always means Indian corn, or maise."

There is a remarkable account of a camp meeting, which shews that religious fanaticism is, perhaps, more general in America than it is even now among ourselves. It is a sore evil; and a sad proof that while we boast so much of our lights, we are yet in a state of miserable darkness. We must, however, stop here, and reserve our conclusion.

The Easter Gift; a Religious Offering. By L. E. L. 8vo. pp. 40. London, 1832. Fisher and Son.

HAVING quoted one of the poems from this volume in our last, we need not add much to what we then said. The more serious portion of society will not, we think, be sorry to meet with L. E. L. in the form of devotional exercise, clothing their thoughts in her sweet verse. Hackneved as most of the subjects are, there will be seen in their treatment by her, a novelty and beauty breaking through the commonplaces of hymn and psalm, and yet in fine unison with the purity and piety of sacred song; graces consistent with religion, and imagination appropriately adorning the superstructure of everlasting truth. The engravings to which she has strung her harp in this new music are of various merits; some of them worthy of all praise, and others of an inferior order. It so happens, however, that two of the most pleasing poems are upon two of the least successful pictures. These we quote.

"The Magdalen (loquitur.)

The plaining murmur of the midnight wind
Like mournful music is upon the air;
So sad, so sweet, that the eyes fill with tears,
Without a cause—ah, no! the heart is heaped
So full with perished pleasures, vain regrets,
That nature cannot sound one grieving note
Upon her forest lyre, but still it finds
Mute echo in the sorrowing human heart.
Now the wind wails among the yellow leaves,
About to fall, over the faded flowers,
Over all summer's lovely memories,
About to die: the year has yet in store
A few dim hours, but they are dark and cold—
Sunshine, green leaves, glad flowers, they all are gone;
And it has only left the worn-out soil,
The leafless bough, and the o'er-clouded sky.
And shall humanity not sympathise
With desolation which is like its own?
So doe our early dreams fade unfulfilled,
So does our hope turn into memory;
The one so glad, the other such despair
(For who can find a comfort in the past?)—
So do our feelings harden or decay,
Encrusting with hard selfishness too late,
Or bearing that deep wound whereof we die.
Where are the dancing stens that but keut time

Or bearing that deep wound whereof we die.

Where are the buoyant spirits of our youth?
Where are the dancing steps that but kept time
To our own inward gladness—where the light
That flushed the cheek into one joyous rose—
That lit the lips and filled the eyes with smiles?
Gone! gone as utterly as singing birds,
And opening flowers, and honey-laden bees,
And shining leaves, are from yon forest gone.
I know this from myself—the words I speak
Were written first with tears on mine own heart;
And yet, albeit, it was a lovely time!
Who would recall their youth and be again
The dreaming, the believing, the betrayed?
The feverishness of hope, the agony,
As every disappointment taught a truth—
For still is knowledge bought by wretchedness—
Who could find energy to bear again?
Ye clear bright stars, that from the face of heaven
Shine out in tranquil loveliness, how oft
Have ye been witness to my passionate tears!
Although beloved, and beautiful, and young,
Yet happiness was not with my unrest;
For I had pleasure, not content—each wish
Seemed granted only to be weariness;
No hope fulfilled its promise, and no dream
Was ever worth its waking bitterness.
Then there was love—that crowding into one
All vanity, all sorrow, all remorse,
Till we loathe life—glad, beauteous, hoping life—
And would be fain to lay our burden down,
Although we might but lay it in the grave—
All natural terror lost in hope of peace.
God of those stars, to which I once appealed
In a vain phantasy of sympathy,
How wretched I have been in my few years I
How have I wept throughout the sleepless nights,

Then sank in heavy slumber, misery still Haunting its visions! Morning's cold gray light Waked me rejuctant: for though sleep had been Anguish, yet I could say it was but sleep. And then day came, with all those vanities With which our nature mocks its wretchedness, The toilsome pleasures and the dull pursuits—Efforts to fly ourselves, and made in vain. Too soon I learnt the secret of our life, That 'wanity of vanities' is writ Deep in the hidden soul of human things; And then I sank into despondency, And lived from habit, not from hope; and fear. I was a castaway: for, like the fool, Within my soul I said. There is no God! But then a mighty and a glorious voice Was speaking on the earth—thus said the Lord, 'Now come to me, ye that are heavy laden, And I will give you rest:' and, lo! I came, Sorrowing; and the broken contrite heart, Lord, thou didst not despise. Now let me weep Tears, and my dying baviour's precious blood Will wash away my sin. Now let me pray In thankfulness that time is given for prayer, I may find favour in the sight of God. Where is my former weariness of life? Where is my former terror of the grave? Out of my penitence there has grown hope—I trust, and raise my suppliant eyes to heaven; And, when my soul desponds, I meekly say, 'I know that my Redeemer livet!

Hymn of the Magdalen.
There was a time when I but sought
In life its pleasant things,
And asked each moment what it brought
Of pleasure on its wings.

I bound red roses in my hair;
And when they died away,
I only thought, fresh flow'rs there are
As beautiful as they.

And time passed on—the bright and brief, I led the dance and song, As careless as the summer leaf The wild wind bears along.

But the wind fails the leaf at last, And down it sinks to die—
To perish with the perished past, And gone as idly by.

So sink the spirits of those days,
That buoyant bore us on;
The joy declines, the hope decays,
Ere we believe them gone.

Then memory rises like a ghost,
Whose presence brings to mind
The better things which we have lost,
The hopes we've left behind.

And what could memory bring to me But sorrow, shame, and sin; And wretched the worn heart must be, With such dark guests within.

I said, accursed be a life
That 'mid such ills hath birth,
Where fate and nature in their strife
Make desolate the earth!

But no more of that evil time—
An altered heart is mine;
Purified by a hope sublime,
And by a faith divine.

I weep; but tears of penitence Still comfort as they flow, And rise to heaven, and win from thence A solace for below.

For I have learnt, my God, to trace
Thy love in all things here;
How wonderful the power and grace
In all thy works appear.
The vincural dies with nurrie liche

The vineyard dim with purple light,
The silvery olive tree,
The corn wherewith the plains are bright,
Speak to my soul of thee.

This loveliness is born to die;
Not so the race for whom
The sun goes shining through the sky,
The world puts forth its bloom

We know that to this lovely earth
Will sure destruction come;
But though it be our place of birth,
Yet it is not our home.

For we are God's own chosen race,
Whom the Lord died to save;
This earth is but a trial-place,
Whose triumph is the grave."

"The Infant St. John.

Lo! on the midnight winds a young child's voice
With lofty hymn,
Calling on earth and heaven to rejoice
Along with him.

Those infant lips are given from above
A spirit tone.
And he speaks out those words of hope and love
To prophets known.

He is a herald, as the morning star Brings daylight in, For he doth bring glad tidings from afar To man and sin.

Now let the desolate earth lift up her head, And at the word, Wait till the mountains kindle with the tread Of Christ the Lord.

And earth was conscious of her God; he came Meek and decried,
Bearing the weight of sorrow, sin, and shame;
And for us died.

Twice shall he come; e'en now the appointed hour Is in its birth, When he shall come in glory, and in power, To judge the earth.

Not as before, to win mankind and save;
But in his ire,
When earth shall be but as a mighty grave
In that red fire.

Do we not live now in those evil days
Which were foretold
In holy writings and inspired lays
Of prophets old?

There is a wild confusion in the world,
Like the vexed sea;
And ancient thrones are from high places hurled,
Yet man not free.

And vain opinions seek to change all life,
Yet yield no aid
To all the sickness, want, the grief and strife,
Which now pervade.

Are not these signs of that approaching time
Of blood and tears,
When theu shalt call to dread account the crime
Of many years?

Then who shall bide before thee? only he
Who is all thine,
Who hath stood fast, amid iniquity,
In faith divine.

Oh, Lord! awaken us; let us not cease
To look afar;
Let us not, like the foolish, call it peace
When there is war.

Oh! teach us to believe what thy blest word, Has long declared, And let thy second advent, gracious Lord, Find us prepared."

The volume is handsomely got up, and we can have no doubt will enjoy its desert, by being one of the most popular gifts to youth which the religious and well-intending in the world can bestow.

Romance of the Early Ages. By the Author of "Brambletye House," &c. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

This is one of those works of which it is difficult to convey an exact idea; for a brief extract will shew only part of the industry that has been used in collecting matériel. These tales have in view to illustrate the manners, &c. of remote periods; and the accounts are correct and the descriptions good; but there is a want of graphic power in the narrative. We will quote a scene in the temple of Esculapius, where a young Greek girl comes to consult the oracle as to whether her lover will succeed in the Olympian games.

"Although the fair stranger had been habituated to the service of Pagan temples, she had never before entered that of Esculapius, the novelty and solemnity of which impressed her with a reverential awe. The dim light imparted a still more ghastly character to the votive paintings that covered the walls, representing human beings afflicted with every ailment and calamity that flesh is heir to. Hideous wounds that seemed to spout out blood; revolting sores, wasted cadaverous forms, stamped with the apparent impress of death, but writhing with the sufferings of life, glared upon her in every direction; the pious artists having aggravated to the utmost the maladies of the respective patients, in order to enhance the miraculous merits of the divinity who had healed them. As the present votaress advanced, strange mysterious music, as of Æolian harps, sighing along the fane, died away in melancholy cadences, until she reached the large sitting figure of the god at the upper end | Every thing being thus prepared, the impostor of the enclosure, when unseen choristers chanted the life and actions of Esculapius, alternating with other voices that sounded from a distance. Passing the statue, she was now conducted to a recess, at the extremity of which a door was opened; the priest who had hitherto escorted her shut it behind her, and she found herself in the sanctuary, the startling aspect of which was calculated to awaken a throb of apprehension in the stoutest heart. Large lamps, supported by twisted serpents of brass, threw a strong light upon Alexander, a man of a commanding stature, with eyes of fire, handsome though fierce-looking features, and a singularly majestic presence. He stood within a sort of niche, attired in a rich dress of white and purple, with a drawn cimeter in his hand, his long hair flowing down profusely over his shoulders. But the terrific and awful part of the exhibition was the spectacle of the god Esculapius himself, in the form of an enormous serpent with a human head, twisting itself round the body and the neck of Alexander, darting out its forked tongue, and fixing its flaming orbs, with an apparently menacing aspect, upon the visitant, who recoiled from the bridling monster in evident alarm. • •

"The priest then began with great vehe-mence of gesticulation to pour forth an unintelligible rhapsody, in which nothing could be distinguished but the different names and attributes of Esculapius, gradually working himself up into an apparent convulsion, until his features became inflamed, his pendent locks shook like the horrid tresses of Medusa, he foamed at the mouth, and stamped on the floor, when he suddenly became silent and composed. only pointing with great carnestness to the snake, which at this juncture writhed its sleek folds, advanced its human-featured head to-wards Tilphosa, opened its mouth, and in a slow, clear, audible voice, pronounced the words - 'Theodore shall conquer!' "

We must add the real history of the scene. and of the priest Alexander.

"At Pella, in Macedonia, he bought for a trifle one of the prodigious serpents found in that neighbourhood, which are perfectly harmless, and so docile as to be capable of a certain degree of tuition. In this form, as you well know, Esculapius is said to have occasionally visited the earth; into the god of medicine, therefore, did Alexander determine to convert his beautiful snake, and to found an oracle with its assistance; that being always a sure and abundant source of profit, because its supplies are derived from numskulls and simpletons. In an ancient temple of Apollo he secreted a tablet of brass, whereon was written that Esculapius, with his father Apollo, would shortly visit Arcadia, and take up their residence at Cynatha; which tablet being discovered by some of his accomplices, produced such a sensation, that the pious gulls of Cynætha immediately began to build a temple for the expected

"Alexander having entered Cynatha with a pomp becoming his high dignity, and exhibited himself in occasional fits of pretended inspiration, during which, by chewing soap-wort, he occasioned himself to foam at the mouth, kept his serpent carefully concealed until he had fitted to it a resemblance of a human head made of painted linen, so ingeniously contrived that its tongue will dart out upon touching a horse-hair, while it can even be made to speak by means of a pipe communicating with a recess behind the sanctuary, where an accomplice ther the chapter be upon aquatic sports, a man secretly deposited in the mud outside the temple a goose's egg, which he had emptied and put a young serpent within it; on the day after which operation, having nothing but a scarf of gold about his loins, a cimeter in his hand, and his long locks waving in the wind, our Esculapian runs to the market-place, jumps upon the altar, and haranguing the mob of gulls and blind buzzards in a rhapsodical speech, congratulates them that their town of Cynatha is about to enjoy the happiness of receiving the god personally and visibly within their walls."

"The simpletons of Cynætha, men, women, and children, being all worked up to an ecstasy of devotion, ran with wild acclamations after Alexander, who, rushing to the temple, calls for a cup, dips it into the mud, draws up the egg, breaks it, and lo! a young serpent is seen twisting about his fingers, which the soothsayer, still acting the enthusiast, carries triumphantly to his own house. Some days being suffered to elapse, in order that the fame of this pretended miracle might spread far and wide, great crowds of people, or rather flocks of sheep in the shape of men-mere empty, brainless vizards, came pouring into Cynætha, to which multitude Alexander exhibits himself lying upon a bed, in a room only partially lighted, attired like a minister of the gods; the large Macedonian serpent, with its artificial human head, forming a collar about his neck, and extending its tail to a distance.'

We conclude by saying, that to youthful readers these pages will furnish much new and interesting information. The Involuntary Prophet is of the first century; Theodore and Tel-phosa, of the second, and connected with the Olympic games; Olof and Brynhilda, northern, as the name imports, and a century later; Sebastian and Lydia, or the Council of Nice, belongs to the fourth century; and the Siege of Caer-broc, an ancient British legend of the fifth age. There is, therefore, much variety of subject; and our readers may immediately look for the farther gratification of their curiosity. as the work will appear in a few days.

Fragments of Voyages and Travels. By Capt. Basil Hall, R.N. Second Series. 3 vols. 12mo. Edinburgh, 1832, Cadell; London, Whittaker and Co.

WITH the memory of the First Series of this work fresh upon our minds, we took up the present continuation anticipating no small degree of enjoyment. Nor have we been disappointed, though we think there is some difference in the character of the two publications: the former being the most amusing, the latter the most instructive. This arises from the nature of several of the subjects discussed, This arises from the which are of higher importance in the volumes before us than they were in their predecessors: for example, essays on the trade winds, on the observance of religious rites on board of ship, on naval punishments, on cheerfulness, on Indian mythology, on the royal marine service, and on the responsibility of officers. These, treated with great acuteness and an intimate knowledge of their bearings, deserve the best consideration of all nautical men, and of the government of the country; they furnish hints and suggestions which no one can read without being convinced that their adoption would tend greatly to the improvement of the various branches to which they apply.

The other portions of the Fragments chiefly exhibit vivid pictures of a sea-life; and wheis doubtless stationed to give the responses. overboard, Sunday on board a man-of-war, or sluggish canals I have already mentioned, con-sailors' pets, we find the graphic talent of the author equally distinguished for general force and technical accuracy. There are also accounts of some trips on shore in Ireland and India, which give a variety of interest to these sketches; and likewise add to the puzzle of a reviewer whereabouts to select these illustrations with which he should prop his favourable opinion of the whole. Our selection must partake of the miscellaneous character of our original; but even this we must defer, and in this No. give only one example, the story of an alligator-hunt at Bombay, under the auspices of Sir Samuel Hood.

The Alligator-hunt " I must give a short account of an alligator-hunt, at a place called Nellivelley, near Trincomalee, got up for the admiral's express amusement, and performed by a corps of Malays in the British service, the 1st Ceylon regiment. Very early in the morning of the 22d of September, the party, which consisted of several ladies and a large proportion of red coats and blue coats, were summoned from their beds to set forth on this expedition. The admiral, as usual, was up, dressed, and on horseback, long before any of the rest of the company, whom he failed not to scold or to quiz, as they severally crept out of their holes, rubbing their eyes, and very much doubting whether the pleasures of the sport were likely to compensate for the horrible bore of early rising. In other countries the hour of getting up may be left to choice; in India, when any thing active is to be done, it is a matter of necessity; for after the sun has gained even a few degrees of altitude, the heat and discomfort, as well as the danger of exposure, become so great, that all pleasure is at an end. This circumstance limits the hours of travelling and of exercise in the East very inconveniently, and introduces modifications which help in no slight degree to give a distinctive character to Indian manners. As there was little risk of being too late on any party of which Sir Samuel Hood took the lead, the day had scarcely begun to dawn when we all cantered up to the scene of action. The ground lay as flat as a marsh for many leagues; here and there the plain was spotted with small stagnant lakes, connected together by sluggish streams, or canals, scarcely moving over beds of mud, between banks fringed with a rank crop of draggled weeds, and giving birth to clouds of mosquitnes. The chill atmosphere of the morning felt so thick and clammy, it was impossible for the most confident in his own strength and health not to think of agues, jungle fevers, and all the hopeful family of malaria. The hardy native soldiers, who had occupied the ground during the night in despite of the miasmata, were drawn up to receive the admiral; and a very queer guard of honour they formed. whole regiment had stripped off their uniform, and every other stitch of clothing, save a pair of short trousers, and a kind of sandal. In place of a firelock, each man bore in his hand a slender pole about six feet in length, to the extremity of which was attached the bayonet of his musket. His only other weapon was the formidable Malay crease, a sort of dagger or small edition of the waving two-edged sword with which the angel Michael is armed in Raphael's picture of the Expulsion of our First Parents from Paradise. Soon after the commander-in-chief came to the ground, the regiment was divided into two main parties, and a body of reserves. The principal columns, facing, one to the right, the other to the left, proceeded to occupy different points in one of those necting the lakes, or pools, scattered over the These detachments, being stationed about a mile from one another, enclosed an interval where, from some peculiar circumstances known only to the Malays (who are passionately fond of this sport), the alligators were sure to be found in great numbers. The troops formed themselves across the canal in three parallel lines, ten or twelve feet apart; but the men in each line stood side by side, merely leaving room enough to wield their pikes. The canal may have been about four or five feet deep in the middle of the stream, if stream it may be called, which scarcely moved at all. The colour of the water when undisturbed was a shade between ink and coffee; but no sooner had the triple line of Malays set themselves in motion, and the mud got stirred up, than the consistence and colour of the fluid became like those of pease-soup. On every thing being reported ready, the soldiers planted their pikes before them in the mud, and, if I recollect right, each man crossing his neighbour's weapon, and at the word 'march' away they all started in full cry, sending forth a shout, or war-whoop, sufficient to curdle the blood of those on land, whatever effect it may have had on the inhabitants of the deep. As the two divisions of the invading army, starting from opposite ends of the canal, gradually approached each other in pretty close column, screaming and yelling with all their souls, and striking their pikes deep in the slime before them, the startled animals naturally retired towards the unoccupied centre. Generally speaking, the alligators, or crocodiles (for I believe they are very nearly the same), had sense enough to turn their long tails upon their assailants, and to scuttle off as fast as they could towards the middle part of the canal. But every now and then, one of the terrified monsters, either confused by the sound, or prevoked by the prick of a pike, or mystified by the turbid nature of the stream, floundered backwards, and, by retreating in the wrong direction, broke through the first, second, and even third line of pikes. This, which would have been any thing but an amusement to unpractised hands, was the perfection of sport to the delighted Malays. A double circle of soldiers was speedily formed round the wretched aquatic who had presumed to pass the barrier. By means of well-directed thrusts with numberless bayonets, and the pressure of some dozens of feet, the poor brute was often fairly driven beneath his native mud. When once there, his enemies half choked and half spitted him, till at last they put an end to his miserable days in regions quite out of sight, and in a manner as inglorious as can well be conceived. For the poor denizens of the pool, indeed, it was the choice between Scylla and Charybdis with a vengeance; and I am half ashamed to acknowledge the savage kind of delight with which we stood on the banks, and saw the distracted creatures rushing from one attack right into the jaws of another. The Malays, in their ecstasy, declared that the small fry from one side rushed down the throats of the big ones whom they met flying in the opposite direction. But this seems very questionable, though positively asserted by the enraptured natives, who re-doubled their shouts as the plot thickened, and the two bodies of troops, marching from opposite quarters, drew within a hundred yards of each other. The intermediate space was now pretty well crowded with alligators, swimming about in the utmost terror; at times diving below, and anon shewing their noses, well what was sure to happen eventually, the ad-

the dirty stream; or occasionally making a canal as the final act of the alligators' tragedy furious bolt in sheer despair right at the pha-lanx of Malays. On these occasions, half-adozen of the soldiers were often upset, and their pikes either broken or twisted out of their hands, to the infinite amusement of their companions, who speedily closed up the broken ranks, as if their comrades had been shot down in battle. The killed were none, but the wounded many; yet no man flinched in the least. The perfection of the sport appeared to consist in detaching a single alligator from the rest, surrounding and attacking him separately, and spearing him till he was almost dead. The Malays then, by main strength, forked him aloft, over their heads, on the end of a dozen pikes, and, by a sudden jerk, pitched the conquered monster far on the shore. As the alligators are amphibious, they kept to the water no longer than they found they had an advan-tage in that element; but as the period of the final mélée approached, on the two columns of their enemy closing up, the monsters lost all discipline, floundered, and ploutered up the weedy banks, scuttling away to the right and left, helter-skelter. 'Sauve qui peut!' seemed to be the fatal watch-word for their total rout. That prudent cry would, no doubt, have saved many of them, as it has saved other vanquished forces, had not the Malays judiciously placed beforehand their reserve on each side of the river to receive the distracted fugitives, who, bathed in mud, and half dead with terror, but still in a prodigious fury, dashed off at right angles from the canal, in hopes of gaining the shelter of a swampy pool overgrown with reeds and bulrushes, but which, alas for most of the poor beasts, they were never doomed to reach. The concluding battle between these retreating and desperate alligators and the Malays of the reserve was formidable enough. Indeed, had not the one party been fresh, the other exhausted, one confident, the other broken in spirit, it is quite possible that the crocodiles might have worsted the pirates, as the Malays are called in every other part of the world but the East, where they are generally admitted to be as good a set of people as any of their neighbours. It is needless to say, that while all this was going on, our gallant admiral, Sir Samuel Hood, was a pretty busy spectator. His eagle eye glanced along the canal, and at a moment took in the whole purpose of the campaign.

As the war advanced, and sundry small affairs of out-posts took place, we could see his face flushing with delight. But when the first alligator was cast headlong and gasping at his feet, pierced with at least twenty pike wounds, and bristled with half-a-dozen fragments of these weapons fractured in the onslaught, the whole plain rung with his exclamation of boyish delight. When the detachments closed in upon their prey, and every moment gave birth to some new prodigy of valour, or laid a whole line of the Malay soldiers prostrate on the muddy stream, like so many nine-pins, I verily believe, that if none of his own people had been present, the admiral would have seized a pike himself, and jumped into the thickest of the fight, hoots, sword, cocked hat, and all! As it was, he kept himself close to the banks, and rivalled the best Malay amongst them in yelling and cheering on the forces to their duty. This intensity of eagerness had well nigh proved rather awkward for his excellency's dignity, if not his safety; for, in spite of the repeated warnings of the English officers of the regiment, who knew from former hunts commenced. And as we, his poor officers, were, of course, obliged to follow our chief into any danger, a considerable party of us found ourselves rather awkwardly placed between the reserve of Malsys already spoken of and the canal, just as the grand rush took place at the close of the battle. If the infuriated crocodiles had only known what they were about, and had then brought their long sharp snouts, and still harder tails, into play, several of His Majesty's officers might have chanced to find themselves in a scrape. As it was, we were extremely near being wedged in between the animals' noses and the pikes and creases of the wild Malays. It was difficult, indeed, to say which of the two looked at that moment the most savage—the triumphant natives or the flying troop of alligators wallopping away from the water. Many on both sides were wounded, and all, without exception, covered with slime and weeds. Some of our party were actually pushed over, and fell plump in the mud, to the very provoking and particular amusement of the delighted admiral, whose superior adroitness enabled him to avoid such an undignified catastrophe, by jumping first on one side and then on the other, in a manner which excited both the mirth and the alarm of his company; though, of course, we took good care rather to laugh with our commander-in-chief than at him. I forget the total number of alligators killed, but certainly there could not have been fewer than thirty or forty. largest measured ten feet in length, and four feet girth, the head being exactly two feet long. Besides these great fellows, we caught, alive, a multitude of little ones, nine inches long, many of which we carried back to Trincomalee. Halfa-dozen of these were kept in tube of water at the Admiralty House for many days; the rest being carried on board, became great favourites amongst the sailors, whose queer taste in the choice of pets has already been noticed."

The Landers' African Travels. [Third Notice.]

DESCENDING the river from Zagozhi and Rabba, our countrymen describe their progress in the interesting manner which we quoted in our first notice of their work.

On the 17th of October they reached an island, where the authors tell us, " we found several Falatah Mallams sent by the chief of Rabba for the purpose of instructing the natives in the Mahomedan faith. The island is inhabited by Nouffie fishermen, a harmless, inoffensive race of men, who only a few weeks ago were obliged to abjure their pagan deities for the Koran, whether against their inclination or otherwise. This is another of the effects of the Falatahs spreading their conquests over the country. Wherever they become masters, the Mahomedan religion follows. In consequence of Ederess having given up his authority to the king of Yarriba, his subjects have become Ma-homedans, and this faith will no doubt shortly spread through Yarriba."

At a place called Gungo they were kindly received: at Fofo, an island, the natives were frightened at their appearance, and the chief kept aloof being in trouble, " from not having a sufficient number of cowries to pay his annual taxes to Rabba, for which purpose, it seems, the messengers are here. It is customary to allow them a certain number of days to do this, at the expiration of which time, if the tribute is not paid, the messengers watch plastered with mud, high above the surface of miral persisted in approaching the edge of the their opportunity, and carry off one or two of the inhabitants. These are then sold in the market at Rabba as slaves, and their produce pays the tax. The same custom we had seen practised at Lever, even after the tax has been paid."

Passing a large river, the Coodoonia, which flows into the Niger, they arrived at Egga, a town upwards of two miles in length, the people of which keep up some communication and trade with the coast. "Their belief (says the author) that we possessed the power of doing any thing was at first amusing enough, but their importunities went so far, that they became annoying. They applied to us for charms to prevent wars, to make them rich, to prevent the crocodiles from carrying off the people, and for the chief of the fishermen to catch a canoe-load of fish every day; each request being accompanied with some sort of present, such as country beer, goora-nuts, cocoa-nuts, lemons, yams, rice, &c., in quantity proportionate to the value of their request. The curiosity of the people to see us is so intense, that we dare not stir out of doors, and therefore we are compelled to keep our door open all day long for the benefit of the air; and the only exercise which we can take is by walking round and round our hut, like wild beasts in a cage. The people stand gazing at us with visible emotions of amazement and terror; we are regarded, in fact, in just the same light as the fiercest tigers in England. If we venture to approach too near the doorway, they rush backwards in a state of the greatest alarm and trepidation; but when we are at the opposite side of the hut, they draw as near as their fears will permit them, in silence and caution."

They were warned of great danger from the savage people below Egga, but were obliged to trust to Providence and set out on their journey.

" For many miles we could see nothing but large, open, well-built villages on both banks of the river, but more especially on the eastern, and tracts of land covered with verdure, er prepared for cultivation, between them. Here Nature seems to have scattered her favours with an unsparing hand. Yet we touched at none of these goodly places."

They stopped at a large town called Kacunda, the capital of a state or kingdom independent of Nouffie, the lowest territory of which terminates at Egga. The king's bre-ther visited them, and, "looking round our room, he perceived several little things to which he took a fancy, and which, being of no value whatever to us, were readily presented to him: and it was satisfactory to see him much pleased with them."

They followed the advice given them, and passed safely down where the river Tshadda (the famous Shar, Shary, or Sharry, of travellers) joins the Niger from the eastward. It appeared to be three or four miles wide at its mouth, on which a large town was situated. This river, they were told, was navigable up to Bornou, and that Funda was three days' journey upwards.

Bocqua was the next place of consequence at which they stopped; and below that, they remained some time at Damuggoo. Still continuing their course down the river, R. Lander preceding the canoe of his brother John, the Journal thus relates the important events which ensued :-

"At six A. M. we were passing rather close to a point in the river, round which it takes an aware of it. It was with considerable difficulty that we got clear of it; but had we been two yards mearer to the shore, our canoe would have been dashed into pieces. These dangers will always be avoided by the precaution of keeping in the middle of the river. At seven A. M. we saw a small river enter the Niger from the eastward, the banks of which, as well as those of the Niger, were elevated and fertile. Shortly after, we observed a branch of the river running off to the westward, about the same size as that from the eastward. On the right bank of this river, close also to the bank of the Niger, we observed a large market, which I was informed is Kirree; and that the river flowing to the westward past it runs to Benin. A great number of canoes were lying near the bank. They appeared to be very large, and had flags flying on long bamboo cames. took no notice of them, but passed on; and in a short time afterwards we saw about fifty canoes before us, coming up the river. They appeared to be very large, and full of men; and the appearance of them at a distance was very pleasing. They had each three long bamboo canes, with flags flying from them, one fixed at each end of the canoe, and the other in the middle. As we approached each other I observed the British Union flag in several, while others, which were white, had figures on them of a man's leg, chairs, tables, decanters, glasses, and all kinds of such devices. The people in them, who were very numerous, were dressed in European clothing, with the exception of trousers. I felt quite overjoyed by the sight of these people, more particularly so when I saw our flag and European apparel among them, and congratulated myself that they were from the sea-coast. But all my fond anticipations vanished in a moment as the first cance met us. A great stout fellow, of a most forbidding countenance, beckoned to me to come to him; but seeing him and all his people so well armed. I was not much inclined to trust myself among them, and paid no attention to him. The next moment I heard the sound of a drum, and in an instant several men mounted a platform and levelled their muskets at us. There was nothing to be done now but to obey; as for running away, it was out of the question; our square loaded cance was incapable of it; and to fight with fifty war canoes, for such we found them, containing each above forty people, most of whom were as well armed as ourselves, would have been throwing away my own and my canoe-men's lives very foolishly. In addition to the muskets, each canoe had a long gun in its bow that would carry a shot of four or six pounds, besides being provided with a good stock of swords and boarding-pikes. By this time our canoes were side by side, and with astonishing rapidity our luggage found its way into those of our opponents. This mode of proceeding I did not relish at all; so as my gun was loaded with two balls and four slugs. I took deliberate aim at the leader, and he would have paid for his temerity with his life in one moment more, had not three of his people sprung on me and forced the gun from my hands. My jacket and shoes were as quickly plundered from me, and observing some other fellows at the same time taking away Pascoe's wife, I lost all command over myself, and was determined to sell my life as dearly as I could. I encouraged my men to arm themselves with their paddles and defend themselves to the last. I instantly seized hold of Pascoe's wife, and with the assistance of another of my men, abrupt turn; and the current being very rapid, dragged her from the fellow's grasp; Pascoe at us, in order to share the expected plunder, we were carried into an eddy before we were the same time levelled a blow at his head with and the confusion which prevailed in conseabrupt turn; and the current being very rapid, dragged her from the fellow's grasp; Pascoe at one of our iron-wood paddles that sent him reeling backwards, and we saw him no more. Our cance having been so completely relieved of her cargo, which had consisted only of our luggage, we had plenty of room in her for battle; and being each of us provided with a paddle, we determined, as we had got clear of our adversary, to cut down the first fellow who should dare to board us. This was not at-tempted; and as none of the other canoes had offered to interfere, I was in hopes of finding some friends among them, but at all events was determined to follow the people who had plundered us to the market, where they seemed to be going. We accordingly pulled after them as fast as we could. My men, now that the fray was over, began to think of their forlorn condition. All their things were gone; and as they gave up all hopes of regaining them, or being able to revenge themselves on the robbers, they gave vent to their rage in tears and execrations. I desired them to be quiet, and endeavoured all in my power to pacify them by telling them, that if we were spared to reach the sea in safety, I would pay them for every thing they had lost." John Lander's canoe, when it came up, was also attacked " and (he tells us) nearly sent under water, by the violence with which her pursuer dashed against her; a second crash threw two or three of the Damuggoo people overboard, and by the shock of the third she capsised and sunk. All this seemed the work of enchantment, so quickly did events succeed each other; yet in this interval a couple of ill-looking fellows had jumped into our case, and, in the confusion which prevailed, began emptying it of its contents with astonishing celerity. On finding myself in the water, my first care was, very naturally, to get out again; and therefore looking round on a hundred ruffians, in whose countenances I could discern not a single trace of gentleness or pity, I swam to a large canoe, apart from the others, in which I observed two females and some little ones;-for in their breasts, thought I, compassion and tenderness must surely dwell. Perceiving my design, a sturdy man, of gigantic stature, such as little children dream of, black as a coal, and with a most forbidding countenance, suddenly sprang towards me: stooping down, he laid hold of my arm, and snatched me with a violent jerk out of the water, and let me fall like a log into the canoe, without speaking a word. I recovered myself, and sat up with my companions, the women and children, and discovered them wiping tears from their faces. In momentary expectation of a barbarous and painful death-' for what else,' said I to myself, can all this lead to?'-the scene around me produced little impression upon my mind: my thoughts were wandering far away, and this day I thought was to be my last. I was meditating in this manner, heedless of all that was going on around me, and reckless of what came next, when I looked up and saw my brother at a little distance, gazing steadfastly upon me: when he saw that I observed him, he held up his arm with a sorrowful look, and pointed his finger to the skies. O! how eloquently and distinctly were all the emotions of his soul at that moment depicted in his countenance! Who could not understand him? He would have said, 'Trust in God!' I was touched with grief. Thoughts of home and friends rushed upon my mind, and almost overpowered me. On account of the eagerness and anxiety with which every one endeavoured to get near quence, many of the war-canoes clashed against each other with such violence, that three or four of them were upset at one time, and the scene which ensued baffles all description. Men, women, and children, clinging to their floating property, were struggling in the river, and screaming and crying out as loud as they were able, to be saved from drowning. Those that were more fortunate, were beating their countrymen off from getting into their canoes, by striking their heads and hands with paddles, as they laid hold of the sides and nearly upset them. When the noise and disorder had in some measure ceased, my brother's canoe and that which I was in were by the side of each other, and he instantly took the shirt from his back and threw it over me-for I was naked. I then stepped into his canoe; for whatever might be our fate, it would be a mournful kind of pleasure to comfort and console one another in the hour of trial and suffering. But I had no sooner done so, than I was dragged back again by a powerful arm, which I could not resist, and commanded by furious gestures to sit still, on my peril. Unwilling to aggravate our condition by obstinacy or bravado, which would have been vain and ridiculous, I made no reply, but did as I was desired, and silently watched the motions of our keepers. Now there were still other canoes passing by, on their way to the market-place, and amongst them was one of extraordinary size. Fancying it to be neutral, and hoping to make a diversion in our favour, I beckoned to those who were in it, and saluted them in the most friendly manner. But their savage bosoms were impenetrable to feeling. Surely they are destitute of all the amiable charities of life. I almost doubted whether they were human beings. Their hideous features were darkened by a terrible scowl; they mocked me, clapped their hands, and thumped upon a sullen drum; then, with a loud and scornful laugh, the barbarians dashed their paddles into the water and went their way. This was a severe mortification; I felt confused and abashed, and my heart seemed to shrink within itself. I made no more such trials. Seeing my brother swimming in the river, and people clinging on to what they could, I endeavoured all in my power to induce the people of my canoe to go to him. But all I could do was in vain. Fearing that those in the water might upset the canoe by getting into her, or that she would be overloaded with them, they kept aloof, and let them take their chance. My feelings at that moment were not to be described: I saw my brother nearly exhausted, and could render him no assistance, in addition to our luggage being plundered and sunk; and I had just formed the resolution of jumping into the water after him, when I saw him picked up. The canoes near me, as well as mine, hastened to a small sand island in the river, at a short distance from the market, and my brother arrived soon afterwards. In a short time the Damuggoo people made their appearance, and also the chief of Bonney's messenger, having, like ourselves, lost every thing they had of their own property, as well as their master's. This was in consequence of the confusion which had taken place; for these people, no doubt, had under foot, were we to remain longer sitting they been recognised, would not have been molested. We were all obliged to remain in our respective canoes, and made rather a sorry canoes, and pushed off the land, whither our appearance, in consequence of the treatment we brother nor myself were in a condition to offer taken from their canoes, they made a rush to tary effect on the minds of the hearers. The

We had been lying at | them any consolation. the island; but now the war-canoes were all formed into a line and paddled into the marketplace before alluded to, which is called Kirree, and which likewise was the place of their destination. Here we were informed that a palàver would be held, to take the whole affair into consideration; and about ten in the morning a multitude of men landed from the canoes, to ' hold a council of war,' if it may be so termed. For our parts, we were not suffered to go on shore; but constrained to remain in the canoes, without a covering for the head, and exposed to the heat of a burning sun. A person in a was a native of a place near Funda, came to us and endeavoured to cheer us, by saying that our hearts must not be sore—that at the palaver which would be held, we had plenty of friends to speak for us; that all the people in the Mahomedan dresses who had come from Funda a great number of females, who were well dressed in silk of different colours. These women wore large ivory anklets of about four or five pounds weight, and bracelets of the same material, but not so large. About twenty canoes full of Damuggoo people had arrived from the various towns near Damuggoo. These persons having heard how we had been treated, also became our friends—so that we now began and this intelligence put us into better spirits."

We come to the result. "We were invited by the Mallams to land, and told to look at our goods and see if they were all there. To my great satisfaction, I immediately recognised the box containing our books, and one of my brother's journals. taining all our wearing apparel, was lying cut ception of a shirt, a pair of trousers, and a had contained were gone. The whole of my journal, with the exception of a note-book with remarks from Rabba to this place, were lost. Four guns, one of which had been the property of the late Mr. Park, four cutlasses, and two pistols, were gone. Nine elephant's tusks, the finest I had seen in the country, which had been given me by the kings of Wowow and Boossa, a quantity of ostrich feathers, some handsome leopard skins, a great variety of seeds, all our buttons, cowries, and needles, which were necessary for us to purchase provisions with,—all were missing, and said to have been sunk in the river. The two boxes and the bag were all that could be found. We had been desired to seat ourselves, which, as soon as we had done, a circle gathered round us, and began questioning us; but at that moment the sound of screams and the clashing of arms reached the spot; and the multitude catching fire at the noise, drew their swords, and leaving us to ourselves, they ran away to the place whence it proceeded. The poor women were hurrying with their little property towards the river from all directions, and imagining that we ourselves might be trampled on the ground, we joined the flying fugitives, and all rushing into the water, sprang into pursuers dared not follow us. The origin of the place to recover them. were Kirree people, stood ready for them, armed with swords, daggers, and guns; and the savage Eboes finding themselves foiled in the attempt, retreated to their canoes without risking an attack, although we fully expected to have been spectators of a furious and bloody battle. The noise and uproar which this produced were dreadful and beyond all description. This, after all, was a fortunate circumstance, inasmuch as my brother and I, having unconsciously jumped into the same canoe, found ourselves in each other's company, and were thus afforded, for a short time at least, the Mahomedan dress, who we learnt afterwards pleasure of conversing without interruption; and he then related to me all that had happened to him since the morning. Like me he had no foresight of mischief, or apprehensions of danger, and therefore he took no means whatever of shunning the immense canoes which he perceived were approaching him with to attend the market, were our friends, besides their large flags. But, on the contrary, these striking and uncommon appendages, to which neither of us had been accustomed, served to excite his curiosity and win his admiration rather than awaken any fear or suspicion of danger. The palaver not having yet concluded, we had full leisure to contemplate the scene around us. We had moored a little way from the banks of the river: in front of us was the market-place, which was crammed with people, to think there was a chance of our escaping; from all parts of the neighbouring country, of different tribes,-a great multitude of wild men, of ferocious aspect, and savage uncouth man-ners. To these belonged the choice, either of giving us life and liberty, or dooming us to slavery or death. In the latter determination their minds might be swayed by suspicion or caprice, or influenced by hatred; in the former medicine-chest was by its side, but both were they might be guided by the hopes of gain, or filled with water. A large carpet-bag, con-biassed by the fears of punishment,—for many of them had come from the sea-coast, and such open, and deprived of its contents with the ex- an adventure as ours could not long remain concealed from the knowledge of our countrymen. waistcoat. Many valuable articles which it The shore for a long way was lined with their canoes, having the colours of various European nations waving from long poles, which were fastened to the seats. Several of these had as many as three flags in each; they were all of immense size, and fringed with blue cotton (baft) cut into scollops. Besides these there were others of the strangest and most grotesque patterns, such as representations of wild beasts, men's legs, wine-glasses, decanters, and things of still more whimsical shapes. Whence the barbarians procured these emblematical banners we cannot tell; but we understand that each tribe has its own peculiar flags, which are unfurled whenever they undertake any enterprise of importance. Canoes were likewise stationed near an island or sand-bank in the middle of the river, which we considered to be neutral. as their owners did not seem to interfere with the proceedings of the day. But there happened to be among the savages a few welldressed Mahomedan priests, who had come late to the market from the northward. were decidedly our friends. Many times they blessed us with uplifted hands and compassionate countenances, exclaiming 'Alla Sullikee!' (God is King!) Nor did they confine themselves to simple expressions of pity or concern; but, as we subsequently learned, they joined the assembly, and spoke in our favour with warmth and energy, taxing those who had assaulted us with cowardice, cruelty, and wrong, had received, which was increased by the tears all this was a desire for more plunder on the and proposing to have them beheaded on the and lamentations of our own canoe-men, as part of the Eboe people. Seeing the few things spot as a just punishment for their crimewell as those of Damuggoo; and neither my of ours in the market-place which had been This was bold language, but it produced a saluwomen and children took charge of the canoes whilst their husbands and fathers were on From the former we received little presents of bananas and cocoa-nuts, which were our only food during the day, but with the latter we had little communication. Both men and women wore immensely large ivory rings on their legs and arms, which were at least an inch in thickness, and six inches in depth; and these ornaments were so heavy and inconvenient, that when the females walked, they appeared the most awkward and ungraceful creatures in the world; in fact they could not walk without producing a collision of these unwieldly rings. The women's necks and bosoms were likewise decorated with strings of coral and other beads, but their dress was confined to a piece of figured cotton, encircling the waists and extending halfway down the leg. At about three in the afternoon we were ordered to return to the small island from whence we had come; and the setting of the sun being the signal for the counsel to dissolve, we were again sent for to the market. The people had been engaged in deliberation and discussion during the whole of the day, and, with throbbing hearts, we received their resolution in nearly the following words: 'That the king of the country being absent, they had taken upon themselves to consider the occurrence which had taken place in the morning, and to give judgment accordingly. Those of our things which had been saved from the water should be restored to us, and the person that had first commenced the attack on my brother should lose his head, as a just retribution for his offence, having acted without his chief's permission; that with regard to us, we must consider ourselves as prisoners, and consent to be conducted on the following morning to Obie, king of the Eboe country, before whom we should undergo an examination, and whose will and pleasure concerning our persons would then be explained.' We received the intelligence with feelings of joy, and with grateful hearts we offered up thanks to our Divine Creator for his signal preservation of us throughout this disastrous day. It was, perhaps, fortunate for us that we had no article of value which the natives were at all solicitous about; and to this circumstance, added to the envy of those who had joined in the conquest, but who had not shared the plunder, may chiefly be attributed, under Providence, the preservation of our lives. Our medicine-chest, and a trunk containing books, &c., which were all spoiled by the water, were subsequently restored to us; but our wearing apparel, Mr. Park's double-barrelled gun, the loss of which we particularly regretted, and all our muskets, swords, and pistols, with those of our men, were sunk or missing. We likewise lost the elephants' teeth given us by the kings of Boossa and Wowow, a few natural curiosities, our compass and thermometers, my brother's journal and part of my own, my memorandum, note, and sketch-book, and others which were open in the canoe, besides all our cowries and needles, so that we are left completely destitute, to the mercy of we know not whom.

They are carried down to Eboe, three days; and the following is of geographical interest by the way :

"We hung on by the shore till the fog had dispersed, when we were again allowed to see the river. We found ourselves on an immense body of water, like a lake, having gone a little out of the road, and at the mouth of a very considerable river, flowing to the westward, it other branch also ran from hence to the southeast, while our course was in a south-westerly direction on the main body; the whole forming, in fact, three rivers of considerable magnitude. The banks were all low and swampy, and completely covered with palm-trees."

At Eboe we must pause till next Saturday, when we trust to bring this review to a con-

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MR. WHEATSTONE on the vibrations of columns of air in cylindrical and conical tubes. The different methods by which the air in tubes is thrown into vibration was explained and illustrated. The lecturer then referred to Bernouilli's researches on the subject, illustrating some of the conclusions by very striking experiments: ex. gr. a square glass plate and a leaden tube were arranged so as to accord on the note producible by each; the tube was then bent almost into a ring, its apertures being opposite to each other: when the excited vibrating plate was put between these apertures no sound was produced, because the vibrating part of the plate, when moving from one aperture, was advancing to the other; whereas, to produce sound in the tube, the air must at the same instant be either passing into, or out of, both ends at once. On bending the pipe into a spiral, so that two parts of the plate moving in opposite directions could be opposite the apertures, then a full strong sound was produced. Mr. Wheatstone observed, that the opinion entertained by Chladni and others, viz. that the end at which a tube is excited must always be open, was erroneous; and shewed experimentally, that a cylindrical tube, such as a horn, gives the harmonies corresponding to a closed pipe.

On a subject of this kind, where so much depends on experiments, it must be manifest that no report of ours can convey an adequate idea of its interesting nature.

A very fine collection of insects (Coleoptera lepidoptera) from the Brazils, was placed upon the library-table by their collector, M. De Lattre.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

MARCH 14th. Mr. Murchison, the President, in the chair.—Six new Fellows were elected, and donations made to the library.

A paper was read on the structure of the Cotteswold Hills, near Cheltenham, compared with that of the Cleveland Hills; and on the occurrence of vertical stems of equisetum columnare in the sandstone of the latter, by Mr. Murchison.

ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM.

A COMMUNICATION has been received, within these few days, from Italy, of a result of the highest interest in science, obtained by the Cavaliere Leopoldo Nobili, of Reggio, in the duchy of Modena, during the prosecution of his electro-magnetical researches. It is stated that a spark, similar to that of electricity, has been obtained by him from the common magnet! In 1708 the electrical spark was discovered by Dr. Hall, who compared its appearance to that of lightning. Dr. Franklin, half a century afterwards, proved, by means of his kites, that lightning was identical with the electric fluid; and in our own time, within these few years, Professor Cersted, of Copen-hagen, has demonstrated the connexion between

BOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

THE reading of Mr. Madden's paper was conbeing an important branch of the Niger; an- electricity and magnetism, from the effects pro- cluded.

duced by electrical currents in the galvanic battery on a magnetic needle brought within the sphere of their influence. The result of Cav. Nobili, therefore, appears to complete the evidence of the identity between electricity and magnetism, and will, we have no doubt, when the details of his experiments are made known, prove, in conjunction with the sterling inductive researches of Mr. Faraday, which were rapidly tending to the same discovery, and with the investigations of Professor Ritchie on the theory and laws of action of the galvanic battery, a fertile source of new and interesting developments in these mysterious branches of natural science. The Cav. Nobili is already favourably known to men of science by his electro-magnetical inquiries, published in the Memorie della Società Italiana, and in the Bibliothèque Universelle; and as the inventor of a delicate galvanometer, and also of a secret mode of imparting to steel plates, by a peculiar modification of galvanic agency, intensely iridescent colours of great symmetry and beauty. In 1829 he paid a visit to this country, and exhibited at the Royal Society and Royal Institution (vide Literary Gazettes of that session) his galvanometer, and a variety of these plates, to which he gave the name of metallo-chromie.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

Dr. BUCKLAND in the chair .- The first part of a paper by Dr. John Davy, entitled "An Account of Observations and Experiments on the Torpedo," was read. The author states these researches into the nature of the peculiar electrical properties of the torpedo to be a continuation of those made by him in conjunction with his brother, the late Sir Humphry Davy, in 1828, while that lamented philosopher was visiting Rome, Cività Vecchia, and various parts of the Mediterranean coast, and from which, for want of a sufficient supply of animals in a fresh state, results of a negative kind only were obtained. The whole of the experiments forming the basis of the present communication, were made by the author during a summer residence near the coast of Malta, where he was abundantly supplied with torpedoes of every size. This part of the paper relates to the electricity of the torpedo in its passage through perfect as well as imperfect conduction; in the former, coils of copper wire and the multiplier being employed, and in the latter, moistened cotton and other imperfect conductors. He found a needle placed in the coil of wire become perfectly magnetic; and states that the back of the animal was found by him to bear relation to the copper, and the belly to the zinc termination of the galvanic apparatus, in opposition to the views of Walsh, who believed the sides of the torpedo to have these relations. The author was unable to obtain a spark from the animal, however healthy and favourable its appearance, or however much excited, although he brought the wires of the circuit, by means of a microscope, to within 17000 of an inch of each other. When, however, the torpedo was placed, under favourable circumstances, in an insulated metallic vessel, a considerable degree of phosphorescent light was perceived to be emitted; but this continuing after the removal of the animal, the author suspected, and afterwards satisfied himself, that this appearance was occasioned by marine animalculæ.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

SIR G. H. STAUNTON in the chair. Donations presented: - From Sir Gore Ouseley, several impressions from engraved wooden blocks, found in a Nepalese fort about fifty years ago: the subjects are apparently amu-lets or prayers. From his Excellency A. R. Falck, Netherlands ambassador, &c., Gericke's Eerste Gronden der Javaansche Taal, &c. and Werndly's Maleisch Spraakkunst. From Colonel Tod, a copy of the second and concluding volume of his splendid work on the Annals and Antiquities of Rajast'han.

Three papers were read; first, some remarks by R. Moncy, Esq. on a mistake of the Baron de Sacy's respecting an inscription at Naksh i Rustam. The Baron considered that the sculptured figures at Naksh i Rustam represented the conquest of the last of the Arsacidæ by Ardashir (or Artaxerxes). Mr. Moncy, on the other hand, from reasons here assigned, believes them to record the abdication of Ardashir in favour of his son Shapur, and to represent him in the act of resigning the regal emblems into the hands of the latter. Second. a notice of the resemblance between the personal ornaments of the Brinjarries, a wandering tribe in India, and those sculptured on the Buddh figures in the cave temples at Karlé, by Colonel W. H. Sykes; and, thirdly, the second portion of a paper on the Jainas of Gujerat and Mauvar, by Colonel Miles. Adjourned to the 7th of April.

PINE ARTS. GALLERY OF BRITISH ARTISTS. SUFFOLK STREET.

THIS gallery will not open to the public until Monday next; but, having been favoured with admission to the private view yesterday, we are enabled to state that, in our opinion, the exhibition of the present year is much superior to that of any former season, both in variety and in skill. A new arrangement has been made: the first, or entrance room, is now appropriated to the drawings; and, in point of light, they have gained greatly by the change.

Without observing any particular order in our remarks, we shall proceed to notice some of the most prominent and attractive works of which this interesting collection is composed; and shall commence with one of the most striking, viz.

No. 224. The first picture of a series intended to represent the Procession to the Abbey on the day of the Coronation of his present Majesty, King William the Fourth; containing the Portraits of distinguished Personages who attended on that occasion. Painted for His Majesty. R. B. Davis. - Those who had not the opportunity of seeing this regal spectacle, or those who, having seen it, wish to renew it in their "mind's eye," will experience equal gratification in viewing the present able performance; the details of which will fully satisfy the most fastidious in technical criticism. But that is not all. It possesses a fine and unexpected character of picturesque composition; for, difficult as, under such circumstances, is the achievement of "breaking the line," Mr. Davis has accomplished it with the skill of a Rodney or a Nelson.

No. 13. Ruins, Composition. D. Roberts. All that the beautiful quotation from Mrs. Hemans embraces will be found in this noble composition. We hope we are not distinguished from the beauty and skill of their execution. by the organ of destructiveness; but we confess that, as lovers of the picturesque, it is, as in the present instance, in its decay that we prefer contemplating the representation of any magnificent edifice

No. 156. The Grecian Choirs at the Temple of Apollo. W. Linton. - In addition to the classic elegance of the composition, Mr. Linton has imparted to his air-tints a soft and blended sweetness, superior to that of most of his former works. There is at the same time a brilliant splash of sunlight on the water, which is productive of great spirit and effect.

No. 223. Reefing Topsails, Gale approaching. J. Wilson .- Whoever observes the trim of this gallant vessel, and sees how proudly she crests the waves, will entertain no fear for her safety. The picture is a fine specimen of Mr. Wilson's powers: we will venture to say, that it is as beautiful in its elemental character, and as fluent in its execution, as the best of Vandervelde's.

No. 208. The Ettrick Shepherd in his Forest Plaid. J. W. Gordon.-A resemblance of this remarkable man as true and unaffected as his own writings. As a work of art, it ranks with any upon these walls.

No. 213. Group of Children. Mrs. W. Carpenter. - The name of Mrs. Carpenter is a sufficient warranty of the excellence of this as well as of her other performances in the gallery. No. 107. D. Roberts. J. Simpson. - An admirable likeness, admirably executed. No. 8. A Cameronian Sunday Evening. Charles Lees .- Under the canopy of one of the most tranquil skies that we ever beheld, the worship of the Creator is here going on with silent, but apparently heartfelt devotion. How striking a contrast to the Cameronian turbulence of former days; and, we are sorry to add, how striking a contrast to the pseudo-religious rant which too frequently disgraces the present day!

No. 17. Landscape on the River Dart, Devonshire. F. R. Lee. - Mr. Lee's high reputation is fully maintained by this fine perform-

No. 27. A Philosopher: a Study for a larger Picturs. H. Wyatt...." A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." We are so well satisfied with the "study," that if we were put to the choice, we would take it at once, rather than wait for its amplified successor.

No. 32. Windsor Castle: autumnal Morning. E. Child .- As true in its effect as it is interesting in its character; perpetuating an object associated with so much that is grand and striking in our national history.

No. 45. The Widow. E. Prentis ... ject always calculated to excite sympathy. It has lost nothing of its power in the hands of Mr. Prentis.

No. 52. The Town of Menagio, on the Lake of Como. F. C. Hoffand. - Frequently and ably as we have seen this scene depicted, we really think the present its best representation. Its quiet waters, its distant mountains, its terraces, and its edifices, are all in keeping with the serenity of its aspect.

No. 80. Portraits of Lord Trentham, and Lady Caroline Gower, children of the Earl and Countess of Gower. F. Y. Hurlstone.—As a centre, and over the mantel, these portraits are well and properly placed. They exhibit the talents of Mr. Hurlstone in portrait composition in a very advantageous light.

No. 73. Flower - Girl. B. R. Faulkner. This, and No. 86, by the same artist, are of a cabinet size, and are worthy of attention, as well from their unsophisticated character, as

[To be continued.]

ME. HAYDON'S EXHIBITION.

As is usual with us, we have taken a glance at this exhibition at the Egyptian Hall previous to its public opening; and are glad to hear our testimony to its high merits and interest. The principal picture is Xenophon and the Ten Thousand first seeing the sea from Mount Teches; a well-conceived and highly spirited production. The Mock Election, at the other end of the gallery, opposes a blaze of low hu-mour to the well-told story of Greek heroism. There are also some smaller, new, and admirable pieces: First Start in Life, a child beginning the use of its limbs; the Dying Boy, no hope—an affecting group of a mother and two children; First Child, another infantile scene, are three amazingly clever and characteristic compositions. Waiting for the Times Newspaper, and Falstaff and Doll Tear-sheet, are rich and capital sketches; Sunday Evening, a beautiful and simple representation of an aged man reading the Bible to his wife. Several "Musings" of Napoleon, at various periods of his life, and some classical subjects, complete the exhibition, which is well calculated to display the genius of the painter, and cause us to regret the still recurring complaint in his catalogue, of a want of encouragement in England to the higher branches of art, and to his own peculiar hardship in having been placed out of their sphere by the Royal Academy.

DISCOVERIES AT CORNETO.

THE excavations undertaken near Corneto, in that curious plain, which may be truly called the Père la Chaise of the ancient Tarquinii, one of the principal Etruscan cities, and which have already proved so productive, are con-tinued with success. One of the learned men to whom they are chiefly indebted, the Chevalier Manzi, who has acquired great reputation in the literary world by his fine translation of Xenophon, has lately caused farther excavations to be made. He had already found a multitude of curious articles, paintings, mirrors, vases, &c. He has just added to these discoveries that of a statue of terra-cotta, as large as life. This is the first of the kind hitherto discovered. Pliny calls these statues auro sanctiora. This one represents a man about thirty years of age; the whole figure is very beautiful; the head is full of character; it has on it a crown of gold, which seems to have been a military recompense. This discovery is an important event to all lovers of antiquities.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Illustrations of the American Ornithology of Alexander Wilson and Charles Lucian Bonsparte; with the addition of numerous recently discovered Species; and including Representations of the principal Insects, Forest-tress, and Fruits of America. Drawn, engraved, and coloured, under the superintendence of Captain Thomas Brown, F.L.S., M.W.S., &c. President of the Royal Physical Society. Nos. II. and III. Edinburgh, Constable; London, Hurst, Chance, and Co.; Moon, Boys, and Graves.

HIGHLY as we thought of the first number of this splendid work, we are sensible of a considerable improvement in the numbers under our notice. They contain a much larger proportion of the forest-trees, which, in our opinion, adds greatly to the beauty of the plates; and the foliage and fruit are quite sufficient for every botanical purpose. Of the birds, the jays, the swallows, the bullfinches, and the parrots, are the most finely shaped, and the most brilliantly and variously coloured.

Filial Solicitude. Painted by Madame Lescot; engraved by S. Angell. Henry Lacey.
A PLEASING subject, very pleasingly treated.
Of all the feelings of the human heart, there is no one the natural and unaffected exhibition of which is more delightful. Madame Lescot has also shewn considerable powers as an artist.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. VII.

Covent Garden Theatre.

ANOTHER arrangement has, we believe, been made at this theatre, for the sake of carrying on the business to the end of the season. After deducting 57L odds, for the current expenses of lighting, &c. &c. each night, the house is to be opened at the risk of the performers, whose salaries are to be regulated by the amount of the receipts. Thus, if above 2001 is received, they will have enough to pay themselves in full: if less, deductions in proportion to their several salaries must be made. When the rent is added, the nightly expenses reach about 300%; so that this new plan is merely temporary, to meet the exigencies of the hour. We hope it will more than succeed.

The Fast Day.

"Tis our fast intent."-Lear, Act I. Scene I.

However extraordinary it may appear to the thinking world, it has occurred, that a member of the Garrick Club has paid more than usual attention to the late Fast day. This gentleman commenced his observance at the early hour of two in the morning of the 21st (in fact before he went to rest), and, in a most praiseworthy manner, made all his doors and windows fast. He did this on the principle of "fast bind, fast find;" he then retired to bed, and remained fast asleep until it was time to break-fast; after which (leaving his fastness) he ordered his cabriolet, and enjoyed a fast drive in the Park, where his horse was observed to be such a trotter, that it became a general remark that "there was not a faster out during the day." The air produced an appetite; but as our member, though fastidious, never in his life knew what fasting meant, he took the trouble to look into Johnson's Dictionary for the actual solution of the word, and its authority, and turning to F, read, "To fast, v. n. to abstain from food—Bacon,"—which he conjectured aimply and literally to point out that he was to abstain merely from bacon. He therefore adjourned to our Club, and in the most estimable mode, piously partook of some excellent saltfish and egg-sauce, to keep up appearances — (he stated his intention to eat buns on Good Friday, and did not omit his pancakes on Shrove Tuesday)—to which was added, three cotelettes savoury improvement to mutton chops was, by the way, an illustrious patroness of penance and fusting; and in the concection thereof, the great Solomon himself is no mean proficient.) After which, as they say in the playbills, a wild duck, with lemon and cayenne, made its first appearance in public, and was received with unequalled, but not undivided, applause. The entertainments concluded with a pleasing selection of apple-fritters, and the customary quantity of generous wine: as bottle after bottle vanished, some thought that our friend, for a fast day, "was going it a little too fast.

Many may have spent " starvation festival" in a more decorous manner, and will probably find inward comfort in their emptiness, and boast of it: but we are rather inclined to agree with our member, and re-member the adage — that "although brag is a good dog, hold-fast is a better."

How to catch a large Trout. -We have heard the phrase "solitary angler," and having a solitary jest, we may as well fit it to the occasion. One of the Walton Club (also a Garricker) was boasting the other day of an enormous trout he had caught, almost as large as that which shines in the last Exeter papers. It was a perfect wonder, and weighed fourteen pounds!! "Pray how did you catch it?" said a friend. "Why, with a fly." "Without the f, I suppose."

MUSIC.

LENT CONCERTS: DRURY LANE.

THE Messiah the chef-d'euvre of the " mighty master," attracted a more numerous audience on Friday, the 16th, notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather, than the incongruous medley (we beg pardon), the grand miscellaneous selection" of former evenings. This evidence of improvement in the public taste induces a supposition, that other sterling oratorios might prove almost equally attractive. Would it not be worth while to try the experiment? The performance on Friday was in some respects excellent. The choruses were extremely well sung, but they were, with one or two exceptions, led off a little two fast. The voices also want balancing, as the tenors are disproportionately loud: a numerical addition to the trebles and Stockhausen sang, "There were Shepherda," "Rejoice greatly," and "Come unto Him;"
the last was her happiest effort, as it best suited the character of her voice. Her shake is particularly sweet and well turned.

We are impatient to make the amenda honor. able to Mrs. Bishop for having depreciated her talent even in thought. The pure and classical style in which she sang "But thou didst not leave," stamps her as a vocalist of the first leave," stamps ner as a vocation order. It was gratifying also to perceive that her intonation was, for the most part, correct. Let her only make sure of this essential point, and she will become one of the greatest ornaments of her profession. Miss H. Cawse sang "Oh! then that tellest," and "He was despised," in a correct and musician-like style; indeed, in the first song her musical skill was put to a severe test, for the full and varied accompaniment was played so loud, that it would have completely puzzled an unacientific singer. Miss Pearson sang "He shall feed his flock" very tolerably. Why should a mistake, which Handel chanced to make in this song, be adhered to? We allude to the word "shall," à la Maintenon, (the original inventrees of that in the first sentence, being strangely accented;

an absurdity which almost perverts the sense of the words, and may be so easily obviated without the least injury to the melody, that it is astonishing how any one can be so silly as to persist in the error. Miss Pearson was injudiciously put forward as a substitute for Mdme. Stockhausen, to sing "I know that my Redeemer liveth." It appeared that she had not previously studied it, for she made several mistakes in the time. Braham was not in good voice, yet he sang "Thy rebuke" with much feeling; and he displayed so much energy in "Thou shalt break them," as to elicit a boisterous encore. Mr. E. Seguin must not depend on his voice alone for giving effect to Handel's music; his manner of singing the recitative, "Thus saith the Lord," and air, "But who may abide," was altogether unfinished, tame, and cold. Mr. Phillips is a striking instance of how much excellence may be attained in the vocal art, without any great degree of physical force. His pure tone and finished energetic style in "The people that walked in darkness," gave an effect that mere volume of voice, without these requisites, would have failed to produce. This delightful singer appears to most advantage in the highest kind of music; for his energy always seems to increase in proportion to the dignity of his subject. The effect of his singing in "Why do the nations," was somewhat injured by the loudness of the accompaniment. Indeed, a great degree of harshness prevailed in the band throughout the oratorio, the soft parts not being sufficiently subdued; and one unlucky violin was out of tune the whole evening. A Master Hopkins sang "If God be for us" in a weak thin voice, and with a nasal tone; but his defects were probably aggravated by the circumstance of his being very much frightened. Mrs. Anderson played some light and brilliant variations, by Czerny, on le petit tambour, in a correct and finished style. Master Colline repeated his variations on the violin. He is a promising child; it is to be hoped he will not be spoiled in the training. On the whole, there seemed a general feeling of satisfaction with the evening's entertainment.

THE second concert of the Società Armonica took place on Tuesday. The instrumental performances were very pleasing. Mdme. Meric and De Begnis sustained the principal vocal parts; the one with sweetness, the other with humour; in both, with musical taste and science. Mr. Chapman, a pupil of Sir George Smart's, was much applauded on his début t he has a fine bass voice.

DRAMA.

DRURY LANE.

Der Alchymist, a grand romantic opera, compounded by Bishop out of half a dozen of Spohr's operas, was produced here on Tuesday, with but doubtful effect. We would fain hear it again, however, before we pronounced a de-cisive opinion. The music in the first instance certainly seemed to be tame and same; yet there were some sweet melodies, with the aid of good scenery to back them. Perhaps the experience of a trial may suggest alterations which will infuse more spirit into the Alchymist; otherwise, we fear, he will not turn the receipts of the theatre largely into gold.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Saturday, Born to Good Luck, or an Irishman's Fortune, was produced here after Francis the First. As some critics have said of the latter that it is not only Francis but Frances but it was not borne out by the fact. Abbot, point, which looked for all the world like a the first; so we may say of the former, if ex-treme popularity be good luck, that its adapter, Power, has been born to it, and is in the fairest possible way to make an Irishman's fortune. Altered, if we mistake not, from an opera entitled False and True, acted some thirty years agone, Mr. Power's drama is very amusing throughout, has several stage situations which are great hits, and, above all, has the histrionic talent of its author to depend upon. His Paddy O'Rafferty is inimitable from the eve to the toe; every look, every tone, and every gesture, is perfectly Irish; and in love, in war, in dance, and in danger, he is alike at home. Naples by mistake instead of Dublin, his adventures are full of bustle; and he is the pivot on which the machinery, composed of a good-humoured old count (Malfi, F. Mathews); a villain (Diddear), with his satellite assassins; widow (Mrs. Tayleure); and two younger fe-males (Miss and Miss H. Cawse), turn in their various evolutions. By a lucky coincidence, this piece came out on Saint Patrick's day: the audience laughed from the beginning to the end of it at Power's drollery; and if all that the newspapers state be true, we could heartily wish that all other assemblages where Ireland was in question had been equally meritorious and successful. It has been played every night since with increased and increasing applause; and will only be discontinued on account of Power's engagement in Edinburgh, whither he goes for the first time next week, to delight our northern friends with a true taste of the Irishman on the stage.

M. LAPORTE, we rejoice to see, opens the French-play season on Monday.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Adelphi. March 14.-The following is a faithful report of certain unrehearsed scenes which occurred on this occasion. A crowded house-impatient gallery-no musicians-sibilant storm peculiar to the Adelphi deities .enter knights of the bow and fiddle—deities propitiated-curtain rises-enter Yates-much applause, more hissing. Yates (stepping to the foot-lights with good-humoured face), "An body displeased?" Chorus—"No." Yatesbody displeased?" Chorus—"No." rares—
"Some one, I am sure, not pleased: perhaps on account of having been kept waiting: a performance advertised for half-past seven always means a quarter to eight." Spokesman of (addressing first fiddle, in orchestra,)— "What is o'clock?" First 6-21 is o'clock?" First fiddle-" Ten minutes to eight." Yates (addressing spokesman of a party)—" Watches rather fast, I am afraid, gentlemen. However, I'll now try to please."
When he entered to commence his second part, his wit was even more on the alert. Halfprice had commenced, and there was a sort of grumbling skirmish in the pit. Yates put forward a listening and inquiring face. Man in the pit—" Mr. Yates, there's no room." Yates—" Sir, I'm quite delighted to hear it." (Bursts of laughter from all parts of the house.)

Covent Garden, March 15.—First night of Francis the First .- Many are the purposed differences between the acted and the written play; the following were among the unpurposed ones. The line,

The lady's praise falls freely from thy tongue, was thus given by Mason, instead of,

And modest pride of her own excellence. accused Francoise of Strong desire of her own excellence.

The terms "modest pride," and "strong desire," are not, I conceive, exact synonymes. E. Tree should have said of the king,

His crimson crest waving upon the air Like Victory's ruddy favours;

but perceiving, just in time, that Mr. Mason's feathers were white instead of red, she adroitly substituted "flowing" for "crimson," and "snowy" for "ruddy." She afterwards received a repayal in kind for this alteration. from Miss Lee, who, glancing at her dark hair just as she was about to say,

Let me hind up these voides locks.

called them "glossy" instead. When Gonzalez. to prove his truth, should have presented certain parchments to Bourbon, Warde had no parchments to present, and Mr. Kemble was obliged to be satisfied without satisfaction; and when Francis tells his mother to Strip me that diedem from off thy brow.

Miss Kemble had on no diadem to strin. Lautree, called in the play a "beardless boy, personated by Mr. Baker, who is, of all actors on the stage, the most black-chinned (excepting perhaps only Mr. Bland of the Strand Theatre). The Times remarked on the correctness of the scenery and dresses. Bennet wore the Mercutio dress of the establishment, disguised with artificial slashes on the sleeves, one of which at last betrayed itself, and hung down like a long thong; and the Council Chamber of the Paris court was the first scene of Hop o' my Thumb (the scene of which was laid in Wales).

Covent Garden. March 17. First night of Born to Good Luck. — I have before remarked on Power's powers as an improvisatore. On his first entrance he stumbled upon a black carnival mask, inadvertently dropped by F. Mathews in a previous scene; and when the applause had subsided, and the audience were waiting for his first word, he thus commenced: "Och, and sure, and some gintleman has dropped his face! (picks up the mask, and examines it.) And faith, and I don't wonder at his not picking ye up again, for it's no beauty ye are" (throws down the mask, and begins his part).

Drury Lane. March 20. First night of the Alchymist. - Harley, as a hypochondriac, fancied himself so many absurd things, that the audience at last also fancied him an absurd thing, and hissed him accordingly. Hereon he took two opportunities of manifesting his own opinion of the part assigned to him. In explaining part of the plot, he suddenly digressed into imagining himself a clock; and on his auditors exclaiming, "Well, well, but what is all this to the purpose?" he answered, "Why, nothing at all, I must confess" (great laughter and applause). And in a subsequent scene, when, on fancying himself a giblet pie, one of the characters exclaimed, "Nonsense!" he immediately rejoined, "Well, do you know, I think so too" (increased laughter and applause). In the last act there was one of the most complicated pieces of bungling it has ever been my lot to witness. A chamber scene was withdrawn, and discovered a forest scene; a trap-door, some four or five feet broad, and of the whole length of the stage, was then meant to open, and one half slid off very correctly, but the other refused to move, so that part of gigantic pat of butter on the stage. The re-fractory half was at last desperately pulled of in some half-dozen separate bits, and the pu proved to be the apex of some butter-coloured rocks which now duly rose, and, being met by a descending sky-piece, the forest-scene was totally obscured, without a soul having entered except the carpenters! After a brief scene before these rocks, they again sunk and discovered the last scene, a street, but the chasm still remained half uncovered! A very Babel of clamorous voices, giving conflicting directions, now arose: " Put on the slide...don't can't_there_where_now_how?" &c. &c. and at last sundry loose masses of board were successively thrust on by the carpenters, till the aperture was covered in most pit-fall-like style. Unfortunately, a long crowded procession estered on the fox-trap side, which was avoided by every body by means of a most wide and whimsical sinuosity of course, and throughout the whole of the busiest scene in the play onehalf the stage was forbidden ground. Imagine (for I cannot trust myself to describe all) the numberless ridiculous effects growing out of this complex clumsiness—the wariness of all to avoid, and the terror of some (Phillips inter ulios) when positively forced across the treacherous covering - the - but I must resolutely desist. The final catastrophe, namely, the falling dead of Mrs. Wood upon Mr. Phillips's body, elicited what the French call éclats de rire. A clearer case of Burking could never have been witnessed even by Burkers. She fell first (excuse me for using the only expressive word) thwack upon his chest, and immediately rolled over upon his throat with her arm pressing on his nose, and blinding his eves. filling his mouth, and totally deluging his whole face with dishevelled hair! I positively entertained not the slightest hope of ever seeing his name in the bills again.

VARIETIES.

New Masonry.— Mr. Milne, of Edinburgh, has produced a machine for hewing stones, which is worked by steam, and almost supersedes manual labour in this mechanical branch of industry.

La Peyrouse.-We regret to see, by a printed letter from Mr. Peter Dillon to Count Sebastiani, that the latter has found cause to complain bitterly of wrongs done him by the French government. Surely the discoverer of the longsought wreck of La Peyrouse deserved well at its hands, no matter to what country he belonged.

"Sept. 3d. - I have been prevailed upon to devote some days to the enjoyment of a country life at the beautiful Ludy G-s, a relation of Canning. At breakfast she told me that she was present some months ago when Canning took leave of his mother (both being then in perfect health) in these words: 'Adieu, dear mother! in August we shall meet again.' In July the mother died suddenly, and in the beginning of August her son followed her."-Tour of a German Prince.

Captain Thomas Abercrombie Trant. — In recording the death of this brave and intelligent officer, in the pages of this journal, we are but performing a duty we owe to the profession of which he was an ornament, and to literature. which he had acquired a name. He was the only son of General Sir Nicholas Trant, whose services in the Peninsular war, at the head of The lady's speech falls freely from thy tongue.

a scene that was to have risen was obstructed, the Portuguese legion, are matters of history. This would have been a curious phenomenon, and nothing appeared of it but its one highest and of imperishable fame. Captain Trant was the author of an excellent volume on the Indian war in Ava, where he served with honour; and his contributions to the United Service Journal are equally creditable to his pen. He is lost to his family and the service in the prime of wouth, being only twenty-seven, having given the promise of talents that would have raised him to the highest honours of his profession, and that would have reflected lustre on any 1 rank that he could have received.

Literary and Political .- Upon the question between the Stamp-office and the penny and twopenny periodicals which inundate the streets, we would desire to take no part until we found time and space to discuss it fully. It is of i much importance, and we have been surprised that so great an innovation was tolerated even for a week. We can speak from dear-bought experience, that the law of old did not use to be 1 so sleepy. The subject of booksellers' monopoly, and the dispute between "the trade" and 1 Mr. Pickering, respecting which he has circu-, lated a printed statement, is also one from the discussion of which we would fain abstain. We think there are many imperfections and evils in the common way of publishing; but it would require a very well-matured and extensivelyarranged scheme to counteract and cure them.

Sinclair in America.-We observe, from the Boston Evening Transcript of February 14th, that Sinclair is singing at Boston with the ut-most éclat. His Apollo in Midas, had there, as elsewhere, ravished the ears of his auditors; and a renewed engagement, though for only two nights, was announced, in order to afford the previously ungratified Bostonians an opportunity of hearing him in Midas and Fontaine-The journals speak of our delightful hleau. vocalist in terms of unmeasured enthusiasm. We are sorry to see from more southern papers that the hostility to Mr. Anderson still prevails. When he is announced, mobs and broken windows are the usual consequence. This is poor work.

Sanscrit Professorship, Oxford. - After a hard-run election, the votes being 207 to 200, Mr. H. H. Wilson carried off this learned prize from his competitor, Dr. Mill; the other candidates having previously withdrawn. Found. ed and richly endowed by Colonel Boden, we are told that the emoluments of this professorship amount to 1,200%. per annum.

Earthquake. - The Gazette de la Trinité (Martinico) of the 7th of last December, says, "In the night between Saturday and Sunday, at ten minutes before eight, we experienced a very violent earthquake, the recollection of which makes us still tremble. There were two distinct shocks, the first of which lasted nearly three seconds. A sensible oscillation followed, during from four to six seconds. This was succeeded by a dull sound like the rumbling of distant thunder, and then came the second shock. which was much more terrible than the first, The earth appeared to heave like the waves of the sea; and the most solid buildings, as well as the slightest sheds, yielded to the force of this motion, and tottered to their foundations. Providentially, no serious accident occurred. The waters of the gulf were remarkably agitated; and on board the vessels it seemed as if they had been violently struck by some enormous body. At the commencement of the evening the heat had been intolerable, and at the time of the earthquake there was not a breath of air. At ten at night, and at two in the morning, the earth again trembled, but these shocks were as nothing compared with the first. Some heavy showers then fell. A similar earthquake was felt at Saint Kitt's."

Magasines. - Our new contemporary, the Comio Magasine, has paid us a complimentary visit on the eve of publication, and sure enough it is filled with wood-cuts and puns; some of the former very amusing, and some of the latter ludicrously bad, as well as some of a better order. Another monthly, to be called The Critic, is also announced.

Beer versus Brandy A society is being formed at Weimar to discountenance drunkenness, and particularly the use of brandy. In order to promote this purpose they are to petition the Diet to reduce the duty on beer-brew. ing, and increase the duty on spirit distillation.

Africa M. Douville's travels in Congo and Southern Africa in the years 1828, 1829, 1830, are about to appear. - Letter from Paris. Mar. 17.

Ments. -At Mentz they are building one of the finest theatres in Europe, the cost of which is estimated at 300,000 florins. They have also begun the monument to the memory of their illustrious citizen Guttemberg.

To the Editor, &c.

Dear Mr. Editor,-I was tormented to death last night with the tooth-ache; the only momentary cessation of pain I experienced was while I composed the following conundrums, and laughed thereat.

What street in London puts you in mind of a tooth which has pained you for a length of time? Long Acre!

When should you apply a sovereign remedy to your tooth? When it is a-king!

By what ejaculatory exclamation would you declare that your tooth pained you? It aches by gum!

Why does an aching tooth impose silence on the sufferer? Because it makes him hold his

To what town in Poland should you go to have it extracted? Pultusk!

Which of your teeth are like a mantuamaker's fingers and thumb when she is cutting out a dress? In-cisors!

When do your teeth usurp the functions of the tongue? When they are chattering!

Why is it, then, not to be wondered at that your teeth cause frequent disturbances in your mouth? Because they often make there more than one row!

But the con. which gave me the greatest delight, and after the making whereof I was so satisfied with myself, as to have well-nigh fallen asleep and forgotten my pain, was the following highly-classical conception:

When does an aching tooth put you in mind of Paris, with his bow and arrow, giving Achilles his mortal wound? When it shoots in the temple! Ha! ha! ha!

20th March, 1832. G. N. BROWNE.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Literary Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XII. Mar. 24, 1828.]

[Literary Gasette Weekly Advertisement, No. XII. Mer. 24, 1828.]

We have pleasure in announcing a poem from the pen of Allan Cunningham as among forthcoming literary novelties. The Maid of Elvar is the name, the scene is the Scottish border, and the time the early part of the reign of Queen Mary. A picture of pastoral and domestic life at that stirring period, when the religious struggle for the Reformation, and hostilities with England, brought so much of sorrow upon the land, must afford ample scope for the poetical talent of our estimable compatriot. Mr. Babage is preparing for the press a work on the Economy of Machinery and Manufactures: the results of his observations in the various mechanical processes used in the arts, &c.

in the arts, &c.

Dedicated by permission to Her Majesty, the Messlah, a Poem in Six Books; by the Author of "the Omnipresence of the Deity," &c. We see, by the by, a remarkable instance of Mr. Montgomery's popularity as a poet out of his own country. A German publisher announces

We like to encourage correspondents, even though some of their jokes miss fire.—Ed.

an edition of English poets, and commences the series with his complete works in two volumes.

An Encyclopadia of Cottage, Parm, and Villa Architecture, to appear quarterly, with numerous designs, and analytical and critical remarks, is announced by Mr.

There is announced, a Verbal Index to the Plays of Shakspeare, by M. V. Clarke, on the plan of Cruden and Buttarworth's Concordances of the Bible.

Mr. T. K. Hervey and Mr. Barnett are about to publish in conjunction a musical volume entitled, Dreams of a Persian Maiden.

The Second Volume of Mr. Samuel Tymms's Family Topographer, containing the Western Circuit, Calabria, during a Military Residence of Three Years; by a General Officer of the French Army. Augustus Fitz-Googe, a Romance of Yesterday. A new and enlarged edition of the Extraordinary Black Book.

A work by the late Barry St. Leger, Esq., called the Days of Chivairy, is, we hear, immediately forthcoming.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Palgrave's Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth, Anglo-Saxon Period, 2 vols. 4to. 3t. 3s. bds.—
Jesse's Gleanings in Natural History, fcp. 10s. 6d. bds.—
Milner's Seven Churches of Asia, 8vo. 12s. cloth.—Truth of Revelation Demonstrated, with Plates, 12mo. 10s.
cloth.—Recollections of Mirabeau, French, 8vo. 9s. sewed;
English, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Hinck's Hebrew Grammar, 8vo.
7s. cloth.—Carnot on the Infinitesimal Analysis, translated by Browell, 8vo. 5s. bds.—Wyld's Atlas, fcp. 12s.
cloth.—Tuson's Dissector's Guide, 12mo. 9s. bds.—Tod's Annals of Rajast'han, Vol. II. royal 4to. 4t. 14s. 6d. cloth.
—The New Family Test Book, 18mo. 1s. sewed.—Minteley of the Woods, 19mo. 6s. plain; 9s. coloured, cloth, lettered.—Taylor's Tales of the Saxons, fcp. 5s. cloth.—
Ship of the Desert, 18mo. 1s. 6d. hf.-bd.—The Preacher, Vol. 111. 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—Woman's Love, a Novel, 3 vols.
post 8vo. 1t. 11s. 6d. bds.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

L. can, we presume, have any information he seeks relative to the Labourer's Friend Society at Mr. Wright's, the Treasurer, 74, West Smithfield; or Dean and Munday's, the publishers, in Threadnedle Street.

A. W. cannot be inserted.

To W. we need not profess our desire to make the Literary Gasette pleasing and instructive to the fair sex: unless it were so, we should doubt of its deserving well even of the learned and scientific. Our only excuse in the instance alluded to, was the difficulty of finding room for new matters. new matters.

We are obliged to postpone the conclusion of our review of Mr. Jesse's delightful volume.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

	February.	i Th⊲	ermoi	nete	Barometer.
١	Thursday 23	From						30.18
	Friday 24	• • • • •	20.	• •	37.	30.14		30-04
	Saturday · 25	• • • • •	21.	••	37.	30.07		30-00
	Sunday 26		30.		43.	30-13	٠.	30.06
	Monday · · 27	• • • • •	28.	• •	41.	30-05	••	30.09
	Tuesday · 28		29.	••	37.	30-12	• •	30.13
İ	Tuesday · · 28 Wednesday 29		30.	••	43.	30.13	••	30.05
ı

Prevailing winds, N.E. and N.W. Except the afternoons of the 24th and 26th, cloudy.

March.		The	ernioi	nele	1 Barometer.
Thursday	1	From	30.	to	42.	30.10	to	30.20
Friday			34.	••	45.	30-22
Saturday						30-25	••	30-13
Sunday	4	• • • • •	35.	• •	48.	29-95	• •	29-69
Monday	5	• • • • •				29-66		29.58
Tuesday	6	• • • • •	32.	• •	46-	29.49		29.34
Wednesday	7	1	29.	••	43.	29.34	••	29.35

Wind variable, S.E. and S.W. prevailing.

Except the 5th and 7th, cloudy: rain on the 1st, 4th, and 6th.

Rain fallen, .525 of an inch.

March.	1 Th	ermo	mele	Barometer.
Thursday · 8	From				29.39	to	29-88
Friday 9	• • • • •				29-93		30-10
Saturday 10	• • • • •	20.	• •	47.	30-28	• •	30:36
Sunday 11					30-34		30:16
Monday · 12					29-99
Tuesday · · 13	1				29·86
Wednesday 14					29-52

Wind variable, N.W. and S.E. prevailing. Generally clear till the 13th; rain fell frequently during Merch.	1 Th	grano.	male	Barometer.

Thursday 15	From	31.	to	43.	29-29	to	29-66
Friday · · · 16		25.		44.	29-76	• •	29.73
Saturday · · 17		30.		51.	29-65	• •	29.42
Sunday · · · 18		33.		51.	29-49	Stat	ionary
Monday · 19		32.	٠.	50.	29-66
Tuesday · · 20		36.		51.	29-48
Wednesday 91		33.		57.	30-00

Wind variable, S.W. prevailing. Except the 20th and 21st, generally cloudy, with frequent rain.

Rain fallen, 6 of an inch-Edmonton. CHARLES I Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude 9 3 51 W. of Greenwich. CHARLES H. ADAMS.

GENERAL ACCOUNT FOR THE YEAR 1831.

(Kept at Edmonton.)

	Thermome ter.					Barometer.				Winds.
Month.	Highest.	Lowest.	Mean.	Range.	Highest.	Lowest.	Mean.	Range.	Inches.	N.	s.	E .	W.	N.E.	S.E.	N.W.	S.W.
January February	50 62 61 65 77 77 82 79 71 69 58 55	16 10 25 27 20 37 45 43 37 33 22 21	31·9 41·22 43·89 52·1 56·46 60·12 63·56 64·48 52·28 54·35 42·22 41·67	34 52 36 38 57 40 37 36 34 36 36 36 34	30-5 30-3 30-32 30-3 30-24 30-17 30-26 30-21 30-16 30-33 30-44 30-39	29·14 29·12 29·12 29·32 29·36 29·56 29·64 29·34 29·29 29·26 28·9	29-4555 29-7883 29-7963 29-6377 29-8815 29-785 29-9352 29-9435 29-8957 29-827 29-8264 29-7923	1-36 1-3 1-2 1-1 -92 -61 -67 -57 -82 1-04 1-18 1-49	1-275 2-95 1-65 1-825 1-65 1-505 2-625 1-5 3-675 4-4 1-6 2-15	3½ 1½ 1½ 1½	1 23 1	3 2 3 2 3	1 2 2	9 1 5 9 14 2 1 8 7 1 1 2 1 1 2 1 1	71 4 5 4 4 4 6 8 1 2 1	12 6 8 3 10 5 13 11 11 9	10 13 3 4 16 11 7 10 20 17 17
Year	82	10	50-36	72	30-5	28-9	29-797	1.6	26-805	8	6	11	4	611	461	921	135

(Kept at High Wycombe, Bucks.)

		Thermometer.				Barometer.				Winds.
Month.	Highest.	Lowest.	Mean.	Range.	Highest.	Lowest.	Mean.	Range.	Inches.	N.	S.	E.	W.	N.E.	S.E.	N.W.	S.W.
January February March April May June July August September October November	49 60·5 60·5 64·5 69·25 73·75 78·5 75 68 69 56	19 9 27 28 25 39 42·5 43·25 36 30 20·5	33-01209 38-66294 42-64112 46-36666 49-7258 55-59375 58-77829 60-50906 53-78333 51-9133 39-3625	33·5 36·5 44·25 34·75 36 31·75 32 39 35·5	30·34 30·03 30·23 30·06 29·95 30·09 30·02 30 30·15 30·26	28-81 28-68 28-88 28-93 29-17 29-32 29-36 29-39 29-07 29-02 29-02	29·57741 29·5813 29·61376 29·45252 29·65935 29·70111 29·70548 29·66533 29·6058 29·63844	1·35 1·35 1·27 0·89 0·63 0·73 0·63 0·93 1·13 1·24	2·721 3·8683 2·8875 1·27625 2·59375 1·75625 3·4625 2·13125 4·15 3·6375 2·7075	6 2 7 5 2 8 5 3 1 2	4 3	1 2 1 3 1 3 1 2	11 10 2 1 7 5 5	2 6 4 10 2 3 1 1	4 3 6 1 1 5 9	8	4 7 3 1 10 9 8 11 14 5
Year	78-5	9	38·90322 47·43758	695	30-19	28-66	29.46483	-	344625	42	_	_	56	_	9	-	-

(Kept at Cheltenham.)

1830.		Then	mometer.		Barometer.				Winds.
Month.	Highest	Lowest	Mean.	Range.	Highest	Lowest	Ken.	Range.	z.	ŝ	녀	₩.	i Z	S. E.	N.W.	S.W.
January February March April May June July August September October November December	49-5 58 69 74-5 75 70 81-5 74 67 71 61 52	10 17 36·5 26 40 43 49 43·5 43·5 38·5 38·5	32-145 36-85 48-4 50-39 55-45 55-8 63-06 58-234 55-09 52-355 46-775 36-76	32·5 41 32·5 48·5 35 27 32·5 31·5 23·5 32·5 32·5	30-35 30-07 30-38 30-04 30-05 30-04 30 30-2 30-07 30-14	28.76 29.16 29.23 29.05 29.19 29.25 29.25 29.1 29.5 28.8 28.76	29-778 29-66 29-857 29-61 29-69 29-616 29-65 29-624 29-52 29-915 29-52 29-37	1·59 0·91 1·15 0·99 0·66 0·67 0·79 1·0 0·7 1·27	9i 1 3 3i 8i 1 5	1 2	6 5 1 5 14 4 3 14 2	6 8	24 1	3 64 5 4 3 2 3 84 5	1 2 1 1	14 74 16 144 11 5 144 19 84 6 19 5
Year			49.275	71.5	30-38			1-62	_	444	30	_	151	_	181	1131

1831.		Thern	nometer.		Barometer.				Winds.
Month.	Highest	Lowest	Мевп.	Range.	Highest	Lowest.	Mean	Range.	z	s.	댿	₩.	N.E.	S.E.	N.W.	S.W.
January	50	25	36-47	25	30.26	28-91	29-642	1.35	5	11	34	1	5	14
February. March	61 60-5	29 32·5	42·7 46·52	32 28	30-07	28·75 28·9	29·565 29·578	1.32	3	5 41	2	4	1 34	1 1 3 1 3 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	21	11 91
April · · · ·	62.5	34.5	49-63	28	30-14	28.86	29-443	1.28	64	54	54	í	6	3	٠.	2
May ····	69.5	33	54.146	36.5	30-18	29-22	29-81	0.96	ī.	21	111	2	6	4	1	4
June ····	72.5	48	61.3	24.5	29-97	29.44	29-785	0.53	3	4	2			1	4	11
July ····	77.5	50	63.355	27.5	30-06	29.46	29-765	0.6	3	2	1		3	5	3	114
August	77.5	52.5	64.47	25	29-96	29.44	29.71	0.52	51	31 51	3	9	21	2	3
September	68	46	58-08	22	29-94	29.14	29-64	0.8	91	5	1	11	ĺ	44		.8
October · · November	68	43	57.33	25	30-06	99-02	29-561	1.04		111	١.	اما	١.	31		16
December	58 58·5	32·5 35	46·375 46·08	25·5 23·5	30-24	29-16	29-655 29-532	1.08	1	9	ا ا	8		:	1	15 10
December	99.5	33	20.00	29.2	30.2	20.02	20.002	1-06	1	, ,	3	3		3	2	10
Year	77.5	25	52-2047	52-5	30-26	28.52	29-64	1.74	361	543	391	491	07	484	21	101

At Edmonton, the warmth of the day is observed by means of a thermometer exposed to the north in the shade, standing about four feet above the surface of the ground; the extreme cold of the night is ascertained by a self-registering thermometer, in a similar situation; the daily range of the barometer is known from observations made at intervals of four hours each, from eight A.M. till eight P.M.; the water and the direction of the wind are the result of the most frequent observations; the rain is measured every morning at eight o'clock.

At Welcombe, the thermometer and barometer are registered at eight A.M. at three and the most frequent observations.

At Cheltenham, the temperature is ascertained by a self-registering thermometer, suspended about five feet from the ground, in a north-east aspect, and the observation made daily at eight A.M.; the winds and harometer are registered at eight A.M. and eight P.M.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL
MALL. The Gallery for the Exhibition and Sale of the Works of British Artists, isopen daily, from Ten in the Moraing till Five in the Evening, is. Catalogue, is.
Admission, I. Catalogue, is.
WILLIAM BARNARD, Kesper.

COLETY of BRITISH ARTISTS...

The Ninth Assessed Rathfaction of the Secrety of British Artists, in Suffice Servet, 7211 Mail Seat, containing upwards of 800 Works of Art in the various Departments of Paladians, Scatter, Architecture, 1878 and 187

Admittance, 1s.—Catalogue, 1s. EDWARD PRENTIS, Secretary.

EXHIBITION of PAINTINGS in A HIBITION Of FAINTINGS IN LAMMEL COLOURS on GLASS.—Belsharrar's Feez (Martin)—Joshus Commanding the Sun to stand still (Martin-Trial of Queen Katherine (Harlow)—Group of Charity (Sir J. Repnelds), &c. Fainted by Mearra. Hoodley and Olddield. Wallows on thursday next, March Soll, at 397, Strand, mear Exer Hall. Private View on Wednesday.

Admittance, 1s.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON. COMPARATIVE ANATOMY and ZOOLOGY, Sam-

COMPARATIVE ANATOMY and AUGULOGY, Demor Course.

On Monday, the 3st of April, as Eleven o'Cleck, Dr. Grant will come could be Course, subtracing a General Yiew of the Structure of the Course Course of the Course of the Animal Kingdom.

The Lectures are delivered daily, except Saturday; and the Course continues to the end of June. Pee, M.

Botany.—Mr. Lindley will commence his Spring Course on Tuesday, the 3d of April next, at Eight o'Clock in the Merning. The Lectures will be given every succeeding Tuesday. Thursday. Priday, and Saturday, at the same Hour, till the beginning July.

THOMAS COATES.

WANTED to PURCHASE, Part the First VV of the New edition of "Dugdale's History of St. Paul's Cathedral," for which $2. 2c. will be given by applying to Mr. Penn, Bookseller, Charing Cross.

Just published, price, on drawing-board, &c.; on drawing-paper, &c. THE NEW PLANETARIUM; with Directions for its visa.

THE NEW PLANETA RIUM; with Directions for its Use.

By T. G. BUNT, Land Burveyor, Bristol.

This beautifully engraved Diagram of the Planetary Orbin, which shews, almost at inspection, a Planet's exact place in the Heavens, and performs a variety of other interesting Problems, will be feend highly useful in suching the Riemanns of Popular and Practical Astronomy.

To be had of the Publisher, R. Pauntierry, 186, Leadenhall Brivest, London; of the Booksallers and Opticians in Bristol; or of the Author, formall Street Court, Bristol.

"The beautiful Flanetarium by Mr. Beam accurately exhibits there are also be a such as the place of the Author, formall Street Court, Bristol.

"The beautiful Flanetarium by Mr. Beam accurately exhibits there are also be a such as the place of their intersections with the places of their intersections with the places of their intersections with the places of their intersections with the construction, it enables the standard to trace, for any part of this and the following century, the situations of the various planets in reference to the to the same and to the sun, and also to the ecliptic. It thus renders an ephemeris unnecessary for those purposes, in the employment of the colestial globe; and the use of it will lead to much sold information respecting the planetary movement. Mr. Bunt's Planetarium, with an explanatory book, its sold at very mederate price, and well deserves encouragement.—Lectures on Astronomy, delibered at the Bristell Institution, by the Rev. L. Carpenier, L. L.

Estimat of a Leiter from the Rev. Thomas Enley, A.M.—I have examined Mr. Bunt's Planetarium, and find that it gives the places of the planets with great accuracy and facility. Having som the above remarks of Dr. Carpenier, I have the antification is my, that I fully concer with his sentiments an the subject.

Two Extant.

TO STATIONERS and BOOKSELLERS.

A very desirable Opportunity presents intelf to any Veng
Man desirous of commercing Business in the above Trades.

The Proprietor of a well-established nearly ready money Business in the above Lines, situated in the best part of Oxford Street, near Regent Street, having another extensive concern that claims is attention, is desirous of disposing of the unexpired Lesse of if Vent, of his Shop and excellent House, in perfect repair, situates as above, which possessee many advantages, from having TroPrivate Entrances. Either a Fortion or the Whole of the Stock may be taken at a Valuation, to accommodate the Furchesse.

To view, and for further Particulars, apply at 351, Oxford Street.

A DVERTISEMENTS for the BELLICIA MAGAZINE of Religious and Ecclesiastical Information, Percehial History, Documents respecting the State of the Poor, Progress of Education, &c. No. 11. for April, are requested to be forwarded to the Publishers, John Turrill, 289, Requestion, Declaration of Street, Londons; or to Mesars. Parker, Oxford; Grant, Cambridge; Stillies Brothers, Edinburgh; and Wakenzo, Dabin; where Terms of inserting Bills and Advertisements may be had. DVERTISEMENTS for the BRITISH

PORTRAITS and MEMOIRS of Lord Helland, Right Hon. J. W. Control

April 2d, will be published,
THE THIRD VOL. of the NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY, containing the following Thirty-six Portraits, engraved in the most finished style from the original Paintings by Sir Thomas Lawrence, Sir J. Reynolds, Sir M. A. Shee, Pickersgill, &c. &c.

Sir M. A. Shee, Pickeragili, &c. &c.

His Majesty William IV.

H. R. H. the Dake of Sussex
H. R. H. the late Duke of Yerk
Frince George of Cumberland
His Majesty Leopold L.
Aberdeen, Earl of Abercromby, Sir Ralph Albemarie, Earl of Gardner, Admiral Alan
Halland, Lerd
Hastings, Warren
Heating, Lerd Hond, J. W.
Croker, Right Hon. J. W.
Campbell, Thomas, Esq.
Collingwood, Admiral Lord
Cooper, Sir Auley, Bart.
Corran, Right Hon. J. P.
Donkin, Sir Kufane
Dundas, Robert, late Lord Chief
Baron of Scottand

"In sonclusion, we think this delightful publication w

Baron of Scotland

"In conclusion, we think this delightful publication well worthy of its name, National; for we cannot conceive any work more likely to create a desire in noble and generous youths to gand 'do likewise;' thus raising a spirit of emulation that may prove of inestimable service to our country."—Gretformer's Reg. London: Pinher, Son, and Co.; and Simpkin and Marshall.

MUSIC.

This day is published, price 12s.

SONGS of the OCEAN. The Poetry by
J. F. Smith, Eq.; the Music by C. H. Mueller.

Lendon: Goulding and D'Almaine; and may be had of Simpkin and Marshall, and all Music and Booksellers.

and Marshall, and all Music and Booksellers.

Also, just published,

The Usurer's Daughter; a Novel. By a Contributor to Blackwood's Magazine. 3 rols. post8vo. 11.8s. 6d. boards.

"The author has succeeded in spreading over his book that mysterious and oppressive spirit of power, which, like the fascination of the serpent, deprives its rictim of all ability to resist to excape."—Specialor.

"This very clerer nevel will be a favourite with the public."—Literary Gazette.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Uniform with Hood's Comic Annual.
Price 12s. neatly bound, gill edges,
HIMS and ODDITIES, in Proce and

V ALAMAD

Verse By THOMAS HOOD, Eq.

new edit. containing the whole of both Series, now compresinte 1 vol. with Additions, and a new Preface.

Charles Tilt, 36, Fleet Street.

New editions of the Comic Annual, for 1830,

Appropriate Present for Youla.

Handsomely printed in 2 pochet vols. with Frontispieces, and neatly bound in cloth, lettered in gold, price 2s. or in morocce, price 15c.

M A Y Y O U L I K E I T.

By the Rev. C. B. TAYLER, M.A.

Author of "Records of a Good Man's Life."

Sch edition, revised and improved.

Printed for Charles Tilt, Fleet Street.

Burke's Works complete, with General Index.

In 16 vols. Svo. price 6t. 17s. boards,

THE WORKS of the Right Honourable

EDMUND BURKE.

Frinted for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

o. A few Copies may be had on royal paper, price 9t. 12s. in boards. Also several of the latter Volumes, in demy and royal 8vo. and 4to. to complete Sets.

Revised and augmented, in 8 vots. 8vo. price 86v.

Revised and augmented, in 8 vots. 8vo. price 86v.

ARETTI'S DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH and ITALIAN LANGUAGES; to which is prefered, an Italian and English Grammar, founded on the Rules of Dr. Johnson and Buomnattes. The 8th edition.

N.B. It is an important feature in Baretti's Dictionary, that while it contains every Word necessary to be known by those who study the Italian Language with a view to speak and write it with elegance, it rejects those "indelicate, obsolete, and previncial terms," which render some other Dictionaries so gross as to forbid their ase in respectable society.
Lendon: Printed for Longman and Co.; T. Cadell; Baldwin and Co.; J. Richardson; J. Booker; Rivingtens; R. Scheley; J. Dancan; Hamilton and Co.; Whitaker and Co.; T. Roosey; Dulku and Co.; Busk and Co.; Bask and Co.; T.
Roosey; Dulku and Co.; Meysard; Cochran and Rey; Heelstons;
All Cogion; J. 2 and W. Boome; W. Mason; Fooks and Co. Edinburgh; and J. Temping, J. Meysard; Cochran and Rey; Heelstons; and J. Temping, J. Weysard; Cochran and Rey; Heelstons; with Mans, St. Sa. hoserds.

THE HISTORY of THUCYDIDES.

nevi ife of Thucyddes, and a Memoir on the State of Greece at the Commencement of the Petopennessian War.

By the Rev. S. T. BLOOMFIELD, D.D.
Of Sidney College, Cambridge; Vicar of Blobreska, &c.

"A version as literal and as perspicuous as erudition and industry combined can render it."—Eclectic Review.

London: Longman, Rees, Orms, Brown, and Co.

Recensio Synoptica Annotationis Sacree, arge vols. 8vo. price 6t. 8s. boards.

Works on Gardening, Botany, &c. Published by Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co. Lo.

UIDE to the ORCHARD and KITCHEN-TOTALE WITH O'ROLLIAR IS A SHE WALL VALUE OF THE WARDEN; on A account of the most waluable and Vegetables cultivated in Great Britain; with Calenda the Work required in the Yorkard and Ritchen-Garden dievery Month in the Year.

By GEORGE LINDLEY, C.M. H.S. Edited by JOHN LINDLEY, F.R.S. 8vo. 18c. boards.

Introduction to the Natural System of Botany; or, a Systematic View of the whole Vegetable Kingdom with the Uses of the most important Species. By John Lindley F.R.S. 8vo. 12r. in cloth.

By the same Author Synopsis of the British Flora, arranged according to the Natural Orders; containing Vasculares, or Flew-ering Plants. 12mo. 10s. 6d. boards. Outline of the First Principles of Botany.

English Flora. By Sir J. E. Smith, F.R.S. vols. 8vo. new edition, 21. 8c.
Vol. V. (Cryptogamia) in the press.

By the same Compendium of the English Flora. 12mo.

Introduction to the Study of Physiological and Systematical Botany. Svo. 6th edition, with Fifteen Plates, 14c. plain; 38c. coloured.

Grammar of Botany; illustrative of Artificial and Natural Classification, with an Explanation of Jus-sieu's System. Svo. with 577 Figures of Plants, 12s. plain; 32s. 6d. coloured.

Treatise on the Culture and Management of Fruit-Trees. By William Forsyth, Gardener to his Majesty.

First Steps to Botany. By J. L. Drum-and, M.D. al edition, with 100 Woodcuts, 9s. boards. Macphail's Gardener's Remembrancer, 12mo.

Conversations on Botany, with Twenty-one arrayings. 18me. 6th edition, enlarged, 7s. 6d. plain; 12s.

British Flora; comprising the Phenogamous, Flowering Plants, and the Ferns. By W. J. Hooker, LL.D. R.A. and L.S. Royal 18mo. 18s. in cloth. Muscologia Britannics. By W. J. Hooker d Thomas Taylor. Sro. 31s. 6d. plain; St. 3s. celoured.

Muscologia Britannica. By W. J. Hooker and Thomas Taylor. 80 st. 6d. plain; 28 St. celeured.

Botanical Cabinet; published in Monthly Numbers, in 4to. carefully coloured, price 5s. Each Part contains Tee Pigures, with an Account of each, Rules for its Cultivation, &c. By Conrad Leddiges and Seas.

Elements of Agricultural Chemistry. Sir Humphry Davy, Bart. 8vo. 4th edition, 15s. boards.

Williams' Symbolical Euclid, New Edition. In 18mo. 6s. 6d. boards, 7s. neatly bound,

THE ELEMENTS of EUCLID, containing the first Six Books, and the first Twenty-one Prepo-ns of the Eleventh Book, with the Planes Shaded, chiefly the Text of Simeon; adapted to the Use of Stadents by as of Symbols.

means of Symbols.

By the Rev. J. M. WILLIAMS, B.A.

Of Queen's College, Cambridge.

With an Appendix.

g This Work, now in general use at Cambridge and many of the Public Schools, is published in a cheap and portable form, with a view to a more extensive circulation. It will be found greatly to facilitate an acquirement of the radiments of Mathematica.

Charles Tilt, Fleet Street; and T. Stevenson, Cambridge.

In 18mo, the 3d edition, price 7s.

RAMMAIRE ITALIENNE; being a complete Italian Grammar; with Exercises and Diagram.

Ogues.

A Key to the same, 2s.

Printed for Whitaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Meria Lane, Dulau and Co. Soho Square; and Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Court.

By the same Author,
A General Selection of Poetry; consisting of Fables, Odes, Sonnets, &c. progressively increasing in Difficulty. 6c.

A General Selection of Prose; consisting of A General Selection of Proce; consisting of Extracts from the best Writers, calculated to easist the Student in acquiring a pure Collequial and Epistesiary Style. 2d edit. 6s.

The Italian Pronunciation exemplified in English, with copious Extracts of Italian Proce, as Exercises, by C. Bruno. 5s.

The above Weeks are uniformly printed, and present a complete and easy course of study for the acquirement of the Italian Language.

New edition, revised, price 10s. 64, beand,

IVE THOUSAND RECEIPTS in all the Arts of Life, and in the various Branches of Social an sestic Economy; being Four Times more in Number that senting any similar Book, and constituting a Work of speakable Hourly Reference.

By COLIN MACKENZIE, Eq.

London: Printed for Sir Richard Phillips and Co.

Of whom may be had, One Thousand Experiments in Chemistry, applicable to the Arts and Manufactures of Great Britain. With Engravings. By the same Author. 31s. boards.

Young's Farmer's Calendar; or, the Business of Agriculture classed under the Months of the Year. With Plates. New edition, revised by J. Middleton, Eec. 18t. beand.

The United Eingdom.

New edition, improved throughout, with corrected Maps of every County, 81s. 6d. boards, TOPOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, A or Gauetteer of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland; including accurate and official Details relative to every County, District, City, Town, Berough, Parish, and Hamlet, in the United Kingdom; Including above $0,000 Pinces. By BENJA MIN PITTS CAPPER, Eq. Of the Secretary of State's Office. London: Printed for Sir Richard Phillips and Co.

In 8vo. price 9s. beards,

In 8vo. price 9s. beards,

ISSERTATIONS on MALARIA, contact of the state of the st

Choicre at Sunderland.
In Svo. price & boards,
ISTORY and MEDICAL TREAT-L MENT of CHOLERA, as it appeared in Sandriand SI: Illustrated by numerous Cases and Dissections. Yw. HASLEWOOD, M.D. and W. MORDEY, Surgeon in Charge of the Cholera Hospital in that Town. London: Longman, Rese, Orme, Brown, and Co.

In 18mo. 7s. boards, 4th edition,
THE PRINCIPLES of CHRISTIAN
PHILOSOPHY; containing the Doctrines, Daties, Adontitions, and Consolations of the Christian Religion.
Begius Professor of Surgery in the University of Glasgow, Author of the "Principles of Midwifery," &c.
London: Printed for Longman and Co.; sold by A. Black, Edinburgh; and all the Booksellers in Glasgow.

The 4th edition, in foolscap 8vo. price 6t. boards, of THE ANATOMY of DRUNKENNESS. By ROBERT MACNISH, Author of "the Philosophy of 8leep," and Member of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons of Glasgow.
"As a medical treatise it is excellent; and to those who stand need of advice and warning, it is worth a handred sermens."—
!!! Mackemood? Marastist.

ackwood's Magazine. W. R. M'Phun, Glasgow; Simpkin and Marshall, London.

In 8ve. price 10s. 8d. beards, the 8d edition of N ESSAY on the REVENUES of the CHURCH of ENGLAND, with an Inquiry into the Nacessity, Justice, and Policy of an Abolition, or Commutation of Tithes.

Tithes.
By the late Rev. MORGAN COVE, D.C.L.
Prebendary of Hereford, and Rector of Eston-Blahop, Herefordshire.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pall Mall.

In 18mo. price, bound, $2. 6d. 7th edition of TROS' NEW ELEMENTS of CONVER-

ROS' NEW ELEMENTS of CONVER-BATION-Prench and English.
Dalau and Co. Soho Square; Longman and Co. Paternoster
Row; Whittaker and Co. Ave Maria Lane; Boosey and Sons, Old Broad Street; Simphin and Co. Stationers' Hall Court; J.
Booker, New Bond Street; Baldwin and Cradock, Hamilton and Co. Paternoster Row; J. Sonter, St. Paul's Churchyard; and
W. Darton and Son, Holborn Hill.

In 1 val. 18mo. price, bound, 4s. 6d. a new edition of ERQUIN, PIECES CHOISIES de L'AMI des ENFANS.

Chez Dulau et Co. 80to Square; T. et T. Boosey, Old Broad Street, Royal Exchange; Whittaker et Co. Ave Maria Lane; Longman et Co. Patersoster Bow y Harding et Lepard, Pall Mall East; Simpkin et Co. Stationers' Hall Cent; Bouter, 8s. Paul's Churchyard; J. Duncon, Paternoster Row ; Poole et Edwards, Ave Maria Lane; et Harvey et Darton, Fencharch Street.

In 8vo. price 5s. in boards,
QUESTIONS on SELECT SECTIONS of TYTLERS ELEMENTS TYTLER'S ELEMENTS of HISTORY, Ancient and Modern. For the Use of the Junior Department of the Royal Military College. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

New Volume of Sermons by Dr. Burton.
In 8vo. price 10s. 6d. boards,
S E R M.O N S on Miscellameous Subjects, preached before the Unitamities of Control preached before the University of Orfert.

By the Rev. EDWARD BURTON, D.D.

Regius Professor of Divinity, and Cansen of Christchurch.

London: Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's
Churchyard, and Waterlies Place, Pall Mail; and sold by J. H.

Parker, Oxford.

Mertality of the Metropolis.

In the price M. So cisch beards,

A STATISTICAL VIEW of the NUMBER of PERSONS reported to have DIED, of more than 100 Kinds of Disease and Cassalities, within the Billis of Mertality, in each of the 204 Years from 1039 to 1821, including the Number reported to have Died of the Plague in each of the Pour great Plague Years, 1820, 1826, 1828, and 1865; and also Gircumstantial Account of the still greater Flague of Spaamodi Sou, and Great Britain in 1848-9; accompanied with a variety of Statistical Accounts, illustrative of the Progress and Extent of Statistical Accounts, illustrative of the Progress and Extent of the Amount expended for the Meinteasmore of the Poor in each Paths within the limits of the Metropolitan Policy, &c. &c.

Pablished by Treattel, Wurtz, and Bitchter, London;
Cadell, Edinburgh; and Cumming, Dablin.

THE PASSES of the ALPS, illustrated by

THE PASSES of the ALPS, illustrated by WILLIAM BROCKEION, complete in Two Volumes; containing above One Hundred Plates.

The price of this splendid Work, in 2 vols. boarded in cloth and lettered, imperial two. 104.; royal 4to. Proofs, 1M.; dutto, India paper, 294.; Proofs before the letters, imperial 4to. 304.; ditto, India paper, 294.; Proofs before the letters, imperial 4to. 304.; ditto, which technings, 404.

To be had of the Author, 29, Devonshire Street, Queen Square; and of the Book and Printselters.

By an early application, Copies of the few Proofs that remain may be obtained.

"This beautiful and, we may add, magnificent work, has been completed in a style which makes us anxious to recommend so interesting a performance to our readers. A hundred and nine plates, charmingly engraved, will shew them what Rogilish art can do in representing the wildest and the most lovely scenes of nature; while the narrative is at once historically important and highly entertaining."—Literary Gazette.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 16s.

SULLO SPIRITO ANTIPAPALE che produsse la Riforma, e sulla segreta Influenza ch' esercito nella Letteratura d'Europa, e specialmente d'Italia, come risulta da motit suot Classici, massilme da Dante, Petrarca, Boc-risulta da molti suot Ciassici, manuscia.

caccio, Disquisizioni
Di GABRIELE ROSSETTI,
Professore di Lingua e Letteratura Italiana nel Collegio del Re in Londra.
Published by Treuttei and Co. 20, Sobo Square.

Illustrated with Fifty beautiful coloured Engravings, 4to. 4t. 4r. PHE ZOOLOGY of NORTH AMERICA,

Part II. containing the Birds.
By JOHN RICHARDSON, M.D.
Burgeon of the late Expedition under Captain Franklin; and
W. SWAINSON, Esq.
Printed uniformly with the Narratives of Captains Franklin's and Parry's Expeditions, to which it may be considered to be an Appendix.

John Museux Albamaria Street

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

As a Companion to the Journal of a Naturalist, post 8vo.
LEANINGS in NATURAL HISTORY,

with Local Recollections.

By EDWARD JESSE, Esq.

Deputy Surveyor of His Majesty's Parks.

To which are added, Masims and Hints for an AnglerJohn Murray, Albemaria birrect.

In 8vo. price 8s. boards, SERMONS preached in the Chapel of St. David's College, Lampeter.

By the Rev. ALFRED OLLIVANT, M.A.
Vice-Principal of St. David's College, and late Fellow of Principal of St. David's College, and late Fellow of London: Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mail.

ARD PUBLICATIONS Is now ready for delivery.

Also, an Address to the Trade and to the Public, by William Pickering, on the Booksellers Combination and Monopoly, may be had grain, 57, Chancery Lane.

Hume's History of England, re-issued, Vol. I. with Six finely engraved Pertraits, price only 6s. cloth boards, lettered. DICKERING'S NEW LIST of STAND.

Lownde's Biographer's Manual, Part XX.

The Aldine Poets, Vol. XX. containing the Poems of Shakespeare, will be published March 30; and Vol. XXI. early in April.

a The Country Trade are informed that they can have W. Pickering's Publications on the usual Terms, direct from Aim, but not through their London Agents, in consequence of a Combination of certain Booksellers, the Particulars of which may be seen by the Address. seen in the Address.

Price II. 1s. Part I. Vol. II. of
THE TRANSACTIONS of the ROYAL BOCIETY of LITERATURE.

I. Letrone on the Memoralan Inacriptions—II. Millingen on Discoveries in Etraria—III. Millingen on the Achelous—IV. Chevaller Bronsted on Panathenaic Vases—V. Millingen on the Roman Divinities—VI. Angell on Scientine Sculptures—VII. Inscriptions from the Many of all Meletics—VII. John Marray, Albemaris Street.

CEAN, STELLIA, and other Poems.
By the Rev. JOHN MACKENZIE, D.D.
Minister of Portpatrick, and one of His Majesty's Chaplains in Ordinary in Scotland.
An improved edition.
Sold by Messars. Longman and Co. Paternoster Row.

In 19mo. price &c. &d. boards,

SERMONS on the HISTORY of OUR BLESSED LORD and SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST.

By the Rev. WILLIAM NORRIS, M.A.

Rector of Warblington, Hanter, and Chaplain to Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington & R. Laul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Flace, Pail Mail.

Pyrus Malus Brentfordiensis.

Dedicated, by permission, to His Grace the Duke of Northumberland.

1 to price 44. 4s. plain, or 54. 5s. with a coloured Figure of each, CONCISE DESCRIPTION of 170

Sorts of Selected Apple.

With appropriate Lists for the different Situations in which Apple. Trees are usually planted.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

THE DEATH SUMMONS; or, the Rock of Martos. A Tragedy, in Pive Acts.
By WILLIAM CLARK WIMBERLEY.
: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

In 8vo. price 6a. boards,

THE DUTY of a CHRISTIAN PEOPLE under DIVINE VISITATIONS.
By the Rev. NEWTON SMRT, M.A.
Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Princel for J., 64. Cont. Peril Mail, Jondon; and sold by J. Hatchard and Son, Piccadily.

The Frayers to be used in Times of Pertilance sold separately, price 1d. or 7a. 6d. per 100.

In 3 vols. 8vo. price 11. 16s. boards,

VIEW of the HISTORY, LITERATURE, and RELIGION of the HINDOOS, including a Minute Description of their Manners and Customs, and Translations from their principal Works.
By the late Rev. WILLIAM WARD.

London: Printed for Parbury, Alien, and Co. Leadenhall Street.

MISS FANNY KEMBLE'S TRAGEDY,

SIR WALTER SCOTT.—Volume
Thirty-Pourth of the New Edition of the Waverley Novels was published on 1st March, price 5st.
It concludes bit Mounté Well, and is illustrated by Mulready and Wood.

Vol. Thirty-Third of the edition, and which commenced St.
Ronan's Well, is illustrated by a Portrait of the Author, from
Mr. Watson Gordon's celebrated Picture, engraved by Hors-

Of whom may be had,

1. Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather, First, Second, and Third Series. New editions, 10s. 6d. each. Also, History of France, 3 vols. 10s. 6d.

2. Sir Walter Scott's Poetical Works, 11 vols. 8vo. 6/.; and 11 vols. 18mo. 8/. 8s.

3. Sir Walter Scott's Miscellaneous Prose Works, 6 vols. 8/, 124,

Price 4s. bound, dedicated, by permission, to Lady Sandford,

Price 4s. bound, dedicated, by permission, to Lady Sandford,

THE MOTHER'S BOOK.

By Mrs. CHILD.

de delition.

The highest encomiums have been passed on this Work by the public press; and the rapid sale of a large crition within a month is proof of the favourable manner Mrs. Child's book has been received.

Richard Griffin and Co. Giasgow; Thomas Tegg, London; and Stillies Brothers, Edinburgh.

Meadows' Prench Pronouncing Dictionary.

Beautifully printed in 18mo. in Pearl Type, price 7s. canvass boards; or 7s. 6d. bound in roan, with full allowance to

NEW FRENCH and ENGLISH NEW FRENCH and ENGISTS

PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY, on the basis of Nugent's, with many New Words in general use. In Two Parts;

I. French and English—II. English and French. Exhibiting the Pronunciation of the French in pure English Sounds, the Parts of Speech, Gender of French Nouns, Itsquiar and Irregular Conjugations of Verbs, Accent of English Words. To which are prefixed, Principles of French Pronunciation, and an Abridged Grammer. By P. C. MEADOWS, M.A.

Of the University of Paris.

Glasgow: Printed at the University Press, for Thomas Tegg, 73, Cheapside, London; and Richard Griffin and Co. Glasgow.

RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH, from the first Settlement of the Anglo-Saxons. With Documents and Records, hitherto unpublished, illustrating the History of the Civil and the Criminal Justinguidness of England.

f England.
By FRANCIS PALGRAVE, Esq.
Of the Inner Temple.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Emigration. In 18mo. price Ss. 6d. with a Map, N ACCOUNT of the PROVINCE of A N ACCOUNT of the PROVINCE of NEW BRUNSWICK; including a Description of the settlements. Institutions, Soil, and Climate of that important revolutes. With Advice to Emigrants.
By THOMAS BAILLIE, Eq.
Commissioner and Surveor-General of Crown Lands in New Brunswick.
Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloe Place, Pall Mall.

GRAMMAR of the HEBREW

A U. It. A. M. A. A. A. LANGILAGE.
By EDWARD HINCKS, D.D.
Late Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin.
Whittaker, Treecher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London; and J. Cumming, Dublin.

New Work by the Author of " Darnley," &c.. In 8 vois. post 8vo.

THE LIVES and EXPLOITS of CELERRATED MILITARY COMMANDERS.

By the Author of "De l'Orme," "Philip Augustus," &c.

Houlding Henry V. of England—John, Duke of Bedfordflorizaires de Cordova-Ferdinand, Duke of Alva—Oliver Croawell—The Great Condé—General Monk, Duke of AlbemarieMarshal Turenne—The Duke of Marbhorough—Prince Eugene of Savor—The Earl of Peterborough—Marquess of Granby—General
Wolfe. &c. Savoy - Th Wolfe, &c.

Wolfe, &c. "A more interesting series of memoirs could not be presented to the curiosity of readers; inasmuch as in the lives of such men, romantic adventure of the most exciting kind co-exists with the sternest truth." —Courier.

II.
In S vols. 8vo. with Plates,
Captain Frankland's Narrative of his Visit

Captain Frainkanid 8 Ivarrative Of 118 Visit to the Courts of Rossia and Sweden, in the Years 1830, 31. "Few travellers have had such opportunity of describing realife in Russia as this officer. To tourist about to try the same road, we do not know a more useful or better guide-book that that of Capt. Frankland."—Rorning Post.

111.
Sd edition, in 2 vols. 8vo.
Adventures on the Columbia. By Ross Cox, Esq. "All lovers of the wild and the wonderful should res volumes."—Nun.

"This narrative engages the attention almost as much by the unadorned typle and air of candour with which it is detailed, at by the startling and interesting nature of the facts it discloses."—Times.

IV.
In 2 vols. 8vo. containing the whole 4 of the Paris edition, with 2 Portraits,

/ Thuchess

Mémoires de Madame Junot, (Duchess of Abrantes).

"We recommend these volumes to attention."—Quarterly Re-

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

THE FAIR of MAY-FAIR. In 3 vols.

The Jurist.

The Jurist.

THE Publication of the JURIST, or Quarterly Journal of Jurispradence and Legislation, which has been unavoidably suspended for some stime, will be resumed in the Month of April, and the Work will in future appear, with strict requiarity, on the lat of July, the lat of November, the lat of January, and the lat of April.

The principles and objects of this Work will be the same by which it has hitherto been governed:—to diffuse information as subjects of Legislation and Jurispradence—to trace the progress of those sciences both at home and abroad—and to direct the public mind to that which is practicable and valuable in reform. Some slight arreadons will be made in the arrangement of tion of each No. These will be succeeded by Rever the greater protein of each No. These will be succeeded by Rever and the Company of the Strick Company o portant measure of the oceasion with the articles.

From the Continent (where the former Numbers of "the Jurist" were very favourably received) and from the United States of America, many contributions of much value have been procured, and arrangements have been made to secure their continuance.

Baldwin and Cradock, London.

In a few days will be published, in 4 vols. 8 vo.

ISTORY, Philosophically Illustrated, from the Fall of the Roman Empire to the Prench Revolution.

By GEORGE MILLER, D.D. M.R.I.A.
Formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin.
Printed for James Duncan, 37, Paternoster Row.

Nearly ready, 1 vol. 18mo.

DISCOURSES and SACRAMENTAL
ADDRESSES to a VILLAGE CONVERGATION.

By the Rev. D. B. BAKER, A.M.

Currate of By the Rev. D. B. BAKER, A.M.

"Nature of the Proof of the Converge of the Proof of the Pro

and Waterioo Place, Pall Mall.

Standard Novels, No. IIV.
On the lat of April, complete in I vol. small Bro. neetly bound and illustrated, revised and corrected by the Author, expressly for this edition,

The Pion NEERS.

By COOPER.

Nos. XII. and XIII. just published, contain the Canterbury Tales, by Sophia and Harriet Lee, revised, corrected, and accompanied by a New Introduction, by Mrs. Harriet Lee, written expressly for this edition.

N.B. The entire Five Volumes of the original are now comprised in Two.

Houry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wallington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Stread, and 18, South Moulton Street, Oggord Street: sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange, F. Marlborough, Ave Maria Lane, Ludgate Rill, A. Rick, Edinburgh: Smith and Son, D. Robertoon, and Atkinson and Co. Glasgow: and J. Camming, Dublin. Agral for America, O. Rich, 19, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Cattle Street, Leicester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 793.

SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1832.

PRICE 8/

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

THE EAST INDIES.

I'We have this week rather an overwhelming influx of works on India, which, like the visitation of Indian cholers, has thrown us into the first stage, with consternation of countenance and prostration of strength. In this state of disorder we cannot do much at present: but if we survive the collapse, next week, the first of a new quarter, we shall do our duty by these, as well as other, povelties.

We have, indeed, a number of important publications before us for notice—publications which do credit to the literature of the country; but as these require more elaborate examination than volumes, however meritorious, of a lighter or temporary character, our readers must afford us the necessary time for their careful investigation: since, inadequately brief as our Reviews must, in many instances, be in comparison with the just extent of quotation, and value of the authors, we can truly give the assurance that our opinions are neither formed on light grounds, nor hazarded without ample inquiry.]

- 1. Lieut.-Col. Tod's Annals and Antiquities of Rajast'han. Vol. II.; with Plates. 4to. pp. 791. London, Smith, Elder, and Co.; Calkin and Budd.
- 2. Mythology of the Hindus, &c. &c. By C. Coleman, Esq. 4to. pp. 401. London, Parbury, Allen, and Co.
- 3. Observations on the Law, Constitution, and Government of India. By Lieut.-Col. Galloway. Second edition. 8vo. pp. 512. Parbury, Allen, and Co.
- 4. History of the Seven Churches of Asia, &c. &c. By the Rev. T. Milner, A.M. 8vo. pp. 388. London, Holdsworth and Ball; Derby, Richardson; Edinburgh, W. Whyte and Co., W. Oliphant; Dublin, Tims; and Cork, Bleakley.

 5. British Relations with India. Part I.
- Comparative Statement of the English and American Trade at India and Canton. 8vo. pp. 148. Parbury and Co.
- 6. The Foreign Trade of China divested of Monopoly, Restriction, and Hazard, by Means of Insular Stations. 8vo. pp. 110. London, E. Wilson.
- 7. Memoirs of the Early Operations of the Burmese War, &c. By Lieut. H. Lister Maw, R.N. 8vo. pp. 106. Smith, Elder, and Co. HAVING thus indicated 1192 quarto and 1154 octavo pages connected with eastern subjects, independently of the other numerous calls upon our attention, we trust we have made out a sufficient case for a mere general notice of these works. If any one should deny this, we would only ask that party, what the utmost literary labour is? and if the question cannot be fairly answered, we will supply the answer, viz. that it is the having more to do than can be done! We will, however, do as much as we can.

Of the general merits and the splendid embellishment of Col. Tod's work, we spoke in the terms merited by both, on the issue of his first volume, for which we have to refer to the Literary Gazettes, Nov. 656 and 663, Aug. 15, and Oct. 3, 1829; and we concluded our remarks by recommending it on the ground of "its intrinsic excellence, as one of the most curious publications regarding India which had ever appeared in England." Pursuing the same valuable and brilliant course in his second and concluding volume, the gallant Colonel, after a very handsome and well-expressed dedication to the King, explores the annals of Marwar, and lays before us the history of that once powerful, and still most interesting Raipoot To this succeeds a like analysis of the annals of the Bikanér State (descendants of the Scythic Jits or Getes);—of the Jessulmér Rajpoots called Bhattis, and of an Indo-Scythic origin :- of the Raipoots of Ambér, or Dhoondar :-- an account of the Shekawut federation ; and a sketch of the Indian desert. The annals of Háraváti are next traced; and the whole is concluded by a personal narrative, of about two hundred pages, and extremely interesting.

It may readily be conceived no extracts for which we might find room, even through many Nos., could convey a sufficient idea of a volume of this magnitude; we cannot literally go beyond the sample brick. If the author has been obliged to confess that his great performance must be viewed as "Non historia, sed par-ticula historia" (Pref. p. x.), we may surely ask our review of it to be considered as very limited particula of these particula. At present, indeed, it must be but a small bit of the brick. Speaking of voluntary martyrs, the Colonel relates:

"We have seen one of these objects, selfcondemned never to lie down during forty years, and there remained but three to complete the term. He had travelled much, was intelligent and learned, but, far from having contracted the moroseness of the recluse, there was a benignity of mien and a suavity and simplicity of manner in him, quite enchanting. He talked of his penance with no vain-glory, and of its approaching term without any sensation. The resting position of this Druid (vana-perist) was by means of a rope suspended from the bough of a tree, in the manner of a swing, having a cross-bar, on which he reclined. The first years of this penance, he says, were dreadly painful; swollen limbs affected him to that degree, that he expected death; but this impression had long since worn off. 'Even in this, is there much vanity;' and it would be a nice point to determine whether the homage of man, or the approbation of the Divinity, most sustains the energies under such appalling discipline."

The Saints are as astonishing. "Would the reader wish to have an instance of these miracles? After their usual manifold ablutions, and wringing the moisture of their dhots, or garment, they would fling it into the air, where it remained suspended over their head, as a protection against the sun's rays. On the loss of their power, these saints became tillers of the ground."

In the early annals of Amber we find the following narrative:-

Rama of Koshula, Nala of Nishida, and Dhola the lover of Maroni, may be allowed 'the boast of heraldry;' and in remembrance of this descent, the Cushites of India celebrate with great solemnity ' the annual feast of the sun. which occasion a stately car, called the chariot of the sun (Surya rat'ha), drawn by eight horses, is brought from the temple, and the descendant of Ramésa, ascending therein, perambulates his capital. A case of simple usurpation originated the Cuchwaha state of Ambér: but it would be contrary to precedent if this event were untinged with romance. As the episode, while it does not violate probability, illustrates the condition of the aboriginal tribes, we do not exclude the tradition. On the death of Sora Sing, prince of Nurwar, his brother usurped the government, depriving the infant, Dhola Raé, of his inheritance. His mother, clothing herself in mean apparel, put the infant in a basket, which she placed on her head. and travelled westward until she reached the town of Khogong (within five miles of the modern Jeipoor), then inhabited by the Meenas. Distressed with hunger and fatigue, she had placed her precious burden on the ground, and was plucking some wild berries, when she observed a hooded serpent rearing its form over the basket. She uttered a shriek, which attracted an itinerant Brahmin, who told her to be under no alarm, but rather to rejoice at this certain indication of future greatness in the boy. But the emaciated parent of the founder of Ambér replied, 'What may be in futurity I heed not, while I am sinking with hunger; on which the Brahmin put her in the way to Khogong, where he said her necessities would be relieved. Taking up the basket, she reached the town, which is encircled by hills, and accosting a female, who happened to be a slave of the Meena chieftain, begged any menial employment for food. By direction of the Meena Rani, she was entertained with the slaves. One day she was ordered to prepare dinner, of which Ralunsi, the Meena Raja, partook, and found it so superior to his usual fare, that he sent for the cook, who related her story. As soon as the Meena chief discovered the rank of the illustrious fugitive, he adopted her as his sister, and Dhola Raé as his nephew. When the boy had attained the age of Rajpoot manhood (fourteen), he was sent to Dehli, with the tribute of Khogong, to attend instead of the Meena. The young Cuchwaha remained there five years, when he conceived the idea of usurping his benefactor's authority. Having consulted the Meena d'hádí, or bard, as to the best means of executing his plan, he recommended him to take advantage of the festival of the Déwali, when it is customary to perform the ablutions en masse, in a tank. Having brought a few of his Rajpoot brethren from Dehli, he accomplished his object, filling the reservoirs in which the Meenas bathed with their dead bodies. The treacherous bard did not escape: Dhola Raé put him to death with his own hand, observing, 'he who had proved unfaith-"A family, which traces its lineage from ful to one master could not be trusted by another.' He then took possession of Khogong. Soon after, he repaired to Deosah, a castle and district ruled by an independent chief of the Birgoojur tribe of Rajpoots, whose daughter he demanded in marriage. 'How can this be,' said the Birgoojur, 'when we are both Suryavansi, and one hundred generations have not yet separated us?' But being convinced that the necessary number of descents had intervened, the nuptials took place; and as the Birgoojur had no male issue, he resigned his power to his son-in-law. With the additional means thus at his disposal, Dhola determined to subjugate the Séroh tribe of Meenas, whose chief, Rao Natto, dwelt at Mauch. Again he was victorious; and deeming his new conquest better adapted for a residence than Khogong, he transferred his infant government thither. changing the name of Mauch, in honour of his great ancestor, to Ramgurh. Dhola subsequently married the daughter of the prince of Ajmér, whose name was Maroni. Returning on one occasion with her from visiting the shrine of Jumwahi Mata, the whole force of the Meenas of that region assembled, to the number of eleven thousand, to oppose his passage through their country. Dhola gave them battle: but after slaying vast numbers of his foes, he was himself killed, and his followers fiel. Maroni escaped, and bore a posthumous child, who was named Kankul, and who conquered the country of Dhoondar."

This is a fair though short specimen of the work : and with a characteristic extract from the personal journal (A.D. 1820) we must close the book:

" February 2 .- An accident has compelled another halt at Morwun. The morning was clear and frosty, not a cloud in the sky, and we rose with the sun; my kinsman, Captain Waugh, to try his Arab at a nilgáe, and myself to bag a few of the large rock-pigeons which are numerous about Morwun. My friend, after a hard run, had drawn blood from the elk, and was on the point of spearing him effectually just as he attained a thick part of the jungle, which not heeding, horse and rider came in contact with a tree, and were dashed with violence to the ground. There he lay insensible, and was brought home on a charpae, or cot, by the villagers, much bruised. but fortunately with no broken bones. A leech was not to be had in any of the adjacent villages; and the patient complaining chiefly of the hip-bone, we could only apply emollients and recommend repose. I returned with no game, except one or two black partridges and batten-quail. The rock-pigeon, or bur-teetur, though unaccustomed to the fowler, were too wild for me to get a shot at them. The bird wild for me to get a shot at them. bears no analogy to the pigeon, but has all the rich game plumage of the teetur, or partridge, in which name the ornithologist of the west will see the origin of tetrao. There are two species of this bird in India, one much smaller than the common partridge; that of which I speak is much larger, and with the peculiarity of being feathered at the toe. I have since discovered it to be the counterpart of a bird in the museum at Chambéry, called barteveldt des Alpes; the ptarmigan of the highlands of Scot-The male has exactly these redundant white feathers; while that I saw in Savoy was a richly-plumaged female bur-teetur. Our annual supply of good things having reached us this morning, we were enjoying a bottle of some delicious Burgundy and 'La Rose' after dinner, when we were roused by violent screams in the direction of the village. We were all soon set at rest by the appearance of two hircarras (messengers), and a lad with a vessel of milk on his head. For this daily supply they had gone several miles, and had nearly reached the camp, when, having outwalked the boy, they were alarmed by his vociferations, 'Oh, uncle, let go, let go ... I am your child, unclelet me go!' They thought the boy mad, and it being very dark, cursed his uncle, and desired him to make haste; but the same wild exchamations continuing, they ran back, and found a huge tiger hanging to his tattered cold-weather doublet. The hircarras attacked the beast most manfully with their javelinheaded sticks, and adding their screams to his soon brought the whole village, men, women. and children, armed with all sorts of missiles. to the rescue; and it was their discordant vells that made us exchange our good fare for the jungles of Morwun. The 'lord of the black rock,' for such is the designation of the tiger, was one of the most ancient bourgeois of Morwun: his freehold is Kálá-páhár, between this and Mugurwar, and his reign for a long series of years has been unmolested, notwithstanding his numerous acts of aggression on his bovine subjects: indeed, only two nights before, he was disturbed gorging on a buffalo belonging to a poor oilman of Morwun. Whether this tiger was an incarnation of one of the Mori lords of Morwun, tradition does not say; but neither gun, bow, nor spear, had ever been raised against him. In return for this forbearance, it is said he never preyed upon man. or if he seized one, would, upon being entreated with the endearing epithet of mamoo. or uncle, let go his hold; and this accounted for the little ragged urchin using a phrase which almost prevented the hircarras returning to his rescue.

" Murlah, Jan. 8th: seven miles. - Crossed two ridges running northward to Bhadaisir. The intervening valleys, as usual, fertile, with numerous villages, but alienated to the southern Goths or the partisan Pat'han. Passed many large townships, formerly in the fisc of Méwar, as Baree, Binotah, Bumboree, &c. In the distance, saw ' the umbrella of the earth,' the farfamed Cheetore. Murlah is an excellent township, inhabited by a community of Charuns, of the tribe Cucholeah, who are Bunjarris (carriers) by profession, though poets by birth. The alliance is a curious one, and would appear incongruous, were not gain the object generally in both cases. It was the sanctity of their office which converted our bardais into bunjarris, for their persons being sacred, the immunity extended likewise to their goods, and saved them from all imposts; so that in process of time they became the free-traders of Raipootana. I was highly gratified with the reception I received from the community, which collectively advanced to me at some distance from the town. The procession was headed by the village band, and all the fair Charunis, who, as they approached, gracefully waved their scarfs over me, until I was fairly made captive by the muses of Murlah! It was a novel and interesting scene: the manly persons of the Charuns, clad in the flowing white robe, with the high loose folded turban inclined on one side, from which the male, or chaplet, was gracefully suspended; the naiques, or leaders, with their massive necklaces of gold, with the image of the pitriswur (manes) depending therefrom, gave the whole an air of opulence and dignity. The females were uniformly attired in a skirt the spot. Our speculations on the cause were | their fine black hair; and all had the favourite chooris, or rings of hati-dant (elephant's tooth), covering the arm, from the wrist to the elbow, and even above it. Never was there a noble: subject for the painter in any age or country; is was one which Salvator Rosa would have seized: full of picturesque contrasts: the rich dark tints of the female attire harmonising with the white garments of their husbands; but it was the mien, the expression, the gestures, denoting that though they paid homage, they expected a full measure in return. And they had it; for if ever there was a group which bespoke respect for the natural dignity of man and his consort. it was the Charun community of Murlah. It was not until the afternoon, when the neious again came to see me at my camp, that I learned the full value of my escape from the silken bonds of the fair Charnnis. This community had enjoyed for five hundred years the privilege of making prisoner any Rana of Méwar who may pass through Murlah, and keeping him in boodage until he gives them a gote, or entertainment: and their chains are neither galling, no the period of captivity, being thus in the hands of the captivated, very long. The patriarch told me that I was in jeopardy, as the Ram's representative; but not knowing how I might have relished the joke, had it been carried to its conclusion, they let me escape, though ther lost a feast by it. But I told them I was to much delighted with old customs not to keep up this; and immediately sent money to the ladies with my respects, and a request that they would hold their gote (feast). The patriarch and his subordinate naiques and their sons, remained with me to discourse on the olden time."

2. Of Mr. Coleman's volume we can only say that the first portion of it appears to be the fruit of great and well-directed research. Its information touching Hindu mythology is of the most authentic, and, in many points, novel description; and the engravings, about form in number, admirably illustrate the subject. Here, as in Col. Tod's work, we trace the con-nexion between eastern and northern antiquities of the earliest ages; and whether in science, in learning, in the arts, in customs and manners, in rites and religion,-we find that we approach closely to the common origin of man-The second part is not so original, but valuable as a context; and, on the whole, Mr. Coleman has added a contribution of sterling worth to our oriental literature.

3. Col. Galloway's book was first published, anonymously, we think, in 1825, when it at tracted, as it deserved, considerable attention. It is now republished with his name, and important additions. A man of sound sense, speaking with the experience of thirty years in India, with opportunities for extensive observation, on his head, ought to be listened to with particular regard at this crisis of Indian government. Without going into details, we must express our thanks to the author for the intelligence we have received from his pages, and earnestly call upon all those concerned in the present discussion of the charter of the E. I. Company, and also the public in general. to give to his counsels the consideration they demand. Both our vast eastern empire and our native Britain may thence reap much benefit, their wants be foreseen, and their welfare be provided for and promoted. 4. Mr. Milner's octavo is extremely interesting; its object to prove, from the accounts of travellers respecting the Asian churches and in the direction of the village. We were all of dark-brown camlet, having a boddice of lightup in an instant, and several men directed to coloured stuff, with gold ornaments worked into Apocalypse and authenticity of sacred prophecies. The inquiry is ably conducted, and the lect and imagination of obscure and bygone furnish cause for the lament over the degenework so replete with historical illustrations as to entertain as much as it instructs.

Of 5, 6, and 7, we have only room to say that the 5th contains much valuable commercial lata in support of the writer's opinions as a parliamentary reformer and an advocate for the E. I. Company's privileges as regards China, and at the same time a real reciprocity in trade: -6, on the same subject, has a very unsatisfacory preface, as far as a reason is assigned for withholding what the writer deems to be important views-but the pamphlet itself is clever: t is almost in direct opposition to the fore-going; and we think, if the writer can devise scheme of foreign trade, or any other, without 'hazard," he will be the Pet of our merchants: -7. A letter originally addressed to, and pub-ished in, the United Service Journal, has been enlarged by Lieut. Maw into this memoir, in which justice is done to the exertions of the laval service in the Burmese war, accompanied by some curious particulars of the contest and country. We select an anecdote or two, after he taking of Rangoon.

" As the seamen were driving the Burmans owards the jungle, one of the latter, who, rom his arms, was probably a chief, was chased yan Irishman belonging to the Liffey's launch, irmed with a boarding-pike. The Burman, eeing only one man near him, turned to fight, and raised his double-handled sword for the surpose of cutting down his opponent: the irishman, however, fancying there was room on the sword-handle for more hands than the hief's, seized that part of it which projected owards him with his left hand, and run the Burman through the body by his right. About the same time, some other 'blueackets,' finding that the principal part of the ighting was over, caught two horses which sappened to be in the stockade, and mounted, have the benefit' of a ride, the horses being, in their opinion, prize property.'

Bibliophobia. Remarks on the present languid and depressed State of Literature and the Book Trade: in a Letter addressed to the Author of the Bibliomania. By Mercurius Rusticus. With Notes by Cato Parvus. 8vo. pp. 102. London, 1832. Bohn.
WE have no doubt but that this volume is the production of a very near and dear relative of Dr. Dibdin, on whose vagary style, in the way st bibliomania, we, even in our early days, ifted up our voice and laughed. We gather rom this tome that the Folly is dead, or in its nortal throes; and it can hardly be necessary or us to expedite its inevitable hour. It was a plendid abourdity, founded on the noblest and nost enlightened of human pursuits, and only endered ridiculous by excess and drivelling inthusiasm. In this stage of the disease all hat was worth the attention of a man and a cholar was utterly lost sight of; and all that vas extrinsio, valueless, and nonsensical, was xalted into primary importance. Rarity (not o be disregarded in its way) was made the test ilterary excellence; and while living merit vas neglected, and ancient treasures unexplored, the fancy of a fly-leaf, or a misprintd page, enrished speculators, who, probably mough, invented the one, and ferged the ther. To rescue from oblivion, to save, and reserve curious works of olden times - works which exhibit the Giant Printing in his earliest radie efforts-works which embody the intelages, is one of the finest pursuits upon which wealth and intellect can engage; but beyond this, the rhapsodies about tall volumes, uncut leaves, wretched broadsides, bindings, blocks, tooling, &c. &c. &c. are worse than silly-they are injurious to the higher and better interests of literature.

In this light the puffs so frequent at the bottom of he page are invite dig. Cato Parvus, whose mame is ppunded to them, looks little.

The reign of this mania is therefore, we rejoice to see, over; though we would by no means be pleased with a bibliophobia to supersede it. But there is reason in roasting eggs. An extravagant and exaggerated whim must produce a reaction; but that reaction does not imply a disregard of what was really good in the preceding crisis. We may love books and ancient lore still, though we are not inclined to give two or three thousand pounds for a unique copy, merely to boast of as a curiosity in our library. We may be ready and willing to go to great expense in order to complete a series of authors upon any given subject, though we might not choose to pay the rent of a farm for two or three mutilated leaves, worth nothing in their origin, illustrating nothing, and only factitiously pranked up, because no similar trash of the period had escaped destruction. The grand error of the bibliomaniacs was their putting a far greater price on useless accident than on useful knowledge; and the arrow of satire was more severely barbed against them in consequence of the wild and crazy terms employed by Dr. Dibdin (speaking in their own familiar tongue) in his publications when describing their pursuits_terms ill befitting rational and learned objects, where the language of passion, love, and adoration, was lavished on crackling Elsevirs, large paper copies, and vellum Spiras or Plantins!

"Oh! sir, (says aut Diabolus aut Dibdin in the volume before us), oh! sir, what language can express the surprise of both auctioneer and company when the Monastery, the first article in the sale, produced only the sum of 184. 18s. !+ Where were ye, ye pains-taking, fiddle-faddling, indefatigable collectors of Franks - ye threaders of autographic scraps - ye albumites, 'et hoc genus omne?'—where were ye 'in that hour?' One would have thought One would have thought that the original drafts of those master-pieces of human wit, eloquence, and passion - struck off by the great known unknown-would have attracted crowds of competitors within the arena of Mr. Evans's auction-room; that scarcely breathing-space, much less standingroom, would have been afforded; and that Scotland herself would have furnished champions to carry off the richer prizes at the point of the claymore! I own that I was bewildered with the scene before me. I was, indeed, sorrowstricken.

Now, this is a proof, though not one of the strongest, of the justice of our observations. A composition from a master hand, whose fame will descend to succeeding generations, with the careful touches, the alterations, and the corrections of the author, is a study of no common value; but mighty as the magic name of Walter Scott is, his mere hasty manuscripts, polished, so far, by his printers, and having nothing to distinguish them, favourably from his printed publications, do not, in our opinion, racy of bibliomania. As curiosities, in better days they would probably have obtained higher prices. But they fell on a dull time.

" The proprietors of the MSS, were offered, by the trustees of the Advocates' Library, 1000i. for the whole. This offer was not thought sufficiently liberal; and the proprietors stood out for another thousand. This contre-projet was not listened to for a moment: and the hammer of Mr. Evans was, in consequence, to decide the matter irrevocably. The MSS. came to town; and the result of the entire sale of those that were put up was as is above stated. We know there are such things as 'outstanding one's market.' The general impression was, at the outset, that they would average 50%. a lot."

The author visits all the booksellers' shops in London, and finds every where complaints of the want of demand for books, &c. &c., — the two big evils of 1831-2, reform and cholera, absorbing every thing. We give a specimen of his style, which, certes, finds no sympathy in our breasts.

" From Mr. Bohn's it was little more than a hop, step, and a jump, to Mr. Thorpe's. I found that redoubted bibliopolist recumbent upon his sofa-embedded in his books-nothing daunted at the penury of present, compared with former, prices - still concocting catalogues, with a zeal and celerity quite unparalleled - anxious for their distribution - a manuscript here, a Giunta there - Aldines, the Gryphii — broadside ballads, and dainty devices
—a 'groat's worth of wit,' with the 'Seven Sorrowful Sobs of a Sinner'— Grolier, Maioli, and De Thou copies: -- a grove of sapling duodecimos - a forest of towering folios! Our discourse turned chiefly upon the late sales, and particularly upon that of the Waverley MSS. of which I have before 'poured my plaint in your ear.' 'Would that I had purchased them all!' exclaimed the animated bibliopolist. 'Yes, sir, all. They would have quitted my shelves within a week of the purchase.' But in other matters:—tell me, do the 'dear Fifteeners' wag their tails, as if about to take a prosperous flight? 'Alas, sir, (replied my informant,) they seem, on the contrary, to be tied down by the stiffest birdlime that ever was manufactured. There stand my early Jeroms, and Austins, and Lactantiuses. There slumber my Jenson and Spira Latin Classics. No nimble-footed, liberal-hearted * * * * as of old, to visit my retired boudoir, and to tempt me with a 'fell swoop!' Every thing lingers: every thing stands stock-still. The dust on yonder set of Acta Sanctorum will soon produce me a good crop of carrots-from the seed sown there about two years ago. Literature is perishing. The country is undone.' Here the post entered with a letter from a great Etonian collector, to know if the vellum Aldus had arrived? Mr. Thorpe's eyes sparkled-for an instant only. There was no chance of its arrival. And if it did, ought it not to go to Spencer House, or to Cleveland Square? 'Le bon tems viendra,' quoth I to my worthy informant—and some three hundred steps brought me to Mr. Ackermann's. I found that ever-green veteran with a mind as active as heretofore. His forthcoming Forget-me-Not + The lots, with their respective prices, were as follow:—1. The Monastery, perfect, 18:. 18:. 2. Guy Mannering, wanting a leaf at the end of vol. 2, 37i. 10:. The Monastery, perfect, 33:. 4. The Antiquary perfect, 42:. 5. Rob Roy, perfect, 50:. 6. Peveril of the Peak, perfect, 42:. 7. Waverley, imperfect, 18: was just then preparing to put on its gilded wings to fly abroad; together with its younger 8. The Abbot, Emperfect, 14:. 9. Ivanhoe, imperfect, 12:. 12:. 10: The Pirste, imperfect, 12:. 11. Fortunes of Nigel, imperfect, 16:. 16:: 12. Refile of Laminermoor, only 61 pages, 14:. 14s. the parent of that numerous offspring of fashion and taste, were displayed, on all sides, as radiant as the banners in St. George's chapel. His activity of mind-his courtesy of demeanour _his thorough germane bonhomie _were as conspicuous and pleasant as ever. Still, 'things vere horribly flat. No money was stirring. The young ladies had slackened in enthusiasm. The roses and lilies and lilacs were shedding their lustre and perfumes in vain. Parents drew in their purse-strings tighter than ever. The reform had frightened away every thing. The foreign market was glutted to the very throat.'

Again: of Mr. Rusher, sen., at Windsor. "A few hundred yards brought me within that library which, in the happy days of bibliomania -- some fifteen years ago -- I had entered with greater glee of heart than at present. Wherefore was it so? The books were the same. The bindings were the same. The former had not grown either taller or shorter: the latter had obtained still greater beauty of tone, by the course of time - in an atmosphere not reachable by a London fog. But my dejection continued-in spite of the urbane upbraidings of 'mine host.' 'What care I,' quoth he, ' for the capriciousness of public taste? Shall my first folio Aldine Demosthenes and Rhetores be less coveted-less embraced-than heretofore?

' Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,' shall be, to me, my Elzevir and Olivet Ciceros! Nor let old Scapula and Facciolati droop their towering heads-and shew me the man who shall dare to undervalue my large paper Barnes's Euripides, West's Pindar, and Potter's Lyco-phron! Will any creature, short of a confirmed idiot, presume to 'write me down an ass,' because I have over and over again tossed up my head at the pitiful offer of threescore and ten sovereigns for my large paper Grenville Homer? Perish all these dear delights !-- perish their owner with them !- sooner than he shall lend a helping hand to the dissemination of that hydra-disease-bibliophobia! Welcome typhus -welcome scarlatina-welcome even cholera! Pitch your tents, and mark out your victims as ye please. Number me among them, if it be your good pleasure; but let me die -hugging my Homer!' My friend here became momentarily breathless. His action had been 'suited to the word:'-and he sunk exhausted upon the soft wadding of a chintz arm-chair. I hurra'd him as he fell !"

Somebody couples Bedlam and Parnassus; may we not unite a private asylum and this book trade? But the result is too melancholy; for the fate of insane collectors (excepting, of course, the very high and wealthy individuals who had a prescriptive right to indulge their fancies) has been severe.

" Death (says the author) hath swept away Leontes, Baroccio, Sempronius, Archimedes, Meliadus, and Palermo. They were six brave book-warriors in their day; men who at sundry sales which need not now be named, used to Flame in the front, or thunder in the rear!

They are now at rest, their libraries all dispersed, their symposia at an end!"

"Under these names were designated the late James Bindley, Esq., John Dent, Esq., Roger Wilbraham, Esq., John Rennie, Esq., Robert Lang, Esq., and John North, Esq. Their libraries were all sold by auction.

Oh, moral of a tale of human folly! The brave book-warriors, the butterfly hunters, the flaming and thundering triflers of their day, he expressed himself thankful for the support whose lives were engrossed in the eagerness of he had received, considered himself, perhaps, time and accumulated their fleeting storethey are gone, and the objects of their toil and struggles are dispersed, who cares where? They bought books not to read, they procured intelligence not to learn; besides the amount which might have bestowed blessings on thousands, they wasted the most precious of all commodities, in acquiring, what? collections of odds and ends, to be sold again with the auctioneer's hammer upon their coffins. Pah, as Hamlet says, " the offence is rank !"

But leaving this never-to-be-revived rage to the fate we predicted for it in our Review of Dibdin's Bibliomania, and heartily wishing it a rich and prosperous course within the bounds of taste and reason, we will quote a preferable example of our author. Speaking of the Annuals, he says:

"I am at war with the Annuals, because they are so very beautiful, and, like beauties of almost every description, are so likely to be seductive. Will they not — may they not — in the long-run, be ruinous to the best interests of the genuine school of engraving? Some of the cleverest artists in the kingdom are engaged in them - engaged, not merely to plough the copper, but in an expectancy of a certain share of profit arising from the sale. • Much as I admire graphic art, in almost every way, and regularly as I present my family each year with the two works mentioned in the text, I must yet throw out the suspicion, introduced at the opening of this note, - will not these Annuals injure the 'genuine school of engraving?' Messrs. Raimbach, and Burnet and Pye, and Robinson, do not desert that path, which, in due time, will lead them to rival the John ing, the continent beats us: but the French are absolutely stark mad about our graphic bijouterie.

"The real parent of the Annuals is the Buchandler of the Germans, a duodecimo, printed not very beautifully upon paper of a second-rate quality. The engravings are the chief attractions."

To conclude: there is much in this volume unintelligible except to a particular set of people; for whom, indeed, it seems to be principally concocted. One passage is specially addressed to an individual, and an amusing example of the writer.

" I took (he tells us) my departure for the newly established repository of Mr. Henry Bohn, who, to his credit be it spoken, a long time allowed his vellum Sforsiada to divide his affections with his newly espoused bride. Mr. Bohn was as downcast as some of his neighbours; attributing the paralysis in books to the agitation of the question of reform in parliament; and adding, most justly, that 'now, or never, was the moment to make extensive and judicious purchases. Considering his short career as a trader on his own bottom, he was thankful for the support he had received, and was perhaps as well off as those about him; but it could not be denied that there was, at times, sore sighing from the bottom of the heart."

Upon this dubious text we dare offer no remark: we trust that Mr. Bohn's newlyespoused bride won't read it or see the Gazette. If she does, we can only hope she will pardon the Sforziada, and considering her husband's short career as a trader on his own bottom, also forgive him. Let her remember that rate, since what is done cannot be undone, that she is not only flesh of his flesh, but Bohn of his Bohn.

An Inquiry into the Remote Cause of Cholera.

8vo. pp. 57. Edinburgh, 1832, Blackwood; London, Cadell.

Practical Observations on Malignant Cholers. By D. M. Moir, Surgeon. 2d edit. pp. 72. Edinburgh, 1832, Blackwood; London, Cadell.

The Pestilential Cholera Unmasked, &c. Br John V. Thompson, F.L.S. 8vo. pp. 64. Cork, 1832; London, Renshaw and Rush. A Letter to the Lord President of the Council on the best Means of Preventing the Extension of the Pestilential Disease, &c. By W. Hunt, Esq. pp. 22. London, 1832. Fer

the Author. A Letter to the London Board of Health, &c. By Thomas Brown, Medical Practitioner, Musselburgh. London, 1832. Cadell.

Lecture on Cholera, &c. By Sir A. Carlisk. London, 1832. B. Steill.

Dysenteria Serosa, or Convulsive Nervous Cholera of Hindostan. By Philanthropos.

London, 1832. Douglas.

A Letter to the President of the Westminster Medical Society on Cholera. By John Wester, M.D., &c. London, 1832. Thistleton When the many thinking and observing minds which are to be met with, writing upon a new and formidable disease in common with arrogant and dogmatic quacks, have got tire of facts told over again, with variety of expression for their only novelty, it is probable the we shall have a few good essays on the path-Hunter, or the Doctors of the Church, by the logy, the characters, or the remote causes of illustrious Sharpe. On a great scale of engrav- the postilential cholers. As a first attempt of this kind, we perused with interest and goodwill the pamphlet which heads our present notice, and should have been inclined to speak well of it, as the production of a person evidently un-informed upon any one branch of the physical sciences, had not the author, in a spirit which truly belongs to the metaphysical school of North Britain, asserted that medical men are not qualified for similar researches, and that some " seem unacquainted with the principles by which truth, whether moral or physical, must be investigated;" and again, "unless they (the medical men) combine with their professional knowledge more severe and correct habits of reasoning and induction than they sometimes exhibit, our information will continue to be defective and unsatisfactory." It is not our wish to defend the profession against such calumnies, for their defence will best consist in ascertaining what new light the author has thrown upon a subject, who begins and concludes by deprecating all who have gone before him: but we could say, that, by education, or by habit of thought, entailed by the constant investigation of cause and effect, as large a number of truly logical minds will be found in the medical profession as in any other class of men. And to retort courteously upon the intruder,-Is he not aware that the exact observation of nature is the only means of attaining true knowledge? and that logic can never effect any good, where a thorough acquaintance with facts is neglected?

The author's object is, to prove that the pestilential cholera is an animate creation, and that these animals of disease and death are generated in water. The larvæ create the disease by being introduced into the stomach, where they act upon the nervous system like many other poisons; and that when all these an empty pursuit. They spent their precious as well off as those about him; and, at any larve, or grubs, have become perfect insects, they fly away to other places to lay their eggs and distribute the pestilence around them. The animate theory of contagion is not new it has been noticed by many authors, and it is one to which we are inclined to give much faith; but, without pretending to any severity of logic, we have a right to demand at least the accuracy of science in the development given to so plausible a the-ory. The first fact brought forward in support of this hypothesis is, the one great line of direction apparently followed by the disease; a fact which has been made subservient to many other suggestions, but which has little foundation in nature, when we investigate the details. The second fact is, that many insects are known to attach themselves to rivers and waters, depositing their eggs where the larve are generated : that their numbers and variety are infinite; and that many of those with which we are acquainted are capable of existing in the extremes of heat or cold. The entomological and the pathological parts of this inquiry stand in the relation of cause and effect, and consequently from certain laws which the cholera appears to have followed in its distribution, the author logically considers himself entitled to draw certain inferences; but we suspect that all naturalists and medical men whom he may consult, will itell him, that when a writer gives to certain physical effects a demonstrable cause, it is incumbent that he should investigate its existence by experiment or observation, and not assume rit on an à priori argument, afterwards only spartially supported by facts. We need hardly inform our readers that the author has not seen the insect or its larva; that insects do anot inhabit salt water, in the vicinity of which the disease has made its appearance; that dry deserts; that it is not in the history of the existence of any species of the invertebral kingdom to traverse all continents and all climates, or to propagate its species so often in the course of the same year, or under such different circumstances. It is not proved that all persons attacked with cholera have drunk of similar waters, while it must be pretty certain that many must have partaken of them from the same source without having the disease. How came the malady on leaving Sunderland, to go to Houghton, instead of Durham, which is on the same river? How did the flies traverse the air to Hawick rather than, nestling in the Tweed, have infected Berwick, Kelso, and Melrose? or what is the character of the Haddington brook, or the Esk at Musselburgh, that they should be the centres of infection? Our writer, we at once assert, independently of want of elementary scientific information, has not even sufficiently comprehensive judgment to grapple with his subject; and, inclined as we are to lean towards a theory of animate contagion, we must allow that it has found a very poor advocate in the author of the present inquiry.

Mr. Moir's Practical Observations will be extensively read. They are the result of his experience in the small town of Musselburgh, where, in the course of three weeks, the deaths from cholera alone exceeded the average annual mortality of the parish. There are many practical remarks which deserve to be well considered by the profession, as they differ somewhat from received principles. Bloodletting in the collapsed stage, he says, is a most destructive expedient, and only hastens the to shew that the whole class of nerves are catastrophe. Has not he made a rule of an primarily affected; and if the electric principle it as the result of the experience of most northern practitioners, that the re-action is not in proportion to the stimuli employed, but in proportion to the collapse; which is a very important proposition. He objects to mustard, and to the permission sometimes given to drink water; but recommends grateful stimulants throughout, with hot external applications.

We are somewhat surprised that a gentleman of Mr. Thompson's abilities as a zoologist, should have condescended to the ad cantandum title which is given to his work. His theory, like that of Mr. Searle's, is, that the miscalled cholera is a malignant pestilential fever, in which the cold stage is so formidable as to restrain the power of re-action so completely as to terminate the life of the patient when no means are used to obviate its fatal tendency. The work, in other respects, is very far behind the knowledge which has been obtained of the disease from the practical researches of our countrymen.

Mr. W. Hunt's Letter to the Lord President of the Council is written in that most curious of all dialects, the pure Cockney. contains, in addition, many observations of the greatest naïveté possible, and advice so re-markable for profound sagacity, that we are sure it will meet with its deserts at the office to which this wise epistle is addressed!

Dr. Brown ushered in his Letter to the public with puffs direct and oblique; and on perusal we must certainly give him credit for candour, even if there is a deficiency in new or important remarks. "When, in 1824, I published my opinions concerning cholera, in connexion with its production by summer and autumnal heat, &c. I was then, &c." Omitting the hythe malady is stated to have existed in sandy potheses the Dr. then held as truths, we find at the next page, " but as the present disease differs in some material points from the cholera referable to heat, the omission of those arguments is not very material." The necessity of cancelling a publication written previous to having seen the malady, should be a lesson to those afflicted with the scribbling mania on this eternal subject. The Doctor says, when we consider the prodigious mass of every thing that can be supposed to afford scope for the pestilential influence of this disease in London, we must conclude that it cannot possibly pass over such a large mass of corruption, without displaying its contagious powers to the greatest extent. The remainder of the pamphlet displays much good sense in the author, and it is in every respect worthy of attention.

> Sir A. Carlisle evidently knows nothing about cholera that should entitle him to call upon the pockets or the time of the public. His Lecture is, however, well written; contains some remarks on medical reform, with which we heartily concur; and farther, includes observations that we would hardly have expected from an examinator of the College of Sur-

The pamphlet on Dysenteria Serosa (a title of which we do not approve, as the morbid action in the gastro-enteric mucous membrane which induces asphyxia, is accompanied by no symptoms of dysentery), is one of the best theore-tical works we have had in our hands for some time. There is a curious difference in the opinions of the author and Dr. Brown. "All facts," says the former, "adduced, tend exception? Solid opium (as a stimulant) is of animal heat is interrupted in its passage malady as that which prevailed in Hindostan.

his great remedy for this stage: it may, he to or from the brain, or abstracted by some says, be exhibited with brandy; and he states attractive quality of the earth, producing the disease, the shock to those nerves must be apparently inevitable." Dr. Brown says, "The state of the human body particularly predisposed to this afflicting disease, may not unaptly be compared to an electric body very negatively charged; and nothing is wanting for the production of the disease but the application of an exciting cause, on the nature of which the particular kind of disease pro-duced depends." In this country cholera is decidedly a disease of debility, as evidenced now by several months' experience, and consequently the last opinion would force itself upon the mind. In India, where Philanthropos saw the disease, the reverse was the case: and in continuation of our notice of his little work, we must warn the general reader against his descriptions, which far surpass any thing that a malady, daily becoming more tractable in the hands of the skilful, has ever attained, in severity of symptoms or rapidity of dissolution, in this country.

We turn now to a more serious consideration - A Letter to the President of the Westminster Medical Society, - not that by being addressed to that Institution the latter identifies itself with the views entertained by the author; but that many of the most influential persons in that society, and most of its office-bearers, have by public acts connected themselves with the history of the opposition offered to truth by the science of this great metropolis. And we are happy to leave the thrice-contradictory reports of speeches, and the wavering letters of chameleon-like authors, to peruse opinions which come in the tangible form of a pamphlet. We at once aver, that in a practical point of view, if we have a new disease among us, it matters not (however important to history) whether it came from India or Greenland. The measures to be pursued, and the practice of medical men, are the same; and to prove that there is no new disease, or no disease which has assumed new properties, such as spreading under slow but certain laws in districts where it has made its appearance, and proving rapidly fatal to those who become the victims of its influence, it is necessary to subvert the experience of the last five months in this country, and of fourteen years abroad. Certain members of the Westminster Medical Society, without attempting this Augean task, even resolved, without almost any inquiry into the real circumstances of the case, to deny that either the pestilential cholera or any uncommon disease had manifested itself in this city; and they have, not only to their professional brethren, but before the public at large, placed themselves in so unenviable and so humiliating a situation, that we have no hesitation in saying it will require not efforts on their parts, but the most stubborn admiration of a noble and disinterested promulgation of error and misrepresentation, ever to induce any one brow, iridescent with the purity of truth and science, to illuminate their obscure and overshadowed walls. " If," says Dr. Webster, "this epidemic is not really a new disease, it must be an aggravated and more fatal type of that cholera morbus so admirably described by Sydenham," &c. What more is necessary to be quoted? According to our author, it is a more aggravated and fatal type than any disease yet known in this country; and if there is any faith in human testimony, it is, according to all (Dr. Johnson was not in India subsequently to 1807), the same

Dr. Söwenhaggen, now in London, has personally assured us of perfect identity between the diseases of Moscow, of St. Petersburg, of Berlin, of Musselburgh, and of London; and lastly, the malady, beit what it will, has assumed an epidemical or a pestilential character, imperiously requiring the attention of a paternal government, and a humane and civilised community; which indications have, we are proud to say, been fulfilled on both sides, though the deluded poor abuse their benefactors, and a few medical men have endeavoured to fan the flames of discord, by the publication of opinions which only derive their pernicious effect from their not being understood. To return to Dr. Webster's pamphlet. A blue face is neither a new nor a correct pathognomic sign of the malady in question. Again, from the proposition made by the Doctor, that medical men acquainted with the diseases of the poor, and not such as have had experience in the present complaint, should hold official situations, we entirely dissent. According to his own statements, if it is a disease of the poor, it has come with new characters; and it is best to have those who are acquainted with these new characters to watch over and control its progress: and as for the mere wish to examine whether the disease is really unknown in England, we seriously think that the Doctor and his party would get more information upon the subject, by visiting a few of the cases at the district hospitals, than by scribbling to prove that there is any thing in the subject that can be quibbled about, or held up as a matter of doubt. The tone of Dr. Webster's letter is mild and gentlemanlike; and however much we may differ in opinion, we hope to exercise the same temper and courtesy towards him, and that he will feel the force of our positions, and the necessity of at once correcting the bad example which he, among others, is setting to so numerous a portion of the community; for in the end truth must prevail, and desolation, "overgrown with nettles," will remain for those who have scorned her evidences.

Living Poets and Poetesses; a Biographical and Critical Poem. By Nicholas Michell, author of "the Siege of Constantinople." 12mo. pp. 150. London, 1832. Kidd.

WEDNESDAY, the most spring-looking day we have had this year, the streets, the parks, the spectacles (few as there are), were all more gaily enlivened with well-dressed and pleasant people than they have been on this side of Christmas. The sun not only shone, but was visible to the majority of the inhabitants of our vast metropolis; the air had an agreeable mixture of balminess with its perennial smoke; off the stones one might have fancied the redolent approach of the "ethereal mildness," and on them there was less of mud, or mud's alias—dust, than is common at almost any season of the year in town. The passengers passing to and fro, or meeting, were infected by the propitious aspect of external things; and friendly as well as polite recognitions were current on every hand. In soher sadness, there seemed to be a considerable quantity of happiness in the world.

In the midst of this so unusual and comfortable condition of affairs, it may well be believed that our spirit partook of the universal feeling; in fact, we were a perfect conglomeration of sympathy, philanthropy, and kindness; and we said to WE, lucky is the author who may now and to WE, lucky is the author who may now out was not for them—they were only things have the good fortune to come before our most to be "daily swallowed," without mankind merciful tribunal! That luck pertains to Mr. noticing their hideous forms, or caring for nople; for his case was the first we took up from the waiting multitude of volumes, whose destiny still hangs dependent upon the doom we have to pronounce. And, all about us being lively, what could be more appropriate for reading than a production all about the living poets and poetesses—the poets and poetesses all alive, and all shewn up by Mr. Nicholas, the showman. Of his own merits or demerits we remembered nothing; for the Siege of Constantinople was a blank upon our memory; but if it be yet a living poem, we beg to refer the public to it, as a key, peradventure, to the present performance, though, should it be dead and buried (as we strangely fear it is) the key will be more applicable to unlock the secret chamber. It is a very remarkable circumstance in the natural history of literature, that still-born authors make the noisiest of critics; and that dwhether in prose or verse, always turn out to be the only true and competent judges of literary talent. Thus it has happened that our friend Nicholas is doubly qualified for the task he has undertaken.

Yet we are sorry to say that his performance is not altogether original. There was a certain Lord Byron, who wrote a certain book called English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. lordship was a persecuted bard, but he trimmed his persecutors: Mr. Michell is a bard with whom nobody has meddled; but he has determined to out-Byron Byron in his great revenge! It is delightful to meet with so illustrious a person, bent on so immortal a design.

We had gotten thus far in the way of encomium, when we thought we might just as well take a peep into the work; and a change came o'er our dream (we choose to quote incor-rectly). We laid Mr. Michell down-he is extraordinarily dull, we said; and we took up a more amusing fellow, whose remarks do smack of point, though they are a little provoking in some instances to parties concerned. We opened

Prince Puckler at random, and read:—
"I next went to see the solar microscope, the magnifying power of which is a million. What it shews is really enough to drive a man of lively imagination mad. Nothing can be more horrible — no more frightful devilish figures could possibly be invented—than the hideous, disgusting water animalcula (invisible to the naked eye, or even to glasses of an inferior power) which we daily swallow. They looked like damned souls darting about their filthy pool with the rapidity of lightning, while every motion and gesture seemed to bespeak deadly hate, horrid torture, warfare, and death.'

Immediately an odd jumble of ideas took possession of our minds: the animalcule Master Nicholas - the animalculæ of the periodical press, whose criticism or non-criticism had exasperated his pen-and the animalculæ so wondrously exhibited by Mr. Carpenter's microscopic apparatus in Regent Street, and so vividly described by Prince Puckler; -all began to float about in the aqueous vacuum of our pia mater. At length they classed and arranged themselves, and we perceived the similitude between the species,-we found that the creatures of the microscope were simply disappointed authors and (when not identical) periodical reviewers and critics in low journals and magazines struggling about in the sphere of their muddy drop.

The breathing world and grateful scene with-monsters preyed upon one another; but hymn. hyrcanian tiger, cobra di capella, or viper, could not be more fierce or venomous. It is really worth going to see this emblem of the scurrilous and malignant press; the represstation is perfection. Here you observe the 900th part of a mite aping all the powers of a gigantic destroyer; spitting a miserable cel, a if it were a poet, on its forked tongue; gorgina a polypus, like a historian, and ejecting in skin; and especially endeavouring to devou its own kind, full grown or spawn, in the mos striking and fearful manner, with " every motion and gesture bespeaking deadly hate and horrid torture." By all means visit Mr. Carpenter's Critical and Literary Exhibition: the sun, like truth, throws a prodigious light upon the subjects; and when you fully understand it, you may read . . and . . Mags Sunday, weekly. daily without the slightest injury to yourself, or bad effect upon the public.

But where is Master Nicholas all this while he has just been passed through, a crasfish - looking devil, with sharp claws, and become in turn as egregious a reptile as the rest; lo! how he wriggles and frisks_hor he tries to bite-how he navigates the immens water-drop, as if it were the multitudinous ocean—how he darts out his timy fork, and dismays the universe! How thankful must be be to us, who have made ourselves his soir system, and by our notice so magnified his with "a power which is a million," that though hitherto "invisible to the naked exor even to glasses of an inferior power, may now be seen and known to exist.

Yet it is hardly worth while to bestow ere a passing notice on his silly volume. How be could consider himself a poet, it is difficult how he could fancy himself a wit, it is impossible, to imagine. He has a brother, a solicit at Ilfracombe, to whom he inacribes his laborious pages. Then comes a preface, wherein referring to himself, he modestly tells us "Pope's Dunciad is distinguished for arch with and the powerful, though kindly, castigation a its victims." He next insinuates a similar comparison between Mr. Nicholas Michell and Mr. William Gifford, the author of the Beviad and Meviad, and also between the same self-satisfied and accomplished individual Lord Byron, as aforesaid. These, he informs us, are "the three great literary satire" which have preceded his own - worth all the three: "vain pretension (quoth he) and co-combry, too much of which unhappily erim I have done my best to treat as they deserve." That he has not stated his intertion according to the rules of grammar, is a little consequence; verbs in the singular and plural nominatives are but specks in composition. Ingenuously, however, doth he add: " am conscious of the difficult nature of my theme; that opinions amongst men widely vary: I am also aware that I have produced by great but a little satire. This is the age of effrontery." True for you, as the Irish phrase has it; and he lamentably concludes... This is the age of effrontery, puffing, and coterie influence; parties combine to echo reciprosi praises; and by these means many gain a transient renown, to which even they are unentitled."

Having in this elegant proce opened his battery, he proceeds to shew that he can write quite as ill in verse. Speaking of Campbell we have a droll example of Master Nichols Nicholas Michell, of the Siege of Constanti- their disgusting contests. The infinitely small his notions of the topography of the great me nufacturing, loom-crammed, mercantile, busy, bustling, crowded city of Glasgow.

"Glaggow, Ms birth-place, oft 'mid seighbouring dells,
When heath-flowers cornted morning's balany air,
And evening brought the sound of sheep-fold belts, life passed his joyous moments; melted there"—

In troth, he was more likely to melt near a steam-engine furnace than to hear sheep-bells, as the west country drovers never take their muttons with bells on them either up the High Street or down the Tolbooth to the butchers' to be slaughtered; and these are the only sheep ever seen in, since it must be so, the "heathflowers scented" alleys of the queen of the west. Of Campbell himself we are farther in-

" His soul grew harmony, and first the lyre,
I ween, he swept, all warm with Genius' fire." This was at the time of his melting; but,

For genuine pearls his songs, too, cannot pass; But his War Odes are noble to the letter, And, oh! his Hope—we've scarce a poem better."

He has, however, a redeeming quality-"All in-novation in our tongue he spurns."

But our author, martyr to beauty, lets out the full tide and flow of his genus, where he sings of the fair blues who illumine our horizon with a brilliant (blue) light.

"When Beauty quits her toilet for the page, When Beauty quits nor tonet for the page.
And letters more than conquests are esteet
When rank eschews the follies of the age,
Virtuous where vice too of is merit deem
And sees no charm in titles or in court ton.
We must admire—se turn to Mrs. Norton. we must samme—a two mrs. Norton.
Oh, acton worthy of great Sheridan!
Whose name is Erin's honour and our own,
How beautiful life's happy spring began—
How early tous her rose of genius bleon!
Memory of him, the wreaths which he had won,
Warmed into life her talents, life a sun."

N.B. "At nineteen she married the Hop. Mr. Norton. She is considered handsome."
Only "considered!" why, Master Nicholas, the fact needs no consideration whatsoever. But assuredly, Master Nicholas, his ignorance is vehement through these wearisome pages.

"Who wandern down green Ettrick's bosky vale,
Now kenning high Closeburn, now Thirlestane—
Ghost-haunted tower, which turns the peasant pale
Now pricking on his lasy kine amain,
And blithly singling, till comb, burn, and bog,
Ring wi' his lustle lay?—'tis youthful Hogg."

Genius is a fine thing: but what Mr. Ni. cholas means by a "comb," small-toothed or other, ringing with Hogg's lustic lay, beats us hollow. We have a faint recollection of putting bits of paper over combs, in our boyish age, and by blowing or breathing through this simple instrument, discoursing a reedy and bag-pipeish music; but we never heard of youthful Hogg being celebrated in this style. Mais-but, as the French say, a man who could make a bog ring, like a bittern (or bull-o'-the-bog-wide our Ornithology, when it shall be published, and beat Jesse out of the hedge as well as field), is able to ring a treble bob-major —by himself.

By this here time we may venture to suppose that our readers have had enough of Master Nicholas. At page 27 he confesseth he "can-not bite;" and yet pretendeth he to indite pungent satire! He is, in verity, a weak and a ridiculous writer ; his little vanity as an author hurt, he must run a-muck-and such a muck he has made of it! a litter of nonsense and rubbish, without a fertilising particle (no matter whence derived) in the whole compost. Of satire the most innocuous, of information the most bald, of talent the most guiltless, he has only raised a printed memorial upon which, to use the concluding line of his second and unhappily not concluding part, he may hang during his hour of execution, and ledge could be derived from it; therefore let him be buried in his rags :-- verdict, felo de se.

" Suffer on the gallows of his rhymes."

Altrive Tales. By the Ettrick Shepherd. The first Vol. containing Memoirs of the Author -Reminiscences of former Days-and Three Tales. London, 1832. Cochrane and Co. This is the first of the twelve volumes an nounced in the prospectus of the Waverley-shaped edition of a selection from the Shepherd's works, with new and original productions from his pen.

Having left London for his native Altrive last Saturday, we are happy so soon to have this legacy to introduce to our readers, and especially to those who have enjoyed his society while here amongst us, and who, missing the amusement of it, may, in some measure, compensate themselves by the perusal of these very entertaining pages. In them they will find the same frankness and bonhomic, the same shrewdness and quiet humour, which recom-mended their author to the attentions of the first nobles, and highest literary characters of the land; and who shewed how well he merited those attentions by never overstepping the proper bounds imposed by self-respect, and conducting himself with so much discretion and tact, as to make the most favourable impression upon every class who met him. It has been our good fortune to see him with high peers and courtly dames; and with pleasure we wast this testimony to his countrymen in the north that they have as much cause to be proud of the sense and modesty of their Shepherd, as of his talent and genius.

We have but short time (for it reached us far too late) to do more than glance hastily over this volume.

A portrait of the author (not very like), and a comic scene for one of the tales, by Cruikshauk, are its embellishments. A poetical dedication to Lady Anne Scott, of Buccleuch. is honourable to the heart of the writer, and contains several passages of fine natural thought and poetical beauty.

The sketch is of his literary life, and gives the story of all his bookselling and publishing affairs relating to the thirty volumes which he has sent to the press. There is great naïvete in this history; and as a number of individuals are mentioned (some with praise, and others with censure), we fancy it will create what is called a sensation in the public. Hogg's early efforts to become an author are as interesting as they are romantic. Even so late as 1810, after failing in a farming speculation, he

"Finding myself at length fairly run aground I gave my creditors all that I had, or rather suffered them to take it, and came off and left them. I never asked any settlement, which would not have been refused me; and severely have I smarted for that neglect since. None of these matters had the least effect in depressing my spirits - I was generally rather most cheer ful when most unfortunate. On returning again to Ettrick Forest, I found the countenances of all my friends altered; and even those whom I had loved, and trusted most, disowned me, and told me so to my face; but I laughed at and despised those persons, resolving to show them, by and by, that they were in the wrong. Having appeared as a poet, and a speculative farmer besides, no one would now employ me as a

" "Will the Editor of the Literary Gazette be so good as to place under his List of New Books—Second edition of Michell's 'Living Poets and Poetsses!" "—Note just

As for dissection, neither amusement nor know. | shepherd. I even applied to some of my old masters, but they refused me, and for a whole winter I found myself without employment, and without money, in my native country; therefore, in February 1810, in utter desperation, I took my plaid about my shoulders, and marched away to Edinburgh, determined, since no better could be, to push my fortune as a literary man. It is true, I had estimated my poetical talent high enough, but I had resolved to use it only as a staff, never as a crutch; and would have kept that resolve, had I not been driven to the reverse. On going to Edinburgh, I found that my poetical talents were rated nearly as low there as my shepherd qualities were in Ettrick. It was in vain that I applied to newsmongers, booksellers, editors of magazines, &c. for employment. Any of these were willing enough to accept of my lucubrations, and give them publicity, but then there was no money going—not a farthing; and this suited me very ill."

We ought to notice previously to this, however, that he enjoyed a few months of schooling at the age of seven and ten; that he was born in 1772, January 25, also Burns's birth-day; that he began to write rhymes in 1796, the year in which Burns died; that his first published song was "Donald M'Donald," composed in 1800; and that he had published a volume of poems, with no great care, and no remarkable 911/2004#

But the opening of the memoir is so exceedingly characteristic of the man, that we must revert to it.

"I like (says he) to write about myself; in fact, there are few things which I like better; it is so delightful to call up old reminiscences. Often have I been laughed at for what an Edinburgh editor styles my good-natured egotism, which is sometimes any thing but that; and I am aware that I shall be laughed at again. But I care not; for this important memoir, now to be brought forward for the fourth time, at different periods of my life, I shall narrate with the same frankness as formerly; and in all, relating either to others or myself, speak fearlessly and unreservedly out."

We copy two or three other pieces, in the same anecdotical vein, though, we own, very little in order. In his eighteenth year, the Shepherd read the life of Wallace and the Gentle Shepherd ; but he tells us

"The truth is, I made exceedingly slow proress in reading them. The little reading that I had learned I had nearly lost, and the Scottish dialect quite confounded me; so that, before I got to the end of a line, I had commonly lost the rhyme of the preceding one; and if I came to a triplet—a thing of which I had no conception-I commonly read to the foot of the page without perceiving that I had lost the rhyme altogether. I thought the author had been straitened for rhymes, and had just made a part of it do as well as he could without them. Thus, after I got through both works, I found myself much in the same predicament with the man of Eskdalemuir, who had borrowed Bailey's Dictionary from his neighbour. On returning it, the lender asked him what he thought of it. 'I dinna ken, man,' replied he; 'I have read it all through, but canna say that I understand it; it is the most confused book that ever I saw in my life!'

In Edinburgh, his first exploit was to set up a weekly paper called the Spy, which lasted a whole year.

"A great number were sold, and many hundreds delivered gratis; but one of Robert-son's boys, a great rascal, had demanded the they were to be delivered gratis: 'So they are. said he: 'I take nothing for the delivery; but I must have the price of the paper, if you please.' This money that the boy brought me, consisting of a few shillings and an immense

He next became an orator at the Forum and about this time negotiated the disposal of a MS. poem to Mr. Constable. "I went to him (he relates) and told him my plan of publication; but he received me coldly, and told me to call again. I did so - when he said he would do nothing until he had seen the MS. I refused to give it, saying, 'What skill have you about the merits of a book?' 'It may be so, Hogg,' said he; 'but I know as well how to sell a book as any man, which should be some concern of yours; and I know how to buy one, too, by G-!

Of this production, the Queen's Wake, he afterwards speaks thus: — " My own opinion of it is, that it is a very imperfect and unequal production; and if it were not for three of the ballads, which are rather of a redeeming quality, some of the rest are little better than trash. But, somehow or other, the plan proved extuemely happy; and though it was contrived solely for the purpose of stringing my miscellaneous ballads into a regular poem, happened to have a good effect, from keeping always up a double interest, both in the incidents of each a unusue interest, both in the incidents of each tale, and in the success of the singer in the contest for the prize harp. The intermediate poetry between the ballads is all likewise middling good."

Respecting the Pilgrims of the Sun, the narrative is equally racy.

" It was in vain that Mr. Blackwood urged that it was a work of genius, however faulty, and that it would be an honour for any bookseller to have his name to it. Mr. Murray had been informed, by those on whose judgment he could rely, that it was the most wretched poem that ever was written. Mr. Blackwood felt a delicacy in telling me this, and got a few friends to inform me of it in as delicate a way as possible. I could not, however, conceal my feelings, and maintained that the poem was a good one. Mr. Grieve checked me, by saying it was impossible that I could be a better judge than both the literary people of Scotland and England-that they could have no interest in condemning the poem; and after what had happened, it was vain to augur any good of it. I said it would be long ere any of those persons who had condemned it could write one like it; and I was obliged to please myself with this fancy, and put up with the affront."

As another trait of our worthy Shepherd, we will quote his first acquaintance with the drinking of whisky-toddy, in the mixing of which he has since become so great a master as almost to have driven champagne and claret from the most fashionable tables he frequented during his Lion-days in London.

The Spy was doomed.

"On the publication of the first two numbers, I deemed I had as many subscribers as, at all events, would secure the work from being dropped; but, on the publication of my third or fourth number, I have forgot which, it was so indecorous, that no fewer than seventythree subscribers gave up. This was a sad blow for me; but, as usual, I despised the fasprice in full for all that he was to have delivered sight for the paper; for all those who had gratis. They shewed him the imprint, that given in set themselves against it with the diting a poem for me, and assured me that they were to be delivered gratis: 'So they are,' utmost inveteracy. The literary ladies, in 'he would appear in my work in his best utmost inveteracy. The literary ladies, in particular, agreed, in full divan, that I would never write a sentence which deserved to be read. A reverend friend of mine has often consisting of a few shillings and an immense representation of halfpence, was the first and only money I had pocketed of my own making since If I leeve ony time, I'll let them see the contrair o' that.' My publisher, James Robertson, was a kind-hearted, confused body, who loved a joke and a dram. He sent for me every day about one o'clock, to consult about the publication; and then we uniformly went down to a dark house in the Cowgate, where we drank whisky and ate rolls with a number of printers, the dirtiest and leanest-looking men I had ever seen. My youthful habits having been so regular, I could not stand this; and though I took care, as I thought, to drink very little, yet, when I went out, I was at times so dizzy, I could scarcely walk; and the worst thing of all was, I felt that I was beginning to relish it. Whenever a man thinks seriously of a thing, he generally thinks aright. I thought frequently of these habits and connexions, and found that they never would do; and that, instead of pushing myself forward, as I wished, I was going straight to the devil. I said nothing about this to my respectable acquaintances, nor do I know if they ever knew or suspected what was going on; but, on some pretence or other, I resolved to cut all connexion with Robertson, and, sorely against his will, gave the printing to the Messrs. Aikman."

Match our Shepherd now, for the brewing or the drinking either; and we will pay the forfeit of a whole hogshead.

Our selections must belong to the personals. Mr. Jeffery, it seems, did not review the Queen's Wake till it had reached a third edition.

" He then gave a very judicious and sensible review of it; but he committed a most horrible blunder, in classing Mr. Tenant, the author of Anster Fair, and me together, as two self-taught geniuses; whereas there was not one point of resemblance. Tenant being a better-educated man than the reviewer himself, was not a little affronted at being classed with me. From that day to this Mr. Jeffery has taken no notice of any thing that I have published, which I think can hardly be expected to do him any honour at the long-run. I should like the worst poem that I have since published to stand a fair comparison with some that he has strained himself to bring forward. It is a pity that any literary connexion, which with the one party might be unavoidable, should ever prejudice one valued friend and acquaintance against another. In the heart-burnings of party spirit, the failings of great minds are more exposed than in all other things in the world put together.'

The following, of a later date, is curious :-" My next literary adventure was the most extravagant of any. I took it into my head that I would collect a poem from every living author in Britain, and publish them in a neat and elegant volume, by which I calculated I might make my fortune. I either applied personally, or by letter, to Southey, Wilson, Wordsworth, Lloyd, Morehead, Pringle, Paterson, and several others; all of whom sent me very ingenious and beautiful poems. Wordsworth afterwards reclaimed his; and although Lord Byron and Rogers both promised, neither of them ever performed. I be-breeks.' That poem was 'Lara;' and who it was that influenced him to detain it from me. I do not know. I have heard a report of one; but the deed was so ungenerous, I cannot believe it. I may here mention, by way of advertising, that I have lost all Lord Byron's letters to me, on which I put a very high value; and which I know to have been stolen from me by some one or other of my tourist visitors, for I was so proud of these letters, that I would always be shewing them to every body. It was exceedingly unkind, particularly as they never can be of use to any other person, for they have been so often and so eagerly read by many of my friends, that any single sentence out of any one of them could easily be detected. I had five letters of his of two sheets each, and one of three. They were indeed queer harumscarum letters, about women and poetry, mountains and authors, and blue-stockings; and what he sat down to write about was generally put in the postscript. They were all, however, extremely kind, save one, which was rather a satirical, hitter letter. I had been quizzing him about his approaching marriage, and assuring him that he was going to get himself into a confounded scrape. I wished she might prove both a good mill and a bank to him; but I much doubted they would not be such as he was calculating on. I think he felt that I was using too much freedom with him. The last letter that I received from him was shortly after the birth of his daughter Ada. In it he breathed the most tender affection both for the mother and child. Good Heaven! how I was astounded by the news that soon followed that !- Peace be to his manes! He was a great man; and I do not think that one on earth appreciated his gigantic genius so highly as I did. He sent me, previous to that period, all his poems as they were printed. But to return to my publication: Mr. Walter Scott absolutely refused to furnish me with even one verse, which I took exceedingly ill, as it frustrated my whole plan. What occasioned it I do not know, as I accounted myself certain of his support from the beginning, and had never asked any thing of him in all my life that he refused. in vain that I represented that I had done as much for him, and would do ten times more if he required it. He remained firm in his denial, which I thought very hard; so I left him in high dudgeon, sent him a very abusive letter, and would not speak to him again for many a day. I could not even endure to see him at a distance, I felt so degraded by the refusal; and I was, at that time, more disgusted with all mankind than I had ever been before, or have ever been since."

His reconciliation with Scott is very honourable to the latter.

We have not space to go through the progress of Mr. Hogg's publications in prose and verse, his dosing in the Chaldee MSS., or his contributions to Blackwood's Magazine; but conclude with some farther illustrations as they come to hand. Every body wants to know about honest Ebony. List to the Shepherd.

" I have had many dealings with that gentleman, and have been often obliged to him, and yet I think he has been as much obliged to me. perhaps a good deal more, and I really believe in my heart that he is as much disposed to be friendly to me as to any man; but there is tidiousness and affectation of the people, and lieve they intended it, but some other concerns another principle that circumscribes that feetcontinued my work. It proved a fatal over- of deeper moment interfered. In one of Lord ing in all men, and into very narrow limits in who has been a benefactor even on a small scale, but there are some things that no independent heart can bear. The great fault of Blackwood is, that he regards no man's temper or disposition; but the more he can provoke an author by insolence and contempt, he likes the better. Besides, he will never once confess that he is in the wrong, else any thing might be forgiven; no, no, the thing is impossible that he can ever be wrong! The poor author is not only always in the wrong, but, 'Oh, he is the most insufferable beast!'"

Southey .- A visit to the lakes :

"I was a grieved as well as an astonished man, when I found that he refused all participation in my beverage of rum punch. For a poet to refuse his glass, was to me a phenomenon; and I confess I doubted in my own mind, and doubt to this day, if perfect sobriety and transcendent poetical genius can exist together. In Scotland I am sure they cannot. With regard to the English, I shall leave them to settle that among themselves, as they have little that is worth drinking.

" Both his figure and countenance are imposing, and deep thought is strongly marked in his dark eye; but there is a defect in his eyelids, for these he has no power of raising; so that, when he looks up, he turns up his face, being unable to raise his eyes; and when he looks towards the top of one of his romantic mountains, one would think he was looking at the zenith. This peculiarity is what will most strike every stranger in the appearance of the accomplished laureate. He does not at all see well at a distance, which made me several times disposed to get into a passion with him, because he did not admire the scenes which I was pointing out."

His pictures of Wordsworth, Cunningham, Galt, Scott (the Odontist of Blackwood), and Sym, the Timothy Tickler, we must leave, and finish with a touch of Lockhart.

"When (says Hogg) it is considered what literary celebrity Lockhart has gained so early in life, and how warm and disinterested a friend he has been to me, it argues but little for my sagacity that I scarcely recollect any thing of our first encounters. He was a mischievous Oxford puppy, for whom I was terrified, dancing after the young ladies, and drawing caricatures of every one who came in contact with him. But then I found him constantly in company with all the better rank of people with whom I associated, and consequently it was impossible for me not to meet with him. I dreaded his eye terribly; and it was not without reason, for he was very fond of playing tricks on me, but always in such a way, that it was impossible to lose temper with him. I never parted company with him that my judgment was not entirely jumbled with regard to characters, books, and literary articles of every description. Even his household economy seemed clouded in mystery; and if I got any explanation, it was sure not to be the right thing. It may be guessed how astonished I was one day, on perceiving six black servants waiting at his table upon six white gentlemen! Such a train of Blackamoors being beyond my comprehension, I asked for an explanation; but got none, save that he found them very useful and obliging poor fellows, and that they did not look for much wages, beyond a mouthful of meat. A young lady hearing me afterwards making a fuss about such a phenomenon, and swearing that the Blackamoors would break my young friend, she assured me that Mr. Lockhart had only one black servant, but that when the mas- be accounted for, without the consideration of some. It is always painful to part with one | ter gave a dinner to his friends, the servant, knowing there would be enough, and to spare for all, invited his friends also. Lockhart always kept a good table, and a capital stock of liquor, especially Jamaica rum, and by degrees grew not so frightened to visit him."

When he wished to ascertain who the writers in the magazine were, Lockhart was wont to bamboozle him sadly.

"With his cigar in his mouth, his one leg flung carelessly over the other, and without the symptom of a smile on his face, or one twinkle of mischief in his dark grey eye, he would father the articles on his brother, Captain Lockhart, or Peter Robertson, or Sheriff Cay, or James Wilson, or that queer fat body, Dr. Scott; and sometimes on James and John Ballantyne, and Sam Anderson, and poor Baxter. Then away I flew with the wonderful news to my other associates; and if any remained incredulous, I swore the facts down through them; so that before I left Edinburgh I was accounted the greatest liar that was in it, except one."

Need we add that there is an ample fund of entertainment here? The only very objectionable passage we have to censure, is an allusion to Mr. Owen Rees, in which the Shepherd is terribly mistaken.

Tait's Edinburgh Magazine, No. I. Edinburgh, Tait; London, Simpkin and Marshall; Cumming, Dublin.

WITH a portrait of the Lord Chancellor on its cover, as a sign, our new contemporary has put in his first blow. We have never liked to pronounce a judgment upon our fellow-labourers in the periodical vineyard (or desert, as it has been, and is, to many); and shall not now transgress our wholesome restraint farther than to say, that the contents of this No. I. are chiefly political—whiggish, inclining to radicalism; and even the miscellaneous papers, such as "the State of Magic in Egypt," are strongly imbued with party feelings. "The Pechler" is a clever, natural, and characteristic sketch; the bits of poetry but so-so; and the "Téle-à-têle with Mr. Tait," "Ane Crouse Craw," &c. too much in the style of rodomontade, which has, not to its advantage, too much infected Scots literature, and which can neither be imitated in England or Scotland without greater failure and dislike.

Waverley Novels, XXXV.; Redgauntlet, Vol. I. Edinburgh, Cadell; London, Whittaker and

THE frontispiece, by A. Fraser, and engraved by J. Mitchell, is worthy to be classed among the best illustrations of this series; and the vignette is truly charming. The design of the fisher surrendering his rod to "the sneering scoundrel" is exquisitely imagined by Inskipp, and transferred to the plate with equal spirit by R. Graves.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

PROFESSOR RITCHIE having given, in aformer lecture, the experimental proofs of his theory of the galvanic battery, proceeded, on the present occasion, to illustrate by experiment his investigations on the conduction of voltaic electricity by different bodies, and the temperature and other peculiarities exhibited by water and metallic solutions when employed for this purpose. He conceived that the phenomena of electro-magnetism and voltaic electricity might circulations or currents, merely by supposition of electrical polarity possessed by the molecules of the conducting bodies. He proved, by experiment, that all the different conductors hitherto tried by him gave the same electromagnetic result when transmitting the same quantity of voltaic electricity, and deflected the magnetic needle in an equal degree when their respective axes of conduction were at the same distance from it. Water contained in a glass cylinder of any diameter, being made the conductor in a galvanic apparatus, was found to produce the same deflection of a needle as wire employed under similar circumstances; and when charcoal or water was made the conductor, rotation round the pole of a magnet was found to result in the same manner as when wire, originally used by Mr. Faraday when he first made this celebrated experiment, was employed. The most interesting of these experiments of Professor Ritchie, was that in which the rotation of water alone was effected, while the vessel itself remained fixed. The water was contained in a hollow double cylinder of glass, and on being made the conductor of the voltaic electricity, was observed, by means of a floating vane, to revolve in a regular vortex, changing its direction as the poles of the battery were alternately reversed. When pure water, in a vessel with three compartments, was made the conductor, the temperature was found to be higher in the positive than in the negative end, and considerably higher than either in the middle compartment. With metallic solutions, the contrary was ascertained to take place, the temperature depending upon the specific heats as disengaged at respective poles.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS.

SIR HENRY HALFORD, Bart., president, in the chair.—The second meeting for the season was numerously attended, not only by the most eminent members of the medical profession, but also by many learned and distinguished visitors.

Dr. F. Hawkins, the registrar, read a paper, communicated by Dr. Latham, "on the use of opium in fever." The author stated, that there are certain forms of fever in which the affection of the sensorium greatly outruns and is wholly disproportionate to that of the bloodvessels. He described these forms of attack with considerable minuteness, and stated that they are incident, not so much to the sound and vigorous as to those whose nervous systems have been impaired and shattered by their previous life, whether passed in the strife of politics, amidst the anxieties of mercantile gambling, or under the wear and tear of hard professional toil; but to the same condition, also, the lowest and meanest of mankind may be brought by their cares, and hardships, and privations-and there is no cause which produces this state so frequently as intemperance. The author particularly recommended that the nature of each person's disease should be considered with a reference to his previous habits and state of health. The form of fever which he described is distinguished by wakefulness, and sometimes by delirium; which symptoms can only, he thinks, be subdued by opium; but opiates must be administered in much smaller doses than would be necessary if the patient were suffering from the same symptoms, and not affected with fever. In these cases he thinks that life may often be saved by the dexterous use of opium, when it would be lost inevitably without it.

ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM.

In giving an account of Cav. Nobili's experiments on this important subject in our last, we regret that, not having the whole details before us, we were inadvertently led to do a great injustice to our own most ingenious and able countryman Mr. Faraday, who in this, as in many other philosophical and scientific inquiries of the greatest public interest, has taken the lead, and made those discoveries which reflect an honour upon him and upon his country. Without detracting from Cav. Nobili's successful diligence, we may state, out of his own paper, that he attributes his experiments to having seen a copy of a letter of Mr. Faraday to Paris, (which letter he translates into Italian and candidly inserts,) and that it was in following his example that he also had obtained the spark with the magnet. Indeed, he. throughout, compliments Mr. Faraday in the highest terms. The whole experiments are, therefore, truly our countryman's, and their repetition in France and Italy are but tributes to his merit in having struck upon so curious a line of investigation, and, in their results, the confirmation of his remarkable discovery. are only sorry that any partial mistake of ours should tend to confuse this point, as we are always anxious, no matter to whom the palm may belong, to be guided by the motto, qui meruit ferat.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENA FOR APRIL. 19d 14h 36m-the Sun enters Taurus.

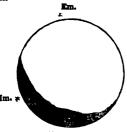

Lunar Phases and Conjunctions.

		н.
> First Occarter in Gennini	7	13	40
O Full Moon in Virgo · · · · · · · ·	14	16	0
Last Quarter in Capricornus -
New Moon in Aries

The Moon will be in conjunction with

	D	. н.	M.
Mercury in Pisces	. 1	18	26
Saturn in Leo
Uranus in Capricornus	23	22	0
Mars in Capricornus
Jupiter in Aquarius
Venus in Pisces
Mercury in Aries

Occultation of Saturn. — 114 — immersion 3h 26m; emersion 4h 9m. The following disgram will illustrate the phase and position of the Moon, and the points of immersion and emersion.

The occultation will occur during the day, but may be observed with good telescopes.

2d - Mercury in perihelion. 14d - greatest elongation (19° 50') as an evening star. 24dstationary near & Arietis.

3d 11h - Venus, the morning star, in conjunction with Jupiter: difference in declination 19'. 4^d — with φ Aquarii: difference of latitude 15'. 9^d —aphelion.

3d - Mars in conjunction with . Capricorni: difference of latitude 7'. 25d-with 54 Aquarii: difference of latitude 11'.

The Asteroids ._ Id __ Vesta in the constellation Cancer; June about 1° north of . Leonis; Pallas 3° west of β Piscium; Ceres 21° northeast of . Ceti.

difference of latitude 4. 24—with 968 Mayer: difference of latitude 8. This planet is too near the Sun for the eclipses of his satellites to be visible.

Saturn continues a conspicuous object during the night, at the south-eastern angle of a quadrilateral figure formed with Regulus, 2 and 4

6d 11h - Uranus in conjunction with Mars: difference in declination 38'. Destford.

J. T. BARKER

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

mian Professor, Cambridge. Professor Airy, on revising, in the year 1827, at the request of the Board of Longitude, the elements of Delambre's Solar Tables, discovered an inequality of 240 years in the earth's motion in longitude, in consequence of the action of the planet Venus. The present memoir contains a revision and extension of the author's calculations relating to this inequality. In the first part he investigates the perturbation of the earth's longitude and radius vector; in the second, the perturbation of the earth in latitude; and in the third, those perturbations of Venus which depend upon the same arguments. This memoir of Professor Airy is, we believe, the most laborious investigation yet made in the planetary theory; the labour of the calculation of the terms being twenty times greater than that for the long inequality of Saturn. And when we state, that it has received from him a greater degree of attention than any of his former works, in consequence of the great complexity and length of the numerical calculations, and the necessity he was under of examining closely and accurately every single line of figures before proceeding to the next, and also from the circumstance of his going twice over the calculations with the substitution of different values in each case—we may consider it as one of the most valuable, as well as elaborate of his investigations. The resulting terms given by Professor Airy will be very sensible in all observations, but especially those for Venus near her inferior conjunction, and will be important in calculating the transit of Venus over the sun's disc. At this meeting of the Society a very able report on this memoir, drawn up by Mr. Lubbock and Professor Whewell, was read. They remarked, that the only similar investigation to which this of Professor Airy could be compared was the celebrated memoir of Laplace on the Theory of Jupiter and Saturn, contained in the Memoirs of the Royal Academy of Sciences for 1785 and 1786; and they regarded it as the first step made by an Englishman since the time of Dr. Halley towards the improvement of the elements of the solar tables, both from its numerical processes and from the detection of an inequality so small in amount and of such long period.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES

MR. HALLAM in the chair. The auditors' report of the treasurer's accounts for the last year was read. Mr. Jerdan exhibited a drawing and impression of a seal found in a field near Winchester: it was a stamp for woollen cloths for the town of Southampton, and apparently of about the time of Edward III. Mr. Hudson Gurney communicated a copy of the proclama-

_Jupiter in conjunction with φ Aquarii: | Queen Catherine, and his marriage with Ann Bullen, preserved at Norwich. A communication from Mr. Repton was read, containing some further historical observations on hats; and extracts from several old authors, as an appendix to his former essay on the same subject. Mr. Crofton Croker communicated, from a collection of papers lately received from Ireland relative to the Roche family, two documents; one dated in 1696, being a release of dower from Catherine Blake, who, it appears, had cohabited with James Roche, ali Mac Henry, as his wife, and, as such, had claimed an interest in his estates after his death; the other was a memorandum, dated in 1623, of James Roche, alias Mac Henry (son of the former), having paid a ring of gold in discharge of a mortgage. It appears that rings of gold, in the nature of ingots, passed current; and Sir William Betham mentions one of 36 ounces weight. Mr. Porter exhibited a deed of conveyance, curious as containing a warranty against Jews, as well as Christians : it was without date, but was presumed to be prior to Edward I.

PINE ARTS.

SUFFOLK STREET GALLERY. [Second Notice.]

No. 87. A Couple of Pets. R. T. Lonsdale. Animal life and still life, so skilfully brought together and finished, that we are really at a loss which to prefer. The purchaser who takes both, will certainly have a bargain in a very beautiful picture.

No. 115. The Baptism. G. Harvey, S.A. One of those varied and interesting scenes of devotion which occur in the wilds of Scotland, where no vestige of temple or church appears, and where nature's God is acknowledged in the midst of nature's works. The subject is taken from " Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life." and answers well to the quotation.

No. 116. Lime-Kiln Cottage. T. J. Judkin. There is a charm in simplicity which is felt by every lover of the picturesque. This charm has been happily caught by the artist.

No. 131. Burnham Beeches; Noon. J.W. Allen.-An admirable lightness and warmth pervade Mr. Allen's works. The effect in them, although perfectly true, is not brought about by any violent opposition of tone or colour. They represent what we may perhaps be allowed to call the holyday aspect of landscape scenery.

No. 151. Caution. James Inskipp.—One of this artist's natural characters; a peasant girl crossing a brook. Although in every respect a highly creditable work of art, we will take the liberty of giving Mr. Inskipp a "caution; viz. not to repeat himself, or rather his manner, too often.

No. 189. The Affecting Story. D. Passmore. -Mr. Passmore is rapidly advancing in the line of his studies, namely, subjects from familiar life. The lightness, transparency, and beauty of his colouring equal any thing in the way of contemporary art.

No. 296. Interior of a Gaming-House. H. Pidding.—Rather the Pandemonium of life. That such things can be-that rank and fashion of both sexes, possessed by the demon of avarice, should thus mingle with sharpers and strumpets, to prey and to be preyed uponmay well excite our wonder as well as our regret. It is, however, no less the province of the arts than that of the drama, " to hold the mirror up to nature-to shew vice her own feation issued by Henry VIII. on his divorce from ture, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of time his form and pressure;" and in doing so, Mr. Pidding has performed his task in a manner highly creditable to his

No. 492. Luoy Ashton, at the Mermalden's Fountain, waiting the return of the Master of Ravenswood. T. Duncan.-Not recollecting to have seen any of his former productions, we may be allowed, as in the case of the first ap-pearance of the lamented Bonington's works, to ask, who is T. Duncan? and, as in the same case, to express our surprise and admiration at so able a performance, uniting as it does the highest qualities of art in expression, execution, and effect.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The National Portrait Gallery, No. XXXVI Fisher, Son, and Co.

An admirable portrait of Lord Holland, by H. Robinson, after Leslie, an artist of the highest eminence, from whom the engraving of any portrait is indeed a nevelty of value; and this not the less as the likeness of so distinguished a man, of whom we have no existing memorial of the same kind since the days of his youth—is the first embellishment of the present Part. Another fine engraving of the late Lord Chief Baron Dundas, by Woolnoth, after Rae-burn; and an excellent resemblance of Mr. Croker, by T. H. Parry, from Lawrence's delightful picture, make up the attractive trio of which it consists. We are really afraid to say what we think of this production as a work of art; for three such plates for thrice three times the cost of the publication would, in our esteem be a gratifying acquisition. Of the biographical sketches we shall only state, that these of Lord Holland and Mr. Croker are entirely original, and contain many interesting particulars of two eminently public characters. The in-ternal evidence of their having been sought at authentic sources is quite sufficient for their credit; and we feel satisfied that in referring our readers to them, we shall be thanked for the sincerity of our recommendation and the pleasure to which it has led. We may, per-haps, cite two or three striking passages in a future Gazette.

Burns and Hogg.

PROFILES of these celebrated men, executed by Mr. John Field, have just been laid before us; the one from a recent sitting, and the other from an original outline in black, taken many years ago by the late Mr. Miers when in Edin-burgh. They are very cleverly done; that of Hogg a striking likeness, and such as to induce us to give the same credit to the portrait of his greater countryman. As productions in this style of art, they place Mr. Field at the head of his profession as a profilist, and we are not surprised to learn that he acquired this skill by nearly thirty years' practice, (from 1794 to 1821,) as the assistant of Mr. Miers, whose name vouched for many thousand likenesses completed by his coadjutor, and, previously, by Mr. Barber Beaumont. After some copartnery with Mr. Miers's son, which has ended in separation, Mr. Field comes forward on his own pretensions; and, judging from these specimens, they are of the highest order. He has recently been appointed profilist to the King and to the Queen; which honour, we trust, will be followed by the public encouragement his talent so richly deserves.

ARCHITECTURE: SIR J. SOANE.

THOUGH we cannot (and it would in a great measure be to make the novelties of the past serve for novelties of the present) report the annual lectures, inter alia, of the Royal Academy, we are called upon as journalists to notice the late course upon architecture, by Sir John Soane, and read by the secretary, Mr. Howard. Of these, six in number, the last was delivered on Thursday the 22d. It treated chiefly of the arch; but was more remarkable for announcing a disposition of some portion of the lecturer's great wealth in a manner interesting to this branch of our national arts. Sir J. Soane communicated his intention to open his house and museum in Lin-coln's Inn Fields, during his life, at particular periods of the year, to amateurs and students, and so to leave it to his grandson as to enable him to maintain the establishment in the same style. Should this heir die without male issue. the house, museum, library, &c. are to devolve to trustees for the public, with funds not only to support the same, but to allow a salary to a professor of architecture, until a national appointment of that kind shall be made. There was a little bit of sentiment and poetry at the end of this announcement; but as the thing is altogether most laudable, we shall say nothing of the stage effect. A man has but to be able to be-stow, or even be-queath, to be flattered as a demigod: without this power there are few qualities recognised in our enlightened and commercial country.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. VIII.

Covent Garden Theatrical Fund.

On Wednesday the anniversary was nume rously attended, and the treat was most gratifying; though we had to regret the absence of the President, the Duke of Sussex, in consequence of indisposition. The Marquess of Clanricarde took the chair, supported by the Duke of St. Alban's on one hand, and the Earl of Mulgrave on the other, and surrounded by many distinguished individuals, the patrons, friends, and ornaments of the drama. After the usual loyal toasts and their accompanying music, Mr. Fawcett, the treasurer, as usual, addressed the meeting on the state of the fund, warmly expressed the gratitude of its members for the liberal support they had received, and forcibly appealed for the continuation of the same benevolence and consideration. In this address he animadverted upon the conduct of some of the junior members of the profession who have refrained from belonging to the association; and exhorted them, for the sake of others as well as for their own sakes, (whether apparently so high as never to be likely to reapparently so high as never to be likely to require aid in their declining years, or so low a to suppose they could ill afford the small saors in the necessary to entitle them to a share in the charity,) to unite with their brethren in this than the burning of his palace.—Ed. L. G.

important cause. Mr. F. then stated, that the managers had been enabled to invest so much capital as would enable them to give a bonus to the subscribers, during twenty-one years, to the amount of one-fourth of their several annuities, varying from the minimum of 181. to the maximum of 801.; and he hoped that the generosity of their kind friends would soon anthorise them to extend the same augmentation to subscribers of sixteen years, and, finally, to the whole number.

The immediate business of the day being thus disposed of, the harmony and sociality of the evening commenced. Master Hughes on the harp, Braham in the full flow of song, Mathews in public rehearsal of two of his forthcoming novelties at home, Keeley, Reeve, and others in comic, and other professionals in every style of vocal effort, delighted the company to a late hour. The chair was vacated about eleven, and the subscription amounted to nearly

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

THE DUKE OF SUSSEX'S EVENING PARTIES.

As President of the Royal Society, his Royal Highness has, with great condescension and urbanity, opened his residence in Kensington Palace for the reception, on certain appointed evenings, of individuals distinguished by rank and station, or by their connexion with the liserature, the arts, and the sciences of their time. The second of these meetings took place last Saturday, when a brilliant assemblage of about five hundred persons of the description alluded to, foreign and English, were gratified by the kind and courteous attentions of their royal host. Having always been of opinion that the intercourse among enlightened men, engaged in all the varieties of intellectual pursuit, which is promoted by such means, is of very high importance, we cannot but congratulate them and the country on the liberal example thus shewn by a Prince of the blood royal, at the head of one of our foremost national institutions, and well able, by his own great attainments, his comprehensive knowledge of books and men, his intimate acquaintance with the progress of philosophical improvement, as well as the refinements of the age, to appreciate the claims of others, and establish so meritorious a practice by the sanction of his authority. It is not for us, in newspaper phraseology, to catalogue the names, and proclaim the endowments of the celebrated personages who formed the majority of this company. It is enough to say of them, that it was delightful to witness the eminent of all parties and classes mingling in polite and friendly union together, and discoursing on subjects which possess an interest for every rational and well-informed mind in civilised society. There was neither Whig, nor Tory, nor Aristocrat, nor Radical, nor Reformer, nor Anti-Reformer, in the rooms: all who were there were lovers of literature and science, wellwishers to the progress of human amelioration. Cabinet and ex-cabinet ministers; peers not jealous of their order, and "liberal" moners not thinking of innovation; physicians forgetting questions of cholera and contagion; bishops who will vote for the second reading, and whose palaces have been burnt for the first; astronomers, including the first names

[•] In a memoir of Mr. Bonington which lately appeared is a monthly publication, our notice of the first of his works which was exhibited at the Gallery of the British Institution, in the year 1936, is most grossly misrepre-naturalists of similar rank in their study, with the President of the Linnean Society members of distinction belonging to the Royal Academy, the Geographical Society, the Royal Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Geological Society, the Society of Arts, and other bodies of the same nature; besides private characters, whose labours had attracted the public regard-all were mingled in a fusion very pleasant to behold, and the effect of which. it requires but a slight notion of the slight strings which lead to great results, to prognosticate are calculated to be far more momentous than their apparent cause. An introduction, a recommendation, a hint, a word, on such an occasion, may produce much good; but were nothing produced, the mere satisfaction of bringing (all the grades between being equally amalgamated,) the ingenious mechanic, the inventor of a new power, and the illustrious inheritor of that other power of patronage, together, is a proud and laudable office. Long may His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex fill and enjoy it. He may believe us, there is no popularity to be compared with it.

SIGHTS OF LONDON.

WE have elsewhere said that the sights of London were at present few; but even since the beginning of the week some new and interesting spectacles have been opened.

I. The Gallery of the New Society of Water Colours in Bond Street, where prize drawings have been visible for the last three days, and do great credit to the artists and the art. This new Institution is to the old one pretty much what the Suffolk Street Gallery is to Somerset House. Success to competition say we, in the mean time __further particulars hereafter.

2. A Collection of Ancient Pictures, chiefly illustrative of sacred history, in Exeter Hall several of great curiosity and some of considerable value as paintings, - the whole well worth inspection.

3. Exhibition of Paintings on Glass in the Strand, executed by G. Hoadley and A. Oldfield. Harlow's Trial of Queen Katherine, Martin's Belshazzar's Feast, and Joshua, and other smaller works, are the subjects. Martin's appear to most advantage in this style.

4. The Fleas in Regent Street. To be seen by all means; as such insects were never seen before either as draught horses, or cavalry, or intellectual beings.

MUSIC.

LENT CONCERTS: DRURY LANE.

THE bill of fare for Friday the 23d contained so many musical gems, that we scarcely know how to quarrel with its miscellaneous character. The performance commenced with Spontini's beautiful overture to Olympia, which was played with much spirit. Then followed the chorus Rex tremendæ," and the quartet "Benedictus," from Mozart's Requiem. The "Rex tremenda" was unfortunately rendered totally ineffective by the weakness of the vocal part. This sublime chorus requires a host of voices to give it the true effect; how, then, could any thing adequate be expected from the scanty numbers at Drury Lane? The "Benedictus" was well sung; and the short chorus, " Hosanna," which follows it, was tolerably efficient. The duet for two bass voices, from a Te Deum by Knecht, is good, and had justice done to it overcome by nervous trepidation at the commencement of the first solo, that she suddenly stopped; and notwithstanding the good-natured sympathy of the audience, who, much to their honour, did their utmost to encourage her, she was unable to rally her spirits, and therefore retired. Mrs. Wood immediately took up the solos, and sang them so well as to deserve the unanimous applause which followed. Mrs. Bishop afterwards returned, and sang the rest of the music allotted to her, in which she acquitted herself satisfactorily. In the Christmas Hymn, "Adeste Fideles," harmonised by Novello, the effect of the third verse, commencing "Cantet nuncia," which is beautifully set as a trio, was spoilt, by Mr. Robinson being nearly inaudible in the counter-tenor part. Mrs. Wood's execution of "Hush, ye pretty war-bling choir," deserved a better flute accompaniment than it obtained in the performance of a Mr. somebody (we always forget names on such occasions), whose tone and intonation were as unequivocally bad as the reception he met with from the audience. The scene from Israel in Egypt was among the most meritorious of the evening's performances. In "The horse and his rider" the chorus-singers did wonders, considering the smallness of their numbers.

Mrs. Wood somewhat overstrained her voice in the first solo, "Sing ye to the Lord," &c.; and in the second, "The horse and his rider he hath thrown into the sea," she completely destroyed the tone by her vehement efforts to be powerful. It is strange that a singer of her attainments should commit such a mistake. Her voice would always be effective if she would abstain from the extreme violence of manner she sometimes employs, and which she appears to mistake for energetic expression. Two new productions - one a hunting song by Neukomm, sung by Braham (are not hunting songs a little out of date?) - the other of the convivial sort, sung by Phillips-were both good enough in their way, yet are not likely, we think, to displace any old-established favourites. The entertainment was, as usual, protracted to an enormous length, and the audience, in consequence, more wearied than pleased towards its conclusion.

The selection of music for Wednesday evening, though it did not exhibit much of novelty, shewed more judgment in the arrangement than we have seen of late; and attracted a more numerous assembly than some of the previous performances. We must repeat that the chorussingers are not sufficiently numerous: in Rossini's concerted pieces they are quite overwhelmed by the instruments; and when divided into Jews and Philistines, in Handel's fine double chorus, "Fixed in his everlasting seat," the effect verges on the ridiculous. A new offertorium of Mr. C. E. Clifton's was the only piece sung by Mr. Phillips, the remaining bass airs being allotted to Mr. Seguin, whose voice, fine as it is, compensates but poorly for the pure style and execution of the former gentleman. "Infelice ch'io sono," and the Bishop. Mr. Hill's new anthem, "O praise the Lord," is a clever composition, but had not been sufficiently rehearsed. "O Absalom!" by Braham, and "Ye sacred priests," and "Farewell, ye limpid streams," by Mrs. Wood, were exquisite. Miss Pearson is unequal to the labour imposed on her: she was engaged in no fewer than ten songs, glees, &c., which is glee of Cooke's was nearly brought to an unexpected close by the inattention of Mr. Robinson. Between the first and second parts, Mr. Distin, of his late majesty's band, played the voice part of "The Soldier tired," on the trumpet: his performance of this very difficult undertaking was admirable both in tone and execution.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

WE say nothing of the new Donna, though rather a stout gentlewoman. La Vestale, though not very animated, has not discredited this theatre, which, after all that has been said against it, has not deserved so much anti-Easter censure as it has received. The novelties announced for to-night are most spirited and liberal.

DRURY LANE.

WE said mighty little about Der Alchymist last week, and we need say less this. It was a mistake, and its hatchment is now up. We had begun to apprehend, from there being no announcement in the bills over Thursday, that this theatre was about to close; but we since see that it is not only patent, but that there is to be a novelty on Thursday, in opposition to the Hunchback at Covent Garden! We are impartial to both houses; but this is of the kind of competition which we have always deprecated as ruinous to the interests of both. We firmly believe that if one of our "great national theatres" engaged the Fleas (now exhibiting) to act in some bloody tragedy, the other would not rest unless it could bring out at the same time a rival company of Lice (this should be at the Lyceum, by the by,) to compete for the laurel. There must be a change.

ADELPHI.

THERE were two new pieces produced on Monday night, and acted since, except on the lenten days, when Yates himself furnishes no lenten amusement. The first, entitled Nina, or the Bride of the Galley Slave, is by Mr. Fitzball, and rather of the lachrymose class. In spite of the talent with which it is acted, we cannot say that we should ourselves be tempted to desire its repetition for our own particular entertainment. It belongs to a school which, if not skilfully wrought into excellence, is miserable: in it there is no medium, no respect for respectability. The feelings of the audience must be touched, wrought up, and their sympathies borne away, or the attempt at homely pathos is a failure. The second drama, by Mr. Beazley, is a parody on Robert the Devil—to which he was, at least, an accessory at Drury Lane-and called the Printer's Devil, or a Type of the Old One. In this, Reeve, as Bob, a tailor's idle apprentice, is the Robert; and his tempter, O. Smith, an anomalous printer's imp, the leading, or rather misleading character. Peg, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, a tanner's daughter of Bermondsey, is the heroine; and Jerry, Mr. Buckstone, a diligent and comical contrast to his brother 'prentice in the tailoring line. The burlesque is extremely clever—too clever almost for a mixed audience, where the really good jest is apt to sleep on the ear of the many. A broader humour would have created louder bursts of laughter; but in the Printer's Devil, amid some conceits and jests of no great novelty, by Knecht, is good, and had justice done to it by Mr. Phillips and Mr. E. Seguin; but it is her singing "We met," unaccompanied, after not likely to prove generally attractive. In an offertory piece by Eybler, Mrs. Bishop was so to say the least of it, very injudicious. A fine at. As the town gets better acquainted with there is an abundance of drollery and wit, of it, we may anticipate that it will rise in popularity. And what is more, we think it will amuse in print as much as it can in acting; a test which few, if any, recent dramatic productions can shide

FRENCH PLAYS.

M. LAPORTE has commenced the season with. though not a perfect troop, a company in which there is very considerable talent. own exertions are a tower in the comic line; and several of the pieces are performed in the most pleasing and satisfactory style. As the work goes on, we shall give more attention to the productions and actors brought forward.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

King's Theatre, March 24 .- First night of La Vestale. My friend the scene-shifter's tintinnabulum was again the awful and supernatural signal for the descent of a flame which should ignite the vestal's veil on the altar, but on this occasion only knocked it off the altar on to the stage. Never was a clumsier junction than that of the opera and final divertisement, which it was pretended did, and which indeed should, if properly done, pertain to it. Meric having uttered her last sweet scream, the whole of the principal dramatis personæ quietly walked off the stage, without even the proper finale, and a sudden silence ensued. At last, the prompter's head, et præterea nihil, twisted round from its ordinary direction, appeared looking at Spagnoletti over the top of its boxa most absurd, though not unfrequent effect, which always looks exactly as though, as Power said, "some gintleman had dropped his face!" -caput loquitur, and vanisheth; the orchestra perform a symphony, expressive of the near entrance of dancers; the symphony finisheth, and_no dancers enter! A yet drearer silence ensues. What resource was left to the audience but to amuse themselves, and fill up the hiatus by first reading and re-reading the S P O R on the standards, (for on not one of them had the O the slightest appearance of a queue,) and then most vigorously hissing their bearers, and certain chorus-singers of either sex, who, as pertinaciously as unmeaningly, remained at the sides of the stage throughout the divertisement. The hissing was gradually waning, when the entrance of two solitary dancers elicited it in compound ratio. The orchestra struck up-they proceeded to attitudinise, and Mademoiselle Varin soon stood so very long upon one toe, that she succeeded not only in banishing ill-humour, but exciting loud testimonies of its exact reverse. The only advantage I could see in joining (if I must use the word) the divertisement to the opera, is, that the prompter's box remains on the stage, and obscures all the best part of the dancing.

Adelphi, March 26.—First night of Nina and The Printer's Devil. Nina should exclaim, on her lover kneeling to her, "Nay, kneel not to me!" Mrs. Yates, determined not to omit a word of her part, on account of the forgetfulness of her wooer, gave him the following puzzling order, the first part of it I confess sotto voce, " Kneel! kneel! (he kneels) Nay, kneel not to me!" In a subsequent scene, she should, to manifest her love for it, have set her bird free from its cage, but its flying machinery not being in proper order, she was e'en content to toss it, cage and all, off at a side scene. An actor who suffers from ignorance of where the curtain will fall, deserves not pity; and accordingly the audience only laughed when the curtain, falling at the end of The Forgery, changed Mr. Hemmings's picturesque kneeling attitude into a flat-sprawling | for relief, and never having encountered so Reeve, in seizing O. Smith's tail, in The Printer's Devil, mistaking its rubicund end for a pocket-book, which he wishes to twitch from his pocket, pulled the tail fairly off! and its lawful owner had considerable difficulty in re-attaching it en arrière; he therefore took occasion, in the midst of his endeavour, thus to answer the following query of Reeve, who was drinking spirits: "Pray do you retail spirits?" "Retail spirits? I wish I could re-tail myself!"

VARIETIES.

Mr. Adams's Lectures on Astronomy. - We are much gratified by Mr. Adams continuing his very excellent lectures on that most sublime of all sciences, astronomy, at the King's The atre; and are pleased to see the growing good taste of the public, evidenced by the increasing numbers which attend this most intellectual and instructive of all amusements. The repeated plaudits of the auditory must have been highly gratifying to the lecturer; and we would strongly recommend to our friends a visit to the King's Concert-Room some Wednesday during Lent.

Earthquake at Venice.—On the 13th, an earthquake, composed of two shocks, of a considerable degree of violence, was experienced at Venice: it threw down furniture, and opened doors. The recent frequency of these phenomena in various parts of the world is remarkable.

St. Simoniens .- The expenses of the St. Si. moniens for the month of February were nearly 140,000 francs. Among them we observe a sum of 500 francs for the expense of a mission to England.

Music Clementi. - The funeral of this cele brated composer, who died at the age of 80, on the 10th, in the country, took place on Thurs-day in Westminster. It was attended by many musical friends, and by the carriages of nobility and gentry.

The Ladye Chapel. Great preparations have been making for producing the dinner in honour of this cause to-day with great éclat. The music is all to be of the Elizabethan period.

Covent Garden Theatre is to be let. Robins has his magic hammer over it; and Laporte, Price, and others, are looking up in trepidation and hope from below.

The Pimlico Palace .- We observe, from the report of parliamentary debates, that Colonel Sir F. French has again vainly attempted to arrest the progress of this scandalous and wasteful job, and, if possible, to convert what has been done at so much cost to beneficial purposes. Various influences tended to defeat his motion; and though the building can never be fit for a royal residence, it seems that more tens of thousands must be expended upon it, with the hope of its being applied to a National Gallery, a receptacle for records, or any use whatever. Colonel French deserves the public thanks for his exertions in this cause.

A proper Spirit. - " Sir," said one of two antagonists with great dignity to the other, during a dispute which had not been confined to words, - "you have called me a scoundrel and a liar, you have spit in my face, you have struck me twice: I hope you will not carry this any farther; for if you do, you will rouse the sleeping lion in my breast, and I cannot tell what may be the consequences."

following:

formidable a business before, he stood up and opened his noble country mouth as wide as a mill-door. The operator eyed him as if afraid of being swallowed alive, and said, "We always stand outside, Sir!"

An attorney, the law failing, having turned dentist, thus worded the bill of his first job:

To filing your teeth, and office copy 13

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Literary Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XIII. March 31, 1882.7

The Toilette of Health, Beauty, and Fashion, embracing the Economy of the Hair, Teeth, &c.

Mélange in French and English, in Prose and Verse, by Marin de la Voye.

The City of Tombs, an Egyptian Tale, and other Poems, by Peter Agar, Trin. Col. Oxford.

From the American edition, an Offering of Sympathy to Parents bereaved of their Children, and to others under to Parents bereaved of their Children, and to others under Affliction; together with Selections from Wardiaw, Dr. Balfour, Dr. Barnes, &c. The Earl of Mulgrave, we understand, is about to give us a tale of high life, entitled, the Contrast, a New Story of Nature and Art. The Author of "Granby" has also forthcoming a new

The Author of "Grandy" has also forthcoming a new novel called Arlington.

Familiar and Practical Advice to Executors and Administrators, and Persons wishing to make their Wills, &c., by A. J. Powell.

Wyld's New School Atlas of Modern Geography.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS

Wyld's New School Atlas of Modern Geography.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Larder's Cyclopædia, Vol. XXIX. Spain and Portugal, 3 vols. Vol. 1. Ge. bds.—Bouchette's Topographical Dictionary of Canada, 4to. 11. 8e. bds.; British Dominions in North America, 2 vols. 4to. 21. 16e. bds.—Further Strictures on Napler's Peninsular War, 8vo. 9e. bds.—King on Lithority and Lithoromy, 8vo. 10e. cloth.—Wimberley's Death-Summons, 12mo. 5e. bds.—Bird's Achmet's Feast, and other Poems, 8vo. 7e. 6d. bds.—Greenhow on Cholera, 8vo. 6z. cloth.—Sense of Voyages and Travels, Second Series, 3 vols. 18mo. 15e. bds.—Latrobe's Pedestrian, 8vo. 12e. cloth.—Jenour's Treatise on Languages, 12mo. 3e. 6d. bds.—Davis's Exercises on the Anabasis of Xenophon, 12mo. 2e. 6d. cloth.—Dr. Townsend's Chart of the Stethoscope, fcp. 3e. cloth.—Gell's Pompeians, Second Series, 2 vols. royal 8vo. 6f. 6e. bds.; imperial 8vo. 7l. 10e.; demy 4to. 10f. 16e.; proofs and etchings, 18t. 18t.—Coleman on the Mythology of the Hindus, 4to. 3t. 2e. bds.—The Easter Gift, a Religious Offering, by L. E. L., 9s. bd.—Something New, 18mo. 2e. 6d. cloth.—Valpy's Classical Library, No. XXVIII. Plutarch, Vol. Vl. 4e. 6d. cloth.—Phillips' Million of Facts, 8vo. 8e. cloth.—Landers' Journal, forming Vols. XXVIII. Syll. XXIX. XXX. of the Family Library, 18mo. 15e. cloth.—Christian Experience, by the Author of "Christian Retirement," 12mo. 2e. 6d. cloth.—Barnons, 12mo. 4e. cloth.—Birthy Simon. 15e. cloth.—Christian Experience, by the Author of "Christian Retirement," 12mo. 2e. 6d. cloth.—Rev. Henry Brougham's Sermons, 12mo. 4e. cloth.—Christian Retirement, 12mo. 2e. 6d. cloth.—History Philosophically Illustrated, by Dr. Miller, 4 vols. 8vo. 2f. 2e. bds.—Annand's Birte Gutline of the Government of India, 4to. 12e. sewed.—Memoirs of Sir James Campbell of Ardkinglas, written by Himself, 2 vols. 8vo. 11. 1a. 6d. bds.—Hame and Smollett's History of England, 1 vol. imperial 8vo. 17. 5e. cloth.—History Philosophically Illustrated, by Dr. Miller, 4 vols. 8vo. 2f. 2e. bds.—Stanley Burton, by John

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

30 In spite of the efforts to which we have alluded in a preceding page, and of our general wish not to continue the notice of new works from one quarter into another, we are this day induced, by our opinion of the five novelites in our Review department, to ask leave to sit again on the several publications, the notice of which would otherwise have been finished on the 31st of March We fear that were we to publish Charlotte's Delusions of Hope, we should only be adding one more to the number.

To H. B. of Winchester. The stamp or seal just found ntagonists with great dignity to the other, luring a dispute which had not been confined on words, — "you have called me a scoundrel on digning near the north wall of your city, of pale or ass, and the thickness of an old penny-piece, is a curious relic. From the impression and very next drawing sent truck me twice: I hope you will not carry this ny farther; for if you do, you will rouse the leeping lion in my breast, and I cannot tell eleping lion in my breast, and I cannot tell what may be the consequences."

Our toothache jests last week have led to the following:

A countryman went to a celebrated dentist

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL
MALL. The Gallery for the Exhibition and Sale of the Works of British Artists, isopen daily, from Ton in the Moraing till Five in the Evenue, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.
MULLIAM BARNARD, Koeper.

EXETER HALL EXHIBITION is now gen, with a Collection of Splendid Paintings by the Did Masters, Illustrative of Sacred History, from the Galleries of the King of Spain, King Unater First, King James becoud, the Regent of France, the Convent of Santa Clara, &c. Admission, i.a.—Catalogue 64.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

COMPARATIVE ANATOMY and ZOOLAIGY, Summer Course.

On Monday, the ad of April, at Eleven o'Clock, Dr. Grant will commence this Course, embracing a General View of the Structure, Classification, and History of the Recent and Fossil Species of all the Classes of the Animal Kingdom.

The Lectures are delivered daily, eccept Saturday; and the Course continues to the end of June. Fee, M. Bolasy.—Mr. Lindley will commence his Spring Course on Tuesday, the 36 of April nexts, at Eight o'Clock in the Morning, The Lectures will be given every succeeding Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, at the same Hour, till the beginning of July.

Council Room, 19th March, 1832.

TO BOOKSELLERS and STATIONERS

A Young Man, who for several years has served in the Retail Shop of a Bookseller and Stationer in London, is desirous of meeting with a similar Situation, suther in Town or Country.

Address (post-paid) to M. A. Recca's Medical Hall, 170, Piccadilly.

THE ADDENDA to the CATALOGUE of the BRITISH and POREIGN PUBLIC LIBRARY, Conduit Street, for 1828, is now ready, and may be had Gratia, with Cards of Terms, on application to Mesers. Saunders and Oiley, at the Library. From the extensive scale on which this Library is conducted, (fifty copies of one work having been frequently previded for the Use of the Subscribers), these whe are desirous of adding to their Collections from the current Literature, may generally obtain New Books a short time after publication, at one half their published prices, on application at the Library. A Catalogue of such Werks at present on sale is now ready, and will be forwarded as a shagle sheet per pest, or delivered (gratia) to order.

Sale of Profesor Haffner's Librery, al Strasberg.

Just pablished by Treuttel and Wütt, and Richter, 20, Sobo Squary,

CATALOGUE SYSTEMATIQUE de la
BIBLIOTHEQUE de feu M. ISAAC HAFFNER, Doyen de la Facuité de Théologie Protestante de Strasbeurg, rédigé par lui-même. lère Partie. 8vo. price 4s. 6d.
The Second Part will suppear shortly.

Mr. Haffner's Library, containing upwards of 30,600 volumes, in perhaps ene of the dieset private Collections in existence, and will be found well werthy attention. The Catalogue is interapprated with curieus and instructive Notes, the result of the owner's personal reading and recearch.

The Sale will take place after Easter, and due notice will be given of the exact time.

MUSIC.

On Monday, April 2d, 1829, will be published, in imperial Freprice 182, a new and enlarged edition of HEETHAM'S PSALMODY, Harmonised in Score, with an Arrangement for the Organ or Plane-Porte.

By J. HOULDSWORTH,

Malifax: Published and sold by Whitley and Beeth; and may be had of Ball and Son, Orferd Street; Goulding and Co. Seebs Square; Clementi and Go. Cheepside; Z. T. Purday, High Helborn; Longman, Rees, Orme, and Green; Whittaker, Araott, and Co.; Simpkin and Marshall. London; and all other Booksellers and Music-sellers in the Kingdom.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Illustrated with Pifty beautiful coloured Engravings, 4to. 4l. 4s.

"HE ZOOLOGY of NORTH AMERICA,

Part II. containing the Birds.

By JOHN RICHARDSON, M.D.

Surgeon of the late Expedition under Captain Franklin; and
W. SWAINSON, Eq.

Printed uniformly with the Narratives of Captains Franklin's and Party is Expeditions, to which it may be considered to be an Appendix.

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

As a Companion to the Journal of a Naturalist, post 896, LEANINGS in NATURAL HISTORY, with Local Recollections. BSE, Eq. By EDWARD JESSE, Eq. Deputy Burveyor of His Majesty's Parks. To which are added, Maxims and Hints for an Angler. John Murray, Albemarie Street.

RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH, from the first Settlement of the Anglo-Saxons. With Documents and Records, hitherto unpublished, illustrating the History of the Civil and the Criminal Justinus and Second Spains.

llustrating the mission; of the line of England.

By FRANCIS PALGRAVE, Req.

Of the Inner Temple.

John Murray, Albemaric Street.

Withering's Belany: the only Complete Editi In 4 vols. Svo. price St. 16s. boards,

N ARRANGEMENT of BRITISH PLANTS, acom

An enlarged edition, in 8vc. price 12s.

PUIDENCE of the TRUTH of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION, derived from the Literal
Fulfilments of Prophecy, particularly as illustrated by the Histery of the Jews, and by the Discoveries of recent Traveliers.
By the Rev. ALEXANDER KEITH.
Whittaker, Tracher, and Co. Ave Maria Lone, London; and Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh.

ONVERSATIONS on VEGETABLE

PHYSIOLOGY; comprehending the Elements of Rotary, with their Application to Agriculture.

"These instructive volumes are composed by Mrs. Marset already well known by similar works on other branches o science, which have been received with merited frour; and whave little doubt that her present undertaking will meet with corresponding success."—Edinburgh Review.

Lendon: Longman, Ress, Orme, Brown, and Co.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author, Conversations on Chemistry, 2 vols. 11th ition, enlarged, with Plates by Lowy, 14s. boards.
Conversations on Natural Philosophy, 6th conversations on Political Economy, 6th edit.

In 1 vol. 8ve, with 7 Plates and 51 Weedcuts, price fin heards, A NEW SYSTEM of GEOLOGY in which the great Revolutions of the Earth and Ani-mated Nature are reconciled at once to Medern Science and a mated Nature are reconciliants

Sacred History.
By ANDREW URE, M.D. F.R.S. &c.
"One of the most valuable acceptions to the scientific Hi of our country."—Brand's Journal of Science.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

In 1 large vol. 8vo. with Maps and Plates, price 82s. in cloth, with the Population Returns of 1831,

A NEW GAZETTEER of SCOTLAND.

By ROBERT CHAMBERS, Author of "the Picture Scotland," &c. and WILLIAM CHAMBERS, Author of "the sk of Scotland."

Book of Scotland.*

"A very neat, a very useful, and a very amusing work."

"A very neat, a very useful, and a very amusing work."

"Escaused with a degree of eare that actually leads us to regree that the authors should have confined themselves to such narrow limits."—Despite Courier.

"Is it a courste?' inquire our readers—"that is the cardinal virtue of a gazetteer; and 'true,' is our response. Take we Avendale, accellent; Argleshire, admirable heldly and grantly in the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties of the properties. Themse Ireland, jun. Edinburgh; and Whituker, Treecher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London.

Of whom may be had,

Aitronn's History of Machand to the December.

Aikman's History of Scotland to the Present

With a Pertrait, Stance hourds,
HE LIEE of JOHN TILLOTSON, ARCHBISHOF of CANTERBURY. To which is of, the celebrated Sermon of that Proints, "The Window of idean, the commissions with the state of the

Dr. Dibdia's Sunday Library complete.

In 6 vols. small 8vo. with 8ix Portraits of distinguished Prelates,
THE SUNDAY LIBRARY; containing nearly One Hundred Sermons by the following eminent Divines. With Notes, &
By the Rev. T. F. DIBDIN, D.D.

D.D.

Rev. G. Haggitt
Robert Hall
J. Hewlett
A. Irvine
W. Jones (of Nayland
C. W. Le Bas
H. H. Milman
B. Morchead
Thos. Remed!
J. H. Spry
Sydney Smith
Thes. Tewnsen Archbp. Lawrence
Secker
Bp. Blemfield
Gray
University
Bp. Van Mildert
Dean Chandler
Archdeacon Nares
Potts Gray Heber Hobart Dr. Blair Dr. Biair Chaimers D'Oyly Paley Parr Shuttleworth Professor White Rev. Arch. Alison C. Beason Joshua Gilpin Hobart Horne Horsley Huntingford Maltby Mant Newton

"A little library for a churchman, and a treasure for the ploumong the latty."—Library Sancts.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Ce-

DESERVATIONS on the HISTORY and TREATMENT of CHOLERA ASPHYXIA, as it has appeared at HADDINGTON, shewing that it is not necessarily infectious; and ineluding the const. of the Use of Gavenism in the state of Collapse. With Coosast of the Use of Gavenism in the state of Collapse. With Coosast of the Use of Gavenism Interest of Collapse. With Coosast of the Use of Gavenism Interest of Collapse. With Coosast of the Use of Gavenism Interest of Collapse. With Coosast of the World Collapse. With Coosast of C

Turner's Sacred History of the World.

THE SACRED HISTORY of the E OAURD II I II OAUAAA wow WORLD, from the Creation to the Deluge; attempted ilosophically Considered, in a Series of Letters to a Son. By SHARON TURNER, F.S.A. and R.A.S.L.

By the same Author,
History of England, from the Earliest Period
the Death of Elizabeth. 12 vols. 5va. price 5t. 5s. boards.
London: Longman, Rees, Orne, Brown, and Ce.

REFLECTIONS on the METAPHYSICAL PRINCIPLES of the INFINITESIMAL ANALYRIS.

ANALYRIS.
Translated by the Rev. W. H. BROWELL, M.A.
Princed for J. H. Parker, Ozferd; Whittaker, Treacher, and CoLondon; J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge.

In 1 large vol. 8vo. price 30s. in cloth, with glit edges, 31s. 6d.

SELECT WORKS of the BRITISH
POETS, from Chaucer to Jonson: with British POETS, from Chaucer to Jonson; with Biographical stokes. By ROBERT SOUTHEY, LL.D.

Uniform with the above, 18s. in cloth, 20s. with gilt edges, Select Works of the British Poets, from mon to Beattle; with Biographical and Critical Frefaces. By Jouson to Be Dr. Aikin

Also, in 10 vols. royal 18mo. to match the Estayists, 2l.; and in 10 vols. pest 18me. 2l. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

Of whom may be had, in I degant vol. See.

Bowdler's Family Shakapeare, new edition, with 36 Illustrations, 20s. in cloth, 31s. 6d. with gilt edges.

In 8ve. 8d edition, 7s. heards,

A R T of VALUING RENTS and

TILLAGES, and the Tenant's Right on Entering and Quitting Farms explained.

By J. S. HAYLDON, Land Agent and Appraiser.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

By the same Author,
Treatise on the Valuation of Property for the Peer's Rate, 8ve. 7s. 6d. beards.

the Feer's Rate, 8ve. 7s. es. bearas.

In 8 vols. small 8ve. 1s. in cleth,

MEMOIRS of the LIFE and REIGN of

GEORGE IV.

By WILLIAM WALLACE, Rsq. Barrister-at-Law.

"One of the most seccessful biographical works with which we are assumed. The author is very felicitous in his short sketches of charastneed. The author is very felicitous in his short sketches of charastneed. The author is very felicitous in his short sketches of the shole of the shole of this work is manyly stemperate, consistently diversifies the eventful history of our late king's religious of the whole of this work is manyly stemperate, consistent, one of the whole of this work is nearly, temperate, consistent, one of the whole seems party spirit. Nebody is everpraised or underrated but, meeting the contract of the contract of the seems of the superate to be hit; in many instances, wentcarty the mean of trust appears to be hit; in many instances, nearly applicate the said ir remains, in error The impartiality of the author's judgment has all grave and passionless force of a voice of pesterity."—Alles.

Leedon: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Printed for James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond Street.
New edition, in the price M. Se.

BURNET'S PRACTICAL HINTS on PAINTING. Hilastrated by men't One Hundred Etchings from celebrated Pictures of the Italian, Flornich, and Dutch Schools.

up from consument a transport of the fine arts can henceforward be considered complete without Mr. Burnet's work."—Library considered complete witness mr, gramms over a Gassets.

So The Parts may be had esperately, via. on Composition, 18s.;

an Light and Shade, 18s.; on Coleur, id. 11s. 6d.

11f A few Copies remain of the large paper, with India Proofts of the Platest, and a Portrait of the Auther. French boards and lettered, 6d. 6s.

THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE, New Series, for April, contains a Statch of a celebrated Four presenting the Fastists of the 'Pentice Beys at Darry. Among the appears the following will appear:—I. The Church put in the Pentice. It is not been as the contained beyong the following will appear:—I. The Political Zoolegical Charles. Low A Winter Evening with the Petits—VI. The 'Frentice Beys at A Winter Evening with the Petits—VI. The 'Frentice Beys at A Winter Evening with the Petits—VI. The 'Frentice Beys at Contained Property of the Period Charles and
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
No. XXXII. containing the fellowing Articles:

1. St. Simoutanism, &c. --2. The Member-8. Chronology—
4. Stewart's Visit to the South Seas-5. American Law Reforms
5. National Character of the Romans—7. Newton Porton, or the Merchant Service --6. Improvement of Condition of the Clergy-9. Military Lew-16. Bilk and Glove Trades—11. Easharmenic of the Ancients—18. The Chameleon—15. Begulation of Anatomy—14. Lord Nagent's Memorials of Hampden—
15. Juemile on Colonial Sievery—16. French Commerce—Pestscript to the Article on St. Simonianism—Index—List of Books, &c. &c.

No. YVWIIV

No. XXXIII. will be published on the 30th une. Poblished by R. Heward, 118, Strand; Agent for France, G. G. Biennie, Ree Nepre St. Augustin, No. 45, Paris.

In a thick vol. 18me, with 108 Woodcuts, price, in cloth boards, 18s. A By HENRY T. DELABECHE, P.R.S. F.G.S.

Member of the Geological Society of France, &c.

Member of the Geological Society of France, &c.

Member of the Geological Society of France, &c.

Member of first-rate importance in the science to which it relates, and which must henceforth take its place in the library of every student in geology."—Philosophical Magazine, and Annals of Philosophy.

Memolisety well submitted to GEOLOGICAL MANUAL.

Philosophy. "Sworegj."—runosopaical Hagazine, and Anne "Excellently well adapted to win on the reader to become student: it makes the acquisition of knowledge a pleasure Albenaum.

Printed for Treuttel and Co. 20, Soho Square.

TAIT'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE

No. 1. for April 189.

Contents: No. 1. The Ministry—2. A tite-0-tite with Mr. Tait

A. The Revolution—4. On the issue remarkable Silence of the Poet-Laureate—5. The Martinet—6. State of Magic in Egypt.
By as By-e-Witness—7. Lines by Dr. Bowring—8. The Veruliators; a Tale of the last Session—9. The Spirit of the Time—
10. The Pechler—11. On National Borrowing—12. State of the West Country*—13. An Essay on Kissing—14. Slave Insurrection in Jamaica—15. A Lawyer's Dream—16. Irish Tithes; from the Returns made to the Catholic Association—17. The Upper House—18. Honnet, by Gertrade—19. Scottish Reform Bill—
20. Lay of the Least Ministre—31. Aspect of Public Affaira—
22. Lines composed among the Ruins of Finchal Abbey—28. Alore Cronse Craw—34. Mosthly Register.

Printed for William Tait, Edisburgh; Simpkin and Marshall,
London; and John Cumming, Dublin.

Under the Superintendence of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

THE JOURNAL of EDUCATION,

THE JOURNAL of EDUCATION,
No. VI. Price 5a. stitched.
Controts.—State of Education and Intellectual Condition of Switzerland.—Methods camployed for the instruction of the Deaf and Dumb.—German Universities; Bonn.—Spanish Universities.—Bucation in Ireland.—On Teaching the Natural Sciences in Schools—Italian Education. Reviews: Wood's Algebra—Goldanith's Blastory of Greece—Dobres's Adversaria.—Crombie's Gym. nasium.—School Poetry.—Juvenile Cyclopedis.—On the Ancient Commerce of India. Miscellancess: Foreign and British.
London: Charles Knight, 13, Pall Mail East.

In 1 vol. 4to, price 2l. 2s., cloth beards,

THE MYTHOLOGY of the HINDUS;

with Notices of various Mountain and Island Tribes who inhabit the two Penisuais of India and the neighbouring Islands. In Three Parts—the first part containing the Hindu Mythology; the second, Notices of various Tribes; and the third, a Dictionary of the Mythological and Religious Terms of the Hindus. Compiled from the best Authorities, with Plates illustrative of the principal Hindu Delties.

By CHALES COLEMAN, Esq.
London: Printed for Parbury, Allen, and Co. Leadenhall Street.

THE UNITED SERVICE JOURNAL, and NaVAL and NAVAL and MILITARY MAGAZINE, for April 1839, will contain—Canaiderations for Manning the Navy for fature War—Two Days as St. Helens, by an Officer—The British Cavalry in the Peninsuls, (continued)—Sebastian Cabot—On the Maritime Poulation of the British Empire, No. 2—Memorin of the Services of Admiral of the Fleet, William Price Williams Freeman; of the late Admiral Bir Richard Bloterten, Bart, K.C.B. and K.C.; of the late Vice-Admiral Lord Henry Paules, K.C.B.—Royal Naval School—Modern Instances of Sub-marine Volcanic Empirement of the Late of the United Service Reviews and Critical Notices—Memorie of the Early Operations of the Burmose Wales. Retters from Prague—A Veteran's Vision—Reviews and Critical Notices—Memorie of the Early Operations of the Burmose Wales. Lister Maw, R.N. Sc.—General Westing and Commannessation Dinner on the Establishment of the Naval and Military Library and Maxeum—Parliamestary Abstract of Naval and Military and Minary Maritiments.—Amerial Abstract of Naval and Military and Minary Maritiments.—Amerial of the Fleet—Oblinary, Ro. &c.

Henry Caburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

The April Number of this speaks Periodical will comprise, among other Papers of considerable interest.

The Splandid Village Papers of considerable interest.

The Splandid Village Papers of considerable interest.

The Splandid Village Papers of great beauty, by the Author of Few Plain Words to Lord Grey on a great Question.

On the Spirit of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted by the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems adopted to the Considerable Papers of Criticism, in which the ingenious Systems of Criticism, in which the ingenious S

A Continuation or the sentence —
Large."
On the Wilfiel Mistatements of the Quarterly Review.
New Memoirs of Percy Bysake Shelley.
The True Character of George Canning.
Letter of Schlegel to Sir James Machistosh.
Interesting Narrative of a Settler in Canada, Soc. Sc.
Published by Colburn and Bensley, New Burilagion Street.

Portrait of lored D'Israeli, Baq.

RASER'S MAGAZINE for April, nrice 2s. 6s.

RASER'S MAGAZÍNE for April,
Contenia-Blography; an Introductory Paper to an Article on Croker's Edition of Boswell's Johnson-Twenty-second Report of the Revenue; Packet Establishmen; Home Station-The Indian and the Henter, or the Siege of Micford. By John GiltGerman Poetry, No. 111. Buyer, Gotha, Yous, Holly-The Fretent Balance of Parties in the State, and the Results of the Reform Bill-The Third and Concluding Paper from the Rev. Edward Irving on Spiritual 6163-Gallery of Literary Characters, No. XXIII. (A full-length Pertrait of J. D'israell, Esq.)—The Shipping Interest, Silk Manufacture, and Glove Trade—ToLiope and Paulding on America—The Duke of Newcastle's Address to all Classes and Conditions of Sugitalmen—The Perlis of a PoHitical Unionit. By a Member of the Jacobin Club—The Member; an Autobiography—Epistes to the Literat, No. S. Letter of William Helmes, Eeq. M.P. to Archibad Jobby, Esq. Ez.
M.F.—A Page to Correspondents.
James France, 116, Regens Street, London; Anderson, Jun. Editburgh; M'Phan, Glasgew; and Geant and Bellein, Dublin.

Quite new-thie day.
In 2 vols. post 8vo. with a Portrait, price 21s.
OUR in GERMANY, HOLLAND, and ENGLAND, forming the Two concluding Velumes of the Tour of a German Prince; semprising, London, the Nobility and their Mansions, &c.—the Ascet, Newmarket, Doncaster, and York Races—and Tour to the North of England, &c.

A new edit. of Vols. I. and II.; comprising tern and Western Parts of England, Wal

The Work complete in 4 vols. price 39s.

"He touches upon every subject imaginable, and his observations shew great quickness. He always feels rightly and strongly; and every one will be delighted with the book, because it is of truthful and so unaffected. I wish it were more common to write in such a manner."—Mostiky Magazies.

Published by Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange, London.

The Child's Own Book.

Embeltished with Three Hundred Engravings, price 7s. 6d.
fancy boards,
PHE CHILD'S OWN BOOK. The 2d edition.

London: Printed for Thomas Tegg, Cheapside; N. Halles, Ciccadiliy: Bowdery and Kerby, Oxford Street; and R. Griffin, Piccadilly; Bowde In a few days,

The Little Girl's Book. By Mrs. Child.

On the 20th of March was published,

DICKERING'S ALDINE EDITION of the BRITISH POETS, Vol. XX. price 5s. containing the Poems of Shakespeare, with an original Memoir by the Rev.
ALEXANDER DYCE, Petrast, 6c.
Vol. XXI. will appear in April.

*Oh. AAI. Will appear in April.

e The Country Trade are informed that they can have W. Pickering's Publications on the usual Terms, direct from him, but not through their London Agents, in consequence of a combination of certain Booksellers, the Particulars of which may be seen in his "Address to the Trade and to the Fublic on the Booksellers' Combination and Monopely," and may be had greate.

Pickering's Diamond Greek Testament, with hautiful Recutinizes of D. Viccil, Let Super, corrected.

beautiful Frontispiece of Da Vinci's Last Supper, engraved by forthington. 48vo. 10s. 6d.

The first specimen of a Greek Testament executed in diamond and crear, that it may be read with ease and pleasure.

Homeri Ilias at Odyssea. 2 vols. 48vo. 12s.
beautifully executed in diamond Greek type, the smallest ever printed, I arge paper, 2 vols. Shoe. 18s.
printed in the proper of the smallest ever printed in the control of the smallest ever printed in the control of the smallest ever printed in the control of the smallest ever printed what a pecies to companion for the student!"—Literary Gasetts.

student!"—Literary Gasette.

In 8vo. price il. 1s. each,
Elizabeth of York, Queen of Henry VII.,
Privy Purse Expenses; being the daily disbursements for her Majesty's Amusements, Clothes, Jewels, Journeys, Servants,
Minstreis, Fools, &c. To which are added, the Wardrobe Accounts of Edward the Fourth. Edited by Sir Harris Nicolas.
Prefixed to this volume is an original Memoir of Elizabeth of York, containing many sew historical facts
Mary's, Princess, Daughter of Henry VIII., afterwards Queen Mary, Privy Purse Expenses, from 1536 to 1544, with an original Memoir, containing many new particulars of her life, by Frederick Madden, Seq. F.R.S. S.A. 8vo.
Henry VIII. Privy Purse Expenses from 1559 to 1539, with introductory Remarks and Illustrative Notes, by Sir Harris Nicolas. 8vo.
Northumberland Household Book the Po-

Northumberland Household Book: the Re-gulations and Establishment of the Household of Henry Alger-non Percy, the Fifth Earl of Northumberland. Edited by Bishop

Percy. Svo.

A very limited impression of this interesting work has been reprinted. Copies of the former edition had become very scarce, and have been sold by public sale for the sum of twesty guiness.

Bacon; the Works of Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam, Chancetter of England. A new edition. By Basil Montagu, Eaq. 14 vols. 7. 17. a cisth bacards; large paper, imperial 870. only akty copies printed, 18. 18. 68. each volume.

This edition contains the most complete collection of the writings of that distinguished philosopher that has ever been offered to the public. Translations, as well as the originals, of his Latin productions are for the first time given.

Baumian's Translation has Mosen! Emplies.

Bernier's Travels in the Mogul Empire.

can hardly be imagined."—Literary Gassits.
Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, with an Essay on his Language, Introductory Discourse, Glossary, and Notra.
By Tyrebitt. This edition contains a Portrais of Chaucer, and an Essgawing of the celebrated Canterbury Pilgrimage, by Stothard, 5 vols. crown 8vo. 21. 19z. de.

Spenser's Faerie Queene, and other Poems, with an original Messelr, Notes, and a Glossary. 5 vols. crown 8vo. 21. Uniformly principed with Tyrebitt's Changer.

Uniformly printed with Tyrehitt's Chancer.

Surrey and Wyatt's Poems, with Portraits and original Memoirs. 2 vois. crown 8vo. 12s..

Uniformly printed with Chancer and Spenser.

Bojardo, Orlando Innamorato, with Notes and Illustrations in English, and an Introductory Essay. By Antonio Panizzi. Svois. crown Svo. 3t.

The Orlando Innamorato is the ground-work of the Orlanda Furiose, to which it is more closely allied than the Illiad and Odyssey. Notwithstanding its great merit, it has not been republished for nearly three centuries.

Thoma's Early Prose Romances; a Collection of Ancient English Fictions. Edited by William J. Thoma. 3 vols. crown Sec. 11. 10s.
"We notice with much satisfaction this reprint of the popular literature of our ancestors. These romances unquestionably form part of our national literature: the general reader will gladly become acquainted with what may be termed the 'Waverley Novels' of their day."—Retrospective Review.

Andrews's (Bishop) Prayers, in Greek and Letin. Carefully revised and corrected by the Rev. Peter Hall, B.A. 18ms. 18c.

Andrews's (Bishop) Private Devotions, with his Manual for the Sick, translated from the original Greek; with a Life of the Author. By the Rev. Peter Hall, B.A.

Bino. 6.

Blishop Horne always lamouted the want of the Manual for the Sick in the modern editions of Bishop Andrew's Devotions; and said, "that it was the best ever printed, and ought to be in the hand of every clergyman in the land."

Fuller's Good Thoughts in Bad Times, Good Thoughts in Worse Times, together with Mixed Contemplations in Better Times. By Thomas Fuller, D.D. 18mo. with Por-

"We have read this little work with the most unqualified and unbounded delight; and we hope to read them again and again."

Althoram.

And Programme of the Phoenician.

Althousem. Cory's Ancient Fragments of the Phoenician, Cory's Ancient Fragments of the Phoenician, Chaldran, Egyptian, and other Writers, in Greek and English, with an Introductory Dissertation, and a Comparative Inquiry into Ancient and Medera Philosophy, and the Trinity of the Gentiles. By J. P. Cory, Esq. Fellow of Caisa Cellege, Cambridge. 8v. 3d edition, 11.1s.

"We streamously advise every neader who feels interested in this most curious literate invariant of the age, to peruse this this most curious literate invariant of the set interested in this most curious literates invariant of the set in the rest who have treated of the histories of the first nations among mankind. Thus we have Sanchonitheo, Berosaut, Abydenus, Megasthenes, &c.; and Manosho, the eldest and best authority on the Egyptian dynamics. There are other very valuable relics in this volume, excellently translated by the editor, to whom the learned world, as well as the general reader, are under deep obligations for the work."—Literary Genetics.

In 18mo, price 4s. 6d. boards, the 2d edition of COURSE of LESSONS, together with the Tunes to which they are usually song in Infant Schools; and also a copious Collection of Hymna and Moral Songs, suitable for Infant Instruction, either in Schools or in Private Families.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, 8t. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Piace, Pail Mall.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 14s. boards, the 3d edition of ECTURES on the ACTS of the APOS-TLBN, delivered in the Parish Church of Stockson spon See, during Leni, in the Years 1885, 1804, 1805, and 1806.

Rector of Egglectiffs in the County of Outham.
Printed for J., U., and F. E. Ington, 5th. Sail's Churchyard, and Waterios Place, Pall Mall.

Of whom may be had, by the same Auth Of whem may be had, by the same Author, Practical Reflections on the Ordination Services for Deacons and Priests in the United Church of England and Ireland; for the Use of Candidates for Orders, and of those who renew their Ordination Vews. With appropriate Prayers for Clergmen, selected and original. New edition, small 8voorice 8s.

In royal 8ve. (printed uniformly with the Clerical Guide,) price 18s. boards,

DATRONI ECCLESIARUM; or, a List of the Patrons of the Dignities, Rectories, Vicarages, Perpetual Curacies, Chapeiries, Endowed Lectureships, &c. of the United Church of England and Iriand; with the Valuation annexed of all Livings not exceeding 150; per Annum, as returned to Patliament in 1812.

Printed for J., G., and P. Elvingson, St. Paul's Charchyard, and Waterlee Place, Pall Mail.

In 1 large vel. Svc. price 10s. beards, the 3d edition, enlarged, (entirely re-written), of THE DIFFICULTIES of ROMANISM in respect to EVIDENCE; or, the Peculiarities of the Latin Church evinced to be untenable on the Principles of Legi-Latin Church vinced to be untempte on the Fincepies of Length timate Historical Testiment.

Ry GEORGE STANLEY PABER, B.D.

Master of Sherburn Hoogital, Durham, and Probendary of Calibbury.

Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

Of whom may be bad, by the same Author,
1. A Supplement to the above Work; being an Answer to the Blahop of Strauburg. 8ve. 6a. Abo

2. The Sacred Calendar of Prophecy. In 3 vols. 8vo. 1/. 16s. And all his other Works-

In 8 vols. 18mo. (sold separately), price 5s. each in boards,
THE VILLAGE PREACHER; a Collection of Short, Piaia Sermons, partly original, partly selected, and adapted to Village Instruction.
By a CLERGYMAN of the CHURCH of ENGLAND.
Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Piace, Pail Mail.

In 12mo, price 6s, beards, the 2d edition of VIRGIL, literally translated, for the Use of Students.

By WILLIAM SMART, M.A.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Pan's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mall.

Price 4s. 6d. boards, 8d edition,

IVING POETS and POETESSES; a

Biographical and Critical Poem.

By the Author of "the Biogre of Constantinople."

Contents.—Campbell, Hogg, Bulver, Moore, Miss Landon, 850 agreeable a mercean we have not seen for a long time."—

Sativist.

"He displays facility of versification, descriptive power, and
"He displays facility of versification, descriptive power, and a sympathy with the best feelings of human nature."—Toller.

William Kidd, 330, Regent Street.

Handsomely printed in 6 vols. 8vo. with a Portrait, price 8l. 18s. boards, the 3d edition of

Handsomely printed in 8 vols. 8vo. with a Pertrait, price 8d. 18s. boards, the 3d edition of THE POETICAL WORKS of JOHN MILTON, with Notes of various Authors, and other Illustrations; together with some Account of the Life and Writings of Milton, derived principally from Documents in His Majesty's State Paper Office, now first published.

By the Rev. H. J. TODD, M.A. F.S.A. and R.S.L. Chaplain in Ordinary to His Majesty, and Rector of Settrington, County of York.

London: Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington; J. Nunn; J. and W. T. Clarke; Longman and Co., T. Cadell; Jeffery and Son; J. Richardson; J. and A. Arch; Carpenter and Son; Bildwin and Co.; J. Booker; J. Bohn; J. Duncan; Black and Co.; Whittaker and Co.; J. Bain; W. Mason; J. Hearne; Simpkia and Marshall; and E. Hodgson.

*G The Life may be purchased separately, in 1 vol. 8vo-price 10s. 6d. in boards.

Military Maxims of Napoleon.
In 1 vol. 5s. boards,
THE OFFICER'S MANUAL; Military
Maxims of Napoleon. Translated from the French,
By COLONEL DAGUILLAR,
Deputy Adjutant-Gen. to the Tropps serving in Ireland.
Dublin, Richard Milliken and Son; London, J. Egerton, Military Library, Whitehall; and Longman and Co. 29, Paternoster
Row.

In 8 vols. 4to. with Thirty-One Views, Plans of Towns, Harbours, &c. sl. 16s. boards,
THE BRITISH DOMINIONS in

THE DRITTISH DUMINING IN NORTH AMERICA; or, a Topographical and Statistical Description of Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, New Foundland, Prince Edward Island, and Cape Breion. Including Considerations on Land Granting and Emigration, with Statistical Tables, &c.

Burveyor-General of Lower Canada, Lieut.-Col. C. M. &c. &c.

Also, in 1 vol. 4to. price 28s. heards A Topographical Dictionary of Lower Ca nada. By the same.

Lendon: Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
A Topographical Map (87 inches by 50), of the Districts of Quebec and Three Rivers. 30s. in sheets.

A Topographical Map (36 inches by 42), of the District of Montreal. 30t. in sheets. A Geographical Map (75 inches by 39), of Upper and Lower Canada. 30t. in sheets.

Bible Society Controversy.
Price is.

TERMS of UNION. Remarks addressed to the Members of the British and Foreign Bible Society.
By JOSEPH JOHN GURNEY.
Unita vis fortior."
London: Seeley and Sons, Fleet Street.

Price 5s

REAL LIFE; Pages from the Portfolio of a Chronicler.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London; and Wangh and Innes, Edinburgh.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 12s. boards,

OBSERVATIONS on the LAW and
CONSTITUTION of INDIA; on the Nature of Landed Tenurer; and on the System of Revenue and Finance, as catablished by the Mochamudan Law and Moghul Government, with an Inquiry into the Revenue and Judicial Administration and Regulations of Police at present existing in Bengal.

Of the Hon. East India Company's Nervice.
London: Printed for Parbury, Allen, and Co. Leadenhall Street.

New Novels by Distinguished Writers.
In 2 vols. post 8vo.

TALES of the EARLY AGES.
By the Author of "Brambletye House," "Ziliah," &c.

In 3 vols. post 8vo.

Adventures of a Younger Son.

"We believe the celebrated Trelawney, (the friend of Lord Byron), to be the author of this work, and that it embodies a considerable portion of the events of his earlier life."—Literary Gastife.

III.
In 8 vols. post 8 vo.
Sir Ralph Esher; or, Adventures of a Gentleman of the Court of Charles II. By Leigh Hunt.
"A very clear and life-like picture of the chief actors and acta of the great drama of those stirring times."—Athengum.

The Opera. By the Author of "Mothers and Daughters."

In 3 vols. post 8vo.

Eugene Aram. By the Author of "Pel-ham," Paul Clifford," &c.
"A work abounding in excellencies."—Bzaminer.

Stanley Buxton; or, the Schoolfellows. By John Galt, Esq. Author of the "Ayrshire Legates."
Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

In 18mo. price 5s. 6d. boards,
THE GOSPEL MIRACLES, in a Series of Poetical Sketches, with illustrative Conversations.
By RICHARD MANT, D.D. M.R.I.A.
Lord Blahop of Down and Connor.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Piace, Pall Mail.

Second Series of Captain Basil Hall's Voyages.
In 3 vois. Vignette Title, 15s. boards,
RAGMENTS of VOYAGES and

TRAVELS.
By Capt. BASIL HALL, R.N.
Printed for Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; and Whittaker and Co. London. m may be had,

1. Capt. Basil Hall's Fragments of Voyages and Travels. First Series, 3 vols. 15. Plates.
2. Capt. Basil Hall's Travels in North Amevols. 3d edition, 11. 11s. 6d.; Etchings separate, 10s. 6d. Volume Thirty-fifth of the New Edition

3. Volume Thirty-fifth of the New Edition of the Waverley Novels, price &. It commences Red Gauntlet, and, besides an Introduction and Notes by the Author, is illustrated by Designs after Fracer and Kidd.
Vol. Thirty-Third of the edition, and which commenced St. Ronan's Well, is illustrated by a Portrait of the Author, from Mr. Watson Gordon's celebrated Picture.
"To us, who have known this illustrious individual from our mutual schoolboy days, there is something deeply affecting in the contemplation of Mr. Watson Gordon's materly resemblance. It is strikingly like. The painter has been to happy as to catch a moment of fine poetical thought. Sir Walter is now sixty years of age, and his countenance tells the tale of much toil and labour encountered, as well as of suffering and sorrow endured. Hooks also older than he actually is, and those lineaments which formerly played responsive to the varying thought, are now hard in the habitual contemplative character of his mind."—Edin. Weekly Journal, 8th Feb.

4. Volume Sixteenth of the New Issue of Volume Sixteenth of the New Issue of the Waverley Novels, which commences Ivanhoe, price 5e.

In 12me. price 6 THE PLEASURES of RELIGION, with other Poems.

By the Rev. H. STOWELL, A.M.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

WOMAN'S LOVE. A Novel.

The Jesuit. A Novel.

Country Houses. A Novel. By a Lady.

The Invasion. By the Author of the "Collegians."

"A work of very great research, power, and of high entertainment."—Metropolitan.

Also V.

Mr. Lodge's New Peerage, price 14s. bound.

Saunders and Otley, Public Library, Conduit Street.

Also, V.

Trice 16. 86. boards, and 16. 10s. in silk, illustrated by 56 Vignettes, (86 of which are Landscapes, by Tarner), TALY. A Poem.

By SAMUEL ROGKES, Esq.

India Proofs of the Frints, at Moon, Boys, and Co.'s, G, Pail Mail.

Also,

In royal 8vo. with Maps, Plans, and Tables, price 10s. cloth,

The Population Returns of 1831. By John

Rickman. Esq.

If R & Loyalsecol.

Rickman, Beq.

"Taken from the parliamentary returns and skilfully arranged, this is a book of which every tolerable library should be possessed. The facts it unfolds are of great importance, both to present politics and to future statistics."—Literary Gazette.

Edward Moxon, 64, New Bond Street.

In foolscap 8vo. price 3s. a new edition, with Notes and an Appendix, never before published, of ARRATIVE of the SHIPWRECK of the JUNO, on the Coast of Aracan, in the Year 1795, and of the Singular Preservation of Fourteen of her Company on the Wreck, without Food, during a Period of Twenty-three Days, in a Letter to his Father, the Rev. T. Mackay, Minister of Leirg, Sutherlandshire.

Sutherlandshire. By WILLIAM MACKAY,
Second Officer of the Ship.
Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and
T. Cadell, Strand, London.

Standard Norcis, No. XIV.

Complete in 1 vol. neatly bound and illustrated, and revised and corrected by the Author, expressly for this edition, price 6s.

THEPIONEERS.

By COOPER.

Forming the 14th Volume of the "Standard Novels."

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

New Series of the Museum Criticum Price 5s. the Second Number of th

PHILOLOGICAL MUSEUM. Contents:-Professor Scholefield's Eschylus-Niebuhr on the Age of the Coast-describer, Scylax, of Caryanda-Fables of Babrius-Kruse's Helias-English Adjectives-Philip of Theangela-Translation of the Eneld, Book I.—Accession of Darius Civil and Literary Chronology of Greece-On the Root of Ellies, and some of its Derivatives in the Greek, Latin, and Tentonic Languages—Journal of Education, and Vote by Ballot in the Athenian State. Cambridge: J. and J. J. Delghton; Rivingtons, London; and J. Parker, Oxford.

In 18mo. price 6. boards, the 3d delition of SERMONS on POINTS of DOCTRINE and RULES of DUTY.
By the Rev. R. PARKINSON, M.A.
Of St. John's College, Cambridge; Perpetual Curate of Whitworth; and Lecturer in Divinity at the Clerical Institution, St. Beas.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall, London; and sold by John Robinson, Whitehaven.

Family Library.

With Views, Portraits, and a Map of the Course of the Niger,

NARRATIVE of the ADVENTURES and SUFFERINGS of RICHARD and JOHN LAN-DER, during their Expedition to discover the Termination of the Niger. Forming Nos. XXVIII. XXIX. and XXX. of the

Under the Superintendence of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.
Price 22.

IBRARY of ENTERTAINING KNOWLEDGE, Part 30, Vegetable Substances used for the Food of Man; completing the 15th Volume, which may then be had, bound in cloth, price 4a. 6d.
The previous Ynnew Free and Fultaterroins The price Tree and FultaLondon: Charles Knight, 18, Pall Mall East.

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH

I. ACK WOOD'S EDINBURGH
MAGAZINE, No. CXCIII. for April 1838.

I. The Prospects of Britain—II. Satan Reformer. By Montgomery the Third—III. British Finances, Abandonment of the Sinking Fund, Repeal of Taxes on Consumption, the Reform Deficit—IV. A Poet's Dying Hymn. By Mrs. Hemans—V. The Wet Wooning a Narraive of Ninety-Eight—VI. American Theology. William Cullen Bryant—VII. The Art of Government made Easy. In a Letter from Satan to the Whigs—VIII. Mim Fanny Kemble's Tragedy—IX. Noctes Ambrodiane, No. 61.

Edinburgh: Frinted for William Blackwood, No. 45, George Street; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

THE FAIR of MAY-FAIR. In 3 vols.

Nearly ready, in 3 vols. post 8vo.

THE CONTRAST. A New Story of Nature and A.

Nature and Art.
By the Author of "Matilda," and "Yes and No."
Henry Colbara and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Nearly ready, in 8 vols. post 8vo.

R L I N G T O N.

By the Author of "Graphy," and "Herbert Lacy."

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Next week will be published, in 1 vol. 8vo. price 19s. boards,

EATH-BED SCENES, Second Series.

By the Author of the First.

Published by Calkin and Budd, Booksellers to the King, Pall Mail.

Bible Society Controversy.

To be published on the 31st of March.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY QUESTION, in its Principle and its Details, considered in a Series of Letters, addressed, by permission, to the Right Rev. the Lord Blahop of Salisbury.
By the Rev. SAMUEL CHARLES WILKS, M.A.
Reprinted from the Christian Observer. Price 3s.
London: Hatchards, Seeleys, Cochran, Holdsworth, and Duncan.

In monthly volumes, small svo. 6s. in cloth.

On April 2d, being Vol. XXIX. of the above, Vol. I. of ISTORY of SPAIN and PORTUGAL,

(4 vols.)

• • The remaining Volumes of this History will be published on the lat of each successive Month, interrupted only by the Third Volume of Mackinton's England, which is nearly read,

Published March 1, Gleig's British Milltary Commanders,

(3 vols.) Vol. II.

London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

THE BRITISH MAGAZINE of Religious and Ecclesiatical Information Religious and Ecclesissical Information, Parochial His-tory, Documents respecting the State of the Peor, Progress of Education, &c.

tory, Documents respecting the State of the Peor, Progress of Education, &c.

1. The Home Missionary Society.
2. Parish Churches, No. II.; Remains of Alderington Church, near Brighton, with an Engraving from a Drawing by Copley Fielding, Esq.
2. On Combinations to Resist Tithes.
3. Constitutes of the Burils of the Dead (continued).
4. Constitutes of the Burils of the Dead (continued).
5. Spherical Sounding Beard; with an Engraving.
7. Roman Catholic Abuse of Tithes.
8. Matthew Thorndike.
9. Important Documents respecting the Church of England and her Revenues.
Editorial Correspondence: Sacred Poetry—Notices of the Olden Time — Reviews — Reports of Meetings — Important Trials—Events of the Month—University and Clerical Intelligence; Oxford, Cambridge, and Scotland, &c. &c.—New Fatents—Garden Croft, Cambridge, and Scotland, &c. &c.—New Fatents—Garden Croft, Cambridge, and Scotland, &c. &c.—New Fatents—Garden Crond, Cambridge, and Scotland, &c. &c.—New Fatents—Garden Crond, Cambridge, and Stotland, &c. &c.—New Fatents—Garden Crond, Cambridge, and Stotland, &c. &c.—New Fatents—Garden Crond, Cambridge, and Stotland, &c. &c.—New Fatents—Garden Crond, Cambridge, Millies Hothers, Edinburgh; Wakeman, Dublin. Orders received by all Bookselters and Newsmen.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE DEFICE, 7. Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 18. South Moutton Street, Oxford Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 96. Royal Exchange; E. Marlborongh, Ave Maria Lane, Ludgate Hill; A. Black, Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Rabertson, and Atkinson and Co. Clasgow; and J. Cumming, Dublin.—Agent for America, O. Rich, 18, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 794.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Memoirs of Sir James Campbell of Ardkinglas. Written by Himself. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

This is a curious production, and of a very singular person, whose various adventures and length of years have afforded him much to tell in the way of amusing autobiography. He seems to belong to two generations; a cadet and officer in the Seven Years' War, we find him in these Memoirs, at the age of threescore and ten, marrying his fourth wife, like a patriarch of old; not to mention the woman Sassen, whom the French police gave him as a wife pro tem. when a détenu to Bonaparte, and whose conjugal and maternal claims have been a source of no small uneasiness to him. But the family affairs detailed in these volumes, however interesting to the writer, are not the parts likely to be most entertaining to the reader; though it is but fair to state that they are not tediously dwelt upon in any instance. On the contrary, there is, we fancy, much more concealed than revealed in the narrative; which we therefore take quantum valeat, and, looking to nothing beyond what is set down before us, proceed to follow its thread, and exhibit some of its many remarkable statements and piquant anecdotes.

Of high Scottish lineage, both on his father and his mother's side, Sir James Campbell, born in October 1745 old style, was the eldest son of seventeen children of Callander of Craigforth; and only succeeded to the name and title he now bears on the death of his cousingerman, Sir Alexander Campbell, about twenty years ago. He himself, as we have mentioned. married four wives, and had children by them all; so that we may consider this to be not the least prolific race in Scotland. His first lady was a Miss Forbes, whom he married at Geneva in 1769, and who died within two years, having had two children. His second was Miss Dutens, in 1772, who only survived the birth of a daughter, and left Major Callander again a widower. His third wife was Lady Elizabeth Macdonell, sister of the Earl of Antrim, whom he married in Dublin in 1777, by whom he had six sons and daughters - two of the latter, Caroline and Frances, having married the late Mr. Thomas Sheridan and Sir James Graham. The fourth wife, the present Lady Campbell, so made in 1815, was Miss Descot, the daughter of a Parisian banker, who also has several children to our bold and patriarchal baronet.

We have noticed that the family history is not quite so efitertaining as the more general anecdotes; yet there is something so characteristic in some of these matrimonial accounts, that we will venture to begin our extracts with them.

First Marriage .- " In a narrative which professes to be full and faithful, not merely as to events and circumstances, but as to senti-ments and feelings, I should sooner, perhaps, until after I had been some time oppressed | year of our marriage I played a good deal at the with the tedium and monotony of garrisonduty, that I seriously began to turn my attention to the subject of matrimony. Under the influence of these prepossessions, I soon afterwards met with Christiana Forbes, the daughter of George Forbes, Esq. of Tiree, and sister to the paymaster-general of the forces at Minorca, who, after the ordinary course of events in matters of this kind, made me happy by the possession of her hand."

Second Marriage. __ "Soon after my arrival in England, I was promoted, in the ordinary course of seniority, to a lieutenant-colonelcy in the army, and with my usual frankness of acknowledgment, I must here confess that, during my stay in London, I entered with alacrity into all the gaieties and pleasures of the town. One evening at the opera, in company with Colonel Stafford, who was generally known by the name of Count Stafford, a lady whom neither of us knew, made a considerable impression upon me. Piqued by some observation which fell from Colonel Stafford, I offered him a wager, the amount of which I forget. that I should make her acquaintance in three days. She was accompanied by a lady some years older than herself; and, at the end of the opera, I saw them enter a carriage distinguished by a lozenge. On this I gave a chairman a guinea, with the promise of a second, on his telling me next morning where the two ladies were set down, and to whom the carriage belonged. Next morning, accordingly, I received the intelligence that the two ladies were the daughters of Mrs. Dutens, the widow of the jeweller of the court, who had been of French extraction, and had died some time before, leaving a considerable fortune, with a family of three children, consisting of a son and two daughters. I shall not fatigue the reader with a detail of the circumstances which arose out of this adventure. Suffice it to say that I won my wager of Colonel Stafford, and in ten days afterwards was married, by special license, at St. George's, Hanover-square, to Henrietta Dutens, the younger of the two ladies who had attracted our attention at the opera. In addition to her personal attractions, I found my wife to be possessed of many amiable qualities, and of accomplishments which made me very much her debtor."

-" Dining one day at the Third Marriage .castle, I found myself seated by a young lady, whose acquaintance I had thus the happiness to make. She was the youngest sister of the Earl of Antrim, afterwards advanced to a marquisate-the Right Hon. Lady Elizabeth Macdonell. In due time the acquaintance ripened into friendship, and, in the ordinary course of such events, the lady became my wife. The marriage ceremony took place during the earl's female branch of the system of espionage had absence from Ireland, in the house of Lady Elizabeth's stepmother, the dowager-countess, who had no family, and who afterwards be-queathed a legacy of 6000% to Lady Elizabeth's tain character; and from making them the have made the confession that I have always children. The knot was tied by the Dean of instruments of taxation, the step was easy to had a tendre for the sex. It was not, however, St. Patrick's, Dean Baillie. * * * * The first make them the instruments of the police."

castle, as every body then did; and with such good fortune, that at the end of the year I found myself a winner of some 2000/. At Daly's Club my luck was not so good; there, I think, I left a few hundreds."

Fourth Marriage. __ "On the 3d of Feb. 1815, I was married to my present wife; she was then about nineteen years of age, and the eldest daughter of my old friend M. Descot, the banker, who had often assisted me in my greatest need, and did what he could to restore me to liberty and home. On the day of our marriage we set out for Beauvais, and remained there for six weeks."

The other Thing .- "On our arrival at Paris we were placed under the surveillance of that abominable system of espionage for which the government of Buonaparte was so much distinguished. The restrictions imposed upon us were—that we should not pass the barriers of Paris-that we should shew ourselves every morning to the police-and that such of us as were thought worthy of so much attention should receive one of their agents as an inmate in his house. Even in England it is now generally known that these agents were often women possessing the requisites of a decent exterior, unscrupulous virtue, and consummate address. I could mention many individuals well known in the world who were thus trammelled, among the numerous détenus who were seized in passing through the French territories during the short peace of 1802. Acquiescence in the system prescribed by the police was, no doubt, in some degree compensated by a relaxation of other restraints, and that in particular which made it necessary for the prisoners to shew themselves every morning at the nearest police-office. At the time of my arrival at Paris, I found myself in very bad health; and the intelligence which I soon afterwards received from Scotland, through the medium of the American ambassador, who was kind enough to forward and receive letters for me under his envelope, did not tend either to improve my health, or to relieve the miseries of an imprisonment of undefined duration. length I became so ill, that it was impossible for me to attend the bureau of the police; and the miserable alternative was presented to me, of receiving one of their female agents, or of going to the hospital. I chose the former, and I have lived to lament that I did so. It may be said, that as a choice was presented to me, it is not for me to exclaim against the principles of a government who thus virtually sanctioned a system of immorality. As an argumentum ad hominem, I bow to the justice of the criticism-but not as a defence of the government by whom the alternative was proposed. The probably its origin in the superintendence which is taken, and the tax in the form of "The woman Sassen followed me to Am- she was the mother of several pretty good traordinary message, 'I expect you to meet erdam; but where, or how she lived there, I soldiers, she never applied herself to the study me,' &c. &c. The answer of Colonel Luttrel sterdam; but where, or how she lived there, I had no means of knowing. While she remained there she gave birth to a daughter, who was called from me Jemima; and the poor girl I have never ceased to consider as entitled to my paternal regard. It would, indeed, be sad injustice to visit on her head the offences of her mother."

Having disposed of these manifold engagements, we shall now proceed to make a selection from the lively anecdotes with which these volumes are studded, caring little for the details of the battle of Minden, and the actions in which the author was engaged during the Seven Years' War; or his foreign peregrinations, when debt, duty, duel, or pleasure, made him an absentee or traveller during the greater portion of his life. To avoid the prolixity of introductory remarks, we shall merely class some of these under titles sufficient to indicate the parties, or explain the circumstances.

Anecdote of General Scott .- " In all my intercourse with General Scott, I found him uniformly good-natured and obliging. When I received my commission, the regiment was stationed at Coventry, and he was so good as to carry me with him when it became my duty to join. As an instance of his easy disposition, considering the style of play to which he is understood to have been accustomed, I may mention how much he seemed to enjoy himself with his officers at a rubber of sixpenny whist. He seemed on all occasions to be perfectly sensible of the evils of gaming; and, as far as his influence could be supposed to operate, he discouraged it in the regiment earnestly and systematically. On one occasion, I remember, when walking out with one or two of his junior officers, whom he believed to be addicted to play, the conversation chanced to turn on the odd appearance of a dog-kennel, and on the form and number of the tiles with which it was covered. It was proposed by some one as the subject of a bet, which, with some people in the world, is admitted at all times as a succedaneum, or a stimulant to conversation, that the general would not name a number so near to the true one as he who had proposed the wager. This led to a sort of sweepstakes of a considerable amount, when each of the gentlemen having made his nomination, some were found to be above, and some below the mark; but the number named by the general was observed to be precisely the true one. 'Now.' said he, 'my young friends, observe the disadvantages which you must ever encounter, if you allow yourselves to hazard your money so easily. In making the bet with you I had one small advantage which another might not have acknowledged: I counted the tiles of the dogkennel yesterday morning."

Anecdote of a Scotch Gude-wife .- " As I had now been employed for three years on General Mostyn's staff, and had applied myself with considerable assiduity to study the duties of a military engineer, I had made a collection of plans, positions, attacks, fortifications, and sieges, with other objects of interest in this department, on which I placed a great value. Having preserved them with the greatest care, I deposited them for safety in my father's house; but on my return to Scotland some years afterwards, I found, to my great mortification, that my honoured and worthy mother, from their lying so long unemployed in the cases in which I had lest them, thought that in papering a tea of military tactics.'

Anecdote of Lord George Lennox. - " The French king was at this period disposed to evince, on many public occasions, the dislike he entertained for the English nation; but in selecting Lord George Lennox as the object of his severe observations, he found a person who was not disposed to brook indignity from the grande monarque himself. Sitting one evening at supper, the subject of the distinctions of rank, as observed in different countries, and particularly in England, was introduced by the king, who, in the course of it, turned abruptly round to the English ambassador, who was standing at his right hand, and said to him, Vous n'êtes milord que par courtesie.' this Lord George answered with great readiness, 'Oui, sire; mais je suis né prince.'"

Anecdote of Voltaire .- " When at Geneva I was invited to Ferney to assist at the presentation of the Prince Dolgouroukie, a young man of very high rank in Russia, who came to Voltaire at the head of a deputation from the Empress Catherine the Second, than whom, perhaps, no one has ever been more anxious as to what should be said of her by the world. Voltaire had contributed to foster, at the same time that he gratified, this passion, by writing a great deal in the empress's praise; and the presents which were brought by the Prince Dolgouroukie were probably intended either as a reward for past praises, or as a retaining fee for the future. I say nothing of the truth of what he has written, but content myself with recording what I witnessed at the reception of the embassy. The presents were produced by the prince in succession, and exhibited with great state and ceremony. first was an ivory box, the value of which consisted in its being the work of the empress's own hands. The next was her imperial majesty's portrait, brilliantly set in diamonds, of very great value; and I could not resist the idea that the eyes of the philosopher sparkled with delight at the splendid setting of the picture, rather than at the picture itself. followed a collection of books in the Russian language, which Voltaire admitted that he did not understand: but he admired them, and very justly, as rare specimens of typography, and as being bound in a style of magnificence befitting an imperial gift. The last of the presents was a robe, the lining of which was of the fur of the black fox, from the Curile Isles. It was certainly of immense value, and such only as the Empress of Russia could give. The prince, on producing it, begged to be shewn into a darkened room, where, on drawing his hand across the fur, it produced so much electrical fire, that it was possible to read by it. This was ascribed to the extreme closeness or thickness with which the hair was set on the skin. In return for these princely gifts, Voltaire had his portrait drawn by my friend Hubert, in which he was exhibited in rather an extraordinary position, rising out of bed in an ecstasy upon the presents being presented to The picture was accompanied by a copy of verses in the empress's praise, in the taste of the period, and, of course, sufficiently nau-seous and fulsome."

Anecdots of Lord Carhampton and Colonel Luttrel. - " The father and son had long been at daggers-drawing, and it is known that the earl so far forgot himself, in a fit of exasperacloset, they might be applied to a purpose both useful and ornamental. I could not seriously a duel. 'If you can again forget that I am blame her for this little mistake, since, although your father,' such were the words of this ex- individual and general manners.

was not less extraordinary. 'My lord,' he said, 'I wish I could at any time forget that you are my father.'

Lines on Limerick:

Oh, what a sweet and pretty town Limerick is, Where neither sly one, nor simpkin, nor slattern is; It would do your heart good, on the quay, as they walk

To hear them so funny, so skittish, so talkative.

The beauties of Limerick took the joke in such dudgeon, that the poor doctor (the author) was fain to make his escape in the night-time, and never return."

Anecdote of Lord Tyrawley .- "The corporation of Bath had become dissatisfied with the part he had taken in public affairs, after he had been for some time their representative, and sent him a letter of remonstrance on the subject, to which he laconically replied - ' Mr.

Mayor and Corporation, ye rascals, I bought ye, and by G.—d I'll sell ye!"

Of Lord North, &c.—"On our arrival in town, Lord Antrim announced the circumstance to Lord North, who appointed an interview for the following morning, at twelve, at his residence in Downing-street. We found the minister in his cabinet, sitting in a flannel dressing-gown and slippers. Lord Antrim had a becoming notion of his own dignity; and on observing the costume of the minister, I saw that he drew himself up, with an expression on his countenance which Lord North endeavoured to remove, by saying, 'Don't be surprised, Lord Antrim, to find me in this dress. I was called out of my bed, at four o'clock this morning, by an express from Spain, and I have not yet had time to drink a dish of tea.' He then entered on the subject for which the interview had been desired, and I must say discovered a very intimate acquaintance with the general state of Ireland. He made a number of pointed and pertinent inquiries, and afterwards called in his secretary to take down the answers he had received.

"My worthy relative Lord Antrim had never been deeply read in polemical divinity; and on the occasion of a bill being brought into the Irish parliament, in which reference was made to the Thirty-nine Articles and the Athanasian Creed, he inquired of a venerable member of the bench of bishops, as to the nature and object of the proposed enactment, concluding his catechism by asking who this St. Athanasius had been, of whom so much had been said in the house? 'I can't tell, my lord,' replied the diocesan; 'but I think he must have been a d-d old creed-making rascal!

"As to the influence of his holiness the pope, I should be disposed to measure it pretty much in the style of a certain Chan of Tartary, who, when menaced with the fulmination of some pontifical anathema, began to inquire into the extent of his danger, and sat down very contentedly under the infliction, when he found that the papal army consisted of five hundred men who mounted guard with umbrellas! As to the moral influence which the old lady is supposed to possess over the members of the catholic church, I hold it to be a mere chime which the French revolution has effectually dispelled."

Here we must conclude for the present, reserving a second paper (including some military stories, and farther anecdotes of Voltaire,) for a second Gasette; and in the meantime repeating, that readers will find this work one The Pauline. No. I. 8vo. pp. 48. To be published Quarterly. Nov. 1831.

This day, we believe, is that on which the scholars educated at St. Paul's observe their anniversary; and we select it to notice the production before us, which, like many juvenile efforts that have given promise of men to be afterwards distinguished in the various walks of life, has issued from that excellent institution, as preceding performances of the same stamp from Eton, Harrow, Westminster, Winchester, &c. It is always gratifying to witness the first literary aspirations of youth; to see the love of letters not only early cherished, but bursting through the natural timidity of inexperience, and longing to make itself a name in the world. St. Paul's School can boast of many shining ornaments at the present time, as may be seen from the list of stewards for their festival; and we rejoice to add, that the Pauline very distinctly indicates their able successors in all those pursuits and professions which raise really gifted men to fame among their fellows.

Such a publication, however, does not demand much critical remark. We look at it with pleasure as a whole, and as a production which reflects honour on the masters as well as the pupils, who are treading in the paths smoothed for them by Dean Colet.

A very becoming preface ushers in the Pauline. The first paper, by S. P. A., on Ingratitude, is good in sentiment—but would be better of a careful polish in style (see page 4, for example, "rebels to write," and the word "friend" thrice in seven lines. An Ode on Parting (X. Y. Z.) is a pretty and feeling poem; and Clie's verses on the child carried off by an eagle, with some slight defects, worthy of similar praise. The last two stanzas are a favourable specimen:—

"To heaven the mother turned her eyes,
To ask satistance there,
And then beheld the eagle rise
Majestic through the air.
Bearing her darling up on high,
She saw the eagle soar,
Just heard the infant's feeble cry,
And gased—to gase no more."

The story of Rural Politics is clever, and the moral good; and the Chorus from Antigone (E. H.) very creditable:—but we need not particularise. A taste of the humorous and another of the poetical is all we can find space to add.

Jack Spigot, a drunken street-sweeper, is the hero of a Hood-ish ballad.

"Each day he work'd till it was dark, But never longer waited; For Jack a pious Christian was, And works of darkness hated.

His trade increas'd and eke his gains, He ne'er experienc'd losses: 'Tis strange indeed, but truly Jack His fortune made by crosses.

Soon right and left his money went— Jack swore he was not similing, And said his life should now be gin, Since he was life beginning.

He sought another crossing soon,
A livelihood to find,
Where death soon made him cut his stick,
And leave his broom behind."

Now to conclude with a very pretty little piece.

"Hate and Love: two Groups of Sculpture.
Such the last throes of mortal strife,
The fierce embrace of foe with foe,
The strength, the rancour of a life,
Summon'd to aid the dying blow.
If to one rebel plaint, one sigh
O'er mortal lot thou'st utterance given,
Turn to yon pair thy test-dimm'd eye,
Kerth has one moment worthy heaven.

'Tis when the sun-light of youth's days, Hope's beams new kindling into bliss, Passion's, Desire's concentred rays Burn in one focus—Love's first kiss."

Health, prosperity, and happiness, to our students; a hearty appetite for their dinners to-day, and may they emulate and surpass their distinguished predecessors who meet them to celebrate their anniversary!

Stanley Buxton; or, the Schoolfellows. By the Author of "Annals of the Parish," "Lawrie Todd," &c. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE will not again waste time by moralising on the shortness of time for all our (L. G.) purposes. Mr. Galt's new novel is on our table, and we have not many intervening hours between its reception and our own publication: our review must, therefore, partake of "the soul of wit." It is the story of three friends, schoolfellows, with various temperaments and lots in life...Buxton, the hero, of extraordinary birth and fortunes; Franks, a London merchant's son; and Raiston, a peaceful Scots laird, in whose household, managed by a welldrawn old maiden relative, the greater part of the business is transacted, though there is a good deal also in the metropolis. Having said so much, or rather so little, we find ourselves pussed to say more; for we adhere to our rule in regard to works of fiction, viz. that we will not mar the reader's pleasure by the anticipation of events. We must therefore choose a few stray scenes to illustrate our subject-and the very opening offers itself as peculiarly Galtigh :-

" The school of Mr. Palmer, or, as the boys called him, Dominie Palmy-in allusion to a certain department of his duties, in the per-formance of which they alleged he enjoyed heartfelt satisfaction—was in its day one of the best in the West of Scotland. It was a superstructure formed on the parochial establishment; for, in addition to serving as a school to the parish, it in some respects aspired to the dignity of an academy—indeed, the Dominie's wife never spoke of it with an inferior title; and Mrs. Keckle, the minister's better half, always called it the semindary, though the reverend gentleman took pains to correct her pronunciation. The school was indebted for this distinguished rank chiefly to the enterprise of the Dominie himself, a probationer of the Kirk, who, like many others, not falling under the fostering eye-shine of a patron, had early in life accepted the charge, with the additional offices, according to use and wont, of precentor and session-clerk. The former, however, he only retained one Sunday; for, as the elders and luckies of the time said, his voice had a 'want in the Psalm,' though they acknowledged that no man 'could proclaim the bands or the remembering prayer in a finer style of language.' He was in consequence constrained to hire, at half-wages, one Robin Nasal, a godly weaver, that every body said sung in the warm and lown summer afternoons as composing and melodious as a bum-bee. No sooner had Mr. Palmer been installed than he looked out for a managing, thorough-handed wife, and in the course of the same year married Mrs. Napery, a widow, the housekeeper to Laird Ralston, one of the principal heritors. She was ten years—some said fifteen—older than himself; but as age, to a certain degree, improves sundry commodities, it cannot be a fault in the fair sex; at least, for his purpose, deemed the match highly prudent; and the more so, when he rented the house with the two trees and the parterre that had been the old Leddy Ralston's jointure house, and promulgated his intention of taking pupils. Some of the most sagacious carlins of the parish inquired of each other, and of Mrs. Keckle, what sort of things pupils were; and that erudite lady translated from a classical tongue that they were boarders, not yet just come to the degree of colleginers. It thus so happened that the school of Greenknowes came, in process of time, to be the brag of the country side; for the master had in the course of a few years fifteen pupils, who were better to him than twice the minister's stipend, over and above all his legitimate dues and parochial perquisites as session-clerk, when bridals and baptisms were in the wind, to say nothing of a sly compliment now and then to soothe a crying sin."

It was here the "schoolfellows" were educated; but we pass on to later years.

Miss Sibby, the laird's housekeeper: "On hearing the laird's footsteps in the hall, she started up, and snatching the snuffers, was in the act of brightening the lights when he entered the room. 'Dear me,' said she, scarcely well awake; 'what have I been about to let the candlewicks grow to puddock stools; and what has become of Mr. Buxton that he's still a-field? Well, and did you see them safely lodged? You poor lily-lookup, with all her fine style of language, is, I doubt, only in her semplar years, in the way of discretion. But I am, however, none surprised at such forwardness; for we all know that in England it's the natural part of the women to court the men; but it's long to the day when a well and soberly brought-up Scotch lassie will so demean herself. Mr. Buxton served her rightly; and, if I were him, I would let her know that I would be as condumacious as a marble statute, if she ever again came singing the auld song of 'John, come kiss me now.' It's really no' a Christian practice.' 'Hush!' cried Mr. Ralston; and at that moment Mr. Buxton made his appearance also; at which Miss Sibby, to assure him that nothing was farther from her thoughts than his affairs, said: 'I was just thinking that the laird would be none the worse of a warm tumbler after his walk; and I can see, Mr. Buxton, with the half of my one eye, that ye're no' out of the need o't likewise." The bell was immediately rung, and the necessary orders being given to the servant, the laird signified by some sign of that natural freemasonry which the members of a family learn among themselves, that he would be glad were Miss Sibby to leave them. She, however, had her own reasons for not observing the sign; and he was at last obliged to tell her to send the servant with more coals, laying such particular emphasis on the word send, that she could not mistake its purport."

Miss Sibby, however, is not like most folks in such a situation, averse to the laird's marrying; on the contrary, she is ever scheming and urging him to take a wife; and the following is a very natural bit of description of her conduct as that epoch approaches:—

out for a managing, thorough-handed wife, and in the course of the same year married Sibby during the same time, we have never heard; but to her the night was also restless—heard Ralston, one of the principal heritors. She was ten years—some said fifteen—older than himself; but as age, to a certain degree, improves sundry commodities, it cannot be a in the morning sunshine, and, with a basket in feult in the fair sex; at least, for his purpose, her superiority in years was no drawback. On rushing poultry, earlier than usual to feed them, the contrary, the elderly sedate of the parish. The laird, then pendering and pacing in the avenue, on seeing her, walked towards the yard | know if it be still the custom for young authors where she was sprinkling her grains before her to be introduced to the booksellers or the public numerous dependents, and said: 'These poor by their friends. You know in former times things, Miss Sibby, I doubt, would miss you if first works were always heralded by sheets of I were taking a wife.' 'No doubt, laird, they complimentary verses to the author, published would if she was not charitable-hearted; but I in front of his preface.' 'Oh no! that's quite trust and hope that you'll never even yourself rectified: formerly, ye see, sir, Mr. Hyams, to any lady that is not of that nature.' 'That's the booksellers never published any thing that kind of you to say so, Miss Sibby; but these was not well certified as to character, by good poor creatures and me would find a lack if you judges, before they meddled with it; but now were to leave us. 'Leave you, laird! what they judge for themselves, which is the cause puts that in your head?' 'I'm only thinking of the great straits they are so often reduced to of possibilities; but you know, Miss Sibby, afterwards, before they can get the best of books very well, that however most watchful, indusinto vogue. Surely you do not mean to say trious, and worthy, in all things you have been that the booksellers themselves now estimate to me, the wife that may be ordained for me the merits of the manuscripts offered to them. may not see in you those manifold good quali- How can they, Mr. Wooden, considering their ties that I so much respect.' Miss Sibby, while education and the manner in which their time he was saying this, forgot to sprinkle her corn, is occupied with their business? For example; and several of the hens flew fluttering in their did you judge of that Essay on Logarithmic impatience to pick from the basket. 'Away, ye greedy beasts!' said Sibby, with emotion, as she brushed them off with her hand. 'We live, laird,' she added, 'in a changeful world; How could you even me and Logarithmic Transand I am not to expect that it is to be more cendants in the same breath? No, Mr. Hyams steadfast in the parish of Greenknowes with you and me, than among kings and queens in the capital cities of the earth; but if it must his wee finger such college clishmaclavers. But come to pass that I shall be obligated to quit we are all glad to get jobs from authors able to pay the bonny heights and houghs of the Gowans, for them.' 'I never question that,' replied Mr. I hope that I shall be enabled to submit with a Hyams. 'But for authors of popular literature. resigned heart.' These few words sank ten-poets, and such like, what is the custom towards derly into the warmest corner of the laird's them?' 'If they be popular, the dons of the bosom: he had no answer ready, and he turned trade will take them under their wing, of course.' aside as if he was still pursuing his walk; but in this he was absent, for he took a direction become popular?' 'That 's no' an easy questowards a hedge in which there was no gate, and was in consequence obliged to return. Miss Sibby, with a sidelong look, saw that he was sorrowful; she, however, said nothing, but continued to cast the grains to the poultry, slow growth; and an author's best days are and to chide several of them by name, in parcommonly past, and his best books laid by on ticular a large Muscovy duck, on whom she had bestowed the superlative epithet of Gilly-profit.' 'There is, then,' said Mr. Hyans gawpus. 'Eat on, Gilly, eat thy fill; the day may be no' far off when thou'lt not get thy meal from so free a hand; and you, ye witless hens, take your pick; ye're welcome while I can say it; and when it comes, as come it will, ye'll maybe remember, in a scantier meal, the hand that's feeding you now. Poor duckies! that look up so comical with your pawkie eyne, you'll maybe see another face at this work ere lang; and you, ye long bare-leggit bubblyjocks, I could almost find in my heart to give you another handful; there, take it, and good be with you a'!' With these words she called aloud, as she moved away, to Eppie the cook, that the two gray-ha'rst birds were nicely fit to be killed."

As a variety, we copy part of an account of a visit to an old London bookseller, a Scotsman by

" 'But,' said he to the bibliopole, filling at the same moment his glass, 'though it is very evident that your natural sagacity has enabled you to obtain queer peeps into the arcana of the trade, in what way would you advise a young author to proceed with his maiden endeavours? there must be sleights among book-makers as well as among book-sellers.' 'No doubt, no well as among book-sellers.' doubt, Mr. Hyams; I see ye have an ee in your neck: but if ye're big with book, and near your time, it's no' the likes of me that ye should take for houdy. Your accoucheur should a young man, who has not had a name among be of the flashy order—unless it be some kittle his companions at the college, has no chance.

-never imagine that there is one of the trade within the four walls of London would tig with I am persuaded of that; but until they have tion. If they have friends, and these friends be men of repute - a flash-in-the-pan, new beginner, will risk something on their opinion; but for the most part, popularity is a plant of with a sigh, thinking of our hero, 'but little chance for a young man whose sole end in becoming author is profit.' 'There's none at all—dear me, how could you think there was any?' 'But if he be a man of genius, original in the way he looks on the world, and beautiful in the manner he tells what he sees_what then?' 'He will help the trunk-makers_unless he has friends to speak of him, and friends in whose opinion the world has some confidence,-it's all a mistake, Mr. Hyams, to think that books, more than any other merchandise, can be sold without advertisement. Good wine, ye'll say, needs no bush; but the quality of the wine must have been tasted. Over and above all, Mr. Hyams, it is not enough that the quality be good, -it must have been relished; for I need not tell a gentleman of your long experience, that the best of all sorts of new things, whether books or wines, do not often please at first: the taste of the public must be in a manner educated to enjoy them; and that's a process of time.' 'Your remarks are judicious very, Mr. Wooden, very; and, to let you into the secret, I am not asking all these questions out of curiosity, nor for myself; but I have a friend, a young man of singular talent...' 'Was he famous at his university?' 'I cannot exactly answer that question; but he is able to have been so.' 'That's not enough: a young man, who has not had a name among life, ye only tell us how hard it is to climb into reputation. Nay, nay, Mr. Hyams, don't flatter your friend that he'll find the course smoother than those who have gone before: without friends and trumpeters, he must reckon on small gains. Early profits come of patronage in all professions: renown is begotten of time as well as merit.' 'But I thought the booksellers were now the patrons of authors. 'So they are, after the authors have established themselves.' 'But it is in the beginning and outset that patrons are most needed.' 'Quite true: but surely, sir, ye would not expect merit to be patronised till it has made itself known; -ye would not expect a bookseller to patronise a bare lad of genius in an untimely manner. What have the booksellers to do with poets more than the butchers with lambs, or the poulterers with larks?' 'Do they put them to death?' 'That's very jocose, Mr. Hyams; but to come to the point : unless your friend have friends that can promulgate him, he'll do but little good. Nobody should be authors that have not a backing in men or money; all trades need capital, and those that have to live by their calling must dine sparely without it. It's no' the best books, but those that best sell, which reward their makers. I have heard of a cookery book, that was such a mine of wealth to the publisher, that a topping man of the Row used to call it the Iliad of cocks and hens; for, among other things, it was grand anent poultry.' Mr. Hyams saw it was needless to prolong the conversation; and, as the bottle was empty, he rose to come away. His host would fain have detained him to partake of another, but the tenour of the remarks had flattened his spirits, despite the wine."

We regret that we can go no farther into the arcana of Stanley Buxton, in which the author has aimed at painting natural feelings in situations not common, and with much success. Some of his descriptions are also deserving of special praise; that of a winter morning on the Thames is worthy of a volume of poetry. Two episodes at the end of the second volume add to the general interest, and farther recommend the work to the favour of the public.

Six Months in America. By G. T. Vigne, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 2 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.

This work is the production of an intelligent and rational man-one who gives information rather than amusement, and whose pages have more political than graphic interest. We have not seen a more fair and unprejudiced view taken of the present position of the United States, than in the following remarks, which we regret being obliged to abridge.

"The progress of reform in England, and in Europe generally, is watched with the most intense interest by the Americans. A deep feeling of regard and sympathy for the mother country, as they term it, is still general, and, I think, increasing; and though most of the Americans believe their own country is the first in the world, they are still reasonable enough to assign to Great Britain the second place in the scale of nations. Those airs which it must be admitted so frequently render an Englishman ridiculous, when travelling on the old continent, would be entirely thrown away in the United States. All pretensions to importance are disregarded, even without being quest in mathematics, then I might do—but the impression should no' be above fifty copies.' And yet, Mr. Wooden, how many authors the impression should no' be above fifty copies.' That,' said Mr. Hyams, interrupting him, 'is not exactly what I mean. I only wish to late in life!' 'Just so: when ye say late in his name and character, than they care to avow openly. They wish us well through our troubles, and watch with sincere pity what they consider to be the approaching downfal of our constitution: but at the same time their national vanity receives something very like gra-tification from the belief, that we shall be forced to adopt a form of government similar to their That the American form of government is admirably adapted to a new country-that that country has astonishing resources, and that the Americans lose no time in making the most of them (I speak of America as a country, not of the Union, for America must thrive, come what will to the government)-that it has thriven under its institutions, and is at present enjoying an exemption from many evils incidental to older countries—it would be an absurdity to deny. But the natural causes of prosperity which the Americans so pre-eminently enjoy, must not be mistaken, as they most fondly and frequently are, for the positive effects, and little more than the positive effects, of a good government, however good and well adapted that government may be. The American constitution has never been tried. That it was nearly a bankrupt at the close of the last war, was a trial of the resources of the country, not of its institutions. Forty years is no time to test the strength of a government like that of the United States, when civilisation is extended over so small a proportion of them. The good is perceived at present; the evils are latent, and comparatively little felt. But there are among the institutions of the Union the seeds of discord and confusion, whose growth is only stifled by the bustle of commercial pursuits, and that panacea for every political disease, a fine country abounding in resources, and of small population in comparison to its extent. It is possible that the mischief will not be felt, so long as there is no real motive for disaffection; so long, in fact, as the people are not in want, which may not be the case while ground yet remains to be cultivated.'

What would any of our orators say to the ensuing, as a precedent ?-

Logan.-" An old officer of the United States army, who, soon after the close of the revolutionary war, was ordered to make surveys of the country watered by the Alleghany river, informed me that Logan's nephew, a remarkably fine young Indian, dined with him one day in his tent, and that he asked him what became of Logan. I killed him, was the reply. Why did you kill him? The nation ordered it. For what reason? He was too great a man to live: he talked so well, that although the whole nation had intended to put any plan in execution, yet, if Logan did not approve of it, he would soon gain a majority in favour of his opinions. Was he not then generally in the right? Often; but his influence divided the nation too much. Why did they choose you to put him to death? If any one else had done it, I would certainly have killed him: I, who am his nephew, shall inherit his greatness. Will they not then kill you also? Yes: and when I become as great a man as Logan (laying his hand on his breast with dignity), I shall be content to die! He added, that he shot him near the Alleghany river. When informed of the resolution of the council of his nation, Logan stopped his horse, drew himself up in an attitude of great dignity, and received the fatal ball without a murmur.

The following is new to us in natural history :-- " It is a well-known and singular fact, that the body of a person bitten will sometimes change, whilst under the influence of the polson, to the colour of the snake that bit him."

which we have eaten in London with no great to guess, to expect, to calkilate, &c.' The verb gusto, supplies our next extract:—" The bons to fix,' has perhaps as many significations as gusto, supplies our next extract :- " The bons vivans of America talk of the canvas-back with an interest that borders on affection, and is sometimes very amusing. 'Sir,' said an old fellow to me, ' I wished to give a duck feast, and accordingly I bought nine couple of them, all fresh killed, and all of the right weight. I stuffed them into every corner of my gig, and would not suffer the cook to touch them, except in my presence. I dressed them all myself, in different ways, in my parlour, so as to have them all done according to figure, sir! Well, sir! all my company had arrived, except an old German : we could not wait, and sat down without him. When he came, he exclaimed, 'What! noshing but duckhs!' I started up in a rage, sir! a violent rage, sir! 'Noshing but duckhs!' I repeated after him: Why, you -d old scoundrel, said I, your own Emperor of Austria never had such a dinner: he could not, sir, though he gave the best jewel in his

The following are amusing notices: as to titles :- " Human nature will out. In the absence of other titles, it is the pleasure of the Americans that they should be dignified by the rank of general, colonel, or aide-de-camp; but more especially I found by that of major. An English gentleman assured me that, being on board a steamer on the Ohio river, he was first introduced by a friend as plain Mr., then as captain; soon after he was addressed as major. and before the end of the day he was formally introduced as a general. There is usually a major, or an aide, as they call themselves, in every stage-coach company. The captain of a steamboat, who was presiding at the dinner table, happened to ask rather loudly, 'General, a little fish!' and was immediately answered in the affirmative by twenty-five out of the thirty gentlemen who were present.'

As to the spoken tongue:-

"The term ' nullifier,' which, like the word radical' in England, has now grown into common use, was first adopted by the members from South Carolina, in congress, about two years ago; the doctrine they profess was broached at the same time. A nullifier is a person who holds that the federal constitution is merely a compact or league between the several states; and that each state has a right to decide for itself concerning the infractions of that league by the federal government, and to nullify or declare void an act of the federal congress within its limits."

Two more extracts must finish our review.

"A great proportion of the inhabitants of the eastern states are Dutch and German. They are very numerous in different parts of Pennsylvania, where they have the character of being good and industrious farmers; but in other respects, they are very ignorant and opinionated, refusing the education that is offered to them gratis for their children, who are, of course, far behind the young Americans in intelligence. I have often, when passing through the forest, stopped to ask a cottager's child of what country he was. A very frequent answer was 'Please sir, father's an Irishman and mother's Dutch;' and 'I was raised here!' The latter expression is very commonly used when the place of nativity is inquired after. I have been frequently ad- in England." dressed with, 'Where were you arranger? I guess you're from the old There are about half-a-dozen

American epicurism, on a very favourite dish, | meant to convey, such as - ' to fix, to locate. any word in the Chinese language. If any thing is to be done, made, mixed, mended, bespoken, hired, ordered, arranged, procured, finished, lent, or given, it would very probably be designated by the verb 'to fix.' The tailor or boot-maker who is receiving your instructions, the barkeeper who is concecting for you a glass of mint-julep, promise alike to fix you, that is, to hit your taste exactly. A lady's hair is sometimes said to be fixed, instead of dressed: and were I to give my coat or my boots to a servant to be brushed, and to tell him merely to fix' them for me, he would perfectly understand what he had to do. There is a marked peculiarity in the word ' clever.' In America. a man or woman may be very clever without possessing one grain of talent. The epithet is applied almost exclusively to a person of an amiable and obliging disposition. Mr. A. is a man of no talent! no! but then he is a very clever man! According to their meaning, Bonaparte was terribly stupid, and Lord North was a very clever fellow indeed. To say nothing of their oaths, their expressions are sometimes highly amusing. I have heard a horse described as a 'raal smasher at trotting,' and a highway robbery considered as a ' pretty middling tough piece of business; with a vast number more of the same kind. I beg it may be understood, that I mean these remarks to apply chiefly to the middle and lower classes of Americans: the language of every one is perfectly intelligible; and, as I have before remarked, there is no patois: I think it should rather be called a 'slang.' There is also much less of the nasal twang than I had been taught to expect in American parley. Still I was informed, that many Americans, when they hear a man talk, will instantly mention with certainty the country in which he has been long resident, being able to detect some words, accents, or expressions, peculiar to each state. The English language does not contain words enough for them. The word congressional is a fair coinage from 'Congress,' like the word parliamentary from parliament. But a member of congress is said to be deputised; and a person in danger, to be jeopardised. I remember that about two years ago being in the Jardin des Plantes, I was nearly 'camelopardised' by the giraffe that kicked at me. In New York I observed that a gunmaker had put up over his door, 'Flint and steel guns altered and percussionised.' Although the meaning of all this is perfectly understood, still it is American, not English; and although the English language be in use, yet the very un-English construction and distorted meaning of many sentences, render it so different from the language spoken in good society in England, that I do not think it can safely be dignified with the name of good English. But the English spoken in the first circles in all the larger cities of the Union, is usually very good: so that between the language of the English and the American gentleman, the difference is exceedingly slight; but still there is a difference here and there, by which I think any person of observation, who had been in the United States, could decide upon the country of the speaker, unless of course he had resided

"Virginia is famous for its breed of horses. Till I passed through that state I had not seen a horse with at all the shape and figure of an words in constant use, to which an English English hunter; but in Virginia I have seen ear is unaccustomed, in the sense they are horses on the road, and brood mares in the pastures, displaying a great deal of blood and symmetry. In all parts of the Union which I visited, a well-bred horse is termed a "blooded but the Americans are quite at liberty horse : to use what terms they please. Besides the paces usually known in England, the horse in the United States is valuable according to his performances as a square or natural trotter, a pacer, or a racker. A racker is a beast that can trot before and canter behind at the same time. The recommendations of a pacer are, that he moves his fore and hind legs on the same side at the same time, like a camelopard. When hiring a hack, you are questioned as to which you would prefer. As there is no fox-hunting, a fast trotter is considered the most valuable animal next to the racer. A horse that can trot a mile in two minutes and a half, is not thought very extraordinary.

" Our distinguished countryman, Mr. Bullock, whom I saw at Cincinnati, had been lately residing on the spot for three months, and had had twenty men constantly employed in digging. He had discovered, amongst other animals, the bones of a smaller and distinct species of migalonyx; an animal having partly the generic character of the armadillo, and partly that of the sloth, and nearly equalling the rhinoceros in size. But the most remarkable remains were those of a young colt, and a gigantic horse, that could not have been less than twenty-four hands high. Unfortunately, however, for the advancement of science, they were all destroyed by a fire, which took place about three weeks before my arrival. The fossil remains of about thirty animals, now supposed to be extinct, have been found at the Big Bone Lick; and Mr. Bullock conjectures that there are no more remaining. That the animals did not perish on the spot, but were carried and deposited by the mighty torrent, which it is evident once swept over the face of the country, is probable, from the circumstance of marine shells, plants, and fossil substances having been found, not only mixed with the bones, but adhering to them, and tightly wedged into the cavities of the skulls - those holes where eves did once inhabit,' were often stopped up by shells or pieces of coral, forcibly crammed into them.

Souvenirs sur Mirabeau, et sur les deux premières Assemblées Législatives. Par Etienne Dumont, de Genève. Londres, 1832. Bull. WERE we to be asked the leading principle of the French revolution, we should at once say, Vanity. It was the moral cholera of the period: like an epidemic, it seized upon all ranks and classes-vanity made the young nobles affect liberal principles; vanity made the middle classes affect republican ones; vanity mounted the tribune; and, finally, vanity presided on the scaffold. The reign of display was, as some poet says of the hues of the red rose, "all paramount." Every body aimed at saying something clever; and the history of the time is told in bon-mots. The following anecdote has the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, embodied in a phrase:-" One night at Brissot, while employed in discussing various political propositions, Palissot rose and insisted strongly on the necessity of an express article on the 'right of representation.' We Genevese (Messrs. Duroversi and Dumont) of course understood that he meant the right of making representations to the government. He proceeded to observe, that this essential rightthis right, one of the most precious to liberty—was at that very moment being violated in the was at that very moment being violated in the ception of character was unerring. Can any Recollections of Mirabeau and the two first (i. s. first most open manner by the government; for thing be more accurate than his estimate of two) Legislative Assemblies of France. Svo. Bull.

that M. Chenier was refused permission to have his tragedy of Charles IX. acted. We could not but smile at our mistake, when some one whispered in my ear, 'You see that in France every thing finishes with the theatre.'"

The following remarks of M. Dumont are equally just and acute: "The most predominant trait in the French character is self-conceit. Every member in the assembly considered himself capable of every thing; never were seen so many members, each imagining that each was himself a legislator, and placed there to repair all the faults of the past, to remedy all the errors of the human understanding, and to secure the happiness of all future ages. Doubt had no entrance into their minds; and infallibility presided over all their contradictory decrees."

In further illustration of the volume, we cannot do better than introduce here our author's parallel between the French and the English.

" The greater part of the produce of the tribune was manufactured without; no Frenchman had the least scruple in delivering a discourse he had not composed, and even piqued himself on this species of public imposture: but few Englishmen could be found, and indeed not one among those of any reputation, who would thus submit to be but an actor on a theatre. A Frenchman brings forward any motion that any one has suggested, never troubling his head about the consequences; an Englishman would deem his character at stake if he had not sufficiently studied his subject, to enable him to reply to its objections, and to sustain the opinion which he had once advanced. A Frenchman affirms lightly-nothing costs him so little as an assertion; an Englishman is in no hurry to believe, and before bringing a fact forward in public, he will go back to its source, be assured of its authority, and will render himself master of all the circumstances. A Frenchman believes that a little wit will enable him to make head against every difficulty; he is ready to undertake works the most foreign to his studies; for example, Mirabeau had himself appointed recorder of the committee on mines, without having the slightest scientific knowledge: an Englishman would have dreaded exposing himself to ineffaceable ridicule in thus adventuring on a department of which he knew nothing; and he is often more inclined to refuse undertakings for which he is qualified, than to attempt any thing beyond him. A Frenchman thinks a ready wit supplies every thing; the Englishman is convinced that every thing requires practice and science. It was a French gentle-man who was asked if he could play on the harpsichord, and who answered, 'I cannot tell_I never tried; but I'll see.' This trait is very abourd; but exalt the idea, and instead of harpsichord say government, instead of music say legislation, and instead of one French gentleman you may find twelve hundred."

"The more we know of the history of that eventful period, the greater do we perceive was the loss of Mirabeau to France. He was in truth the man of his time; his very faults suited the circumstances in which he was placed. A man of delicate feelings, or of high morality, would have turned aside in immediate disgust. Nay, his very vanity, exorbitant as it undoubtedly was, became an invaluable quality; for only the charm which egotism throws round its own smallest actions could have led him on. or carried him through much that he must necessarily have undertaken. His acute perception of character was unerring. Can any

La Fayette? 'He wishes to be a Sir Charles Grandison Cromwell,' said Mirabeau, who considered him as an ambitious impotent, desirous of enjoying supreme power, without daring, and without the means to seize it. The heat that can be said of La Fayette is, that he has always been placed in picturesque attitudes among striking scenes; but he has never been master of circumstance. He might be likened to a rider who keeps his feet in the stirrups, but has no control over the bridle. Neckar is another whom he judged at his true worth; he was, as Mirabeau justly observed, 'a pigmy in the revolution.' On another occasion he remarked, 'Mallebranche sees all in God; M. Neckar sees all in Neckar.' After his first interview, he expressed his astonishment that the minister should have ever been suspected of subtlety or depth. Napoleon's estimate was precisely the same. Some one was observing to him that the weight of circumstances was too much for Neckar: 'That is the excuse of a fool; -a man should measure his strength before he undertakes a burden. We have alluded to Mirabeau's vanity as a useful quality for his time: we proceed to give one or two instances. He quite piqued himself on his being so plain. 'You do not know,' on in being so plant.

was a common ejaculation of his, 'the power of my ugliness.' He really considered it beautiful. His toilette was very studied: he wore an immense quantity of bair, which was always skilfully arranged; and would often say, When I shake my terrible wild boar's head, there is not one who dares interrupt me. He had a singular facility in appropriating the ideas of others, and acted upon Molière's principle with respect to any thing good: 'C'est mon bien, je le prends partout où je le trouve'it is my property: I take it wherever I find it. Even in the midst of speaking, he could run his eye over any note laid before him, and embody its contents in his speech. A deputy compared him to one of those machines into which the bits of rags are thrown at one side, and come out on the other a finished aheet of paper. There is a charac-teristic anecdote told of his brother. When the Vicomte Mirabeau was reproached with the excess of inebriety in which he indulged, 'Alas!' he exclaimed, 'it is the only vice which my brother has left me.'"

We shall return to this work, as it has, since writing the above, appeared in an English translation; and now conclude with a remark of Mirabeau, equally profound and true: " The praise given to mediocrity is a device of envy to insult genius."

Hogg's Altrine Tales and Autobiography. [Second Notice.]

As we believe some requisite alterations have prevented the appearance of this volume at the appointed time, so that our exclusive review of it in last Gasette may be continued this week while it is still a sealed book to the generality, we shall resume the author's memoir for the sake of a few farther remarks and extracts. In our last we spoke in terms of praise of the dedication to Lady Anne Scott : it opens thus :

"To her, whose bounty oft hath shed
Joy round the peasant's lowly bed,
When trouble press'd and friends were few,
And God and angels only knew:
To her, who loves the board to cheer, And hearth of simple cottager;
Who loves the tale of rural hind,
And wayward visions of his mind,
I dedicate, with high delight, The themes of many a winter night.

What other name on Varrow vale what other name on Yarrow vale
Can Shepherd choose to grace his tale?
There other living name is none
Heard with one feeling—one alone."

In our last we quoted Mr. Hogg's estimate of the Queen's Wake : we now give that of the Pilgrims of the Sun.

Among other wild and visionary subjects. the Pilgrims of the Sun would have done very well, and might at least have been judged one of the best: but, as an entire poem by itself, it bears an impress of extravagance, and affords no relief from the story of a visionary existence. After my literary blunders and miscarriages are a few months old, I can view them with as much indifference, and laugh at them as heartily, as any of my neighbours. I have often felt, that Mary Lee reminded me of a beautiful country girl turned into an assembly in dishabille, 'half-naked, for a warld's wonder,' whose beauties might be gazed at, but in dishabille, 'half-naked, for a warld's wonder,' whose beauties might be gazed at, but in the system which has lately got into great vogue with a considerable portion of the periodical press, that of inventing jokes, &c., or were sure to be derided.'

Of two volumes of tragedies which Hogg published, the issue is thus related:

"The small degree of interest that these dramas excited in the world finished my dramatic and poetical career. I had adopted a resolution of writing a drama every year as long as I lived, heping to make myself perfect by degrees, as a man does in his calling, by serving an apprenticeship; but the failure of those to excite notice fully convinced me, that either this was not the age to appreciate the qualities of dramatic composition, or that I was not possessed of the talents fitting me for such an undertaking: and so I gave up the ambitious design. Before this period, all the poems that I had published had been begun and written by chance and at random, without any previous design. I had at that time commenced an epic poem on a regular plan, and I finished two books of it, pluming myself that it was to prove my greatest work. But, seeing that the poetical part of these dramas excited no interest in the public, I felt conscious that no poetry I should ever be able to write would do so; or, if it did, the success would hinge upon some casualty, on which it did not behove me to rely. So, from that day to this, save now and then an idle song to beguile a leisure hour, I determined to write no more poetry. Several years subsequent to this, at the earnest entreaties of some literary friends, I once more set to work and finished this poem, which I entitled Queen Hynde, in a time shorter than any person would believe. I submitted it first to Sir Walter Scott, who gave it his approba-tion in the most unqualified terms; so the work was put to press with every prospect of high success. I sold an edition of one thousand copies to Longman and Co.; but Mr. Blackwood, who had been chiefly instrumental in urging me to finish the poem, claimed the half of the edition, and got it. But it proved to him like the Highlandman's character - ' he would have peen as petter without it.' That malicious deevil, Jerdan, first took it up and damned it with faint praise. The rest of the reviewers followed in his wake: so that, in short, the work sold heavily and proved rather a failure. It is said the multitude never are wrong, but, in this instance, I must take Mr. Wordsworth's plan, and maintain that they evere wrong. I need not say how grievously I was disappointed -as what unsuccessful candidate for immortal fame is not? But it would have been well could I have refrained from exposing myself. I was invited to a public dinner given by a great number of young friends, a sort of worshippers of mine (for I have a num-late me on my new work, and drink success to it. The president made a speech, in which, after some laudatory remarks on the new poem. he boldly and broadly asserted that it was much inferior to their beloved Queen's Wake. I was indignantly wroth, denying his assertion both in principle and position, and maintained not only that it was infinitely superior to the Queen's Wake, but I offered to bet the price of the edition with any or all of them that it was the best epic poem that ever had been produced in Scotland. None of them would take the bet, but as few backed me. I will, however, stake my credit on Queen Hunde. It was unfortunate that the plot should have been laid in an age so early that we have no interest in it."

satires or slanders, and assigning them to parties utterly unconscious of their existence, and even going the length of publishing pretended letters from such persons, Mr. Hogg says,

" Mr. Wilson once drove me also into an ungovernable rage, by turning a long and elaborate poem of mine, on the Field of Waterloo, into ridicule; on learning which I sent him a letter. which I thought was a tickler. There was scarcely an abusive epithet in our language that I did not call him by. My letter, however, had not the designed effect: the opprobrious names proved only a source of amusement to Wilson, and he sent me a letter of explanation and apology, which knit my heart closer to him than ever. My friends in general have been of opinion that he has amused himself and the public too often at my expense; but, except in one instance, which terminated very ill for me, and in which I had no more concern than the man in the moon, I never discerned any evil design on his part, and thought it all excellent sport. At the same time, I must acknowledge, that it was using too much freedom with any author, to print his name in full to poems, letters, and essays, which he himself never saw. I do not say that he has done this : but either he or some one else has done it many a time.

On the same point, and speaking of Mr. Blackwood, he afterwards adds,

" For my part, after twenty years of feelings hardly suppressed, he has driven me beyond the bounds of human patience. That magazine of his, which owes its rise principally to myself, has often put words and sentiments into my mouth of which I have been greatly ashamed and which have given much pain to my family and relations, and many of those after a solemn written promise that such freedoms should never be repeated. I have been often urged to restrain and humble him by legal measures as an incorrigible offender deserves. I know I have it in my power, and if he dares me to the task, I want but a hair to make a tether of."

"In 1822 (says our biographer), perceiving that I was likely to run short of money, I began and finished in the course of a few months, the Three Perils of Man, viz. War, Women, and Witchcraft! Lord preserve us! what a medley I made of it! for I never in my life rewrote a page of prose; and being impatient to get hold of some of Messrs. Longman and Co.'s money, or their bills, which were the same, I dashed on, and mixed up with what might have been made one of the best historical tales our country ever produced, such a mass of diablerie as retarded the main story, and rendered the whole perfectly ludicrous. But the worst thing of all effected by this novel, or at least by the three sat down on a piece of beautiful greenencing the ingenious Allan Cunningham to follow up the idea, and improve the subject: whereas, he made matters rather worse. I received one hundred and fifty pounds for the edition of one thousand copies as soon as it was put to press. The house never manifested the least suspicion of me, more than if I had been one of their own firm. The next year I produced the Three Perils of Women, also in three volumes, and received the same price likewise. in bills, as soon as it was put to press. There is a good deal of pathos and absurdity in both the tales of this latter work : but I was all this while writing as if in desperation, and see matters now in a different light. The next year, 1824, I published the Confessions of a Sinner; but it being a story replete with horrors, after I had written it I durst not venture to put my name to it: so it was published anonymously, and of course did not sell very well-so at least I believe, for I do not remember ever receiving any thing for it, and I am sure if there had been a reversion I should have had a moiety."

It is upon this transaction, however, that the Shepherd evinced his spleen in the unsupported assage upon which we commented in our last Number, and which, like some we have cited. may be considered more free than just. But when authors are disappointed, it is only fair to permit them to vent their querulousness and anger upon the publishers and booksellers.

Of the time of Sir Walter Scott's early acquaintance, we select a portion of Hogg's amusing account.

"I remember his riding upon a terribly high-spirited horse, which had the perilous fancy of leaping every drain, rivulet, and ditch, that came in our way; the consequence was, that he was everlastingly bogging himself, while sometimes the rider kept his seat despite of the animal's plunging; and, at other times, he was obliged to extricate himself the best way he could. In coming through a place called the Milsey Bog, I said to him, 'Mr. Scott, that's the maddest deil of a beast I ever saw. Can ye no gar him tak a wee mair time? He's just out o' ae lair intil another wi' ve. 'Ay,' said he, 'he and I have been very often, these two days past, like the Pechs; we could stand straight up and tie our shoe-latchets.' did not understand the joke, nor do I yet; but I think these were his words. We visited the old castles of Thirlestane and Tushilaw, and dined and spent the afternoon, and the night, with Mr. Brydon of Crosslee. Sir Walter was all the while in the highest good humour, and seemed to enjoy the range of mountain solitude, which we traversed, exceedingly. Indeed, I never saw him otherwise in the fields. On the rugged mountains, or even toiling in Tweed to the waist, I have seen his glee not only sur-pass his own, but that of all other men. His memory, or, perhaps, I should say, his recol-lection, surpasses that of all men whom I ever knew. I saw a pleasant instance of it recorded lately regarding Campbell's Pleasures of Hope; but I think I can relate a more extraordinary one. He and Skene of Rubislaw and I were out one night, about midnight, leistering kippers in Tweed, and, on going to kindle a light at the Elibank March, we found, to our inexpressible grief, that our coal had gone out. To think of giving up our sport was out of the question; so we had no other shift save to send Rob Fletcher home, all the way through the darkness, the distance of two miles, for another fiery peat. While Fletcher was absent, we ber of those in Scotland). It was to congratu. novel part of an authentic tale, was its influ-sward, on the brink of the river, and Scots desired me to sing him my ballad of ' Gilmanscleuch.' Now, be it remembered, that this ballad had never been either printed or penned. I had merely composed it by rote; and, on finishing it, three years before, I had sung it once over to Sir Walter. I began it at his request; but at the eighth or ninth verse I stuck in it, and could not get on with another line; on which he began it a second time, and recited it every word from beginning to end. It being a very long ballad, consisting of eighty-eight stanzas, I testified my astonishment. He said that he had lately been out on a pleasure party on the Forth, and that to amuse the company he had recited both that ballad and one of Southey's ('The Abbot of Aberbrothock'), both of which ballads he had only heard once from their respective authors; and he believed he had recited them both without misplacing a word. Rob Fletcher came at last, and old Laidlaw, of the Peel, with him; and into the foaming river we plunged, in our frail bark, with a fine blazing light. In a few minutes we came into Gliddy's Weal, the deepest pool in Tweed, when we perceived that our boat gave evident symptoms of sinking. When Scott saw the terror that Peel was in, he laughed till the tears blinded his eyes. Always the more mischief the better sport for him! 'For God's sake push her to the side!' roared Peel. 'Oh, she goes fine!' said Scott; 'an' gin the boat were bottomless, an' seven miles to row;' and, by the time he had well got out the words, down she went to the bottom, plunging us all into Tweed over head and ears. It was no sport to me at all; but that was a glorious night for Sir Walter - and the next day was no worse. I remember leaving Altrive Lake once with him, accompanied by my dear friend William Laidlaw, and Sir Adam Fergusson, to visit the tremendous solitudes of The Grev Mare's Tail and Loch Skene. I conducted them through that wild region by a path, which, if not rode by Clavers, was, I dare say, never rode by another gentleman. Sir Adam rode inadvertently into a gulf, and got a sad fright; but Sir Walter, in the very worst paths, never dismounted, save at Loch Skene, to take some dinner. We went to Moffat that night, where we met with some of his family; and such a day and night of glee I never witnessed. Our very perils were matter to him of infinite merriment; and then there was a short-tempered boot-boy at the inn, who wanted to pick a quarrel with him, at which he laughed till the water ran over his cheeks.'

How melancholy is the contrast now! Yet, at a period of life when many men are hardly touched by age, our immortal countryman is scathed and worn out. His bodily health improved, indeed, by his foreign travel, but the glorious mind deprived, we fear for ever, of its might and elastic power. The latest accounts of the great minstrel have been received through his son, Major Scott, who arrived in London a week ago.

Of Hogg's intercourse with Wordsworth we take a specimen :

"I dined with him, and called on him several times afterwards, and certainly never met with any thing but the most genuine kindness; therefore people have wondered why I should have indulged in caricaturing his style in the Poetic Mirror. I have often regretted that myself; but it was merely a piece of ill-nature was no joke; and the plain, simple truth of the | out its pages, we are inclined to expect a very matter was thus: - It chanced one night, when I was there, that there was a resplendent arch across the zenith, from the one horizon to the other, of something like the aurora borealis, but much brighter. It was a scene that is well remembered, for it struck the country with admiration, as such a phenomenon had never hefore been witnessed in such perfection; and, as far as I could learn, it had been more brilliant over the mountains and pure waters of Westmoreland than any where else. Well, when word came into the room of the splendid meteor, we all went out to view it; and, on the beautiful platform at Mount Ryedale we were all walking in twos and threes, arm-in-arm, talking of the phenomenon, and admiring it. Now, be it remembered, that Wordsworth, Professor Wilson, Lloyd, De Quincey, and myself, were present, besides several other literary gentlemen, whose names I am not certain that I remember aright. Miss Wordsworth's arm was in mine, and she was expressing some fears that the splendid stranger might prove ominous, when I, by ill luck, blundered out the following remark, thinking that I was saying a good thing:—' Hout, me'm! it is neither mair nor honour of the meeting of the poets.' 'That's not amiss. — Eh? Eh?—that's very good,' said the Professor, laughing. But Wordsworth, who had De Quincey's arm, gave a grunt, and turned on his heel, and leading the little opiumchewer aside, he addressed him in these disdainful and venomous words: - 'Poets! Poets! -What does the fellow mean? - Where are they?' Who could forgive this? For my part, I never can, and never will! I admire Wordsworth; as who does not, whatever they may pretend? but for that short sentence I have a lingering ill-will at him which I cannot get rid of. It is surely presumption in any man to circumscribe all human excellence within the narrow sphere of his own capacity. The 'Where are they?' was too bad! I have always some hopes that De Quincey was leeing, for I did not myself hear Wordsworth utter the words.'

Of Allan Cunningham, Hogg speaks very kindly, and also of Galt: but Galt has just appeared to our own eyes in the shape of Stanley Buxton, in three vols., and we must lay down our present task to pay our devoirs to him.

Aldine Poets. No. XX. Poems of Shakespeare. London, 1832. Pickering. This collection of Shakespeare's minor poems is preceded by a life written by the Rev. Alexander Dyce, in which not one single fact is omitted that could be by any means gathered together from old records and new commentators. This volume is a valuable addition to Mr. Pickering's beautiful series.

Family Classical Library. No. XXVIII.

Valpy.

The sixth volume of Plutarch, -- containing eight interesting lives and several parallels.

The Cabinet Cyclopædia. By Dr. Lardner, &c. No. XXIX. History of Spain and Portugal. Vol. I. London, Longman and Co.; J. Taylor.

A GENERAL history of the Spanish and Portuat an affront which I conceived had been put on me. It was the triumphal arch scene. This anecdote has been told and told again, but never truly; and was likewise brought forward us is the first of four, — and judging by the in the Noctes Ambrosiana, as a joke; but it able work in the whole, of which it forms a part. The events related in the early annals of Spain are possessed of much interest, and though here concisely treated, (with, also, the partial reservation of their most romantic peried, the Arabian and Moorish dominion, for Mr. Southey,) we have seldom met with a narrative which fixes attention more steadily, and bears the reader's mind along more pleasantly.

Lord Byron's Works; the New Edition. Vol. IV. Murray.

THIS volume still continues Moore's notices of the Life of Byron, and consequently requires no farther notice from us than that the frontispiece is a picturesque foreground and superb background view of the Wengen Alps, and the vignette an interesting view of the Colosseum.

> The Landers' African Travels. [Concluding Notice.]

THESE three delightful volumes, with portraits of the two brothers, and an excellent map, are now so widely circulated among the public, that we will not risk the repetition of details which must already be familiar to most readers. Suffice it to say, merely for the sake of closing a review in which we have anticipated so much of this interesting narrative, that our countrymen experienced great difficulty in getting away from Obie, the king of Eboe, but at last effected their escape through the intervention of Boy, one of the Brass kings. In his country also they met with many privations, but were at length put on board an English trading vessel, the surly master of which refused to fulfil their obligations to the Africans, and forced his passage down the dangerous navigation which impeded his course, in defiance of their threats. While we regret this act, it is satisfactory to learn that government have since taken means to place the British character in its true light by despatching their promised recompense to the Brass rulers. On approaching the coast and sea, the chief novelty in the Travels ceases; but from beginning to end there is not a passage in this work which will not be perused with deep attention; and at the close, after all the information it has afforded, every Briton will feel proud of his country, as a partaker of the triumph achieved by the devoted courage and indefatigable exertions of Richard and John Lander, who have thus immortalised their humble names.*

Library of Entertaining Knowledge. Pp. 396. London, C. Knight.

This volume treats of vegetable substances used for the food of man; and, as far as the subject goes, is itself a Library of Entertaining Knowledge.

Le Livre des Cent et Un. Tome IV.

Paris, 1832. L'Advocat.
WE have little more to do than repeat our opinion of this volume's predecessors, that it contains some light and pleasant reading, without any papers of great talent. The following receipt for theatrical regeneration is too promising to be omitted:—" Take a good piece [but, as Mrs. Glasse justly observes, first catch your hare]; let it be well played in a commodious house; let the spectacle begin at eight thought it possible that these currents might, arctic expedition, by Dr. Richardson, were preo'clock for the convenience of those whom busio'clock for the convenience of those whom business, &c. prevents from dining earlier than the magnetic lines of equal variation; and he elephant was also announced as having been six. Except the pit and gallery, let each place even referred the Aurora Borealis and Austrabe the same price. Let the performances end lis to electricity accumulated towards the poles, by eleven, to give the audience a desire to return, and leaving to the actors the possibility of enjoying the next day: to conclude, let there be a theatre in accordance with our manners, and see if it does not succeed."

The Jesuit. 3 vols. Saunders and Ottley. THE first volume contains some gratuitous horrors; but the story improves as it proceeds. The sheets in our possession break off (in Vol. III.) among some spirited Spanish scenes; but it is impossible to pronounce definitely on a work whose dénouement is still a mystery to us.

Standard Novels, No. XIV. Colburn and Bentley.

COOPER's tale of the Pioneers, with a new introduction and notes by the author, forms the appropriate continuation of this very popular series: it is also recommended by two clever engravings. As we may have a few words to say on the new matter, we shall, now, only add that we think this volume one of the best of the set.

Woman's Love; a Novel. By Mrs. Leman Grimstone. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Saunders and Otley.

Woman's Love, though in three volumes, which would seem to be satisfactory to any man, is a novel which we cannot distinguish by our praise from the inferior class of similar publications. The author shows much of the amiable in disposition; and the chief novelty of her production is, that it was written in Van Diemen's Land.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MR. FARADAY on his recent experimental researches in electricity. Having on former occasions shewn how he, as it were, reconverted magnetism into electricity, and under what laws the change was effected, he proceeded to point out the consequences dependent upon the fact of the earth's being a magnet. By bringing wires, &c. into the same relation to the earth's magnetic curves as was formerly done with the curves of ordinary magnets, electric currents were now produced. By revolving a copper-plate parallel to the horizon, electricity could be drawn from it, and made to deflect the needle. By merely moving a copper wire, three or four feet long, to and fro in the air, it was made to evolve and produce a current of electricity, and deflect the magnetic needle powerfully. Mr. Faraday considered the earth itself as liable to magneto-electric induction, in consequence of its diurnal rotation. To illustrate the effects so produced, he spun a small cylinder magnet both in mercury and in air: in both cases he drew currents of electricity from the equatorial and polar parts, and made these currents abundantly sensible to the audience by their effects upon distant galvanometer needles. Mr. Faraday then referred to the currents of electricity which must naturally exist in consequence of the flow of rivers, the motion of the sea waters to and fro, as in the British channel, and elsewhere on a far larger scale under the trade-winds: in these cases conducting matter moves so as to cut the magnetic curves, while other conducting matter, as the earth itself, is relatively at rest. He even referred the Aurora Borealis and Austraby the diurnal motion of the earth causing its mass to act in obedience to the law of magnetoelectric induction, noticed by us in former reports of these interesting investigations.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY.

MR. LAMBERT in the chair. - A communication, entitled a description of the organ of voice in a new species of wild swan, by William Yar-rell, Esq. was read. This swan is common in the fur countries of North America; and it is this species which affords the greater portion of the skins imported by the Hudson's Bay Company. It is known by the name of the " trumpeter;" and has been described by Dr. Richardson and Mr. Swainson in the second part of the North American Fauna, under the name of Cygnus buccinator. The direction and convolutions of the trachea, and the form of the bronchiæ, appear to afford the best discriminative characters to distinguish the species of this genus. At the same meeting there was also read an account of a new species of parakeet, native of New Holland; together with the conclusion of Mr. Don's catalogue of compositæ. At the meeting on Tuesday, a description of a new species of the genus Pinus, by Mr. David Douglas, was read. This re-markable fir is a native of the Cordillera of the Andes, in New Albion, on the north-west coast of America. It grows to the height of from 40 to 140 feet, and is remarkable for the great size of its cones, which are eighteen inches in circumference, having the scales furnished with a stout curved point. We believe the Horticultural Society is now in possession of young plants; so that we may confidently expect this remarkable species will become one of the ornaments of the British sylva, as it will doubtless prove perfectly hardy. Mr. Douglas's account s dated from the Missions of St. John, Upper California, Feb. 4, 1831.

A large plant, in full flower, of the Aloë spicata, the species which yields the Cape aloes of commerce, was sent for exhibition from the garden of the Apothecaries' Company, at Chel-

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

MARCH 28 .- The President, Mr. Impey Murchison, in the chair. The Earl of Munster, Captain Robe, Sergeant Taddy, Dr. Daun, and several other fellows, were elected.

A paper was first read on the geology of Pulo Pinang and the neighbouring islands, by Dr. Ward, of the Madras Medical Establishment, and communicated by the president; and afterwards a memoir, by M. Louis Albert Necker, foreign member of the Geological Society, in which the author endeavours to bring under general geological laws the position of metalliferous veins, in respect to the ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

LORD STANLEY in the chair. - From the usual report, it appeared that during the last month upwards of 4,000 persons had visited the museum and gardens; - monthly balance in favour of the Society 509l. 1s. 7d. It has been decided, much to the satisfaction of the fellows in general, that tickets for admission to the gardens on Sunday shall not be sold. A number of stuffed birds, collected in the second manship, which that antiquary conceives to presented by Sir Edward Barnes. The Jacchus monkey last week brought forth two young ones. It is a curious fact, that these animals. as well as some others, destroy their young when there is (as happened in the present case) an absence of the natural aliment. Whether this expedient was had recourse to by the Society's monkey is uncertain; both the young, however, were found dead. At this meeting seventeen individuals were elected into the Society. An exceedingly long, particular, and satisfactory report upon the affairs and present state of the farm, was also read, — to the substance of which we may hereafter refer.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

DAVIES GILBERT, Esq. in the chair. A report, drawn up by Dr. Bostock and Mr. Christie, on Mr. Faraday's electro-magnetic researches, so frequently noticed in our columns, was read; as was also another portion of Dr. Davy's communication on the torpedo. This being one of the ballot meetings, five persons were elected into the Society.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

MARCH 7th .- Lord Dover in the chair. The reading of Dr. J. Jamieson's memoir on the antiquity of the earliest extant Scottish coins. was concluded.

The large and expensive architectural undertakings of David I. could hardly have been carried on without a considerable circulation of money. It is, notwithstanding, acknowledged, that coins of that period are extremely rare; but this circumstance may be consistently accounted for, not only by making due allowance for the ordinary causes of destruction, such as the remoteness of the era, &c., but also by the fact, that the Scottish coinage, generally, was called in and renewed by William the Lion, David's grandson, in 1195. The writer has in his possession four or five specimens which, for reasons given by him in detail, he assigns to the former sovereign. He likewise possesses a silver penny, which he considers to belong to the reign of Malcolm IV. (1153-1165); although Pinkerton, who admits that coins are found of the age of David I. and Alexander I., doubts whether any issued by Malcolm are to be met with.

Dr. J. then proceeds to give a descriptive and historical account of the numerous pieces now existing of the reign of William IV.; in doing which, he takes occasion to correct several errors into which the authors before mentioned, who have written on this subject, have fallen, and especially Snelling. The coins of William, and of his contemporary Henry II. of England, were, he thinks, equally current in both kingdoms; an opinion which he founds on the discovery of large collections of the rock formations of which the crust of the earth coins of these two sovereigns mixed together in a common mass; in particular, in 1780, at Dyke, near Inverness; and again, two or three years ago, in Northumberland. The places of mintage of those of William, were Edinburgh, Perth, Berwick, and Roxburgh; the names of which towns are varied upon the coins to an extent very fanciful and extraordinary.

An opinion of Snelling's—that many of the coins viewed as those of Alexander II. ought to be referred to the reign of his son Alexander III .- founded on their improved work-have been the result of an imitation of the improved coinage of Edward I., is refuted by Dr. J. with indignant nationality. "Well pleased," he observes, "as the ambitious and usurping Edward might have been, had our Scottish kings, out of compliment to the taste of a neighbouring potentate, banished the mimic sceptre from his coinage; it would seem that our ancestors were as little disposed to gratify him with this token of servile imitation, as they afterwards were to resign the real sceptre into his rapacious hand."

The venerable writer's communication was replete with numerous particulars of numismatic learning, calculated to throw light upon history, into which the limited space we can afford for these reports forbids our following March 21st .- Public fast. No meeting.

PINE ARTS.

SUFFOLK STREET GALLERY.

[Third Notice.]

No. 293. The Crucifision. A. G. Vickers. It is rather the effect of that hour of darkness which accompanied the awful event than the event itself, that the artist has here had in view. His production would not have discredited the pencil of Rembrandt.

No. 288. A Bleaching-Green in the West Highlands. A. Fraser. A cheerful and animated scene, with a burst of day-light that comes on the eye most refreshingly. The piccomes on the eye most refreshingly. The picture is painted in a style somewhat different from Mr. Fraser's usual practice; but it is in excellent accordance with his subject.

No. 301. The Reform Question. T. Clater. Will there ever be an end to this quartie vesata? We encounter it at our own fire-sides. we encounter it in the houses of our friends, we encounter it in the public walks, and here it is again in an exhibition of pictures! Would to heaven that Lord Grey could bring it to as tranquil and successful a termination as Mr. Clater has done! though even in the work of the latter the opposition of the cat and dog betrays a touch of anti-reform.

No. 272. John Taylor, Esq. J. Lonsdale. It may justly be said that few persons have given their countenance to art more than this gentleman; for there has been scarcely an exgentleman; for there has been scarcely an exhibition of late years in which his portrait has not appeared. The present is one of the most striking in point of resemblance.

No. 474. Temptation. T. Woodward. Surely there is no such lack of game in the pictorial fields, that so able an artist as Mr. Woodward should throw away his shot upon a painful subject like this. To place meat within the reach of a starving dog, that a concealed and cunning little urohin may have the pleasure of giving him the strap, may be " holding the mirror up to nature," but it is to ill-nature. In other respects, the picture is exquisitely treated.

No. 201. The Violin of Cremona, from Hoffman's "Fantastical Tales." H. Poterlet .-Again we have to express our surprise at a work of art with a name entirely new to us, and of merit sufficient to rank it among the best of its class. Had the picture met our view without its title and the reference to the writer from whom the subject is taken, we should have deemed it another emaciated Paganini, endeavouring by his ecstatic music to " create a soul under the ribs of death."

No. 190. The Sweets of Stolen Fruit. R.

be in perfect carnest.

No. 191. The Monastery; Evening—Spain.
J. M. Leigh.—The title of this picture might furnish the head of a chapter full of romance and mystery. The character, colouring, and execution, prove that Mr. Leigh has been studying very closely, and very successfully, some of the finest works of the old masters.

No. 238. Autumn. J. Inskipp. — One of r. Inskipp's best productions. The season, Mr. Inskipp's best productions. and the rustic figures introduced, suit the deep and mellow tones of his palette.

No. 236. Fruit Piece. G. Lance. fine work Mr. Lance has attained the climax of excellence in his branch of the art. It is such a fruit piece as Michael Angelo would have designed; and in colouring, effect, and execution, it rivals any work of the Venetian school.

[To be continued.]

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Scenery of the Highlands and Islands of Scot-land. Lithographed by S. Leith, from Drawings In outline by Lieut.-Col. W. Murray. Part II. Morison, Perth.

"BEN VENUE and the Trosachs, Perthshire, "Basaltic Scenery near Ru-na-braddan, Skye, "Basaltic Scenery near Stainsal, Skye," "The Red Head, Angus," are the four principal ornaments of the present Number, in addition to a medallion of " Prince Charles Edward, and a vignette of "The Ruins of the Abbey of Aberbrothock." Of these, the representations of the basaltic scenery of the Isle of Skye are the most striking, on account of its novelty, no less than of its grandeur. "So few are there," observes Colonel Murray, "among the numbers who annually visit the Giant's Causeway and Staffa who have ever heard of the basaltic ramparts of Skye, it will scarcely be credited, that, while language has been exhausted in extolling the sublimity of the Causeway, and the Cave of Fingal, there exist, on the coasts of this island, scenes exceeding both of these places, not only in the magnitude of the objects, but in that regularity of arrangement in which the peculiar interest of basaltic combinations consists."-The lithographic execution of this work continues to be of the same beautiful character which we noticed in our remarks upon the appearance of the first Part.

Viscountess Stormont .- The 88th portrait in the interesting series of La Belle Assemblée; and a very graceful and lovely specimen. The countenance is beautiful; the fore-shortening of the right arm faulty, and out of drawing.

Twenty-four Plates, illustrative of Hindu and European Manners in Bengal. On stone by A. Colin, from Sketches by Mrs. Belnos. London, Smith and Elder; Paris, Colin.

WITH something of a French air, these twentyfour pictures represent as many oriental scenes in the most accurate manner. Nothing can surpass them for fidelity; and the series, even without the brief notices of the accompanying text, would convey a singularly correct, as well as interesting history of Indian customs and appearances. Dancing girls, dying Hindus on the Ganges, Nautches, peculiar trades and castes, festivals, religious ceremonies, &c. &c. are all executed with equal skill and truth.

and mischief of juvenile scamps as anatomists great pleasure during any of those half hours are for theirs to resurrection-men. This little which tedium might otherwise claim. And, picture is designed and painted with Mr. Far-rier's usual skill; and the expression in both as well as novelty and beauty of the materials parties shows the strapping that is going on to furnished by the countries of the eastern world. for the exercise of the skill and talent of the artist, it is a matter of some surprise that we are not more frequently called upon to notice works illustrative of their natural and artificial productions, and the personal appearance and habits of the nations which inhabit them. The few works which have been published with this view, have of late years been produced in a very superior style of art; but in too many instances truth and accuracy of delineation have been sacrificed to beauty of outline and richness of effect. Their subjects, likewise, have principally consisted of the landscape scenery, architecture, and antiquities of the East; the work before us, therefore, comes very opportunely to supply a great deficiency in the class of productions to which it belongs. Mrs. Belnos (who is, we believe, herself a native of Bengal), has accomplished her task in a manner which reflects no mean credit on her skill as an artist; and it is but fair to add, that her efforts have been ably seconded by the artist, Mr. A. Colin, employed to transfer her sketches to the stone; and the colouring of the plates displays the same attention to minute accuracy.

> Views in the East. From original Sketches, by Captain Robert Elliot, R.N. Parts XIV. and XV. Fisher and Son.

THE plates which illustrate these two Parts of Captain Elliot's publication, and which are in no way inferior to their predecessors in beauty, are, "Thubare, a small harbour on the Arabian coast, upper part of the Red Sea;" "An old Fort at Muttra;" "Sarnat, a Boodh Monument near Benares;" " Bejapore;" " Cootub Minar, Delhi;" and "View on a River near Canton." In one of his descriptions, Capt. Elliot takes occasion to remark, "How little dependence historians and topographers are disposed to place on any accounts respecting the continent of India, previous to the Mahommedan conquest, at least as far as Hindoo information is concerned;" and adds, "this must continue to be a subject of regret to all who feel a curiosity respecting this great country, as no doubt the account of the Hindoos in earliest times would form as interesting a portion of this world's history, as any that former ages have handed down to us in an authentic and credible shape."

Don Quirote and Sancho Pansa. By Wither. ington; engraved by Quilley. Bonington's Fishing-Boats. Same Engraver.

Moon, Boys, and Co.

Two charming additions to our store of spirited engravings. Witherington's version of the poor Don, thrown across Dapple, after his maltreatment by the carriers, in the possession of Mr. Vernon, was always a favourite with us; and we are happy to see it so faithfully transferred to another medium, in which it can be enjoyed by so many. Bonington's sea-scene is also most true to the character and spirit of the original. In both Mr. Quilley has evinced great talent, and both are eminently calculated to become popular.

The Fête of St. Nicholas. By Jan Steen. Joh. de Mare sculp. Moon and Co. THIS artist is, we hear, sent to England for improvement by the King of Holland. He has Farrier.—Artists of familiar life are almost as Some of the female forms are very beautiful; presented us with a specimen in one of Jan much indebted for their subjects to the pranks and the whole a collection to be turned over with Steen's most celebrated works, and it is, as far as it goes, an able transcript. All the characters books to be brought and placed on the table are well preserved; and when M. de Mare has accomplished somewhat more of freedom, we feel assured he will be an honour to the Dutch

MEXICO.

WE have lying before us two specimens of twenty-eight of Capt. G. F. Lyon's Mexican drawings, illustrative of the scenery and people at and near the Mines of Bolaños and Real del Monte, which it is proposed to publish by subscription. Judging from the specimens, we have no doubt that these drawings, although without any pretensions as works of art, will be very curious and interesting. They will be accompanied by brief letter-press descriptions, extracted from Capt. Lyon's Tour in Mexico.

EXETER HALL EXHIBITION.

THIS collection is entirely confined to works illustrative of sacred history. Besides an admirable carving in ivory of the "Crucifixion," by Benevenuto Cellini, it contains a hundred and twenty-six pictures, many of which are exceedingly curious, and not a few highly valuable. Among the latter, our favourites are, "Christ bearing his Cross," by Morales; "The Holy Family," by Vander Eckhort and Rembrandt; "St. Peter delivered from Prison," by Steenwick; "The Holy Family, with an Angel offering Fruit to the Infant Saviour," by Frate Bartolomeo di St. Marco;" and "The Prodigal Son," by Calabrese. Altogether the collection is well deserving of a visit.

BIOGRAPHY.

DEATH OF GOETHE.

GOETHE is dead! These words will excite a feeling of regret, not only in Germany, but in all Europe, in all parts of which his name has been so long placed amongst the foremost on the list of the ornaments of literature, and his works, for the space of half a century, have engaged so large a share of public attention.

John Wolfgang von Goethe was born at Frankfort on the 28th of August, 1749, and died at Weimar on the 22d of March, 1832, aged eighty-two years and seven months. Although he had attained this great age, his vigorous constitution seemed still to promise some years of life, and his death excited at Weimar a feeling of surprise as well as sorrow. This is not the moment to enter into any details of his life, or review of his works; and we shall confine ourselves to a few particulars of his last moments. / About a week before his death he caught cold, which brought on a catarrh. A few days' care, however, seemed to have removed this complaint; but in the night of the 19th the pains in the breast returned, and a severe fit of fever followed. He would not make his family uneasy, and had nobody called: it was not till eight o'clock in the moraing that he sent for his physician, Dr. Vogel, who, by his skill and attention, had before frequently relieved him when seriously ill. The doctor found his patient in a shivering fit, and com-plaining of violent pain in the side. The The warmth of the body was, however, restored after a time, and the pains abated; but, during the night and in the following day, the pains returned; yet at times the patient was easy and composed. One of the accounts that have before him, intending to consult them. During the night, he had fallen into a slumber, and his mind appeared to be cheered by pleasing visions, chiefly happy scenes of his past life. In the morning, being in full possession of his faculties, he conversed cheerfully with his daughter-in-law, who has constantly attended him with the most unremitting and affectionate care, as well as with his grandchildren and friends. About ten o'clock he drank a glass of wine, and then continued to move his right hand in the air, as if writing or drawing (this he was in the habit of doing at other times), still, as it were, embodying the creations of his fancy; till, growing weaker and weaker, his hand dropped on his knee, as he sat in his easy chair, where it still moved as if in the act of writing, till the angel of death summoned him away.

Goethe has appointed Dr. Eckermann, of Hanover, to be the editor of the unpublished MSS, which he has left. This is a choice with which the public have reason to be satisfied, as Dr. E. has already rendered great service by the care he bestowed on the complete edition of our author's works. The admirers of Goethe will certainly be delighted to hear that among the finished MSS. there is an entire volume of his own life, which follows in order the third volume of Wahrheit und Dichtung. It contains the account of his first appearance at Weimar, and of the early years of his life and literary labours in that town, a period in which some of his finest works were composed. This volume nearly fills up the interval till his visit to Italy. We may also expect an entire volume of new poems, and the original MS. of Gots von Berkichingen, which is said to differ very materially from the published play. Besides these, among many other precious relics, there is the second part of Faust, complete in five acts. The last two acts were composed in inverse order—the fifth in the winter of 1830-31, immediately after the receipt of the dreadful news of the death of his only son, which had nearly proved fatal to him. The classic-romantic phantasmagoria, Helena (which has been long known), forms the third act, as a kind of intermesso. Among the collections of his letters, a whole volume will be published of his correspondence with his friend the musician Zelter, in Berlin, more interest-ing even than that with Schiller. The mortal remains of Goethe were deposited, on the 26th of March, with great pomp, in the grand ducal family vault at Weimar, near to those of Schiller. On the same day, the theatre, which had been closed out of respect to his memory, was opened with the representation of his Tasso.—From the German.

MUSIC.

SOCIETA ARMONICA.

THIS Society gave their third concert last Monday evening. The performance commenced with Beethoven's symphony in B flat, which, if such a composition can be said to possess a fault, has that of being much too long, as it occupied more than half an hour. Beethoven was one of those who never knew when to leave off; witness the length of his pastoral symphony. The instrumental pieces were executed in a manner which left nothing to be

Sagrini was very effective on the guitar; his execution is clear and brilliant; but he must infuse more expression into his style ere he can hope to rival L. Schultz.

With respect to the vocal parts, as usual Madame Stockhausen and Phillips were excellent: we could wish that Miss Wagstaff and Mr. Horncastle, though on the whole meritorious singers, would exhibit more animation and expression, in which two qualities they are at present lamentably deficient. In Rossini's quartetto, "Cielo il mio labbro," at the end of the first act, the accompaniments in the fortissimo part at the conclusion were much too loud; so much so as effectually to drown the voices of the singers. It is very annoying that instrumental performers will so generally spoil a good piece of vocal music by the noise of their a good piece of vocal music by the house accompaniments, apparently endeavouring to exhibit their own skill, and rivalling, instead not say much in favour of Niedermeyer's cavatina, which, sung for the first time by Horncastle, neither rose above nor fell below mediocrity. Madame Stockhausen's aria, "Ah Compar," with violin obligato by Mori, was decidedly the gem of the evening. The performance concluded with the overture to Guillaume Tell. On the whole, the concert was very effective; but we think the selection might, in some particulars, have been more judicious. Haydn's "With verdure clad," was repeated for the thousand and first time. There are many equally beautiful airs in that composer's works, and less known, which might have been substituted.

OBATORIOS.

HAVING gone at considerable length into criticism upon these performances hitherto, we need only say that the later ones have rather improved than degenerated.

DRAMA. KING'S THEATRE.

On Saturday, the lessee of the King's Theatre brought up his lee-way with a wet sail; and entitled himself, by the production of a new opera and ballet on the same night, to the warm approbation of the public. The effort was spirited, and the success complete. The opera of Olivo e Pasquale, by Donnizetti (founded on Les Deux Négocians de Lisbonne, we think), is not, indeed, distinguished by any of those very remarkable compositions which attract at once, and are speedily heard from every piano and barrel-organ in the town; but though not striking in any particular part, it is altogether peculiarly sweet and pleasing. Several of the concerted pieces are most agreeable; and we would mention a sestetto in the last act of great merit. But the lights of the scene are the duet between Curioni and Meric, and the solo finale by the latter; both are beautiful, and both were admirably executed. Indeed, the whole of the music intrusted to these performers had ample justice done to it; and Meric took another step in that gradual and certain rise which her qualities and talents have so justly been effecting in popular favour. Galli was also very efficient, which M. Arnaud was not, though exceedingly diverting. The nervous tremor of this poor actor was truly laughable, -not Mathews himself could personate a shy been published says, he felt himself so much better on the very morning of his death, that he expressed his pleasure at the approach of spring, expecting that the fine weather would benefit him; and he had even ordered several Chatterton's fantasia on the harp. Signor — not mathew minusent curing personate a sny head of surface and bashful man to such perfection. As the lover, it was quite impossible to bring him to the soratch; and in spite of Curioni's pushings, spring, expecting that the fine weather would benefit him; and he had even ordered several Chatterton's fantasia on the harp. Signor and fingers in pendant agitation, till he could | get fairly behind the bulkiest person upon the stage. It was inexpressibly droll. The other dramatis personæ had not much to do, which they did accordingly; and brought us through, gratified, and not fatigued, to the ballet. the ballet is a superb production—the finest thing of the kind we ever saw in London. Its title is the Magic Ring, and the story excellently adapted for this species of entertainment. A knight on the eve of espousal to a lovely lady, the preparations for whose wedding are picturesque and grand, is seduced, by the magic of the ring put on his finger by an enamoured fairy, into a passion for the latter, and rejects his bride. He is carried to the fairy's palace, where new enchantments are presented; and. finally, is rescued by the aid of a superior and good fairy, upon whose triumph the sun rises in all his glory, and the curtain drops on his union with his true love. Of these, and inter-mediate situations, Mr. Albert has made the best use, not only as regards the dances and groupings, but in sentiment and action, to tell the story. Sustained by splendid dresses and scenery, the Magic Ring is thus worthy of its name_it is a magic illusion from first to last. A gypsy, or Bohemian dance in the early part is most characteristic, and rich in costume. All the dances of Lecompte the heroine, and of Albert himself, are also extremely well done, as are others in which Proche and her clever associates perform their lively and graceful evolutions. The scenes of a charmed, but not charring forest, with demons and gleaming monstrous forms; of the fairy's palace, and of the revolving sun at the conclusion, are brilliant efforts of art. The last surpasses any thing witnessed upon the stage, and caused the finale to be hailed with shouts of applause from every part of the house. There were a few misadventures in managing the machinery on the first night; but, considering the extraordinary exhibition that was accomplished, we would not even give them a notice as "unrehearsed;" the complications will go easier with practice, and the public may enjoy the grandest spectacle, perhaps, in any theatre in Europe.

DRURY LANE.

The Compact, a play in three acts, founded on a story in Inglis's "Spain in 1830," and dramatised with almost more than Mr. Planche's usual felicity, was produced here on Thursday, with the complete success which both its authorship and cast deserved. It consists of the adventures of a leader of robbers (the individual who furnishes the original idea is actually now living, and the guide of the Madrid diligence to Seville), who pillages the Archbishop of Grenada, and then enters into an agreement to "sin no more," provided his lordship can procure him a pardon for past offences. A second plot rests on the supposed murder of a youth of quality by his fellow-student, the dénouement of which is combined with the bandit's fate, and adds greatly to the concluding interest of the piece. The scenes and dresses are eminently Spanish; and of the acting our report must be most favourable. Farren in the Archbishop is a perfect example of the mingled humour and benevolence which often distinguishes the Spanish secular clergy; and Wallack as the Robber.

" Linking one virtue with a thousand crimes," played, as he always does, with great judgment and feeling; and Harley and Mrs. Humby fully supported the comic portion of the play. MRS. YATES had a bumper benefit on Thurs-The announcement of the Compact for repetition shewed, by the unanimous plaudits bestowed upon it, that a lasting compact was made between the actors and the audience .-We congratulate the large theatres (including the King's) on having all, since our last, done much to merit the cordial support of the public.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Thursday was performed The Hunchback, by Mr. Sheridan Knowles, who also, on the occasion, made his first appearance as a performer in London, in the character of Master Walter, the Hunchback. The story of this drama is a romantic one, of a father disguised for many years to rear his daughter properly; and, as we have nothing like such time before us, we must beg leave to speak shortly in generals and of the performance. The play is written with the true energy of genius, of which its very faults partake. The language throughout is forcible; and, in very many parts, of the highest order of poetry. Occasionally quaintly imitated from elder writers, its images and antitheses possess a beauty and vigour which fully confirm the author in the foremost rank of living dramatists, if not the most powerful writer of the day. The conception of the character of Julia is admirable: fickle and proud in the giddy hour of prosperity, her woman-feeling and passion are nobly developed when adversity overtakes her lover; and the whole is wrought up with an intensity of interest beyond which nothing is wanting. The other female part, Helen, is not so happy: she has too much of the Iphigenia to play to her Cymon; and we lose our regard for the lively young female, in our dislike of the artful teacher of the art of love. Of the acting, we must speak in almost unmeasured praise. Miss F. Kemble surpassed all her former efforts in Julia; and particularly towards the end, where the stronger emotions are portrayed. Her energy in several passages was electrical, and elicited bursts of applause. Miss Taylor, the Helen, was delightfully arch and animated. Of Mr. Knowles himself, as an actor, we cannot say much in praise. His voice is without modulation, always in one loud key, pumping out the words; which are, moreover, enriched with a genuine and classic brogue. His judgment, however, in understanding and reading the text prevented us from regretting more that his physical powers hindered his embodying his own ideas. C. Kemble, in Sir Thomas Clifford, gave an admirable delineation of the accomplished lover and unfortunate gentleman; while Abbott, as Modus, the bashful cousin of Helen, was most quietly excellent; Wrench, as Lord Tinsel, a finished fop; and Meadows, as Fathom, a serving man, full of pleasant drollery. At the conclusion a whimsical scene was enacted between C. Kemble and Mr. Knowles, who was called for by the audience, which ended in the annunciation of the Hunchback for repetition every night. A number of persons also clamoured for the appearance of Miss Kemble, who was obliged to come forward in an unafter the commencement of Rosina. Well did she merit any tribute of admiration; that of keeping his word inviolable - if any but this was a very foolish way of marking thing, is superior to his Brigand. Cooper also the sense entertained of her splendid exertions.

ADELPHI.

day to witness her inimitable Victorine. Had the house been ten times as large, and the prices ten times as much, she has well earned this meed by her performances throughout the season.

STRAND THEATRE.

On a lenten Wednesday we heard some indifferent glee-singing, but saw some smart acting, &c. by Mr. Rayner himself. A ventriloquist also afforded us much entertainment, and was a perfect mocking-bird in his imitation of robins, larks, thrushes, and other of the feathered tribes, not to mention a whole poultry-yard, with dogs, pigs, ducks, turkeys, and chickens.

FRENCH PLAYS.

On Monday, M. Arnal made his bow in two clever vaudevilles, L'Homme difficile à Vivre, and Mademoiselle Marguerite. In the first there is barely enough to elicit his comic talents; but in the second there was ample amends. A broad vein of humour runs through the whole piece, which found most able re-presentatives in Laporte and Arnal, the latter proving himself to be an actor of great skill, and a valuable acquisition to the company: we only regret he is engaged for so short a time. Thursday, Heur et Malheur, and Le Bal d'Ouvriers. Arnal plays in the first a visionary, pursued and thwarted in all he undertakes by one Jules Fombert; and he threw so much drolling into the character as to be quite irresistible. Mdlle. St. Ange is decidedly the best man of the feminine gender on the stage.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

King's Theatre, March 31.-If the prompter would but reflect how very many of the boxes look into his, he would not wear so very grotesque a nightcap! His brown one, with a white one, with the broad coloured stripe, which he sported on this occasion, is really irresistible! In the second act, the thumping of a warming pan with a huge nail, to represent a clock striking, was really too absurd ! The first night of L'Anneau Magique, our old acquaintance the bell-ringer had no sinecure place of it, as the supernatural events were rife in this ballet, which therefore, quite as much from his exertions as from any other cause, deserved the name of the Magic Ring! The vocal signals were no less frequent. If devils were to rise, "Up with you!" was the cry; if fairies were to fly, "Haul up!" was the shout.

Drury Lane, April 2 .- Romeo and Juliet. In the parting scene, as the nurse was not forthcoming, Wallack filled up the pause by the observation that

"Dry sorrow drinks our blood;"

so that when Juliet afterwards accused him of looking pale, he having already expended his answer in the wrong place, had nothing to say for himself, and only looked foolish accordingly. When dying, his black trunks and hose parted company, and exhibited a broad white ring or garter. This surprised me in such a prince of costume-tactics. The line referring to Juliet,

"Then she is well, and nothing can be ill," was thus lucidly delivered by the representative of Balthasar,

" Then nothing can be she, and she is well !" In ancient Verona (if the Drury people be

^{*} We were a good deal annoyed by a fellow, a single siffeur, in the pit, who hissed throughout the whole of the performances, and especially when the best things were done. This shewed a bad spirit, with a very im-pertment representative, and the nuisance ought to have been handed over to the police.

Such as the unnaturally-prolonged dialogue before Julia will look at the secretary, in the fourth act, though it tells in acting; and the repetition of Helen's warm and coquettish lessons to the sheepish student of Ovid.

correct) all the nuns were allowed to wear white satin shoes, trim ringlets or gros-boucles, necklaces, &c., at discretion; and the beds of the nobility, which were none of the most seemly, had, among other curiosities of construction, the bed-posts outside the curtains!

Strand Theatre, April 2 .- From Drury I went to see my wixzure permissione friend, Mademoiselle Celeste, in The French Spy. In a scene between a French officer and the Dev of Algiers, the latter exclaimed to the former, "Instantly confess all." The Frenchman, however, stood mute, with folded arms-so did the Dev-and so they remained such an unconscionable time, that half the audience, or rather spectators, indulged in a hearty laugh; the other in a hearty hiss. A dead silence. Prompter, "Or, by our holy prophet!"-dead silence continues. Prompter, (very loud) "Or, by our holy prophet!"—still a dead silence chorus by the audience, "Or, by our holy prophet!" The Dey was however determined the fault should at any rate be supposed to be the Frenchman's, and so defied his whole hundred prompters by continuing the dialogue with this very connecting link, "At midnight be it then!'

Surrey, April 3.— The Surrey fairies have learnt to bungle from the Opera ones. In Cinderella, Oberon should have changed a landsaid he to his train, " the wonders of your master's skill!" and lo, such a jumble of land-scape and chamber! The trees would not sink through the floor, while clouds and ceiling most desperately and laughably battled for the ascendant, nor settled the contest till near the end of the ensuing scene. There was afterwards a similar scene, or mingling of scenes, when a garden should have changed into a ball-room. When, and at what theatre will those fairy-agents, the scene-shifters, have learnt their trade?

VARIETIES.

King's Theatre. - On Wednesday evening Mr. Adams repeated his lecture on astronomy to a crowded theatre: its announcement for repetition was received with unanimous applause. The royal Seraphine of Mr. Green is an excellent accompaniment to the rising cur-

Earthquakes.—These awful phenomena have become very frequent in the north of Italy. Accounts state, that the people, especially in Modena, are in great alarm.

Agriculture and Manufacture. - M. de Lamartine has induced the Academy of the Saône and Loire to offer a medal for the best essay on the question, " To resolve the principal causes which render the manufacturing generally less happy and less moral than the agricultural population; and to suggest the best means for augmenting the happiness and improving the morality of the former."

Penny Pubs .- The new Penny Magazine is a very various and agreeable contemporary. With regard to the fuss now making about the lower-priced periodicals (as we shall probably have to take up the subject), all we shall say is, that, except for political and party purposes, they seem to be incapable of doing much In a literary point of view, they are mischief. most of them well worth their pence, and their influence is in proportion to their cost. A penn'orth, or two penn'orth of criticism is a bargain; and readers ought not to require too much where the stake is so small.

his work upon optics, says a correspondent, I find the following notice: "J. E. Lentman has described an ingenious method by which one image is made to appear metamorphosed into another, by looking at it through a tube, furnished with different reflecting planes; but for the particulars I must refer my reader to the Memoirs of the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburgh, vol. iv. page 202, or to the account which the author there refers to as published by him in High Dutch, printed at Wittemburgh in 1719." I should be glad to know in what Dr. Brewster's invention called a kaleidoscope, and for which he took out a patent, differs from this?

North London Literary and Mechanics' Institution.—We are glad to see these useful establishments making their way in every quarter. Lectures, a library, and other means of improvement, are about to have a local habitation on the northern side of London; to promote which, a meeting took place on Wednesday, Mr. E. L. Bulwer in the chair, when the necessary measures were agreed to for carrying the wishes of the inhabitants of this quarter of the metropolis into effect.

Seizure of Books. - A great many packages of books (principally from Leipsic) which were on their way to the chief booksellers of Vienna, have been seized by order of the Austrian Government; it being alleged that among them were a number of prohibited works. measure has caused great discontent.

The March, &c .- The Queen of Ovas, in Madagascar, has, it is stated, founded a professorship of chemistry, to give lectures in her capital,—the name of which we do not know.

To such base uses .- The Odeon Theatre, at Paris, which was shut in spring last year, has been opened as a forage warehouse.

Railway from London to Bristol .- We understand that able civil engineers are busily occupied (under the auspices of some leading interests) in making the necessary surveys for a railway, by which the metropolis may, ere long, be closely approximated to the Bristol Channel and Western Seas, and four or five hours will enable us to pay a morning visit to Bristol. The plan, in connexion with the Irish steam-boats, embraces the expectation that cattle and other Irish produce can be conveyed to London within thirty-two hours from the time of shipment at Cork, Waterford, &c.; and thus, at a cheap and easy rate, may the market of the capital be thrown immediately open to the Irish agriculturist, to the great benefit, at the same time, of the London consumer. Liverpool, it is stated, imports above 7000 head of live stock per week, much of which is conveyed to Manchester by the railway; and it does seem strange that the metropolis has not been enabled to obtain similar supplies.

M. Jouy .- The author of the Hermit of the Chaussé d'Antin, and other esteemed and popular works in the drama, as well as in the general walks of literature, has been appointed librarian to the Louvre. M. Jouy is at a very advanced age.

French Academy.—On the 15th instant the French Academy proceeded to the nomination of a member to replace the Abbé de Montesquion. After a sharp struggle, M. Jay was

University of Warsaw.—It appears by the statements in some of the continental journals that the University of Warsaw is at present in nch where the stake is so small.

a sad state. The professors receive only a is added), was visible, and the men were executed Kaleidoscope. — In looking through Dr. third of their salaries; and, instead of a uni-

Priestley's observations, printed at the end of versity, it is become only a medical school. Seals have been placed by the orders of government on the public libraries, on the cabinet of medals, and on the collection of prints; and it is probable that they will all be transferred to Moscow.

Population Returns of the Russian Empire for 1830.—The statistical tables of the state of the population of the empire (but only of the Greek religion) addressed to Synod, have just been published: we find in them the following general results :- Births of males, 951,690; females, 892,576: total, 1,844,266. Deaths of males, 682,709; females, 654,532: total, 1,337,241. Excess of births, 507,025. Marriages, 349,281.—Among the year's table of deaths of the male sex, we find above 1000 upwards of 100 years of age, viz.:

From 100 to 105 · · · · 694 | From 125 to 130 · · · · 6 105 · · 110 · · · · 150 | 130 · · · 135 · · · · 8 130 ·· 135 ··· 8 135 ·· 140 ··· 2 140 ·· 145 ··· 3 145 ·· 150 ··· 1 110 -- 115 --- 93 115 -- 120 --- 49 120 -- 125 --- 46

Excavations at Pompeii. Since the discovery of the mosaics described in one of our late Nos., four rooms and a kitchen have been opened, where a considerable number of bronze vases and iron utensils were found. These are very interesting, as they tend to initiate us in the domestic customs of the ancients. One of the chambers was filled with amphoree, some of which are of a new and hitherto unknown form: they in general bear a Greek or Latin inscription, written in black. Several contain dried wine, which, liquefied with water, still retains its flavour. The skeleton of a female was found, supposed to be that of the slave entrusted with the care of the kitchen .- Revue Encyclopédique.

A long and disastrous Walk. - We all know Mathews's joke of the Chelsea pensioner who could not move on when ordered by the police at the Lord Mayor's show, as his timber toe had got fixed in a water-plug: but that there is nothing which fancy can imagine in the world, not surpassed by reality, the following true narration will shew. A poor fellow who recently suffered the amputation of a limb in St. George's Hospital, was turned out cured. Exhilarated by the open air after a long confinement, he sought a public house, and, we are sorry to say, got very drunk; in which condition he left it to find his way home. Unluckily for him, his wooden pin, like the pensioner's, discovered an open hole in Piccadilly; but, unlike the pensioner, the drink made him suppose he could move on, notwithstanding. He accordingly performed a revolution with his other leg round the fixed point or pivot, and must have continued at this work some time, for he imagined he had walked about five miles; till, alas for his perseverance! he was thrown down and broke his other limb. In this lamentable predicament he was picked up and reconveyed to the hospital, after an absence of less than twenty-four hours.

Noble Pun.-For once the Garrick must yield the palm of a classical pun to the House of Peers. In discussing the plurality of benefices' bill, Lord King said, "The legislature felt great compassion for the well-paid rectors, but seemed to care little or nothing about the poor curates; doubtless regulating its conduct by the maxim " de minimis non curat lex!"

A Witness .- In the account of the execution of three Whitefeet at Kilkenny (Times of Saturday), it is stated that they were hanged "in the presence of a troop of horse, 200 infantry, and a piece of cannon:" " no riot, however (it

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Literary Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XIV. April 7th, 1992. Six Months in America, by G. T. Vigne, Esq. Barrister-

Six Months in America, by 6.2.2.2.2.3.

The Excursion, or a Trip to Margate; with humorous illustrations by Robert Crulkshank.
Lectiones Latins. or Lessons in Latin Literature, in Prose and Verse, from the Writings of celebrated Latin Authors: with Translations. By J. Rowbotham.
A General, Historical, and Practical Treatise upon Elemental Locomotion, by Alexander Gordon, Civil Engineer.

Washington Irving, who quitted us a fortnight since for America, has left behind him, we believe the MS. of two volumes of Tales, &c., similar in plau to the Sketch Book, but founded on Spanish and Moorish legends and traditions.

The title we have heard is Tales of the

A Poem embellished with illustrations by Robert Cruik-shank, and called the March of Humbug.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Bibliophobia, a Sequel to Bibliomania, demy 8vo. 4s. 6d. bds.; royal 8vo. 8s. 6d. bds.—Powell on Wills, Executors, and Administrators, 19mo. 3s. 6d. bds.—Roscoe's Novelst's Library, Vol. X. Vicar of Wakefield and Sir Launcelot Greaves, fcp. 6s. bds.—Open Sesame, or the Way to get Money, 18mo. 1s. sewed.—A Tale of the Tories, 18mo. 2s. 6d. sewed.—Cattermole's Sermons, post 8vo. 7s. bds.—Rev. M. J. Wynyard's Sermons, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Rev. C. Girdletone's New Testament, with a Commentary, Part I. Matthew and Mark, 8vo. 9s. bds.—Rev. G. S. Faber's Apostolicity of Trinitarianism, 9 vols. 8vo. 26s. bds.—Tidd's Second Supplement, containing the New Rules, &c. royal 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—Autobiography, Vol. XXXIII. Memoir of William Sampson, Esq. demy 18mo. 3s. 6d. bds.; royal 18mo. 6s. bds.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.
March.	Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday 22	From	35.	to	54.	30.10	to	30.00
Friday · · · · 23		43.	• •	54.	29-92	• •	29-87
Saturday · · 24	• • • • •	30.	••	39.	29.72	••	29-92
Sunday 25	• • • • •	30.	••	48.	30414	• •	30.14
Monday 26							30-01
Tuesday 27	• • • • •		••	54.	29-91	• •	29-99
Wednesday 28	• • • • •	31.	••	50.	30-03	••	29-97

Wind variable, S.W. and N. by E. prevailing. Except the 22d, 23d, and 26th, generally clear: rain on the 23d; a little snow on the morning of the 24th. Rain fallen, '1 of an inch.

March.	1 Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday 29	From	23.	to	54.	29.90		29-95
Friday · · · · 30							29.88
Saturday · · 31 April.		35.	••	53.			29-72
Sunday 1		36.	٠.	51.	29-74		29.89
Monday · · 2			• •	59.	30-06
Tuesday . 3		26.	• •	63.	30-34	• •
Wednesday 4		29.		63.	30-44		30.50
Prevailing wir	d. N.E.
Except the 1st			and :	remar	kably fir	œ.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Edmonton.

o In giving the early notices of new works, &c., which our long-established course and extensive circulation enable us to do, we desire it to be remembered by our readers that our undeviating rule is, if we cannot speak well of any publication before it is accessible to others, not to speak of it at all. By this means our judgment is quite as impartial as if these productions were before the world.

CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Mr. EDITOR,—That the late Sir Samuel Hood was a mr. address.—That the late Sir Samuel Hood was a great favourite in the service as well as in the private circle of his friends, is well known; and as I have never seen it in print, I send you a jeu-desprit that was acratched on his tomb in the church at Madras: as this frail memorial probably is now obliterated, if you will give it a place in a future No. of your miscellany it may graifly some of Sir Samuel's friends who have not seen it, and none more than the transcriber.

> Reneath these stones are laid the hones Of John O'Bryen Drury,
> Who from his birth till laid in earth

Was ever in a fury: Close by his side, the difference wide, Is laid Sir Samuel Hood, Who from his birth till laid in earth, Was brave, humane, and good.

To E. B.: we cannot insert poetry out of any other We trust to find room for Garrick Club Papers, No. IX.,

We trust to find room for Garrick Club Papers, No. IX., on the Majors and Minors, in our next.

ERRATA.—In an Advertisement of Mr. Pickering's, in our last, Vol. XXI. of the Aldine Poets, announced as forthcoming in April, should have been Vol. XIX.; and in our preceding No., Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual was advertised as Part XX., instead of Part XV.—A droll erratum also occurs in last week's No., p. 290, col. 3, where from the middle of dosing we will thank our readers to take the s and place it at the end, so as to make the word doings.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL MALL. The Gallery for the Exhibition and Sale of the Works of British Artists, loopen daily, from Ten in the Morning till Five in the Evening.

Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.

WILLIAM BARMARD, Resper.

OCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS,
Suffolk Street, Pall Mail East.
The Ninth Exhibition for the Sale of Works of Living British Artists, is new open, from Ten till Seven.
Admittance, 12.—Catalogue, 12.
BDWARD PRENTIS, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON SCHOOL.
The School Year is divided into Three Terms:—the First commencing on the let of October—the Broomd on the 15th January—and the Third a West after Esseer. The Fee fee each is 50.

The School closes for the Easter Holidays on Thursday, the Ibth, and re-opens on Monday, the 30th of April.

The subjects taught are, Reading—Writing—the Properties of the most familiar Objects, Natural and Artificial—the Boglish, Latin, Greek, and French Languages—Ancient and Modern History—Geography, both Physical and Polition!—Arthmetic—the Elements of Mathematics and of Natural Philosophy—and Drawing.

THOMAS COATES.

Council Reom, Mh April, 1888.

DYRENEES.—Just published, a Series of highly finished Engravings of the most Beautiful and Picturesque Views in the Fyreness; lacituding the Watering-Places famous for their Mineral Springs, and the most remarkable Spots distinguished by the Retreat of the French Army during the Peninsular War. The Work is published in Nes. and will not exceed Twelve. The Drawings are executed by the first Masters, from original Sketches taken on the Spot.

Engraved by WILLIAM and EDWARD FINDEN.

Each Part.

DRIVATE EDUCATION. _A Vacancy JRIVATE EDUCATION.—A Vacancy

for a Fupil is now open in the Family of a Married Ciergyman, resident Tweive Miles from London, the Number of whose Pupils is limited to Six. He can offer the most satisfactory References to Noblemes and Gentlemen whose Sents have been entrusted to him.

Letters to be directed for the Rev. A. B., to the care of Mr.
Seartie, Bookbinder, 77, Lewer Grovrenor Street, London.

OFFICIAL PARLIAMENTARY
DOCUMENT.—The Number of Fourpeany Stampa issued from the Stamp Office for all the London Newspapers, in the Year 1831, was $2,045,500, for the Supply of Twelve Deily Journals, Feur Three-days a Week, Fifty-dis Weekly Papers, and the Government Gasette, out of which Number Rr. Clement, the Proprietor of the Moraing Chronicle, used, for that Journal and his Three Weekly Papers, $2,900,850. Mr. Clement alone consumed many more than One-tenth of the London Press, daily, three-day, and weekly put together, the total Number of Stamp had for all the London Newspapers in the past Year, 1881, having been $2,004,500, of which Mr. Clement used $2,800,850, having 188,000 more than his consumption in the preceding year of 1880.

MUSIC.

HERZ and CZERNY at HALF-PRICE! L REZ and CZERNY at HALF-PRICE!

I New editions of the meat popular Compositions of these Authors, including Czerny's Yar. on Sorte Secondami, Five Sheets for 2s. Czerny's Var. on Rode's Air, it. 6d. Herr's New Set of Twelve Brilliant Waltzes, 2s. Herr's admired Quadrilles, at 2s. Herr's Brilliant Rode, "La Neigs," Four Sheets for
1s. 6d. Herr's Grand Rondo Caracteristique, 2s performed before
1s. 6d. Herr's Grand Rondo Caracteristique, 2s performed before the King, 2s.
Immense Variety of New Music of every description, warranted Caracteristics, 17, 5oho Square.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

A N ESSAY on INDIGESTION, or Morbid
Sensibility of the Stomach and Bowele A. Sensibility of the Stomach and Sovels, as the proximate Cause or characteristic condition of Dyspepsis, Nervous Irritability, Mental Despondency, Hypeobondriacism, and many other Aliments; with an improved Method of Treatment, Medicinal ic.

By JAMES JOHNSON, M.D.
Physician Extraordinary to the King.
7th edition, enlarged, price 6s. 6d. boards.

Also, by the same Author,
Change of Air, or the Diary of a Philosopher in Pursuit of Heeith and Recreation; illustrating the beneficial Influence of Bodily Exercise, Change of Boose, Fure Air, and Temporary Relaxation, as Antidotes to the Wear and Tear of Education and Avecation. Medition, price 26. 64.
Pablished by S. Highley, 28, Fleet Education

The Child's Own Book.

Bubellished with Three Hundred Engravings, price 7s. 6d.

THE CHILD'S OWN BOOK. The 24 edition.
London: Princed for Thomas Tegg, Chespeide: N. Hailm, Piccadilly; Bowdsty and Kerby, Oxford Street; and R. Griffe, and Co. Glazew.

The Little Girl's Book. By Mrs. Child.

Family Library.

With Ylews, Fortraits, and a Map of the Course of the Niger, & vois- 6s. each,

A NARRATIVE of the ADVENTURES and SUFFERINGS of RICHARD and JOHN LANDER, during their Expedition to discover the Termination of the Niger. Forming Nos. XXVIII. XXIX. and XXX. of the Family Library.

John Marva. Albanus.

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Price 2a.

ONJECTURES concerning the Identity of the Patriarch Job, his Family, the Time in which he lived, and the Locality of the Land of U.S. By the Rev. SAMUEL LYSONS, B.A.

Butter College, Oxon.
Oxford: J. H. Parker; and J., G., and F. Rivington, London.

The Rev. Richard Cattermole's Sermons.
Post 270. price 72.
SERMONS preached in the District Church of St. Matthaw of St. Matthew, Britzen, Surrey.

By the Rev. RICHARD CATTERMOLE, B.D.

Of Christ's College, Cambridge.

Printed for B. Fellowes, Ludgate Street.

HEAP REPOSITORY TRACTS,

Bntertaining, Moral, and Religious. 12mo. 5s. bound. Cheap Repository Tracts for Sunday Read-; to which are added, some Prayers for Individuals and for ing; to wi

Cheap Repository Tracts; Shorter Tracts. bound.
 Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

Improved School Books.

SYNOPSIS of ROMAN ANTIQUI-TiE8; or, a Comprehensive Account of the City, Religion, Politics, and Customs of the Ancient Romans, with a Cate-chetical Appendix.

obstical Appendix.

By JOHN LANKTREE.

de edition, 18mo. 2s. bound.

"This is an excellent little book, and admirably adapted for the use of all the younger students of schools."—Edinburgh Lite-

A Greek Grammar, on a New and Systems.

tic Plan, according to the Analytic Method. By the Rev. Thomas Plynn, A.M. New edition, improved, 2s. 6d. bound.

A Latin Grammar. By the Rev. Thomas

Flynn. 18mo. le. 6d. bound.

The Fourth and Fifth Books, on the same an, and by the same Author. 12mo. 5s. bound.

Select Satires of Juvenal, with a Paraphrase

Octical Satires of Juvenni, with a Faraphrase of Notes in English. By John Hawkeworth, L.D. Head aster of the Feinaglian School, Luzembourg. 18ma- 4s. Dublin: Friend for William Curry, Jun. and Co.; Simpkin of Marshall, London; Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh; and all ocksellers.

In progress of publication, in Parts, appearing every Six Months, and each Part containing Twelve Plates, size elephant folio, price 54. 5c. carefully coloured after nature, or 14. 11s. 6d. plain, J. L. U. S. T. R. A. T. I. O. N. S. of B. R. I. T. I. S. M. W. I. I. L. W. Bird.

I. L. U. S. T. R. A. T. I. O. N. S. of B. R. I. T. I. S. M. W. G. &c.

II. Water Birds.

By P. J. S. BL. By, B. Q. F. R. S. R. F. L. S. M. W. G. &c.

The First Series, which is already published, consists of Seven Paris, containing appeared of 160 Figures, and comprising all the British Land Birds, down to the Order Grallatores (with the exception of one or two Species recently discovered, and which will be afterwards Figured); size, as Sev. vol. of Letter-press, price lot. 6d. Systematically Arranged, and to be had with or without the Plates.

Second Series: Water Birds.—There are already fee Faru of the Water Birds published; making in all 130 Folio Flates, containing upwards of 130 Figures, mostly the size of Life.

In the press, and shortly will be published, in 1 vol. 8ve.

The Letter-press of the Second Series, containing the History of the Water Birds.

taining the History of the Water Birds.

At the same time will appear,

A Second Edition of the First Volume, with Additions, comprehending the History of the Land Birds, remodelled to correspond with the present improved System of Classification in Ornithology, upon which Principle the Second Series has been conducted.

It is hoped that the letter-press in 2 vols. 8vs. so constructed, will constitute in themselves an independent Manual of British Ornithology, containing the History and Description of every Species hitherto found in Great Britain, while at the same time they will embrace the advantage of references to the Volume of Plates now in the course of publication.

W. H. Lizars, Edinburgh; and Longman, Rees, Orme, Recovery, Orean, and Longman, London.

Devotional Reading.
Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Lor EVIDENCES of CHRISTIANITY, &c. Twenty Discourses, preached before the University of bridge, in 1839, at the Lecture founded by the Rev. John

By the Rev. C. BENSON, M.A. er of St. Giles's in the Fields, London, as the Temple. Fourth edition, Svo. 12c. boards.

Scripture Difficulties. Twenty Discourses, preached before the University of Cambridge, for the Hubsan Lecture, in the Year 1882. By the same. 2d edition, 8vo. 18t. Sermons, Explanatory and Practical, on the Thirty-Nine Articles of the Church of England, in a Series of Discourses. By the Rev. T. Waite, D.C.L., Chaplain to H. R. H. the Duke of Gloucester. In a thick 8vo. vol. 18t. boards.

the Duke of Gioncester. In a thick 8vo. vol. 18x. boards.

Sermons, selected and abridged, chiefly from the less-known Authors, together with Translations from Bosses, Massilton, Montamorel, and other celebrated French Preacers. Adapted generally to the Rpistle, Gospel, or First Lessons; or to the several Seasons of the Year. By the Rev. Samuel Clapham, M.A. The 5th edition, greatly enlarged, in 3 large and closely printed vols 8vo. price 34x. boards.

A Treatise on the Evidence of the Scripture
Miracles. By John Pannese, M.A. formerly of C. C. College, Oxford. 8vo. 10s. 5td boards.

Linguistry, shiefly on Principles of Religion.

Inquiry, chiefly on Principles of Religion, to the Nature and Discipline of Human Motives. By the Same

The History of the Church of England. By J. B. S. Carwithen, B.D. of St. Mary Hall, Oxford, Vicar of Sandhurst, Berks. Part Ist, to the Restoration of the Church and Monarchy in 1688. In $2 vols. 800. price $80. beards.

The History of the Rise and Early Progress bristanity; comprising an Inquiry into its true Char Design. By the Rev. Samuel Hinds, M.A. of Queen's, and Vice-Principal of St. Alban's Hall, Oxford. In Sprice 31: Deards.

Observations, Critical, Explanatory, and Practical, on the Canonical Scriptures. By Mary Corawalita. The 3d edition, corrected and enlarged, in 4 vots. 8ve. 2l. 8e.

A Preparation for the Lord's Supper, with a Companion to the Altar. Intended chiefly for the Use of Ladies. By the same. Second Edition, in a nest pocket vol. 82 bound; or in a superior manage, $2. 64.; in black calf, $2.; in merceco, 6.

The Family Book of Common Prayer; being a Selection of Collects and other Prayer ; being a Selection of Collects and other Prayers from the Liturgy of the Established Church, arranged as a Form of Daily Devotion, Morning and Evening, for Private or Domestic Use. By the Rev. Thomas Gill, a.M. Iste Minister of Denmark Huil Chapel. It Ismo. price 1s. 6d. bound; in black sheep, or extra with black edges, price 2s.

Record Commission.
In S handsome vols. Svo. price 20s. in cloth boards

A N ACCOUNT of the most IMPORTANT PUBLIC RECORDS of GREAT BRITAIN, and the Publications of the Record Commissioners: together with ether Miscellaneous Historical and Antiquarian Information. Compiled from various Books and MSS.
London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternester Row, Bookestlers to the Commissioners for the Preservation of the Public Records.

Where may be had, N ACCOUNT of the most IMPORTANT

w nere may se had,

A List of the Public Records already Printed, with the Reduced Prices at which they are new offered to the Public.

In uniform vois. (sold separately), with Wood Engravings, price 2s. each, nestly half-bound,

TRAVELS in VARIOUS COUNTRIES,

Africa North America South America Northern Asia South-eastern Asia South-western Asia European Russia Denmark and Sweden

Spain Arctic Travels.

Voyages in the Arctic Seas.

2 vols.

Pacific Ocean

North Pacific Ocean

On These volumes have been reprinted for the Supplemental Catalogue of Reward Books recommended by the Society for Promoting Christian Knewledge.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, Booksellers to the Society, St. Fan's Charchyard, and Waterloo Flace, Fall Mail.

In 18me. price 9s. boards, dedicated, by permission, to His Grace the Lord Primate of Ireland, the 2d edition, improved, of PASTORALIA; a Manual of Helps for the Parochial Clergy, containing a Soriptural View of the Clerical Dutles—Prayers for the Use of the Clergy—Scheme of Pastoral Visitation—Outlines of Sermens—and Books for the Use Pastoral Visitation—Outlines of Communication of the Clergy.

If the Rev. HENRY THOMPSON, M.A.

Of St. John's College, Cambridge, Curate of Wrington, Somerse and formerly Assistant-Minister of St. George's, Camberwell.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

In 18mo. price 7s. 5d. bound, the 3d edition, revised and corrected, of

XCERPTA ex VARIIS ROMANIS
POETIS, qui in Scholla revina lamanature.

POETIS, qui in Scholis rarius le

Lucretio, Catullo, Prepertio, Tibullo,

Seneca, Lucano, V. Piacco, S. Italico, Statio,

Martiale, Juvenale, Ausonio, Claudiane

Notulis illustrata, quas selegit
JOHANNES ROGERS PITMAN, A.M.
Veneunt apud J., G., et F. Rivington, in Comee Panline, et Vice dicte Waterlee Place.

AIT'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE,

TAIT'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE,
No. 1. for April 1832.
Contents: No. 1. The Ministry—2. A 1832-2-1842 with Mr. Tait
2. The Revolution—4. On the late remarkable Silence of the Post-Laureare—5. The Martinet—6. State of Magic in Egypt.
By an Eye-Witness—7. Lines by Dr. Bowring—8. The Ventiator; a Tale of the last Session—9. The Spirit of the Time—
10. The Pechler—11. On National Borrowing—12. State of "the West Country"—13. An Essay on Kissing—14. Slave Insurrection in Jamaica—15. A Lawyer's Dream—16. Irish Tithes; from the Returns made to the Catholic Association—17. The Upper House—18. Sonnet, by Gertrude—19. Scottish Reform Bill—
29. Lines written amidst the Ruins of Pinchal Abbey—28. Ane Crouse Craw—24. Mosthy Register.
Printed for William Tait, Edinburgh; Simpkin and Marshall,
London; and John Cumming, Dublin.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia.
In menthly volumes, small 8vo. &. in cloth.
fust published, being Vol. XXIX. of the above, Vol. I. of HISTORY of SPAIN and PORTUGAL, 15.1 U.B. 2 Us Garage of this History will be published to each successive Month, interrupted only by a Third Volume of Mackinton's England, which is nearly read Pablished March 1, Giege's British Military Commanders, (3 vols.) Vol. II.

Lendon: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

New Publications.

The following interesting Works have been lately published by Meens. Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street:— MEMOIRES et ROMANCES de HOR. TENSE, Duchesse de St. Leu, Ex-Reine de Holl vol. with a Portrait, &c.

II. Private Correspondence of the Empress Josephine, Editions in French and English. 1 vol. forming a Supplement to her Memoirs. III.

The Earl of Munster's Memoirs of the late

The Exquisites; or, a New Portraiture of Exclusive Society. A Novel, in 3 vols. 21s.

The Living and the Dead; a Series of Personal Sketches. S vols.

"A work possessed of much interest and powers of entertainment."—Literary Genetic.

A Second Series of Babylon the Great; or, More Men and Things in the British Capital. 2 vols. 18e

Musical Memoirs. By W. J. Parke, Esq. the celebrated Oboist. Comprising a Fund of Information Anecdote relative to Music and its eminent Votaries, during last Pifty Years.

VIII. Memoirs of Women celebrated in the Writings of Ancient and Modern Poets. By Mrs. Jameson, Audies of the "Beauties of the Court of Charles II." S vois.

Price Se. 6d. No. 26 of the MAGAZINE of NATURAL HISTORY, and Journal of Zoolegy, Botany, Mineralegy, Geology Meteorology. Conducted by J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S. &c.

Also, price 3s. 6d. No. 37 of the Gardener's Magazine, and Register of Rural and Domestic Improvement. Conducted by the Same. Leedon: Longman, Rees, Orne, Brown, and Co.

Price Se.

PECIMENS of TRAGIC CHORUSES
from SOPHOCLES, Translated into English Verse.
With a five expinal Pieces.
Published by B. Fellowes, Ludgate Stree.

OUNTRY HOUSES. A Novel.

By a LADY.

Woman's Love. A Novel.

The Jesuit. A Novel.

The Invasion. By the Author of the "Collegians."

"A work of very great research, power, and high entertainment."—Metropolites.

V.
Mr. Lodge's New Perage, price 14s. bound.
Saunders and Otley, Public Library, Conduit Street.

 At this extensive Establishment the perusal of all New Pablications, English and Poreign, may be obtained in Town or Country. Terms on application.

Published by Harvey and Darton, Gracechurch Street, London,

A L E S of the S A X O N S.

By EMILY TAYLOR.

15mc. price 5c. in lettered cambric.

The Minstrelsy of the Woods; or, Sketches and Senga connected with the Natural History of some of the most interesting British and Foreign Blrds. By the Author of the "Wild Garland," &c. With 17 Plates, price &c. in lettered cambricis; or with Plates coloured, price to.

THE DICTATE BOOK; being Lessons on Life, Men, and Manners.

By the Rev. GEORGE HALL, M.A.

Vicar of Tembury, Woroesterahire; Rector of Rochford, Herefordahire; and Chaplain to Lord Brougham and Vaux.

Here the path to Riches, Reputation, and Happiness, is marked out, and Directions for forming the Mind, the Moralis, and Man-

New Editions of the following Popular Books for the Junior Classes.

1. Souter's Progressive Primer, a First Book for Children; arranged upon a pleasing and simple Plan, ascending by easy steps, calculated to interest Children, and facilitate their Progress in an extraordinary degree. 66. half-bound.

2. Souter's First School Spelling-Book, on a 2. SOUVET'S FITS SCHOOL SPEIRING-DOOK, OR a simple and progressive Principle; containing nearly every En-glish Word in common use, arranged on an entirely New Plan, calculated to facilitate the Progress of Children in an uncommon degree. Each Table of Spelling is followed by an easy Reading Lesson, containing only such Words as are to be found in the pre-ceding Columns; the whole forming a useful Introduction to the English Language. 1s 6d. bound.

3. Souter's First School Reader; comprising A. SOULET'S FIFTS SCHOOL RESIDET; COMPARISING a Selection of Reading Lessons, progressively arranged, by means of which the Scholar is led. by gradual and regular steps, to the Reading of Boglish. The Leasons are suited to the capacity of Youth, and treat of subjects calculated to interest as well as to inform. 2s. 6d. bound.

J. Souter, School Library, 78, St. Paul's.

Flowers and Fruits.

The following very useful Works connected with Planting and Gardening are submitted to the attention of the Public at this Reason of the Year, and are to be had of Messra. Colburn and Bantley, New Burlington Street, and of all Bookeslers.

THE FLORIST'S MANUAL; or, Rules for the construction of a Gay Flower-Garden. Curious acts respecting the Management of Bulbous Plants, &c. the ulture of the Guerney Lily, &c.; with a Catalogue of Plants as they appear in each Season. New and improved edition, with colonized Flastes, &c. dt.

Phillips's Companion for the Orchard, or an Historical and Betanical Account of Fruits Cultivated in Great Britain; with important Directions for their Improvement, and New Methods of Retarding and Ripening them, so as to insure their enjoyment in all Seasons. A new and improved edit. 8vo. 7a.

Phillips's Companion for the Kitchen-Garden, or History of Vegetables Cultivated in Great Britain, on the same Plan as the preceding. A new and improved edition, in 2 vols-only 12s. 111.

A Discourse on Forest Trees and the Proa principal of the colorated John Evelyn. A new edit. in 2 vols. etc. embellished with 46 Plates, 26. 3c.

"A diligent perusal of this noble work may animate our noblity and gentry to improve their estates by the news-falling method therein recommended. All persons, indeed, who are owners of land, may find infinite delight as well as profit in this book."

As a Companion to the Journal of a Naturalist, post 8vo.
LEANINGS in NATURAL HISTORY,

THE PROVINCE of JURISPRUDENCE

DEFINED.

By JOHN AUSTIN, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

"I have stated in the beginning of my preface, that the six lectures or essays compassing the following treatise, are made out of ten lectures which I delivered at the University of London. These (I may venture to add) were heard with seme approbation by an instructed and judicious suddence. Imboldened by that approbation, I submit them is their present form to the judgment of a larger public."—Proface.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

On the Sist of March was published, price &. the Twenty-Second No. of

THE BRITISH CRITIC—QUARTERLY THEOLOGICAL REVIEW—and ECCLESIASTICAL RECORD.

RECORD.

Contents.—Theological Library; Le Bas' Life of Wielif.—Life and Writings of Archéescon Datheny.—The Church and its Endowments; Dealtry's Charge and Hale's Bessay.—Faris and its Historical Scenes.—Bishop of Chester's Exposition of the Gospels of St. Matthew and Mark—Divine Vustations.—Herren; Politice, Intercourse, and Trade of the Carthagnians, &c.—Blunt's Sketch of the Reformation.—Sermons; Burton, Bradley, Maitby, Jones, Chandley, and Bessen—State of the Discoses in England and Wales—Proceedings of the Universities.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

HINTS to a CLERGYMAN'S WIFE; or, Female Perochial Duties practically illustrated. In 1 vol. 18mo. 4s.

" She hath done what she could. on: Holdsworth and Ball, 13, 6t. Paul's Churchyard.

Of whom may be had

Of whom may be had,
Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche. Compiled from Authentic Sources, chiefly in French and German. Sadedit. with a Fortrait and Vignestes, in daodecime, price 72.
"No man has left behind him a more remarkable example in his station than the same separated by the clery his station than monetre had forth a beautiful example. They are in them what Oberlin effected under greater difficulties than any they can meet with in Great Britain; ma great, perhaps, as could be found any where in Ireland."—Quarterly Review, No. 25.

The latest Work on Spain

This work, the latest Work on Spatia.

S P A I N in 1830. In 2 vols. 8vo. 26s.

This work, the latest publication respecting the Peninsula, at present so full of political interest, contains, healdes an interesting personal narrative, a view of social life, called other Monthly Review, "the most correct and most sort designated by the Athenaum, which we of the state of very impartially written;" curional manual properties of the state of very impartially written;" curional a variety of information, designated by the New Monthly Magazine, "sound, original, valuable, and curious." Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

By the same Author.

Solitary Walks through many Lands. 2d edition, 2 vois. 16s.

"All pleasing, and always interesting."—Atheneus

TURTHER STRICTURES on those parts of Colonel Nanier's History of Colonel Nanier's Hist of Colonel Napier's History of the Peninsalar War which relate to the Military Opinions and Conduct of General Lord Viscount Bereaford, G.C.B. &c. &c. &c. To which is added, a Report of the Operations in the Alemziej and Spanish Extremedura during the Campaigns of 1811, by Major-General Bir Benjamin Dilrham.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co-

Of whom may be had, Strictures on certain Passages of Lieut.-Col. Napier's History of the Peninsular War which relate to the Military Opinions and Conduct of General Lord Viscount Beres ford, 800. 4s. 6d. sewed.

Economical Volume of light Reading. Price 10s. 6d. bound,

A NECDOTE LIBRARY; containing above 2000 separate Articles of Literary, Historical, Biographical, and Antiquarian Anecdotes, on every subject of intense interest and curiosity.

Lendon: Printed for Sir Richard Phillips and Co.

Of whom may also be had,
Vocal Library; consisting of Two Thousand of the most standard and popular English, and One Hundred French Song, 10. ed. bound.

Laughing Philosopher; consisting of the largest Collection ever made of Bon Mots, Puns, and highly humorous Compositions in Prose and Verse, 10s. 6d.

Scotsman's Library; consisting of many Thousand curious Articles illustrative of Scottish Literature and Personal History, 10s. 6d. bound.

Thousand curious Articles illustrative of Scottlah Literature and Personal History, 10s. 6d. bound.

In 2 vols. 8vo. with Nine Maps, price 1l. 8s. dedicated, by permission, to His Majesty,

R I T I S H A M E R I C A.

By JOHN M'GREGOR, Esq.

. This Work contains full and accurate Sketches of the Climate, Soll, Natural Productions, Commerce, &c. of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, New Brunwick, and Canada; with Practical Remarks on Emigration. The materials have been collected by the Author during his Travels, and a Residence of the Commerce, and the strategy of the Author of the State of the Colonies, or the great questions of political economy depending, from them, we strongly recommend these volumes. "Literary ("Mr. M'Gregor's book deserves the title of a 'Picture of British America." It is lively, fall of details, specific in its information, and evidently written by a person of great experience, and of long usage in the countries. It is illustrated by nine very useful Maps. "Spectator, March 10.

"As a manual for emigrants to the British possessions in America, this publication is superior to all others we have hitherto seem. He is not a theorist, but a practical man, and derives his witnessed and experienced." "Allas, March 10.

"Mr. M'Gregor has written a very pleasing, as well as a highly valuable book. It teems with kindly feelings and considerate allowances, while nothing is disquised, and every thing is freely commented upon." "Sun, March 10.

"This is a valuable work. It is the production of a gentleman of practical knowledge and observation, who lived long in the land of which he writes." "Alkas, swem, March 3.

"It will be seen that this is a work of no ordinary merit, and being on a subject in which all intelligent Englishmen should begin to take an immediate, personal, and national Interest, March 10.

"Category and the production of a gentleman of practical knowledge and observation, who lived long in the Titade of the production of a gentleman of practical knowle

March 10.
Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and
T. Cadell, Strand, London.

New in the course of publication, to be continued in uniform vols. price of each, (with appropriate Embellishments), dedicated, by permission, to the Lord Bishop of London,

THE THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, con-

Laining a Series of original Works in Divinity, and Ecclesiastical History, and Biography, to be comprised in a limited Number of Volumes, and to form, when completed, a digested System of Religious and Ecclesiastical Knowledge.

The Ven. ARCHDEACON LYALL, M.A. Beditors.
The Rev. HUGH JAMES ROSE, B.D.

The Life of Wiclif. By Charles Webb Le

Bas, M.A.

The Consistency of the whole Scheme of Revelation with itself, and with Human Reason. By P. N.
Shuttleworth, D.D.

The following are in immediate preparation The History of the Inquisition. By Joseph Bianco White, M.A. The Life of Luther. By Hugh James Rose.

B.D.

The History of the Principal Councils. By
J. H. Newman, M.A.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterlos Place, Pall Mall.

Handsomely printed, in 1 vol. post 8vo. dedicated to bamuel Rogers, Esq.

Namuel Rogers, Esq.

Po E M S.
By WILLIAM CILLEN BRYANT, an American.
Edited by WASHINGTON IRVING, Esq.
"Bryant's genus consists in a tender pensiveness, a moral melancholy, breathing on the mean are glad; and giving assurance of a spress spirit, hences often to all living creatures, and habitanly pious in the felt omnipresence of the Creator, his poetry overflows with natural religion." Blackwood's Magazine.
"America may glory in the name of Bryant."—Metropolitan Magazine.

Magazine.
Printed for J. Andrews, 167, New Bond Street.

New Work by the Author of " Darnley," Ac. In 3 vols. post 8vo.

THE LIVES and EXPLOITS of

THE DIVES BRIGHT AFTUVITS OF CELEBRATED MILITARY COMMANDERS.

By the Author of "De Pürme," "Philip Augustus," &c. Including Henry V. of England—John, Duke of Hedford—Genezalest de Condvas—Ferdmand, Duke of Alva—Oliver Cromwell—The Great Conde—General Monk, Duke of Albemarle—Marshal Turnene—The Duke of Marthorough—Prince Eugene of Savoy—The Earl of Peterborough—Marquew of Granby—General Wolfe, &c.

woure, acc.

"A more interesting series of memoirs could not be presented to the curiosity of readers; inasmuch as in the lives of such men, romantic adventure of the most exciting kind co-exists with the sternest truth."—Cowier.

II.
In 2 vols. 8 vo. with Plates,
Captain Frankland's Travels in Russia and Sweden, in 1839, 31.

"Few travellers have had such opportunity of describing real life in Russia as this officer. To tourists about to pursue the same road, we do not know a more useful or better guide-book than that of Capt. Frankland."—Morning Pot.

III.
In 1 vol. 8vo. with View of the Winter Palace at St. Petersh

Letters from the North of Europe. By C. H. Elliott, E.q. of the Bengal Civil Service.

"The author's adventures in Norway are particularly worthy of attention. That wild country never had a better historian, and few historians equal to the arduous undertaking of its real inspection."—Morning Post.

IV.

spection."—Morning Post.

IV.
3d edition, in 2 vols. 8vo. with numerous Plates, engraved by Finden, by Finden,

Beechey's Voyage of Discovery to the Pacific; forming the Completion of the Polar Voyages undertaken by order of the British Government.
"The most interesting of the whole series of expeditions to the North Pole."—Quarterly Review.

V.
In 2 vols. 8vo. containing the whole 4 vols. of the Paris edition, with 2 Portraits, Mémoires de Madame Junot, (Duchess of Abrantes).

"We recommend these volumes to attention."—Quarterly Re-

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

The following very useful Works have been lately published by Mesars. Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street:—

A NEW SYSTEM of PRACTICAL DOMESTIC ECONOMY, formed from the Private Communications of Persons of Experience; with Estimates of Household Expenses, adapted to Pamilies of every description. The rapid sale of this Work manifests the high opinion entertained of its merits. There is scarcely a single subject connected with Housekeping, from the care of the Library down to the Management of the Beer-Cellar, which is not treated of.

II.

The Horse and Carriage Oracle, edited by Dr. Kitchiner. A work full of knowledge and instruction re-lative to the Expenses connected with the Keeping and Hiring of Equipages of every description, and which, in the words of the Reviewer, " will serve to enlighten many people who are the iewer, " will serve to enlighten many people w of their Coachmen and Livery Stable Keepers." III.

Dr. Kitchiner's Traveller's Oracle, or Maxims for Locomotion. Small 8vo. 7s. 6d.
"We recommend the Traveller's Oracle as a very amusing and instructive publication."—Atlas.

SCELTA NOVELLE MORALI di SOAVE, with Interlineal Translation. Adapted to the Systems of Hamilton or Jacotot. Published by J. Souter, School Library, 73, St. Paul's Churchyard.

Of whom may be had, In a few days, adapted to the same Systems, 1. Elisabeth ; ou, les Exiles de Sibérie.

2. The Three First Books of Telemachus. 3. New and Entertaining Dialogues.

J. F. Gerrard. 4.

4. French Exercises, as recommended by
M. Jacotot; being Part of Miss Edgeworth's "Frank." French and English. 1s. 6d.

LITHOTRITY and LITHOTOMY

TTHOTKITY and LITHOTOMY COMPARED.
By THOMAS KING, M.D. M.R.C.S.
Surgeon to His Excellency the French Ambassador, Lecturer on Nurgery, Ex-Slève de Première Clause de l'Ecole Pratique, and formerly House Surgeon to the Hôtel Dieu in Paris.
This Work contains a Description of the Urinary Apparatus, and of all the Operations now adopted in the Treatment of Stone; the Surgical Anatomy of the Ferinacum and Supra-public Region; and Remarks on the Causes and General Treatment of Gravet and Stone. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co-

Lately published, editions in French and English, ORKS of VISCOUNT CHATEAUBRIAND, containing—

1. Travels in Italy and America, 2 vols. 18s.
"We recognise in these Travels the elegant and romantic author of 'Atala,"—his fervid imagination and vivid descrip-

2. Celuta; or, the Natchez. An Indian Tale. 3 vols. anall 8 vo. 24s. French, 18s.

"There are scenes and portraits in this romance which the pencil of genius has exquisitely touched, and which will insure it fame and favour of no trivial description."—Literary Chrosicie.

3. Travels in the Holy Land, 2 vols.

4. On the Revolutions of Empires. 8vo. 8s. 5. The Spirit of Christianity, 3 vols. 8vo.

o. Ame opirit of Christianity, 3 vols. 8vo. 21s. Ditto, French, 18s.
"The greatest work of this writer is his 'Spirit of Christianity,' —a work of consummate ability and appendid eloquence, in which has enlisted in the cause of religion all the treasures of knowledge, and all the experience of ages."—Blackwood's Magazins, March.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

With Interesting Notes on Ancient Ireland, inscribed to S. T. Coleridge, Esq.
In 8vc. handsome cloth boards, price 5s.
THE DRUID; a Tragedy, in Five Acts.
With Notes on the Antiquities and Early History of

With Notes on the Antiquities and Early History of Ireland.

By THOMAS CROMWELL,
Author of "Oliver Cromwell and his Times," &c.

"This production was written as long since as 1820, and was then warmly praised by Mr. Coleridge."—Ballar.

"The plot is well chosen; the conception of the more important characters bold and original; the versification flowing and harmonious. Mr. Coleridge's favourable opinion of it in Ms. a dozen years ago, is a proof of Mr. Cromwell's more than Horatian modesty and judiciousness. Some valuable motes form a useful appendix to the drama."—New Monkhy Magazine.

"This work will be perused with considerable pleasure."—Metropolitan."

"We have passages of great poetical merit. The notes are carrious and valuable."—Sunday Yimes.

"Mr. Cromwell has thrown much incident and variety into his scenes, and considerable information into his notes. He is a most industry and talent."—Literary Gestivated taste, and no mall share of poetic power. The notes are more valuable than the original work."—Attherary.

London: Sherwood, Gilbert, and Piper, Paternoster Row.

Dedicated, by permission, to His Majesty.
In 8vo. price 12s. boards,
CERMONS on CHRISTIAN DUTIES. By the Rev. MONTAGU JOHN WYNYARD, B.D. lector of St. Martin's and West Rounton, in the County of York; and Chaplain to the Right Hoa. the Earl of Roseberry. Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

BYRON'S LIFE and WORKS, Vol. IV.

HISTORY of the SEVEN CHURCHES of ASIA; their Rise, Progress, and Decline, with Notices of the Churches of Trailes, Nagnesta, Colone, Historia, Lyons, and Viennes, designed to show the Fulfilment of Septiment. Lyons, and Vienne; designed to shew the Fulfilment of Scr ture Prophecy.

By the Rev. T. MILNER, A.M.

Price 12r.

London: Holdsworth and Ball, 18, St. Paul's Churchyard.

Military Maxims of Napoleon.
In 1 vol. 5s. boards,
THE OFFICER'S MANUAL; Military
Maxims of Napoleon. Translated from the French,
By COLONEL D'AGUILAR,
Deputy Adjutant-Gen. to the Trops serving in Ireland.
Dublin, Richard Milliken and Son; London, J. Egerton, Military Library, Whitehall; and Longman and Co. 86, Paternoster
Row.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

Gorton's Population Returns.

Shortly will be published, in 1 vol. 8vo.

THE POPULATION Of every PLACE in GREAT BRITAIN, according to the Returns made to Parliament in 1831, together with the Annual Value of Real Property, as Aussesed in 1815; the whole arranged in strict Alphabetical Order. perty, as Au

By JOHN GORTON,
Editor of the New Topographical Dictionary.
London: Chapman and Hall, 186, Strand.

HE MAID of ELVAR, a Poem, in Twelve Parts.

By ALLAN CUNNINGHAM.
Just published, in 9 vols. 18mo. price 10s. boards,

Selections from the Prose and Poetical Works of Robert Southey, Esq.

Edward Mozon, 64, New Bond Street.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OPPICE, 7, Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strond, and 18, South Messiton Street, Oxfor-Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royel Exchange; E. Mariborough, Ave Marie Lane, Ludgest Hill: A. Dick, Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinson and Ca. Glasgow; and J. Cumming, Dublin. — Agest for America, O. Rich, 12, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 795.

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1832.

PRICE 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Matilda," "Yes and No," &c. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

THERE is certainly no reputation of so high an order as that to be acquired in literature: it is of a nature essentially disinterested and universal-disinterested, as far as reward goes, for the same time, and a tithe of the talent that procures literary success, would, if directed in any other channel, have been remunerated tenfold-universal, for the influence of a book is not even bounded by its language, but is acknowledged and felt by many whose existence was not so much as surmised by the writer. Whose are the names of old the most familiar to our lips? Those who have poured forth their minds, and intrusted their memories to "the printed page." Our English literature has from the earliest period been indebted for some of its highest ornaments to its aristo-cracy; and it is well it should be so. Genius, wholly unaided save by its own exertions, will doubtless work its way upwards into full daylight; but the distress and difficulty will have too often left something of their disappointment and their jealousy behind; and, as regards others, literature is somewhat degraded from that high feeling which alone constitutes its excellence, by being looked upon as mere mat-ter of business. When, therefore, a man whose rank secures those pleasures which lead to selfish indulgence, or ensures that independence which is too often idleness-when such a man is stimulated to composition, partly by that inherent necessity to exertion which there ever is in talent, and partly from an honourable de-sire of the approbation of others, he does good service to the cause. He shews, by his own example, the finer motives that urge on to honour, and brings to his work those cultivated qualities, and that larger knowledge of life, which are rarely within the reach of the merely professional author. It is a noticeable fact, too, that most of the noble names which grace the library have been of the world-statesmen, &c., whose services to their country shewed how much their talents had been sharpened and increased by their varied and extended devotion to less grave and important literary pursuits.

We have often had occasion to express our contempt for the trash put into three volumes, and called "fashionable novels." Many of our contemporaries have echoed this opinion, but certainly without entering into the principle on which it was founded. We do not object sim-ply because scenes are laid in what is called "the fashionable world," but we object to their representing that world without either acquaintance with it, or ability to paint it. A novel now should be what genteel comedy was-the picture of actual manners: but we protest against being taken into an upholsterer's, and told that it is, development of mind, the interest of the pointed them out to all about her. Any omisfeelings, lively sketches of peculiar and general character, and something, too, of the instruction which is always to be drawn from moral investigation. Pelham and Yes and No are, perhaps, the only paintings of the present time which are drawn with the accuracy of knowledge and the vivacity of talent. Were we to be asked by a foreigner to recommend those novels which, founded on truth, gave the most iust delineation of the higher classes in England, it is to the above-mentioned works we should refer. The present volumes, however, are an infinite improvement on their predecessor; they embody much more thought, and take a wider range; they have less caricature and more character, and possess the rather uncommon merit of a very interesting story. The design is to paint a man whose strong feelings are curbed by an over-fastidiousnessthe French so happily term un homme difficile. Naturally romantic, association with the world disgusts rather than hardens him; he is suspicious of his own adventitious advantages, and desires to be loved for himself. He marries, in a fit of disappointment, a farmer's beautiful daughter, and realises his romance, from which he awakens, to find that he has entailed upon himself all the misery attendant on an uncongenial union. This sketch is wrought out with equal truth and tact. The author keeps alive our sympathy in the three prominent characters with great skill: it is impossible not to sympathise with the sweet and simple creature so utterly unfitted by nature for her situation : but we must own we have a still stronger feeling for her stronger-minded and higher-toned rival. The contrast between the two is beautiful. The character of Lord Castleton, the hero, too, is original and well sustained; it is an admirable exemplification of the faults which spring out of virtues. When self-indulgence is the principle of action, a little misfortune in early life is a prodigious benefit, were it only to make us believe in disinterested kindness! It is scarcely possible for a very prosperous person, though acute, not to be suspicious of motives; for he must necessarily judge by the surface, which is the worst part, of human nature.

But here we own our critical incapacity: a tale of gradually worked up interest, of gradually developed qualities, cannot be set forth in a few quotations. All we can do is to give a brief specimen and a strong recommendation. We choose the following portrait, as being out of what might be supposed the writer's linethough, truly, we most of us know a Mrs. Darnell.

" Mrs. Darnell was a most worthy woman correct in all her intentions, exemplary in the discharge of all her duties, from the religious down to the domestic; but she was a person of an unfortunately minute mind, with a sort of clock-work regularity of sensations: with her, each duty, of every degree, was, in its allotted succession, of equal importance; and, undis-sion of the due decorum of any rule, she treasured up, not till it had been obliterated by subsequent punctuality, but till it was succeeded by some fresh deficiency; by which means she contrived that she should never be without a grievance-not that she was ever in consequence loud or angry — this she would have thought wrong; but she put on a most provoking appearance of patient endurance, which was exactly the sort of look her husband could least bear, and which inducing, in consequence, occasional violent ebullitions on his part, gave her the reputation amongst those who knew little of both, of suffering meekly under his violence, whilst the many more frequent occasions in which he had yielded at length, for the sake of repurchasing a smiling face at his domestic hearth, were unnoticed, because unknown.

There is a touch of simplicity in the effect of the good dame upon her husband that is delightful. "Richard Darnell had done his best for many years to try to love her, and would at that very hour have been very much surprised if any body had told him that he had not succeeded, for he always assured his acquaintance at the market-town, to which he went once a-week, 'that for sixteen years he had been married to his Missus, and he never had had so much as one occasion to find fault with her. He dropped at these times all mention of those many occasions on which she had found fault with him, which had led to those altercations mentioned above."

We will add to this the scene in which the heroine first appears, premising that Lord Castleton was escorting a lady, with whom he had had a somewhat serious flirtation, on a pic-nic party.

"He looked up on one side at the fantastic forms of the venerable trunks, whose roots had for centuries been entwined in the rocky crags from which they grew, but whose wide spreading branches then luxuriated in the green vigour of a summer foliage; and he looked down on the other, at the clear unruffled surface of the brook, which ran murmuring below them. He scented the freshness of the hitherto untrodden fern, as his feet passed over it; and he then cast his eyes upon the fascinating but fane beauty by his side, and felt that there was something uncongenial in visiting such a scene under the protection of such a guardian genius, one certainly better adapted to the artificial state in which he had been lately living than to the freshness and nature of the pre-

"It may already have been seen that Lord Castleton was by nature sufficiently romantic, and therefore he was immediately involved in a labyrinth of thick-coming recollections, which completely took off his attention from the occupation which would lately not have been without its interest, when all his pleasing reveries is a splendid gallery of works of art. What turbed by any deviation into feeling, she not were dispelled by that voice, whose tones he we require in such a production of our day only observed them herself, but, like the dial, most appropriate expression for admiration of enhanced by her extreme youth." such a scene; but Lord Castleton was too grateful to her at the time for shewing any feeling on the subject, to object to the aptness of the terms in which she vented it. The tion of human character, and drawn that accu-'sweet spot' was a deeply indented bay, surrounded with perpendicular cliffs of a great height, which, towards the two extremities of the inlet, cut the water in the shape of boldly jutting crags. In the centre they were intersected by the deep glen through which the party had descended, at the bottom of which the mountain-stream found its way to the sea; and even down to the beach, the sides of this glen were covered with fine trees and thriving shrubs—a rare circumstance in our northern latitudes. There was in the solitude of the scene itself, and the grandeur of the outlines by which it was enclosed, that which seemed to mark it as a spot where, in one of her angry moods, Nature might choose to threaten some of those more awful and sublime appearances which she sometimes assumes; but at present, the gaiety of the season, the mildness of the air, the splendour of the setting sun, and the calmness of the sea, the sameness of whose measured splash against the shore was not broken by the slightest swell from without. produced no more than a pleasing sensation of repose. There was no human habitation visible from the sea-shore; but on one of the banks which formed the sides of the glen, about half way from the summit to the shore, just on the single spot where the slope was more gradual, some smoke was seen curling from behind a grove of dwarf oaks; and still higher, taking advantage of a southern exposure, there appeared a garden, which ran upwards, till the cliff again becoming too perpendicular, it only communicated with the top by means of some steps cut in the rock, evidently with great attention to safety and even convenience. Judging by the little that could be seen of the environs of this dwelling, it might either be the residence of some retired mariner, who chose to pass his latter days upon an acquired competence, still within sight, though safe from the attacks of that element, which had been the scene of his earlier adventures; or it might, on the other hand, be the dwelling of some opulent farmer, who had sought the shelter of this southern slope, from that exposure to which the upper land must there be subject. At first, the party imagined that they were the only living creatures that at present tenanted the semi-circular shores of the bay; but upon passing the angle of a rock which projected almost to the water's edge, Lord Castleton and Lady Madelina discovered two youthful figures leaning against the gunwale of a solitary fishingboat, which was moored close up to the cliff. The eldest of these two seemed a stout, healthy. looking lad of about sixteen. By his side stood one of those figures which occasionally and unexpectedly cross our path, to put us again in good humour with human fort could not get asked to Lady Delacour's among the nobly-born would have been said to nexion of history, sacred and profane, may be ball? The disgust that he felt at this ill bear the stamp of high birth—which, in the traced with a great degree of certainty up to timed turn to his thoughts, he was not obliged land of ancient tradition and sculptured authority with the period of the general dispersion; and the rity would have been said to shew the signs of Biblical references to Gentile history, through a in sight of the beautiful bay to which they pure classical extraction, was found lowly born long series of ages, explained and illustrated. had been destined; and even Lady Madelina in an obscure corner of a rugged clime. Even could not help exclaiming, 'What a sweet the delicacy, which gave an unlooked-for charm spot!' Now, a sweet spot was not exactly the to the appearance of one in that situation, was > Too brief and imperfect as this review is, we must nevertheless conclude. In our opinion, Lord Mulgrave has shewn that keen perceprate estimate of human nature, which though here exhibited on a work of fancy, eminently prove how well fitted he is to exercise his faculties in the higher scale of governing realities. For it is a foolish and thoughtless notion, that the less improving to the mind because it occasionally stoops to scan the many-coloured paths of life: on the contrary, the habit alone is of immense advantage to the Individual; and the insight thus acquired is equally applicable to all the great events which may occur for decision and energy when checkering his own exalted career. The Captain-General of Jamaica will be a wiser man, and one more prompt to act in emergencies, from having written Contrast-at once an able and interesting work.

> Ancient Fragments of the Phanician, Chaldwan, Egyptian, Tyrian, Carthaginian, Indian, Persian, and other Writers; with an Introductory Dissertation, and an Inquiry into the Philosophy and Trinity of the Ancients. By Isaac Preston Cory, Esq. Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge. 2d edit. 8vo. pp. circ. 500. London, 1832. Pickering.
> All our certain historical knowledge of the origin of mankind, of their first advances in religion and civilisation, and of the earliest revolutions, moral and physical, by which their destinies were affected, of the original geo-graphical distribution of the earth, and of the foundation and progress of primitive states, is derived from the sacred annals of the Jewish nation. These annals conduct us uninterruptedly down to the age in which authentic profane history, verified by recorded astronomical observations, takes its origin; so that the records of inspiration and of science together, present an unbroken series of events and times, which connects the root of all history with pass-ing occurrences. As the former ascends to ages into which science cannot penetrate, so the latter connects the period at which revelation ceases to throw light on the events of ancient history, with the times of the Gospel record and subsequent ages; filling up the outline of the periods of prophecy.

Besides the inspired account of the primeval state and revolutions of the world, we, however, find traditions, more or less perfect, of the same events—the creation, the deluge, the dispersion of mankind, &c .- prefixed to the records of most primitive nations, traditions which, if standing alone, would perhaps be unworthy of the name of history; but which, when collated with the former, assume a high degree of interest and importance in themselves, besides taking the character of a number of independnature, and prevent our being entirely disgusted which the endless varieties of ugliness of which the mortal machine is capable, by shewing, on the other hand, the perfection of which the same conformation is sometimes susceptible, in every ent witnesses to its validity and divine truth.

apropos inquiry. 'So, after all, Lady Wait-! rank and all situations. Here, a form which Egypt, and other countries. Hence the con-

That an acquaintance with the heathen antiquities alluded to, cannot be dispensed with by the archæologist, by the inquirer into Biblical history, or by any who take an interest in tracing the progress of the history, the theology, and philosophy of the human race, from their origin downwards, is on all hands agreed ; and dark must be the mind which could refuse its assent to this proposition. The fragments of this species of learning, which have survived the wreck of ages, and which form no part of the established courses of study, are, however, so widely dispersed among the folios of the in order to write fiction well, the deepest study fathers, of the chronographers of the lower is not necessary. Metaphysical inquiry is not empire, and of other ecclesiastical writers, and in some instances of ancient Greek historians,—many of them scarce, some generally inaccessible, and the whole to be found in, perhaps, no single library; that in their original form they have been hitherto accessible to but few, and a moderate acquaintance with them. even by the learned, was not to be attained without intense labour and research; while such portions of those arcana of history as have been more extensively known, were hitherto wholly confined to abstruse essays and disquisitions, in which nothing more of them is to be found than suited the writer's immediate purpose. Hence the merely English reader, and, in the majority of cases, the classical scholar. has been precluded from the opportunity of carrying his researches into one of the most interesting, and (when viewed in connexion with Biblical literature) one of the most important departments of inquiry,—a department to which original materials of great moment have been added, even since the commencement of the present century. Yet this century was suffered to arrive without any thing like a useful and generally available collection of these materials having been made; for to this the partial though elaborate Greek collections to be found in the ample folios of Scaliger, whose fame is mainly built upon his great erudition in this branch of study, cannot be viewed as an exception. Neither does his ponderous apparatus, in consequence of its omissions and oversights, supersede the necessity of reference to the originals; we of course mean reference by the learned, for to none but the learned are the pages of Scaliger addressed.

Of the utility and importance, therefore, of a complete, portable, and readable collection of the materials in question, every scholar and lover of truth must be sensible. And fortunately this desideratum in literature is at length supplied by the indefatigable labours of Mr. Cory; addressed to the learned reader in the languages in which the fragments have been preserved. to the unlearned in English translations, and recommended to the critic and the philologist by a host of different versions and various readings, which Scaliger himself never contemplated; and the volume before us presents a far more complete, as well as portable, and better digested collection, than we had any reason to hope for in this almost untried field of compilation. It will, we predict, be welcomed as

and other countries.

Our readers will remember that the first edition of Mr. Cory's work issued in 1828 from the classical press of Mr. Pickering. We hailed its appearance at that time as very opportune for the furtherance of the most interesting inquiry of the day (of which our co-lamns were then presenting the public with the accumulating results)-namely the revived Egyptian literature—in consequence, particularly, of the volume making accessible to every reader-among many other fragments of primitive history (Phænician, Chaldæan, Tyrian, &c.) important to antiquarian and Biblical research, and from which all but scholars, and those of the more laborious description, had been previously shut out—the celebrated Egyptian Dynasties of Manetho and Eratosthenes both in the original Greek and in Euglish translations. The opinion which we then entertained of its utility to all persons engaged in the study of the Egyptian hieroglyphics, of sacred history, and, indeed, of antiquities in general, is confirmed, in a manner creditable to the public taste, by the call for the present enlarged edition.

The preceding edition was limited to the most generally approved copy or version of each fragment—the whole collection not extending beyond those fragments best known to the learned world. The work is now, however, greatly augmented-perhaps to four times its original extent: and its utility as an apparatus for inquiry into the primitive history and philosophy of the human race, and a companion to sacred history, increased in a proportionate ratio. To the character of an indefatigable scholar, it will presently appear our author now, moreover, adds that of the man of science and the philosopher. In order that an apparatus of this nature may be truly useful, it must faithfully represent the widely scattered originals in their various forms and languages; by the collation of which the mistakes of transcribers may be rejected, and an accurate text obtained, or at least approximated-a sort of Polyglot, to which the critic may refer with confidence for the different versions and readings of those records which stood in the place of sacred history in the ancient Gentile world.

Fully answering to these required conditions —as regards the remains of the profane history, theology, and philosophy of primitive times, preserved by the Greek and Latin writers—the present work embraces, in a most comprehensive and useful form, nearly all those recorded pagan traditions which are immediately connected with sacred history, or which can be brought directly to bear upon the general antiquities of the first ages of the world. Less in size than many indexes, it is in itself a library of that sort of historical knowledge most difficult of attainment, most necessary to be grounded on original authorities, and the want of which has occasioned many an otherwise most learned disquisition to abound with blunders. None but the patient reader of the volumes contained on the lower shelves of libraries, can justly estimate the time and labour that will be saved to the student by this little book, which, even if viewed by scholars only in the light of a guide to the sources whence it has been derived, will still create a facility of reference that has never before existed; while to the unlearned reader it for the first time unlocks the genuine storehouse of antiquity, and unfolds to him all that is necessary to the sacred and profane history, to the connexion of the canons of the Old and New Testaments, and the general elucidation of remote ages. We do not hesitate, therefore, to pronounce the appearance of this work to be a step in the general diffusion of useful knowledge, inferior to none which have been taken, within our critical experience, to satisfy the calls on an era insatiable in the pursuit of information.

As an example of the comprehensive nature and clear arrangement of the work, we quote a portion of the author's introductory discourse. in which the nature and contents of the volume are explained, and a clear and satisfactory view of the progress of early Gentile history, theology, and philosophy, placed before the reader, within the short compass of fifty or sixty pages.

"The contents, then, of this volume are fragments which have been translated from foreign languages into Greek, or have been quoted or transcribed by Greeks from foreign authors, or have been written in the Greek language by foreigners who have had access to the archives of their own countries. Yet, to render the collection more useful, and, as it were, a manual to the chronologist and mythological antiquary, I have added, by way of supplement, such fragments and extracts as appear to have descended from more ancient sources. though they are now to be found only in the works of Greek or Latin writers. Some of these are merely illustrations of the fragments. or contain detached chronological notices, or such other curious information as may well be deemed worthy of a place. Thus, I have en-deavoured to comprise in the volume all the genuine relics of antiquity which precede the era of Grecian history, and which lie so scattered among the folios, chiefly of the fathers and the philosophers of the lower empire, as to be inaccessible to the antiquary, unless in the neighbourhood of some large public library."

On the most copious, and perhaps most interesting, department, he remarks:-"The intense interest which Egyptian history has excited, from the discovery of the interpretation of the hieroglyphics, has induced me to spare no labour or expense in rendering this part of the work as perfect as circumstances would allow. The Laterculus, or canon of the kings of Thebes, was compiled from the archives of that city, by Eratosthenes, the libra-rian of Ptolemæus Philadelphus. It is followed by the old Egyptian chronicle, with a Latin version of the same, from the Excerpta Barbara, and another from the Armenian Chronicle of Eusebius; they contain a summary of the dynasties of Egypt. To these succeed the Egyptian dynasties of Manetho, whose introductory letter to King Ptolemæus, given in a subsequent page, explains the nature of his work. and the materials from whence it was compiled. I have placed the six different versions of the Dynasties of Manetho that are extant confronting each other. The canon of the kings of Egypt, from Josephus, I have compiled from the historical fragments of Manetho; and I have thrown it into the form of a canon, to facilitate comparison. I have next given a very important canon, the first part of which, from Mestraim to the end of the seventeenth dynasty, is preserved by Syncellus only; from the beginning of the eighteenth it is continued also in the fragments of Eusebius; and from hence to the conclusion, four different versions of it will be found. To these are added the canons of all the kings of Egypt mentioned by Diodorus Siculus and Herodotus. They were origin-a boon by, and become a standard authority historical vindication of the sacred origins of ally compiled by Scaliger, but I have corrected among, the learned and the reflecting of this mankind and of nations, to the harmonising of them, and given them, with several very imthem, and given them, with several very important additions, in the original words of the authors, instead of in the words of Scaliger himself. They are followed by the canon of Theophilus Antiochenus; and, after several very important chronological extracts upon the antiquities of Egypt, I have completed the dynasties with a canon of the early Egyptian, Chaldman, and Assyrian kings, from the Syriac Chronicle of Bar-hebraus; which I have placed beside each other as they are synchronised by that author, and given them in the English letters corresponding to the Syriac, instead of adopting the Latinised names of the translators. I have, therefore, comprised in this part of the work no less than nineteen catalogues of the Egyptian kings, with all the various readings that occur in the different versions of the same. They have been compiled with the greatest care; and I have purposely abstained from all reference to the hieroglyphics, that I might not be misled by any preconceived opinion."

The author's arrangement of the six versions of Manetho, here modestly alluded to, will afford a fair instance of the saving of time and labour, and the facility of reference, occasioned by his work-when it is borne in mind that to collate the six versions in question it has been hitherto necessary for the critic to have nearly that number of folios and quartos open on his table-an object now attainable by the opening of a single octavo volume. The like may be said of Mr. Cory's arrangement of the four chronographic canons of the kings of Egypt. To these examples of the scope and arrangement of the work, let us add a specimen or two of the author's clear-sightedness, and of his happy method of drawing his conclusions.

"Both in ancient and modern times, the Greeks have been accused of a kind of plagiarism, which was the prevailing custom of every nation upon earth. Egypt and India, and Phœnicia, no less than Greece, have appropriated to themselves, and assigned within their own territorial limits, the localities of the grand events of primeval history, with the birth and achievements of the gods and heroes, the deluge, the origin of the arts, and the civilisation of mankind. And their claims have found more able supporters, only because they have not been so obviously liable to refutation. Yet, by rejecting each country whose claims rest upon no better foundation than its own local histories, and retaining those only whose pre-tensions are substantiated by the concurrent testimony of the rest, it may be shewn, independently of Scripture, that the primitive settlements of mankind were in such places, and attended with such circumstances, as the Scripture instructs us was the case.'

Again: "The most remarkable feature in the heathen theology is the multiplicity of its gods. The easy temper of polytheism, as it has been called, hesitated not to adopt the divinities of the surrounding nations; while the deifica-tion, not only of heroes and kings, but of the virtues and vices, with the genii of the woods and waters, mountains and cities, contributed to introduce new and strange inmates into the Pantheon. But if we eject these modern in-truders, if we restore to their original seats the imported deities, such as Pan to Arcadia, Hermes to Egypt, Osiris to Memphis, Hercules to Tyre, and Dionysus to India; and if we investigate the origin of each, we shall find every nation, notwithstanding the variety of names, acknowledging the same deities and the same system of theology: and, however humble any of the deities may appear in the Pantheons of Greece and Rome, each, who has any claim to antiquity, will be found ultimately, if not immediately, resolvable into the original god or goddess, into one or other of the two primeval principals."

[To be continued.]

Arlington. By the author of "Herbert Lacy," "Granby," &c. Post 8vo. 3 vols. Colburn and Bentley.

An amusing tale, with some pleasant reflective writing interspersed, which in former times would have taken the shape of essays. are so hurried with the late arrival of the sheets, and having also another work of fiction already in this sheet, that we can do no more than give an extract or so. A London marriage, as described by its spectators:

" I mention them merely as an illustration of the way in which these things are managed in this free country. The Hobsons are good country folks, with an uncommonly pretty daughter, whom they justly think capable of much better things than subduing subalterns at race-halls. Ever since she came out they have been disposed to speculate in sons-in-law: and as London is the best market, Hobson père mortgages a few acres, and last year bought a house in town to carry on the marriage-trade with. Up they came, open-mouthed, for heirs. apparent, and every engine was set at work to launch the girl with éclat. Five patronesses were canvassed by nine friends touching Almack's,—dandy critics were bribed by dinners to puff. Beauchamp, in particular, was very kind, and took the trouble of making a great deal of love to her, by way of bringing her into notice: so the girl, as you know, was brought into notice, and the Hobsons balled, and routed, and déjeuner'd, and water-party'd it indefatigably through the season. Three good partis were tried, but in vain; they had not served their artillery well enough. But last season they brought their ménage and collaterals to bear, and opened the trenches before Lord Settle with a very full battery of friends. Never was poor man so inextricably made love to as Settle: they beset him till he could not dine except by the side of Miss Hobson. There he was, always surrounded by her friends, smothered with attentions, like a man encrusted in sugar-candy; so warmly treated, and flattered, and admired, that I believe he was glad to escape to the damsel herself for the refreshment of a little coldness. But it has succeeded, -Hobson père is half ruined, but the daughter will be Lady Settle."

English travellers.

"'Listen,' said he, 'and you will hear more of the uses and advantages of travel.' Mr. Theobald at that instant was speaking to Lord Bolsover. 'I will just tell you what I did. Brussels, Frankfort, Berlin, Vienna, Munich, Milan, Naples, and Paris; and all that in two months. No man has ever done it in less.' 'That's a fast thing; but I think I could have done it,' said Lord Bolsover, 'with a good courier. I had a fellow once, who could ride a hundred miles a day for a fortnight. ' I came from Vienna to Calais,' said young Leightor. 'in less time than the government courier. No other Englishman ever did that.' 'Hem! I am not sure of that,' said Lord Bolsover; 'but I'll just tell you what I have done _from Rome to Naples in nineteen hours; a fact, upon my honour — and from Naples to Paris in six days.' Partly by sea?' 'No! all by land;' replied Lord Bolsover, with a look of proud satisfaction. 'I'll just tell you what I did,' Mr. Leighton chimed in again, 'and I think it is a devilish good plan - it shews what one can do. I went straight an end, as fast as I could, to what was to be the end of my journey. This was Sicily; so straight away I went there at the devil's own rate, and never stopped any where by the way; changed horses at Rome and all those places, and landed in safety in I forget exactly how long from the time of starting, but I have got it down to an odd minute. As for the places I left behind, I saw them all on my way back, except the Rhine, and I steamed down that in the night-time. 'I have travelled a good deal by night,' said Theobald. 'With a dormeuse and travelling lamp I think it is pleasant, and a good plan of getting on.' 'And you can honestly say, I suppose, said Denbigh, 'that you have slept successfully through as much fine country as any man living?' 'Oh, I did see the country any man living?" that is, all that was worth seeing. My courier knew all about that, and used to stop and wake me whenever we came to any thing remarkable. Gad! I have reason to remember it, too, for I caught an infernal bad cold one night when I turned out by lamp-light to look at a waterfall. I never looked at another.'

We rather believe the chief mystery of the story to be founded on fact. It is curious how, now and then, some old event turns up into general notice: the same incident was lately the groundwork of a nevel recently published called "Gerald Fitzgerald;" and we are often strongly reminded of Hook's "Cousin William." Mr. Lister, the author, mixing with fashionable society, should be able to give us correct pictures of life in the upper circles; but were they ever so perfect, we could not spare another inch this week for an etching of the highest order.

The Hunchback. By J. Sheridan Knowless London. Moxon.

In our criticism upon this play as acted, we incidentally touched so much upon its merits as a dramatic composition, that little remains for us now to do but to demonstrate by extracts the grounds on which we formed our highly favourable opinion. Founded almost entirely upon the elder dramatists, and often bearing a close resemblance to them, Mr. Knowles is yet a man of too much genius to sink into servile imitation. Had he lived at the same time, he might have been a formidable rival to Massinger, between whom, indeed, in many respects, and our present author there is a strong affinity-we will boldly say, not to the disadvantage of the latter. The plot is founded on a romantic parental feeling, and wrought up with great interest to the dénouement, which is concealed with due cunning till very near the end. The parts and characters also balance well against each other-the early country, against the concluding town, scenes the two female cousins of such different temperaments-the Hunchback and Clifford and so down even to the less prominent situations and persons. Of the style we have already expressed our admiration: many just images are produced, many beautiful sentiments enforced, and often clothed in a garb of language finely suited either to the poetical imagining or the strength of reasoning required by the subject. Walter tempts Clifford to woo Julia thus:—

"Form
And feature has she, wherein move and glow
The charms that in the marble cold and still,
Cull'd by the sculptor's jealous skill, and joined there,
Inspire us. Sir, a maid before whose feet
A duke—a duke might lay his coronet,
To lift her to his state, and partner her.
A fresh heart too! A young fresh heart, sir; one
That Cupld has not toy'd with, and a warm one—

" Form

Fresh, young, and warm—mark that! a mind to boot. Wit, sir; sense, taste—a garden strictly tended, Where nought but what is costly flourishes—A consort for a king, sir! Thou shalt see her. Clifford. I thank you, Master Walter. As you speak, Methinks i see me at the altar foot, Her hand fast locked in mine—the ring put on; My wedding bell rings merry in my ear; And round me throng glad tongues that give me joy To be the bridegroom of so fair a bride. Walter. Walter.

What! sparks so thick? We'll have a blaze anon!"

We have next a charming dialogue between Helen and Julia, in which their dispositions are prettily contrasted, on a discussion between town and country pleasures.

"Julia. Helen, you know the adage of the tree.

I've ta'en the bend. This rural life of mine,
Enjoined me by an unknown father's will,
I've led from infancy. Debarred from hope
Of change, I ne'er have sighed for change. The to
To me was like the moon, for any thought
I e'er should visit it—nor was I schooled
To think it half so fair.

Helen. Not half so fair!
The town's the sun; and thou hast dwelt in night The town

Holen. Not half so fair!
The town's the sun; and thou hast dwelt in night
E'er since thy birth, not to have seen the town;
Their women there are queens, and kings their men Their houses palaces.

E'er since thy birth, not to have seen the town. Their women there are queens, and kings their mentheir houses palaces.

Julia.

And what of that?

Have your town palaces a hall like this?

Couches so fragrant, walls so high adorned?

Casements with such festoons, and such look-out, As these fair vistas have? Your kings and queens? See me a May-day queen, and talk of them!

Holem. Extremes are ever neighbours—'tis a stcp From one to h' other. Were thy constancy?

A reasonable thing! A little less

Of constancy. A woman's constancy!

I should not wonder wert thou ten years hence
The maid I know thee now; but, as it is,
The odds are ten to one, that this day year

Will see our May-day queen a city one.

Julia. Never! I'm wedded to a country life.

O! did you hear what Master Walter says?

Nine times in ten, the town's a hollow thing,
Where what things are is nought to what they shew—
Where merit's name laughs merit's self to scorn—
Where friendship and esteem, that ought to be
The tenants of men's hearts, lodge in their looks
And tongues alone—where little virtue, with
A costly keeper, passes for a heap;
A heap for none that has a homely one—
Where fashion makes the law, your umpire which You bow to, whether it has brains or not—
Where folly taketh off his cap and bells
To clap on Wisdom, which must bear the jest—
Where to pass current you must seem the thing,
The passive thing, that others think, and not
Your simple, honest, independent self.

Julia follows up the same train of ideas

Julia follows up the same train of ideas in her interview with Clifford; and he treats them with all the skill of an accomplished, as well as ardent lover.

rdent lover.

"Julia. You have known me scarce a minute.

Cifford. Say but a moment, still I say I love you.

Love's not a flower that grows on the dull earth,

Springs by the calendar, must wait for sun,

For rain, matures by parts, must take its time

To stem, to leaf, to bud, to blow. It owns

A richer soil, and boasts a quicker seed;

You look for it, and see it not; and, by

E'en while you look, the peerless flower is up,

Consummate in the birth!

"Julia.

"Julia. Must lead a country life.
Clifford. The life l'd lead—
But fools would fly from it; for, O! 'tis sweet; It finds the heart out, be there one to find, And corners in't where store of pleasures lodge We never dreamed were there. It is to dwell 'Mid smiles that are not neighbours to describe. And corners in't where store of pleasures lodge We never dreamed were there. It is to dwell 'Mid smiles that are not neighbours to decait; Music whose sweet melody is of the heart; Abund affis, that are not made for interest, Abundantly bestowed by nature's cheek, And voice, and hand. It is to live on life, And husband it—it is to constant scan
The hand-work of heaven—it is to con Its mercy, bounty, wisdom, power—it is To nearer see our God!
Julia. How like he talks
To Master Walter! Shall I give it up?
Not yet. Thou would'st not live one half a year—A quarter might'st thou, for the novelty
Of fields and trees; but then it needs must be In summer time, when they go dressed.

Or neins and trees; but then it needs must in summer time, when they go dressed. Clifford. Not it. In any time—say winter! Fields and trees Have charms for me in very winter time. Julia. But snow may clothe them then. Clifford. I like them full As well in snow.

Julia. You do?

Cifford, 1 do."

Digitized by Google

The subjoined is a pretty figure of speech :-

" Tell me, prithee, which is likelier Ten me, prince, which is likelier
To plough a sea in safety, he that's wont
To sail in it, or he that by the chart
Is master of its soundings, bearings; knows
Its headlands, havens, currents; where 'tis bold,
And where behoves to keep a good look-out.
The one will swim where sinks the other one."

Our next quotations are various, and all fine touches upon the poet's finest theme-love.

- " O Julia, I have ventured for thy love. As the bold merchant who, for only hope Of some rich gain, all former gains will risk. Before I asked a portion of thy heart I perilled all my own, and now all's lost."
- " A young woman's heart, sir, A young womans neart, sir, is not a stone to carve a posy on.

 Which knows not what is writ on't—which you may buy,

 Exchange, or sell, sir, keep or give away, sir:

 It is a richer, yet a poorer thing;

 Priceless to him that owns and prizes it;

 Worthless when own'd, not prized; which makes the man

That covets it, obtains it, and discards it, A fool, if not a villain, sir!"

"Love me! He never loved me! if he had, he ne'er He never loved me! If he had, he ne'er Had given me up! Love's not a spider's web But fit to mesh a fly—that you can break By only blowing on!! He never loved me! He knows not what love is, or, if he does, He has not been o'er chary of his peace, And that he'll find when I'm another's wife, Lost! lost to him for ever! Tears again! Why should I weep for him? Who make their woes Deserve them! what have I to do with tears?"

"Love's a heedless thing,
That never takes account of obstacles—
Makes plains of mountains, rivulets of seas,
That part it from its wish."

- Love's cunning of diaguises—spite of locks, Skin, vesture, it is she, and only she. What will not constant woman do for love, That's loved with constancy? Set her the task, Virtue approving, that will beffle her: O'ertax her offspring—patience, courage, wit— My life upon it."
- "What would you weigh 'gainst love
 That's true? Tell me with what you'd turn the scale—
 Yea, make the index waver? Wealth? A feather!
 Rank? Tinsel against bullion in the balance!
 The love of kindred? That to set 'gainst love,
 Friendship comes nearest to 't; but put it in,
 Friendship will kick the beam—weigh nothing 'gainst it.
 Weigh love against the world,
 Yet are they happy that have nought to say to it."

Our readers have heard of "a hole in the ballad;" and at our latest hour we have to acknowledge a deficiency in our copy of Hunchback, which prevents us from speaking more of its conclusion than as we heard it on the stage, when Miss Kemble, rising in force with her situation, gave all the author's pith and poetry with extraordinary effect. The two scenes with Clifford as Secretary, and Walter urging her to the marriage, are the finest, both for writing and acting, in the play.

In the end, again complimenting Mr. Knowless on his great achievement, we have, as critics, to note that many of his lines are weakened and disfigured by poor terminations; such low words as—in, of, than, with, which, that's, to, deform the style in almost every page.

Souvenirs sur Mirabeau. Par Etienne Diamont. And English translation, Recolle vtions of Mirabeau. London, 1832. Bull. [Second Notice: Conclusion.]

PREVIOUS to continuing our extracts from this most amusing and valuable work, we must animadvert on the careless style in which the translation has been executed. A few examples will suffice. For instance : Mirabeau, with bis usual facility of adoption, was so struck with a draught of a speech by Dumont, that he ex-pressed his intention of delivering it himself in the assembly, and declared he was determined " à lancer ce carreau brulant sur leurs têtes," This is rendered: " to throw that burning tile

Mirabeau employed. Again: his declaration, " un homme comme moi pourrait prendre cent mille écus, mais on n'a pas pour cent mille écus un homme comme moi," is thus Englished: " a man like me might take a hundred thousand crowns, but I am not to be bought for that sum;" thus completely missing the happy turn of the phrase-" a man like me might take a hundred thousand crowns, but they cannot have for a hundred thousand crowns a man like me.' Again: the expression "ma terrible hure" is translated "terrible locks." Now hure is a wild boar's head, in this case a singularly characteristic epithet. Speaking of La Fayette's presence of mind, Mirabeau remarked: " tout ce qu'il a de talent il le possède toujours." The point of this is lost by putting it, as is here done, in the past tense: "he has always possessed the same degree of talent he possesses now." The meaning is thus entirely perverted. The real bearing of the phrase is as follows: "whatever talent he has he always possesses It is needless to multiply instances; but these will shew the want of intelligence with which the translation has been executed. We now proceed to our quotations.

Regret of Mirabeau for his Youth .- " Exaggeration is the first penalty inflicted by the code of public opinion. He was so fully aware that, if he had enjoyed personal consideration, all France would have been at his feet, that there were moments when he would have consented to pass 'seven times through the heated furnace,' to purify the name of Mirabeau. I have seen him weep with grief, and heard him say, almost suffocated with sobs: 'I am cruelly expiating the errors of my youth !' '

The Actor's opinion of the Orator .the celebrated actor at the Théatre Français, was present. The force and dramatic effect of Mirabeau's eloquence, and the sublimity of his voice, had made a deep impression upon this distinguished comedian, who, with visible emotion, approached the orator to offer his compliments. 'Ah! Monsieur le Comte,' said he, in a pathetic tone of voice, 'what a speech! and with what an accent did you deliver it! You have surely missed your vocation!" "

Fine Remark. - " Nothing is more dangerous than to stimulate a weak man to acts beyond his strength; for when resistance to his will has shewn his real weakness, he has no resource left."

Epigrammatic Definition of Clavière. - " To him might be applied what Madame de Flahault said of Sieyes: that he was the most enterprising coward in the world."

We conclude with the account of Talleyrand. "M. de Talleyrand is descended from a family of sovereign counts, one of the most ancient houses in France. He was the eldest of three brothers; but being lame from infancy, he had been thought unworthy of figuring in the world, and was destined for the church, although he possessed not one of the qualifications which, in the Roman communion, can render this profession even tolerable. I have often heard him say, that, despised by his for nothing, he had contracted, from his earliest youth, a sombre and taciturn habit. Having been forced to yield the rights of primogeniture to a younger brother, he had never slept under the same roof with his parents. At the seminary he had but few intimate associates; and from his habitual chagrin, which rendered him unsociable, he was considered very proud. Condemned to the ecclesiastical state against his at their heads." Now, carreau is a thunder will, he did not imbibe sacerdotal sentiments fear from England. Lord Grenville was dry bolt, which is evidently the figure of speech and opinions, any more than Cardinal de Retz and many others. He even exceeded the limits of indulgence granted to youth and gentle blood; and his morals were any thing but clerical. But he managed to preserve appearances, and, whatever were his habits, no one knew better when to speak and when to be silent. I am not sure that he was not somewhat too ambitious of producing effect by an air of reserve and reflection. He was always at first very cold, spoke little, and listened with great attention. His features, a little bloated, seemed to indicate effeminacy; but his manly and grave voice formed a striking contrast with this expression. In society, he was always distant and reserved, and never exposed himself to familiarity. The English, who entertain the most absurd prejudices against the French, were surprised at finding in him neither vivacity, familiarity, indiscretion, nor national gaiety. A sententious manner, frigid politeness, and an air of observation, formed an impenetrable shield around his diplomatic character. When among his intimate friends he was quite a different being. He was particularly fond of social conversation, which he usually prolonged to a very late hour. Familiar, affectionate, and attentive to the means of pleasing, he yielded to a species of intellectual epicurism, and became amusing, that he might be himself amused. He was never in a hurry to speak, but selected his expressions with much care. The points of his wit were so acute, that to appreciate them fully required an ear accustomed to hear him speak. He is the author of the bon-mot quoted somewhere by Champfort, where Rulhière said, ' I know not why I am called a wicked man, for I never, in the whole course of my life, committed but one act of wickedness.' bishop of Autun, who had not previously taken any part in the conversation, immediately exclaimed, with his full sonorous voice, and significant manner, 'But when will this act be at an end?' This kind of wit belonged exclusively to him. He imbibed it from the writings of Fontenelle, of whom he was always a great admirer. He once related to me an abominable act of his colleague, C-, at which I indignantly exclaimed, 'The man who would do that, is capable of assassination!' 'No,' said M. de Talleyrand, 'not of assassination, but of poisoning!' His manner of story-telling is peculiarly graceful; and he is a model of good taste in conversation. Indolent, voluptuous, born to wealth and grandeur, he had yet, during his exile, accustomed himself to a life of privation; and he liberally shared with his friends the only resources he had left, arising from the sale of the wreck of his superb library, which fetched a very low price, because, even in London, party-spirit prevented a com-petition of purchasers. Talleyrand did not come to London for nothing. He had a long conference with Lord Grenville, of which I have read his written account. Its object was to point out the advantages which England might derive from France having a constitutional king, and to form a close connexion between the two courts. For, although the British cabinet parents as a being disgraced by nature and fit appeared determined, in the event of war, to preserve a strict neutrality, it was extremely reserved towards France, because it neither sympathised with the French government, nor believed in the stability of the French constitution. This coldness gave great disquietude to the cabinet of the Tuileries, and it was Talleyrand's object to bring them closer together, even if he could not unite them, and thus make sure that, at all events, France had nothing to and laconic; nor did he lend himself, in any part of the work is occupied by the details of take place in the blood, and in the carbon and way, to the furtherance of Talleyrand's views. notwithstanding the advantages they held out to England. It is well known that Lord Grenville afterwards represented the Bishop of Autun as a clever, but dangerous man. Mr. Pitt, when very young, visited France, and spent some time with the Archbishop of Rheims, Talleyrand's uncle. Here the latter became acquainted with him; and these young men passed several weeks together in friendly and familiar intercourse. But in the only interview decidedly opposed to the object of Talleyrand's civility to the nephew. On Tallevrand's prenotice of him, and the queen turned her back From that period he was excluded from the and the agent of a faction, - who could not actually be turned out of doors, but whom it was improper to receive well; and he could not hope for much success in a mission which began under such unfavourable auspices."

His position in London is much altered now, witness the Morning Post's accounts of Prince sion is made upon the nervous trunks and gan-Tallevrand and the Duchess de Dinos's parties. We must add one most characteristic remark: speaking of Mirabeau's death-bed, he observed, that " Mirabeau had dramatised his death." We now close this work with the warmest eulogiums: it is the history of a most important act in a most important revolution, and every page has its lesson: the careless reader will find amusement in it; and the more thoughtful, matter of serious reflection.

History and Medical Treatment of Cholera, as it appeared in Sunderland in 1831, &c. By W. Hazlewood, M.D., and W. Mordey, Surgeon. Pp. 151. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

Cholera, as it recently appeared in the Towns of Newcastle and Gateshead, &c. By T. M. Greenhow. Pp. 162. London. Highley.

Thoughts on Cholera Asphyxia. By Robert
Bree, M.D., F.R.S. Pp. 71. London, 1832. Wilson.

Lectures on Carbon, Oxygen, and Vitality; with Remarks on Asiatic Cholera. By George Rees, M.D. Pp. 107. London. Highley. NONE in this country have contributed more to the pathology of cholera than the authors of the first book upon our list; and we feel grieved that more activity in bringing their labours before the public did not entitle them to that merit which has now become the property of so many. It will be needless to enter into the details of these researches, as they have been corroborated by all subsequent observations; and very little additional information has been obtained, if we except the supposed affection of the ganglionic nerves, or the diseased state of the glands of the gastro-enteric mucous surface, and the additional number of structures which have of late been found to be involved in the functional embarrassment of the vascular system. The contagious characters of the disease were too clearly manifested in the town of Sunderland not to have caught the attention judgment, fail. of two such accurate observers; and we accordingly find that the results of their experience most creditable production to its authors.

glia of the sympathetic, or whether it only reaches these in a secondary manner, through Poland, Homer, and other Poems. their minute ramifications in the alimentary tube, as the author is inclined to believe, has long been set at rest, by considerations founded on the mode of attack, which is not always an affection of the gastro-enteric. For the same reason, congestion does not originate entirely from diminished power in the larger vessels, but also from nervous influence on the periphery of the human body. The treatment adopted at Newcastle was in most respects similar to that put in force at Sunderland. Three new remedies, however, Mr. Greenhow mentions, as having been introduced into practice in the former place: these were, mustard emetics, copious warm injections, and the tobacco enema. The first was brought into notice by Drs. Smith and Gibson; to the second the author lays claim, though we could refer him to the fifth and twentieth cases that occurred in Sunderland, as recorded in Hazlewood and Mordey's work, in which he will find the same treatment put in practice. The tobacco enema has been tried in London without that success which had been anticipated. Mr. Greenhow is a non-contagionist: we have already had occasion to notice a pamphlet which he wrote previous to his having seen the disease; and his new observations are attempts to explain away the facts which stubbornly kept intruding themselves upon his former deductions. The success with which he has accomplished this task is any thing but triumphant.

Not one of the medicinal forms proposed by Dr. Bree as useful in what he calls the two states of the epidemic, have pretensions to any thing beyond a preservative means. The slow tonic powers of the carbonate of iron would be worse than useless where powerful stimulants are wanted; and the attempt to bring the Turpeth mineral from a merited oblivion, on the occasion of so fatal a malady, must, in our

Dr. Rees, in his well-written and popular Lectures, having effected a distinction between have left no doubt in their minds as to this matter of life and functions of life, discusses subject of so much controversy. The greater the changes which, in the pestilential cholera, cases; and that portion which is devoted to oxygen which give it vitality. The views of treatment, if it does not present what we should the doctor with regard to individual functions be inclined to consider a very successful line of are only one degree more remote than Hunter's practice, is at least written with considerable notion of the life of the blood; and, as applijudgment. The same remark applies to the cable to the whole, embrace no more philosophy details of symptoms, and the observations on than those of Lawrence and certain continental the predisposing causes of the disease; and, physiologists, who see in life the totality (Fenindeed, the work is got up in a style quite semble) of functions necessary to existence. befitting the subject of which it treats-it is The taunt at Hunter is most undeserved; we clear, perspicuous, and unpretending, and is a might in the same spirit ask the author, what gave heat or oxygen life? In metaphysical they had in England, Talleyrand thought it We are sorry that we cannot speak in terms reasoning, as in scientific discovery, every step Pitt's place to recall this circumstance, and of equal praise of Mr. Greenhow's work: dif-enlarges the boundaries of knowledge; but in therefore did not mention it. Pitt, who was fuse, theoretical, and oftentimes bold, there is controverting the opinions of half a century more error than we have seen in any practical back, while we take a new station, we find, mission, took good care not to remember the work on the same subject; though, with the as in ascending a mountain, new peaks arise uncle, lest he should be obliged to shew some assistance of several medical men of Newcastle, before us, that we appear as far removed from he presents us with a body of facts which are first causes as our predecessors were. A little sentation at court, the king took but little not without their interest to science. That chemistry is in the present day as dangerous a the attack of the disease may be preceded by a thing in the hands of physiologists as the same upon him with marked contempt, which she feeling of unusually good health, and a greater science was in its early dawn to theorists on subsequently imputed to his immoral character. excitement of animal spirits than usual, is con- the formation of the earth. As the treatment trary to all that has been observed by others, founded upon the author's views is in most higher circles of society, as a dangerous man, There is nothing novel in the physiological cases hypothetical, and will not have much views which the author says he has been led to influence with the faculty, we shall not attempt entertain from pretty extensive observation; to correct the errors; and we can only say, while, on the contrary, there is much in those that the elementary manner in which the facts views which will admit of material improve- are communicated, and the lucid and figurative ment from details that have been some time style of the author, must have rendered these before the public. Whether the first impres- lectures well adapted for the andience before whom they were delivered.

> 12ma pp. 117. London, 1832, Longman and Co.: Edinburgh, Black.

> WE like this slight volume much: it is obviously the work of a young writer; but there is an enthusiasm, a feeling for the beautiful, and a music, which are as the signs of a morning that promise a fine day. Take the fellowing passage; it will explain what we mean_it is from the poem called " Homer," and describes two children.

They were dear children; one with eyes as blue As the rich vault of heaven, and sunny hair, As the rich vault of heaven, and sunny hair, whose heart had caught the gay and joyous hue Of that glad climate and bewitching air; The hours as swift as moments past him flew——Sweet moments, when the spirit knows no care! He seemed from every thing some joy to quaff, And shewed his lightness by a gleesome laugh.

And shewed his lightness by a gleesome laugh.
The other was a child of darker mood,
Yet of a temper mild as it was brave;
Often beside the rocky cliffs he stood,
And gazed for hours upon the breaking wave;
And then a quick and heetic flush of blood Unto his cheek a richer colour gave—
He seemed to commune with the sea and sky, And think or dream of immortality !

There would he wait until the patient night Came, and the stars were out and glittering; Some distant from their fellows, pale and white, Some wheeling in a clear and joyous ring—And draw from them the visions infinite
Which Nature's glories to a poet bring, When Silence, like an old mysterious priest, Unites the earth and sky in holy rest.

He cared not for the airy lays that moved He cared not for the airy lays that moved His brother's heart to gladness, as the swain Sung on some holyday: but when he proved The wild enchantment of Amphion's strain, Or told how Orpheus for his well-beloved Unto the Thracian mountains did complain, He sat and listened all in silent tears, Mixing most strangely with their hopes and fears.

And then his heart beat ardently, he felt And then his heart beat ardently, he felt
The charmed power deep sown in poets' lays;
He caught the spell that passion hath to melt
The spirit in its many trancing ways;
And like a new-won proselyte he knelt,
And worshipped beauty in his childish phrase,
And prayed, and waited for a single glance
Caught from the splendour of her countenance.

And on the winter nights, when by the fire
That aged man told wondrous histories
Of wars, and ancient kings who did conspire
To sack old Thebes, that child between his kness
Gased on the withered features of his sire,
Intent with eager wistfulness to seize

The import of each word, the whilst the other Laughed at the earnest posture of his brother. Isaughed at the earnest posture of his prother. So grew they up, and time-did not estrange Their feelings with its cold and noiseless art; One only hoped through life ungalled to range, And meet its fortunes with a merry heart; The other, too, had felt no turn or change, He knew he must fulfil a nobler part—He daved not check the torvest of his mind, He daved not die and leave no name behind. Yet were there many found with eyes so bleared
By gazing on the earth for ugly gold,
Till every thing like worthless toys appeared
That in their market was not bought and sold,
Who came to him, and whispered what they feared,
Then shewed their tale of profits thrice retold,
And urged him to their mean and narrow ways—
Fools! what is wealth to him who covets praise? Fools! you are nothing even to your earth;
What have you done, for honour or for her?
What have you done, but made a dreary dearth
Of love and beauty in her character?
My curse be on his head who first gave birth
Unto such fantasies as now deter
The good, the great, the gifted, and the just,
From rising over low and sordid dust! You have your riches, and you ask no more!
Dare not to pity him who scorns your aim;
Live on, and smile, and add unto your store,
Ye noble victors in a noble game!
Heap up your riches on your garner floor,
But do not speak to him who seeks for fame;
Por he is pledged unto another oath,
And there is nothing common to you both. He heard them not, or heard them but with scorn: He fled unto the forest, all alone he near time the forest, an agne; here, couchant 'midst the flowers and grass unshorn, He framed that lay of rare and wondrous tone, Which even now upon our lips is borne,
Which men of every tongue have made their own;
That lay which true and tearful passion hath—
That lay which tells of dire Achilles' wrath."

We have marked two or three lines in italics. for their genuine tone of poetry. Verse soon becomes conventional; and truly it must be a critic to be aware how images are repeated, how changes are rung on the same idea, and how one simile does more than double dutyto appreciate any thing like feeling, or a thought which belongs to its owner. The author before us, especially in the minor poems, may have a feeling of property in his own productions. There are fine lines, and some spirited versification; but our favourites are, " Homer," "a Lament for Percy Bysshe Shelley," "an Ode to the Past," and "the Mausoleum."

Sir James Campbell's Memoirs. [Second notice: conclusion.]

CONTINUING our review of these amusing volumes, we shall abstain from entering upon the story of the author's being a member of the Pandemonium Club, and meeting Johnson, Garrick, Goldsmith, &c.; of his political employments at Corfu and among the Greeks; of his travels in the East, his intercourse with the Arabs, and residence at Aleppo; of his being seized and detained by Buonaparte, his attempt at escape, and confinement in the fortress of Ham, where Prince Polignac and the other French ministers now are; and of his visits to Germany, and abode in Brussels. There is much to entertain the reader in these accounts, but the connexion of the narrative unfits them for extract, and we find it more convenient, and equally fair, to illustrate the work by quotations more easily separable. We commence with two military anecdotes.

" Soon after the affair of the Brucker-muhl, Lord Townsend, who commanded one of the brigades, as was usual with generals on a march, gave a dinner to a number of his officers, and invited such strangers as might be in the neighbourhood, and who might otherwise be left to dine with Duke Humphrey, to assist at his party. The village where Lord Townsend's brigade was quartered on this occasion had been occupied two days did as the work of a being of some superior appeared, that to expedite the interment of their dead, they had thrown them into the well of the village. When the soup was served up, a universal complaint was made of its horrid taste; and, although soldiers on a march have seldom an opportunity of indulging in gastronomic fancies, it was agreed on this occasion that some inquiry should be made into the cause which had made their meal so unpalatable, when it was speedily traced to the corrupted state of the water in the well. The discovery was sufficient to stay the appetite of most of the company; but among the number present was old Major Hume, of the 25th foot, then known as the Edinburgh regiment, who had been a soldier from his infancy, and had served with distinction at Fontenoy and Dettingen. After so many campaigns, he had no doubt often been exposed to fare on viands not perhaps the most delicate; and when the company had broken up in most admired disorder, he proceeded with characteristic indifference to finish his dinner, exclaiming with an oath, that the soup was good, and that it would have been better if the whole French army had been in it.

" It was this same Johnston who, on being disabled at the battle of Campan (speaking of an officer previously mentioned, and about the end of the Seven Years' War), by a shot through his sword-hand, turned round to the men, and exclaimed, 'Royals! I have done my duty;—charge again.' At that moment also fell poor Briscoe, the adjutant of the Royals, a very handsome young man, who shortly before the battle had been placed under an arrest for some trifling neglect of duty. Until regularly acquitted, he was, of course, prevented from wearing a sword; but as soon as the regiment was drawn up in order of battle, he rode to the front, and, addressing Colonel Johnston, said, that as he had no prison to go to, he hoped to be allowed to accompany his regiment, although he was not permitted to wear a sword. Then mixing with the men, he joined them in the charge, and was killed at the same moment that Colonel Johnston was disabled, to the great regret of his brother officers.

Follows a description of Voltaire, which is very characteristic.

Anecdotes of Voltaire .- " During our resi dence at Geneva, I became intimately acquainted with M. Hubert, a man of singular but eccentric genius. He was at once a man of fashion and fortune, a decided humorist, and an amateur artist of considerable celebrity. His paintings were universally admired as efforts of genius; but his favourite amusement was to cut out scenes and figures in vellum, so as to give it the effect of a landscape, or any other style of painting. I brought many of his performances with me to England, where they did not fail to elicit the most flattering marks of admiration. M. Hubert was a great personal friend of Voltaire, and he did me the favour to introduce me at Ferney, and to carry me frequently with him to dine at that celebrated spot. Voltaire had a noble estate, with a profusion of game, which I fear were much more attractive in my eyes than all the philosophy which was to be acquired from my distinguished host. His invitations, however, if frankly given, were as frankly accepted; and I often made his permission available to shoot over his preserves, and to dine with him on my return. It was the fashion of the period to treat Voltaire as a sort of demi-god, and to regard every thing he before by the French as an hospital; and it order. I had the misfortune to be exempt from matter while our blood was yet heated. The this universal feeling of adoration, perhaps from national dislike; or rather, perhaps, from personal inability to place due value on the great man's merits. If the world at large were sufficiently ready to bow the knee to this divinity of their own creation, Voltaire was not less willing to-

Assume the god, Affect to nod, And seem to shake the spheres.'

This was equally observable in small matters as in great. In cutting up a partridge which was placed before him at table, I observed that he first thrust his fork into it, and then put the fork into his mouth, apparently to ascertain if the fumette was as he would have it. He then proceeded to cut it up, and sent a part of it to me. I sent it away without eating of it; and, on his asking the reason, I told him the true one, without any circumlocution, that in carving the partridge, he had used a fork which had just been in his own mouth. On this he observed that the English were a strange people, and had singular customs; adding a peculiar laugh of the sardonic kind, which was his custom when any thing displeased him. This little scene, however, did not prevent me from occasionally dining with him, or from shooting over his estate. The eccentricity of Hubert was genuine and characteristic; that of Voltaire was affected and spurious. He had, in fact, been spoiled by the too flattering attentions of almost every crowned head in Europe; and after his vanity had thus been fostered to the highest pitch of extravagance, it was not to be supposed that he could be cured of his preposterous pretensions by that sort of military discipline which was administered by the orders of his quondam friend the King of Prussia, who sent a colonel of hussars to him at Frankfort, to give him cent coups de bâton, as a reward for the freedom he had taken in divulging the literary obligations under which the great Frederick lay to him, in regard to the revision of his royal lucubrations. It is said that the colonel performed his task with great good will, and exacted a formal receipt from the philosopher, to satisfy his master that the duty had been faithfully performed."

In our hero's early days the practice of duelling was wonderfully common; and he speaks of these encounters with great sang froid. We select the mention of one as extremely cool, and curiously told.

"Sometime after the affair of the masquerade, a ball was given by the gentlemen of the garrison, at which it became my duty to act as master of the ceremonies. On this occasion an event occurred on which it is impossible for me to reflect without a great deal of concern. A gentleman of the party, and I regret to say a military man, had indulged too freely at the dinner-table, and had engaged in a dispute with some other people, as to the place where he should stand in a particular dance. I was called on to interfere; and, as was to be expected from the state of excitement to which his feelings had been raised, I found that he was very much in the wrong. The trifling point of etiquette I decided against him, and when he murmured at my resolution, I expostulated with him on the impropriety of his conduct. He then made use of a harsh expression, which it was impossible for me to overlook; and, when I suggested the propriety of adjusting the difference on the following day, he called on me to defend myself on the instant. It is painful to dwell on such a subject. We adjourned into the next room, and decided the ⁱssue proved unfortunate for my antagonist, and not, as may be supposed, very happy for me. I was induced to retire for a short period to the Continent, and the result materially influenced the subsequent events of my life."

The subjoined story of an Irish court of law is whimsical enough.

"At Galway, the first time Judge Hill went the Connaught Circuit, he had the advantage of reporting a maiden assize. He was fresh from England, and, although doubtless an excellent lawyer, was not yet acquainted with the character of the people among whom he was now to administer the law, which he understood so well in the abstract. When he had taken his seat on the bench, he delivered a very eloquent address to the grand jury on the state of the calendar. A guard of honour had attended him, as the king's representative, on his arrival in the town, and, as was the custom at the period, did duty about his person so long as he remained. In those parts of the country it had also been customary to surround the ses-sion-house with a guard during the sitting of the assizes, and none of the usual honours were withheld from the new English judge on his first appearance among us. He had scarcely concluded his address, however, when he turned round to me, and asked, in a tone of becoming authority, 'What mean those soldiers?' I was unwilling to say to him, in the open court, that they were in some measure intended for his own protection; so I answered, that they had been ordered out to do him honour, and to protect the administration of the law. He then desired me to send them away, observing with true English feeling, that he would have no soldiers near a court of justice, and that the law must protect itself. The guard was under the immediate command of Captain Butler, an excellent officer, and a pleasant young man, of the Kilkenny family, who received the order I gave him with a look and a leer, which told more plainly than words how well he appreciated the consequences. Immediately on the removal of the guard, a bustle was observed outside the session-house, but it was ascribed to the crowd moving off with the soldiers. When the noise had subsided, the judge desired that the prisoners might be called in. On this there was some demur, and the gaoler having made his appearance, was interrogated as to the cause of the delay, The man replied, that he had brought the prisoners from the gaol to the door of the session-house, where he had left them in charge of the officers of the court. The first on the list was then summoned to appear, but an answer of non est inventus was immediately returned. At this the judge was very wroth with his officers, and saying that he would have it inquired into, he desired the next prisoner to be called; but the same answer having been returned in succession for Teddy O'Marsh, and Fisty O'Flyn, and the whole list of culprits, the learned judge was forced to admit that, in the wilds of Connaught, the supremacy of the law stood in need of some subordinate aid for its protection." With Sir James's palliation of his improvidence, gambling, &c. &c. we shall not concern ourselves or trouble our readers: suffice it to say that, all his errors and wanderings over, he was enabled to return to London in 1825, and his affairs being restored to better order, finally retired to spend the evening of his long and eventful life in Edinburgh, where, we believe, he now resides, with his fourth lady.

In conclusion we must extract a striking stay at the waters, the princess was in deep mourning for the recent death of Bonaparte, and her seclusion was, in consequence, so great as to prevent her from seeing company. highness had had three children, two princesses and a prince; but the latter, who stood in the direct line of succession, was murdered in infancy in a mysterious and shocking manner. A pin had been driven into the child's head, and his nurse disappearing at the same time was never more heard of.'

Amid the turmoil of politics and the dread of cholera, we recommend our friends to seek the relaxation of Sir James Campbell's autobiography.

The Catechism of Health, &c. By Bernard Ch. Faust. Translated from the German. Pp. 118. London, 1832. Richardson.

This Catechism made its appearance somewhere about the year 1792; and it has been translated into most European languages. It is written with much brevity and quaintness of style, and with all the terseness of an adept. A kind of mysticism pervades its pages, which is further assisted by a lithographed representation of the gloomy and ancient cathedral of Bucksburg. We are aware that many of the answers will not be readily admitted as correct among persons who like to be reasoned into deception, and where so much scepticism exists even as to the propriety of children wearing nightcaps; but we have read through the little work with much care and attention, and can recommend it highly, as incorporating a sound body of moral doctrine, and most judicious rules for the preservation of health, or the alleviation of slight complaints.

COL. TOD'S RAJAST'HAN. [Conclusion.]

However beautiful in point of embellishment and important in point of matter this work is, we find, on perusal, that the extracts which alone could illustrate it, are far too unwieldy for our page. We must therefore leave it to our readers, with the high general encomium to which it is entitled, as an admirable view of central India and the Rajpoot races and

In his personal narrative, the author mentions a native who was asserted to have attained the immense age of about 160 years; and at the conclusion he feelingly deplores the premature death of Major Waugh, his own valued companion, and the draughtsman of the splendid productions which adorn these volumes.

Fashionable Satires: Rhodoshake's Visit from the Moon; a Poem in Two Cantos. By Arthur Craigengelt, Gent. 8vo. pp. 63. New York. Peabody and Co.

WE thank our distant Transatlantic publishers for their present; but we confess that these Satires are not particularly pungent or intelligible here, whatever they may be at New York. The allusions are thrown away upon us; and if there be much humour in the composition, we are sorry to say it escapes our detection.

The Pauline, No. 11.

Upon this second fasciculus of our young friends near the Trunkmaker's in the Corner, we have only to notice that, both in prose and verse, it is not unworthy of its predecessor; and a pleasant example of an early taste for statement relative to the Beauharnais family. literature, very properly encouraged. We were Baden, 1821. "During the season of our wrong, we perceive, about the date of the Anniversary, which, instead of last Saturday, was appointed for vesterday.

Rheinbayern: eine vergleichende Zeitschrift für Verfassung, Gesetzgebung, Justitzpflege, &c. Rhenish Bavaria: a comparative Journal of Political Constitution, Legislation, Jurisprudence, &c. Edited by Dr. Siebenpfeisser. 4th vol. 3d Part. Deux Ponts, 1831.

This is a political journal, containing two articles, the first, entitled "Germany and France," being a comparative estimate of the past and present state of those two countries, and their prospects hereafter. The author takes a view of the two French revolutions, and the causes which respectively operated in the production of them, compares them in their progress and their results, and then proceeds to consider their probable influence on the future destinies of the various European states, and on that of Germany in particular. The style is elevated, and sometimes even eloquent. In respect of opinions, the writer appears to be extremely democratic, and to hold in little estimation all aristocracies, spiritual and temporal. He says, -

"Who has converted the good constitution of Würtemberg into a mere juggle? Who cripples the intentions of the philanthropic Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt? Who consumes the domains of Nassau? Who still combats with the blindness of lunacy parliamentary reform in England? Who overturned the throne of the Bourbons in France? Who else, here and every where, but the priests and the nobles?"

And again, -

"Yes, ye German, ye European nations! it is the nobles and the priests, (not the poor country curates, who struggle for bare existence), but the fat prebendaries, bishops, and prelates, who nourish and cherish the unhappy absolutism and despotism of princes, and who precipitate into the abyss of ruin both princes and people. It is the voracious priests who beset the consciences of princes: those aristocrats who poison the resolutions of princes."

The second article is a petition to the chamber of deputies of Bavaria for a revisal of their constitution. We recommend the perusal of this journal at the present crisis of affairs to such of our readers as may be possessed of a knowledge of the German language, as flaming forth the doctrines of the ultra Reform spirit which exists in many of the continental states.

Royal Blue-Book, corrected to April 1st, 1832. T. Gardiner and Son; E. Lloyd and Co. A NEW edition of a book of most useful reference for the addresses, &c. of the many thousands of individuals who may be sought in our vast metropolis. The arrangement is excellent, and the information to the latest period.

The Diamond Gasetteer of Great Britain and Ireland, &c. &c. London, 1832, Simpkin and Marshall, Bell and Co.; Glasgow, Blackie and Son.

THIS is truly an example of the multum in parvo; an excellent, though concise, Gasetteer, about the size of a snuff-box, with the population of 1831, travelling routes, and useful commercial and statistical tables. We have hardly seen so neat and complete a work of this diamond kind: for tourists and travellers it is the very thing.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MR. BELL on the recent important discoveries of Ehrenberg, relating to the structure, organisation, and habits of the animalculæ classed under the term Infusoria. These are microscopic animals, discovered in water, vinegar, &c. They appear to subsist by the decomposition of water, and are conjectured ultimately to assume the winged state, although invisible; but they are considered in various points of view by different naturalists. Ehrenberg, by feeding them with very pure coloured substances, as indigo, carmine, and such like, could trace the existence of mouths, stomachs, intestines, &c.; drawings and enlarged representations of which were referred to by Mr. Bell in the course of his remarks. These animals are bi-sexual, and propagate by subdivision, by offsets or buds, and by eggs! They have been arranged in two principal divisions or classes, namely, Polygastrea, having many stomachs, and Rotatoria, which have but one stomach, and include the wheel animalculæ. Mr. Bell expressed his opinion, that the respiration of the Infusoria, in one class at least, was carried on by means of the ciliary rotatory organs, which so eminently characterise them.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

APRIL 11 .- Mr. Murchison, President, in the chair. A letter from George Gordon, Esq. of Elgin, was first read, noticing the existence of lias on the southern side of the Murray Firth; and afterwards two papers, one on the neighbourhood of Lisbon and Oporto, by Daniel Sharpe, Esq. F.G.S.; another on the lava of La Scala, by the Cavalière Monticelli, a foreign member.

NEW AND IMPORTANT INVENTION IN THE ART OF PRINTING.

A NEW process in the art of printing has just been carried into effect at Brussels, for making fac-similes of French books and journals. This process consists in transferring, by means of an operation which takes scarcely half an hour, the whole of a printed sheet to a lithographic stone, so that the printed letters are removed from the sheet, which is left blank, and are fixed uninjured upon the stone. By means of a chemical composition, the application of which requires an hour at the most, the letters so transferred are raised so as to resemble types. The stone thus prepared may be then used as if it were a real form of metallic types, and from 1500 to 2000 copies may be printed from it, which will be perfect fac-similes of the original sheet. Those who are at all acquainted with the usual operations of printing, will at once perceive what an immense saving of time and labour may be made by this inventiona trial of which has just been made in reprinting the Gazette des Tribunaux of Paris, to appear at Brussels, under the title of Causes célèbres, et Anecdotes judiciaires : Répertoire de la Jurisprudence des Codes Français. reprint will be very cheap; and the process, it is anticipated, will soon be applied to the reprinting of all the interesting Paris and London periodicals.

LITERARY AND LEARNED. ROYAL SOCIETY.

H. R. H. the DUKE OF SUSSEX in the chair. The conclusion of Dr. Davy's paper on the tor-

Something of this kind was projected a few years since in London.—Ed. L. G.

noticed, was read; also a communication by Sir John Byerley, on the mode of converting bone into gelatine. The following eminent persons were proposed as foreign members: Baron Damoiseau, Professors Cauchy, Tied-mann, De Blainville, and Carlini. The meetings were then adjourned until the 3d of May.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

HUDSON GURNEY, Esq. in the chair. On the table was displayed a most magnificent collection of Roman sepulchral remains, exhibited by Mr. Gage, by permission of Viscount Maynard. They were found on opening three barrows on his lordship's estate at Bartlow Hills, in the parish of Ashton in Essex, and consisted of glass bottles of various shapes and sizes, two containing burnt human bones; one of which, capable of holding about two gallons, was half-filled with a lightish brown liquor, and on the top of the bones in the latter bottle were a small gold ring and a coin of the Emperor Hadrian; two iron lamps; several pieces of red ware; a wooden cup formed of staves, which had been hooped together, but the bronze hoops and handle had decayed and fallen to pieces, while the wood remained perfect; locks; and various other miscellaneous articles. In one of the barrows had been deposited a large wooden chest, which had decayed, but the spike-nails and iron bands were preserved. In another barrow some of the most perfect of the glass bottles, &c. were in a brick tomb or bustum. These were ac-companied by a very learned and interesting paper from Mr. Gage, describing the articles, and giving an account of their discovery, with a report from Mr. Faraday on analysing the contents of the bottles, and referring to various past discoveries in different parts of England. There are three large barrows as yet unexplored in the immediate neighbourhood of those opened, which it is hoped Lord Maynard will also have examined.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

SIR G. STAUNTON in the chair. The following donations were received :-- from the Royal Society, a set of the Philosophical Transactions from 1823, inclusive; - from Colonel Colebrooke, an original portrait in oil of Radama, the late King of Madagascar: this portrait was painted in 1826, at Tananarivoo, the capital of the island, by M. Coppalle, a French artist, who went from the Mauritius on purpose, and presented it to Col. Colebrooke; __from Thomas H. Baber, Esq., an admirably modelled figure of a dirsee, or tailor, at work, size of life, made in Calcutta; -from Col. Tod, a Hindu almanac, an original grant of land (of which a facsimile is published in Vol. I. of the Annals of Rajast'han), and a cast in glass, by Tassie, of a gem, bearing the effigy of Hercules, described by Colonel Tod in the Society's Transactions. Vol. III.

The papers read were-1. an account of the Koleesura silk-worm of the Deccan, by Colonel Sykes; 2. an account of the present state of Rijapur, by Lieut.-Col. John Warren. The last paper is divided into four parts, containing descriptions of the main wall, the citadel, the great public edifices in the city and the environs of Bijapur, including the rains of Naruspore. The portion read at this meeting related to the state of the fortifications in November 1813, the date at which they were examined by terest; others, like the realities of life, recom-

pedo, the substance of which we have already the inscriptions upon it. The length of the gun is 14 ft. 4 in., diameter of the muzzle, 4 ft. 8 in. An iron ball to fit the bore would weigh 2,644 lbs., and would require a charge of nearly 660 lbs. of powder. If the gun was placed on a proper vehicle it would require 797 men to draw it. When the reading was concluded, the Society adjourned to the 5th of > Captain Dillon was present at this meeting, and introduced a native of New Zealand, named Thasow, or "Bread." He has been in England since June last, but does not yet speak much English. He was much delighted with the specimens of the weapons used in his native country, which were presented to the mu-seum of the Society by Capt. Dillon, some time ago. The figure of the dirzee also attracted his particular attention.

KING'S COLLEGE.

At the annual meeting of the governors and proprietors of the King's College, on Wednesday, a very satisfactory report was made of the progress and prosperity of the Institution. Seven hundred and sixty-four students had already been entered on the books; and the prospect of an increase in all the classes was such as to inspire the most sanguine hopes that this new school in the metropolis would be as successful as permanent.

FINE ARTS.

SUFFOLK STREET GALLERY.

[Fourth Notice.]

No. 9. Landscape, with Gipsies; No. 304. Scene in Richmond Park. J. Stark .- The observer of nature, and the lover of the picturesque, will find in these two clever productions every quality that can recommend them to attention.

No. 242. The Social Bowl. J. Oliver .-- We should certainly have quarrelled with the artist if he had called this animating object and its accessories still life: indeed, we know of nothing to which the term can be properly applied but oysters and some other kinds of shell-fish. We should like to be seated with two or three good fellows round the convivial beverage which Mr. Oliver has so admirably depicted.

No. 57. Portrait of Mrs. Davenport, in the character of the Nurse, in Romeo and Juliet. J. Holmes.—The admirers of this long-celebrated actress-in other words, all who have ever seen her perform—will be gratified with the resemblance thus perpetuated by the hand of a skilful artist.

No. 103. Coast Scene; Noon-day. J. Wilson. It is in effects like these, in which no strong contrasts of light, colour, or form, are resorted to, that the skill of the artist is best seen. The magic of Mr. Wilson's pencil in the atmosphere of this fine performance is exhibited to great advantage.

No. 135. Windsor, from Clewer Meadows. T. C. Hofland.—Clear, transparent, and brilliant in its effect, this beautiful little picture is calculated to please the general eye, as well as to fix the attention of the amateur.

No. 145. Scotch Drink. J. P. Knight Though slight, full of character. We recommend Scotch drink-as a work of art.

There are many clever portraits in the Gallery; some, either from character or accompaniments, invested with a sort of historical in-Malk i meidam, with drawings and copies of Lady, by Mrs. James Robertson, in which may be recognised the grace and grandeur of Van-| and deep research: it is evidently founded on dyke. No. 53, Portrait of Mr. Edward Lonsdale, by J. Lonsdale, is, in more senses than one, full of fine reflection. We consider No. 104, Mrs. Lytton Bulwer, by F. Y. Hurlstone, one of Mr. Huristone's most felicitous productions; it is replete with taste and sentiment: nor is the truth of No. 498, Son of Gen. Champane, by the same artist, less admirable. Of No. 164. Portrait of Mrs. Brandling, the Head painled by the late Sir Thomas Lowrence, the Picture finished by Mrs. W. Carpenter, we may justly say, that if a picture by the late highly gifted president must be interfered with, no one is fair artist, whose talents have been so frequently displayed—dare we add, in the present instance somewhat at the expense of the head. Mr. B. R. Faulkner has distinguished himself in the present exhibition by his portraits no found to increase in each succeeding number, less than by his imaginative subjects: is not, and that the growing interest of the subjects however, No. 152, Portrait of a Lady, beautiful as it is in its half-tone, rendered rather monotonous by the sameness of colour in the back-ground? Let any one compare No. 97, Tyrone Power, Esq., by J. Simpson, with that gentleman's portrait of Mr. Roberts, which we mentioned in a former notice, and we think he will agree with us in recognising thought in the first, action in the last, and in both evidence of the artist's skill: we believe that Mr. P. Simpson is a junior of the same family; but if we may judge from No. 390, Portrait of a Lady, he can hardly be said to be inferior in talent. With a little more warmth in the colouring of the flesh, No. 239, Portrait of Mrs. William Lambert, J. G. Middleton, would be as great a triumph of the pencil, as the expression in the countenance appears to be the triumph of temper. Although it is not the first time that Mr. H. Room's works have been before the public, it is the first time that his talents have appeared to such advantage as they do in No. 43, Portrait of P. H. Hollins, Esq.; No. 55, Portrait of C. Rolls, Esq.; and No. 203, Portrait of S. Nelson, Esq. No. 1, Portrait of Cardinal Weld, J. Ramsay; No. 361, Portrait of John Kearney, Esq., A. Huffam; No. 480, Portrait of a Gentleman, J. P. Knight; and many others, well deserve to be mentioned with credit.

[To be continued.]

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Views in the Pyrenees. With Descriptions by the Author of the Sketches. No. I. Leggatt and Co.

This is the first work of any importance on the Pyrenees that we have met with; indeed, with the exception of a small Itinerary, published by Mr. Ackermann, we believe it is the only work on the subject in the English language: a surprising circumstance, when it is considered how many travellers this country has sent forth since the conclusion of the war; and how full of attraction, in every point of view, are the romantic districts in the neighbourhood of that magnificent mountain line which divides France from Spain. What is still more remarkable is, that the work is the production of a young lady, ... Miss Young, daughter of the late highly-gifted, and highly respected, the Rev. Dr. Young, minister of the Scotch Church, London Wall. There is nothing. however, in the composition of the present number of this interesting publication which would induce any one, ignorant of the fact, to suspect either the youth or the sex of the fair Snyders was employed on the still-life and will believe that in the due interpretation of and accomplished writer. The "General Surinferior parts; and never could compare, in the words of the license the chief difficulty close personal examination, aided by a careful reference to the various foreign scientific works which treat of the geological structure of those immense masses. This is followed by an animated and pleasing description of "Bagneres de Bigorre," (the Cheltenham of the Pyrenees,) and "the Valley of Campan." The illustrations consist of five exceedingly picturesque views, engraved in Mr. Edward Finden's best manner, from drawings by Messrs. Gastineau and Cox, after sketches made on the spot by Miss Young. It is stated that "the author has deemed it advisable to publish the views in better entitled to have a hand in it than this a regular succession, commencing at the foot of the Central Pyrenees, and thence proceeding across the most elevated portion of the chain: it may therefore be confidently expected that the beauty and grandeur of the scenery will be will insure the approbation of the public." have not the slightest doubt of it.

> Mrs. Jordan as Rosalind. Painted by Hoppner; engraved by Henry Cook. Moon, Boys, and

> THE highly intellectual and interesting countenance of the truest representative of Shakespeare's Rosalind is finely perpetuated in this portrait, so full of grace and beauty. The picture is an excellent specimen of Hoppner's style, and Mr. Cook has preserved it in every point and character by the skill of his burin. Breadth, freedom, and effect, unite to render the subject altogether a very delightful composition in regard to art, and a very sweet remembrance of one endowed with nature's richest gifts.

> The Destruction of the Cities of the Plain: Genesis, chap. xix. ver. 24 - 26. Designed and engraved by J. G. S. Lucas. London, H. Lacey.

> A COMPANION print to Sampson carrying off the Gates of Gaza, and one of the most vivid pictures of destruction and desolation which can be conceived. The strong contrasts of supernatural fires and terrestrial darkness are very poetical; and, in spite of a touch of harshness occasionally in the execution, this is a very striking performance in that powerful and imaginative style in which Martin has risen to so high an eminence.

> South - west View of St. Nicholas Church, Lower Tooting, Surrey. Drawn by T. W. Atkinson; engraved by C. Rosenberg. Wade, Leadenhall Street.

> A SIMPLE but pleasing ecclesiastical edifice, which does much credit to the taste of Mr. At-kinson, the architect. The plate is beautifully engraved by Mr. Rosenberg: we never saw an aquatinta ground of greater tenderness and Portraits of Painters, &c. By H. C. Selous. On stone. Part III. London, W. F. Elliot. This part of a very interesting work contains the portraits of Raffaelle, Van Dyck, Snyders, and Reynolds, — and is well worthy of the patronage justly merited by its precursors. Mr. Selous, or whoever writes the brief notices of the masters, will perhaps be disposed to question our dictum, when we assert, that the animals in life and action in Rubens's finest pieces were painted by Rubens himself, and not, as is universally received, by Snyders. vey of the Pyrenees" evinces great knowledge the fierce, living, and animated creatures, with lies. A theatre having the permission to ex-

Rubens either in estimation or price. fact, with more of curious illustration respecting these artists, we could establish on documents and correspondence of their time, in which the whole negotiations for works by them, and the portions done by each, are minutely detailed.

Gevartius. Painted by Vandyke; drawn on stone by F. W. Wilkin.

On the merits of the original picture, one of the most brilliant ornaments of the National Gallery, and universally acknowledged to be as perfect a specimen of the art of portrait-painting as any in existence, it would be superfluous in us to say a single word. The drawing is of the size of life, but comprehends only the head and shoulders. It is executed by Mr. Wilkin with his usual skill, and the fine, placid, contemplative expression of the countenance is admirably preserved.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. 1%.

Drury Lane Theatrical Fund.

THE fifteenth anniversary of the Drury Lane Fund, on Friday week, at which the Earl of Mulgrave presided, in the absence of H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex, was very numerously attended, and went off with great éclat, both in regard to the entertainments which the stewards had provided for the evening, and to the charity itself, the cause of which was so eloquently advocated by the chairman. About 1100% was subscribed; and Mr. Harley, the treasurer, gave an animating account of the state of the institution to the present time, and took a favourable view of its future prospects. After the usual loyal, patriotic, and ceremonial toasts, the health of Lord Mulgrave was drank with enthusiastic applause, for which the noble earl returned thanks, and bumpered "Success to the Fund"-which, indeed, his presence on the occasion tended so materially to promote. Songs, glees, and other musical treats, varied the enjoyments of the company; and the festive scene was supported with great effect till the period, about eleven o'clock, when the chair was vacated. Among other toasts, a new one, of "Prosperity to the Garrick Club," was drank, and loudly cheered.

The Question of the Patent Theatres against the Minors; contained in a Letter to His Grace the Lord Chamberlain.

My Lord Duke,...As the question between the patent theatres and the minors is becoming a reat national question in our theatrical world, presume to address your Grace, with the view of elucidating some of the points in dispute, which at present are veiled in darkness. I will believe that in the due interpretation of hibit " music, dancing, burlettas, spectacles, duct and keeping it is more than defective; pantomimes, and horsemanship," has its prithis, however, is the fault of the translator, vileges, for the most part, sufficiently defined who, like a moderate painter, has copied the by the terms themselves; but in the word burletta is the great stumbling-block. In the year 1818 the proprietors of Drury Lane and Covent Garden, either by themselves, or by a committee appointed to act for them, memorialised the Lord Chamberlain, praying him to protect them against the encroachments that were being made on their patent rights by the minor theatres, the Olympic and Sans Pareil. After detailing the injuries they were suffering, they go on to define burletta, and say that "burletta is distinguished from tragedy, comedy, opera, farce, &c. by its being a piece in verse, accompanied by music." In my opinion a definition so erroneous, that if it were granted on their parts, there could be but little chance of their maintaining their ground against their adversaries. In a very elaborate answer to this memorial, addressed to the then Lord Chamberlain, Mr. Elliston, proprietor of the Olympic theatre, combated the interpretation of the memorialists by denying that either "rhyme or music were necessary ingredients in the composition of a burletta." I say rhyme, instead of verse, because he so avers that they must have meant rhyme, and not verse, for they would otherwise admit his right to blank verse. That they did not mean rhyme is quite clear, for with the fear of Tom Thumb before their eyes, they could never have advanced so extravagant a proposition. In like manner does Mr. Elliston infer, that "accompanied by music" means "recitative." Thus, giving his own interpretation to the words of the memorialists, he deduces the consequences that best suit his purposes; as if, forsooth, either the premises were true, or the inferences legitimate. Tom Thumb would certainly most palpably gainsay the memorialists as to rhyme, and Midas as to recitative; for if that ingredient be necessary for a burletta, Midas has certainly, as it is now acted, no claim to the distinction. It appears to me, my Lord Duke, that the memorialists were wrong in their definition, and that the proprietor of the minor theatre was wrong in his interpretation of it; and when he comes in his turn to the definition, he is still more wrong. He says that " burletta, fairly translated, means a light, fanciful, farcical description of dramatic entertainment." Does he, or rather did he, mean, my Lord Duke, that a burietta must have all those rhyme, or note of music, in the respective ingredients, or only some one of them? Victo- pieces. Hamlet-Travestie would be a burla, and ingredients, or only some one of them? Victorine, as it has been lately enacted at the Adelphi theatre, has both of fanciful and farcical in it; but will any one tell me that it is a burletta, or any thing else than comedy, presenting to the spectator a great moral lesson, in a very fanciful and agreeable guise? If comedy be a narrative of our actions, an oracle of our thoughts, and a living picture of ourselves, and so indeed may it be defined, then is Victorine as true an example of it as our stage has ever produced. I do not mean to cite this piece as a perfect comedy, for I think that in its con-

* The memorial was signed thus: on the part of Drury Lane committee

Essex. Yarmouth. P. Douglas.
P. Moore (Trustee).
R. Walpole.
Richard Wilson.
Edward Ellics.

Robert Alb. Cox. Robert Alb. Cox.
Pascoe Grenfell.
Thomas H. Farquhar
Edward Codrington.
Douglas Kinnaird.
Thomas Turton. W. Linley. David Ricardo.

On the part of Covent Garden—T. Harris. Copy of note attached to the memorial: "The Duke of Devonshire will with pleasure sign the memorial on his return to town," dec duc.

figures without giving the tone of the original. I have cited this piece, my Lord Duke, because it proves how careful we should be in giving a definition of "burletta." If Mr. Elliston's flat were taken, Victorine would have come under the denomination; and yet how far from any thing approaching to jest is it either in intention or result?

It is not, my Lord Duke, my purpose to question the propriety of the licenses to the minor theatres being worded as they are. Being so specified, it is necessary to canvass the exact meaning of the specification. And here again I am at issue with Mr. Elliston. The derivation of the word burletta is from the Italian word burla. Mr. Elliston says, that " in the dictionary Della Crusca the word does not appear at all. In the dictionary of Baretti, and in other dictionaries, it does not appear; but in that of Alberti the word burletta does appear, and is defined thus: - "Burletta, s.f. voce dell' uso) commedia, rotta e imperfettafarsa-commedia-opera buffa." Which, I believe, I translate correctly and literally into English as follows: - "Burletta, s. f. (word of common usage)—comedy broken and imperfect —farce—comedy—comic opera." So that Mr.
Elliston, not finding the word in the best Italian dictionaries, searches for it in those of less note, and immediately adopts the signification that is given by the first who grapples with the difficulty. For my part, my Lord Duke, I have come to a very different result;—for, not finding the word in the Della Crusca dictionary, I inferred that it was not acknowledged as a legitimate word, and more especially as the diminutive of the Italian is of a conventional force, (if I may be allowed the term,) it being impossible to affix to it any specific definition. What is little, pretty and little, bad and little, and so forth, is so relatively only; for such terminations are only degrees of comparison, and the nice distinction of the fractional parts constitutes a charm that no other language possesses in an equal degree. If burla means a jest, or a scoff at something, its termination of etta would imply that it is a jest at either some-thing that is greater than itself, has gone before it, or is above it. Tom Thumb is a jeer at tragedy, Midas at opera, &c.; and either would be equally "burletta," were there no word of not burletta, - for in matter it is equal to its prototype. As the word is not known to the best Italian commentators, so do I infer, that though Italian in itself, it is not of Italian growth. What by common consent would be acknowledged as the chief ingredient in burletta, is what we have termed burlesque; and hence we have had coined for us a word, of which none of us have yet known the due import. But, my Lord Duke, there never was so senseless a definition as that taken by Mr. Elliston from an Italian dictionary; for he maintains that it means "comedy, comic opera, and farce." A word, forsooth, of vast import, that being a diminutive, can combine in itself three several branches of theatrical business, as distinct from each other as men's foibles are from their moral actions!

But, my Lord Duke, I will maintain that if I have not proved what burletta is, I may at least have given such examples of what it is not, that those who are transgressing the law the subjects are plenty enow, and by these may be made amenable to it. No one for an scenic representations the legitimate drama instant could doubt that the Olympic Revels, would be no more injured, than the high at-

as we have lately seen the piece exhibited, is in the truest sense of the term a burletta; or. that, should such a subject as the rape of Proserpine be treated in the same manner, it would be, in its application, most strictly a burletta. But still each of these subjects might have been treated so as not to have come under the definition, even though they had been all in rhyme, and to music into the bargain. It is, therefore, the manner of treating the subject that will give the denomination to it; and this must have been meant when your Grace's predecessor first sanctioned the license; for it could never be anticipated that so bold an assertor of the prerogative of the "minors" would have been found, as to have maintained that "comedy, comic-opera, and farce," were of one and the same character; or that the power of reasoning should have been so perverted as to induce him to conclude, that because there might be a portion of all these qualities in a piece, that therefore each of these, being as they are perfect of themselves, could pass muster under so spurious and bastard a title as that of " burletta.

From Italy, my Lord Duke, we have derived our scenic representations, and in gratitude for all that she has given to us, I will believe that we have attempted to palm off upon her an ill-begotten child of our own climate, so unhealthy at its birth, and so untoward in its disposition, that it has been the cause of little comfort to ourselves. It is not my present purpose to recount all that we have derived from that favoured country. Whether it be the opera, the opera-buffa, the tragi-commedia, the intermezzi, or musical interludes, or, in fine, the drammi, as we now represent them, they have all been so specifically defined, that no question of their contraction or elasticity has ever been before us. The last-named "drammi" might certainly have given rise to memorials and pamphlets, to letters to the Lord Chamberlain, and to wailings of persecution from the great to the less than great, had not the definition come to us from the country of their birth, " that they were a kind of theatrical representation between comedy and tragedy," and, moreover, a "divertimento fatto pei suori sensibili." The French have certainly claimed to themselves the origin of a species of entertainment, designated by them as the comique larmoyant; but as well might they arrogate to themselves the invention of the burlesque of the olden time, that of which Menippus was the founder (and the mock deification of Claudius by Seneca, was an example), merely because they have what they term the satire Menippée.

I will hope, my Lord Duke, that I have estab-lished, as I think I have, to your satisfaction, that if the burletta had been of Italian origin it would have been defined by Italian writers, and inserted in all their dictionaries of authority; that it could by no possible means comprise, as Mr. Elliston averred, three distinct branches of the drama; and that its most simple and obvious interpretation was from burlesque, which our ancestors have Italianised, to render it more palatable, or perhaps more incomprehensible; that, having here arrived at burletta, nothing can be comprehended under that term, but what is in burlesque of some known subject; and that, if it were defined by exemplification, Midas would be a burletta of an opera, and Tom Thumb of a tragedy, &c. The field is wide enough, and tributes of man are affected by the imitation | I am not the person to question; the license, | details; and if the blush has been once raised of him in gesture by the monkey, or in voice by the parrot.

I wonder exceedingly that it did not occur to the gentleman who drew up that part of Mr. Elliston's letter for him, that in defining "burletta" he was treading upon very dangerous ground; that if burletta were the comedy, or the farce of the entertainment, the actors in it were the "burlatori," or if they gave unequivocal signs of enunciation, "ciarlatori," and, I need scarcely add, consequently charlatans. A dictionary, even the best, will give but a very poor insight into a language, without some previous acquaintance with it; and the adoption of terms, without knowing their synonyms, will often lead, as in the present instance, ingenious men into very awkward liabilities - to very disagreeable qualities. If, then, burlesque be a necessary ingredient to burletta, and ista reciprocantur, let us try some of the productions of by-gone days by that test. I have already often spoken of Midas. "O'Hara was the author of this pleasant burletta," and, as I find in the remarks to Dolby's edition of Midas, " he may be almost considered as the inventor of the style. His Golden Pippin, now never acted, and his rifacciamento of Tom Thumb, are in the same taste; its principle is the exhibition of grave and glorious characters, such as King Arthur and his knights, the gods of the heathen mythology, &c. in burlesque situations; it is in the dramatic world, what Whistlecraft, and other such humorists, are in the poetical." So, then, here we have an Irishman supposed to be the inventor of the style, without reference to Italian dictionaries, and the peculiarity of burlesque situations insisted upon as a necessary concomitant. I ask no more from my antagonists than this admission, and we will try, condemn, and execute, with most summary despatch. The commentator on Midas never imagined that burletta, because it had an Italian termination, came consequently from Italy; and was too shrewd an observer not to suspect that, although the word might have appeared in a dictionary of an older date than that of our burletta pieces, still that, as it does not appear at all in the recognised authorities, the word had been altogether interpolated where it was found. In the present times there is nothing that can appear that would not come within the limits of a manager's license; and, if burletta may comprise "comedy, opera, and farce, the same power of elasticity may surely be given to "spectacle," that it may comprehend "tragedy," "serious opera," and "melodrama;" and in some dictionary we may find "oratorios" and "pantomimes" cheek-by-jowl together—your Grace's licenses will be wholly vitiated, and your "occupation gone." The art of evasion, my Lord Duke, possesses a very mercurial property; and when it is for the purpose of invading the rights of others, is of very evil and treacherous tendency. A minor theatre of the present day would not scruple an instant at calling the Sleep-Walker, which is a farce, and Hide and Seek, which is an ope-retta, (a word, too, coined here), the Lions of Mysore, which is a spectacle (I mean the real one), and Victorine, which, as far as it is an imitation of nature (Goldoni's definition), is a comedy, and, as far as it is a "divertimento pei cuori sensibili," is a drama, by that most compendious of all terms in known languages, - not an instant, I say, would the "minor" pause, but straightway write down each and all of them as " burlettas."

The propriety of the law, as it now stands, in plain English, abuse continued till it has the force of law. I am, as a tenant for life, as much held in duty to go the bounds of my literary property as I am that of my more substantial acres: and he who removes the landmarks of one, is as much guilty of fraud, and that of the worst nature, as he who encroaches upon the other. The time may come when it may be deemed expedient to do away with all monopolies; but that is not in the least to our present purpose. If that time arrives, I shall still continue the optimist I am at this moment, and believe that whatever is the existing law, if not the best, is at least intended to be for the best. But, my Lord Duke, while we are on this topic, allow me to cite an opinion which I am assured will ever have weight with your Grace, from the great talents, and more especially in theatrical matters, of him who gave it, I mean Richard Brinsley Sheridan. The words are a part of a petition addressed to the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council, and I read as follows :-

" That your petitioner by no means purposes to contend, that it might not be better for the general interest of the drama, and the purposes for which it has so long been considered as a fit object of legislative protection, that the existing monopoly should be wholly destroyed; your petitioner's conviction, that the immediate destruction of the respect and utility of the stage would be the consequence, he entirely passes by; but he humbly insists, that there is no instance since the reign of Charles II. wherein patent rights, however doubtful in the purpose and character of their grant and origin, have been reclaimed from their inheritors or purchasers, without due compensation made to those who have relied on the security, or embarked their means upon the faith of such monopoly." Here, then, is the opinion of a man, the best calculated to form a correct judgment of any in modern times; and it will be for your Grace, and those who are to legislate for us in these matters, to consider what weight that opinion is to have in the scale.

Such discursive matter cannot draw me off from the ground where I take my stand. The law has been contravened, and until the law is repealed, such contravention must be punished. The situation of the patent theatres when the law is repealed cannot be worse than it is at present; there is a nightly loss so great, that it is a matter of debate whether they shall continue their representations or not; and the probability of a vast body of intelligent, ingenious, and well-deserving persons being thrown out of employ, because, for sooth, encouragement is to be given to those who have been so exorbitant in their demands that the patent theatres could not engage them; and hence they have started speculations on their own accounts, the chief attractions of which are, that they sing very lascivious songs in very tight dresses. The corruption of one portion of the stage naturally involves that of the other, at least in the opinion of the well-disposed. So it was in the corrupt times of Charles II.; and so it will be now-the modest wife and the maiden child, who would have looked unsuspiciously and unhesitatingly on any performances that the managers of the patent theatres might have pro-when first granted, was meant to be definite, on their cheeks by the "minors," they natuas it was explicit. It is always necessary to rally grow suspicious of the others. This, my repel encroachments, that time may not give Lord Duke, is a matter more particularly for them the right of prescription; which means, your consideration. What Mr. Sheridan emphatically called the "respect and utility of the stage," is entirely under your control; and for that purpose has the power of licensing been conferred upon the office you hold. I would ask of your Grace to make a tour of the "minors," and let your own unbiassed judgment tell you of what "utility or respect" all or any of them are. I will grant that the curtailment of space gives a greater facility for hearing what should not be heard, and seeing what should not be seen, than at the patent theatres-and here the advantage ends; but if the salutary recreation of receiving a great moral lesson in a very agreeable way, is to be denied to us, the world shall at least know for what worthies, men or women, our wives and our sisters are to make the sacrifice, so that their measure of disgust may be filled up to the very brim. Let "stars," that are every day looking more dim, still attempt to shine, and scare from before them all who have seen them once; the number will soon be told off; and though the price paid by the abandonment of the great theatres will come as ruin to many, still the survivors will not outlive them long; and our town will soon become, as far as the theatrical world is concerned, a desert; or, if vestiges do remain, a "minor" may be pointed out to have been such, by some acknowledged token, even as antiquaries dispute about the purposes of a tenement at Pompeii, by the ensign that is seen at its portal even to this day. Such I firmly believe the consequences will be.

Something, my Lord Duke, has been said about the prosperity of the French theatres, where " minors" are of indigenous growth. They certainly have considerable influence upon the minors here; for when it is high-water in ribaldry and lasciviousness in that capital, it is so likewise here. But I believe that in Paris they are made to contribute a portion of their gains to the parent theatre-for so I would call the national theatre. Some such plan as this might be adopted here; but I throw out this only in anticipation of what may be to be done. As I have many observations to address to your Grace upon that head, I shall now forbear to encroach upon it, reserving it as the subjectmatter of a future letter. Herein I have limited myself to the "rights and wrongs" of the "minors,"—the rights to which they are entitled by their licenses, and the wrongs that they do by their existence. If I have demonstrated to your satisfaction these, I shall, in the other branches of the subject of which I have to treat, draw your Grace's attention to the progress of the stage, and to the influence it must ever possess (if well regulated) on the public mind. I have the honour to be, my Lord Duke, your Grace's very humble servant,

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

THE chief merits of the fourth of these concerts, on Monday last, consisted in a judicious selection from Mozart, Cimarosa, Beethoven, Haydn, &c. and in two admirable solo performances, Mozart's "Dove sono," by Madame Stockhausen, and Baermann's not equally beautiful fantasia for the clarinet, by Willman. nagers of the patent theatres might have pro- That aria has, perhaps, never been sung more vided for them before the present days, have chastely, or with a finer expression, and sweetbeen taught the necessity of inquiring into the ness of tone, than on this occasion. Mr. Moscheles' first symphony gained much applause, llying on the stage, at which when the tittering and, notwithstanding some difference of opinion as to its melodies, must be owned to be a highly elaborate work, replete with excellent materials. Madame Puzzi's "Deh per questo" of Mozart was, unfortunately for herself and others, a failure. Braham and Lindley did ample justice to Neukomm's cantata, "David's Lament;" and Mr. Eliason will, no doubt, do the same, after longer study, to Beethoven's violin concerto. Haydn's sinfonia, letter R, as well as the overtures to Egmont and the Zauberflöte, went off beautifully; and, upon the whole, it proved a very good concert.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

On Tuesday was produced a new opera by Vaccai __ Giulietta e Romeo __ by far the best of the novelties of this season, and one which is likely to become a lasting favourite, even in comparison with Zingarelli's beautiful composition of the same name. The music is throughout good, and some of a high class; the choruses are very spirited, and were in general well executed, with the exception of one towards the end of the first act. Of the débutante, as we do not wish to be harsh towards the fair, we must in candour say she was incapable of sustaining the part allotted to her, the music of which requires powers of no ordinary quality, both as an actor (or actress, if a woman must play the part) and a vocalist to give it effect. Grandolfi is deficient in all; she is tame, even to insipidity, and wants power to enforce the claims of her great beauty. Turn we to the fair Meric, who rises more and more in public esteem in every character in which she appears. Her acting and singing as Giulietta, an extremely arduous part, was all that could be wished. The other characters were also well sustained; and the concerted pieces were well given throughout.

The two new dancers, Signor Samengo and Mdlle. Brugnoli, also made their débuts in the new ballet (called a tale of enchantment—we really think the term ought to be applied to Brugnoli's petticoats). They introduced in a pas de deux some new and most beautiful attitudes; it is impossible to describe the lightness and grace with which Brugnoli, when poised in the air by Samengo, descends—she seems to float, like a gossamer, betwixt sky and earth, undecided whether to remain or again touch our terrestrial regions; and when she does descend, it is on the very point of her toe, where she remains fixed as a statue, standing as firm on a nail as other mortals on a foot. Samengo is a firm and graceful dancer, and a great acquisition to the corps. In the dance itself there is great novelty; and a more attractive exhibition of limbs and attitudes, discoursing eloquent music, we never witnessed on the stage. It is altogether as beautiful as it is extraordinary.

FRENCH PLAYS.

On Thursday we enjoyed a night of very pleasant amusement here, with Arnal in two pieces, and Laporte also in two. The novelty of the evening was La Fêts de ma Femme (the Bonassus episode in Victorine), which was extremely well performed, Arnal sustaining the part played by Reeve. Garnard was also entertaining in the Portier. Les Cuisinières afforded us a good laugh to finish the whole.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS. Drury Lane, April 9.—In the third act of the Compact there was an enormous salmon a very careful drawing, from measurements and of the audience was waning, it was redoubled by Mr. Younge's information, that "This is the hundredth wolf I have slain with my own band!"

Surrey Theatre, April 9.-Romeo and Juliet was being acted as a last piece, and, without exaggeration, one line out of every half-dozen was erroneously given. Numerous, however, as were these blunders, there were none sufficiently droll to recount. In the last act Romeo exclaimed, pretending to see Balthasar, "News from Verona!"—but there came neither news nor Balthasar for about two minutes and a half—and why? Why, his entrance explained the mystery. He had, only two minutes and a half before, been at Verona doing duty as a chanting friar at Juliet's funeral—I knew him by his boots!

VARIETIES.

King's Theatre. Concert Room. Lecture on Astronomy.—We were much pleased to observe, on Wednesday evening last, the increased numbers which attended Mr. Adams's very excellent lecture on this most interesting science, and the high gratification which the able lecturer evidently communicated to his numerous auditory. We recommend it to our young friends in particular not to lose the opportunity of hearing this luminous discourse, and seeing the magnificent astronomical apparatus attached to it.

Progress of Civilisation. - Small matters often indicate that great changes have taken place in countries: thus, who can be told of an English stage-coach, (with improvements adapted to a warm clime,) horses, harness, and driver, being embarked for Cairo, to run between that city and Alexandria, without a "special wonder" at the progress of Egypt.

Earthquakes in Jamaica. - From the latest accounts it appears that the shocks of earthquakes have been very frequent in Jamaica.

Progress of the Cultivation of the Vine in the Crimea. - A traveller who has long resided in the Crimea, and has visited the greater part of Europe, especially the wine countries, gives it as his opinion, that the trade in wine from the Crimea with Hamburg (where he now is) and with England, may in time become very considerable: the strong wines of the south of the Crimes may be substituted for port and for several Spanish wines. The kokour, a good table wine, peculiar to the Crimea, may like-wise meet with an extensive sale. As a proof of the rapid progress of this branch of agriculture, it is added, that in 1831 the Crimea produced 600,000 vidros (9,600,000 bottles) of wine, and that the whole quantity has been sold. It is expected that this year the produce will be a million of vidros. Even the Tartars begin to cultivate the vine; the price of land has risen extremely, new roads are opened, the population increases, and every thing in the country prospers. To give an idea of the improvements in the Crimea, it will suffice to say, that in those parts where traders and others could pass only with oxen or on horseback, a kind of diligences are about to be introduced. and will begin running in the month of June.

Waltham Cross. — It is proposed to repair and reinstate this beautiful specimen of architecture, and by careful protection to guard it against future defacement and demolition. Mr. W. B. Clarke, the learned author of the work on Pompeli, published by the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, has made examination of its various parts, and has ascertained many details which were not previously understood. An undoubted example of the architectural design of Edward the First's reign, and raised by him to the memory of his queen Eleanor, it is interesting to every antiquary and artist, and has singular claims on their attention. A committee of gentlemen is now formed to superintend and direct its renovation. Nearly 2001. have been subscribed,—but to make a complete and satisfactory restoration, it is estimated that three-fifths more will be required.

Vesuvius.—A letter from Naples, dated the 9th of March, says: "Our Vesuvius is superb. The enormous cavity in the centre of which is the crater, being filled with boiling lava, it overflowed in three rivers of fire, two on the side of Naples, and two on the other side. Yesterday, at half-past seven o'clock in the evening, we felt a slight earthquake. There were two or three shocks, but they did no mischief."

The Niger. - In a late No. of the Montrose, Arbroath, and Brechin Review newspaper, there is an interesting letter on the subject of the Niger, from a medical officer on board H. M. S. Dryad, to a gentleman in Arbroath; which, as tending to throw farther light on the discoveries of the Landers, we have much pleasure in copying : _ " The river Num, you will perceive on examining the map, is situated among a cluster of other rivers, a little to the eastward of Cape Formosa, which forms the eastern boundary of the Bight of Benin. From some circumstances which occurred, I was induced to make a few inquiries concerning the termination of these rivers, and have ascertained, by the most unquestionable evidence, what I doubt whether the Landers are aware of, that all the streams which fall into the sea from Cape Formosa to the old Calabar river inclusive, are united together by cross branches and intermediate streams at no great distance from the sea, and that, consequently, they may all be said to be mouths of the Niger. Such a fact is interesting, and the following are some of my proofs: — The extreme flatness of the country, and the numerous streams which may be seen to intersect it in all directions, even by ships landing close to the shore; the frequent and well-known arrival at the river Bonny of canoes from Duke Ephraim (a chief of the old Calabar river) by some inland branch, without even seeing the ocean; the frequent arrival also of canoes from the Num at the Bonny by a similar means; and the statements of some of the most intelligent natives, who assure me that there is a great inland trade in slaves, ivory, palm-oil, and British manufactures, carried on through the medium of these streams uniting the principal rivers.'

Prussia.—Count Edward Raczynski has presented to the city of Posen his library of 20,000 volumes, collected at great expense, and which is particularly rich in Polish and French literature. He has also given his new and magnificent palace, the façade of which is adorned with twenty-four Corinthian pillars and four pilasters of cast iron, in which the library was deposited, and which is said to have cost 80,000 dollars. To this he has added 22,000 dollars in money; and as in the palace and its dependencies there are many parts that may be let to advantage, the preservation and increase of the library are sufficiently provided for.

O, K.—! thou'st a versatile genius, in truth!

Now character drawing, now drawing a tooth;

Sure thy pincers and verses claim equal applause,

For, when put in one's mouth, they both shatter the jawa. Epigram: to K-, Dentist and Dramatist.

Bon-mot. - M. Talleyrand was enjoying his rubber, when the conversation turned on the recent union of an elderly lady of respectable rank. " How ever could Madame de S. make such a match? A person of her birth to marry a valet-de-chambre!" "Ah!" replied Talleyrand, "it was late in the game; at nine we don't reckon honours."

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Literary Gazette Weekly Advertigement, No. XV. April 14th, 1838.]

A periodical to be called the Thief is announced; and the editors pleasantly say, that " whoever takes the Thief will be rewarded."

Thief will be rewarded."

Mr. Chambers of Edinburgh is beating all the English pen'orths of knowledge out of the field by a three-halfpenny journal, which we understand has obtained very extensive circulation in Scotland, and of which we have perused eight Nos. with much satisfaction and entertainment. Besides judicious selections, it contains very pleasant original matter.

Reflections, &c. of the Principal of a Seminary on Retring from the Duties of his Station, by John Fawcett. We understand that the Chevalier Dillon, who discovered the fate of the Count De la Perouse's expedition, has prepared for the press an account of his twenty years' travels and intercourse with the inhabitants of the South Seas, which is to be entitled Dillon's Continuation of Captain Cook's Yoyages. Captain Dillon, we believe, began his career in the Pacific when a youth, and has had more intercourse with its inhabitants than any other man in Europe: he speaks the language of most of the islands fluently, and is regarded as a chief of note among them. In his work, it is stated to us, he intends to give a correct account of the many bloody and barbarous scenes he has attracted. He meave account from whitereds and the In his work, it is stated to us, he intends to give a correct account of the many bloody and barbarous scenes he has witnessed, his narrow escapes from shipwarck and the fatal overs of the cannibals. It appears from this gentleman's account, that the inhabitants of the Feeji Islands, respecting which nothing has yet been published, are the most interesting and civilised in the South Seas, cannibalism excepted: they are the only people in the Pacific who have a pottery, and who boll, make soup, or stew their food. Their houses are the largest and most cleanly in the South Seas; they are the best navigators in these parts, having canoes that measure from 96 to 190 feet long by 6 feet deep, and 22 wide, and which are capable of carrying 350 warriors each. Their marriage and funeral ceremonies are singular: here, as well as in India, the widows are put to death, and disposed of with their deceased husbands. Their females are the most virtuous of the tribes inhabiting the islands in the Pacific: they are ceased husbands. Their females are the most virtuous of the tribes inhabiting the islands in the Pacific: they are betrothed by their parents when a few day? old. Their laws of hospitality are worthy of imitation by the inhabitants of more civilised countries; and as to their cannibal feasts, dissecting of the fallen enemy, cloth manufactories, &c. &c. described from ocular inspection, they exceed any thing we have read of as yet in our accounts of these sons of nature.

Segmons by the Park Park 1997.

Sermons, by the Rev. R. W. Hamilton, Leeds.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

M'Culloch's Commercial Dictionary, 8vo. 21. 10s. bds.—Ingleby on Uterine Harmorthage, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Poland, Homer, and other Poems, fcp. 4s. 6d. bds.—Austin's Province of Jurisprudence, 8vo. 12s. bds.—D'Aguliar's Officer's Manual, 18mo. 5s. cloth.—Jowett's Sermons, 12mo. 7s. bds.—Robinson's Christian's Privilege, 12mo. 3s. 6d. bds.—Thurgar's Genders of the French Nouns, 12mo. 2s. 6d. bds.—Gordon on Locomotion, Plates, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Gordon on Locomotion, Plates, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Gordon on Locomotion, Plates, 8vo. 18s. bds.—Guine's Six Months in America, 2 vols. 8vo. 11s. cloth.—The Jesuit, 3 vols. post 8vo. 11s. 11s. 6d. bds.—Ballingall's Improvement of the Mercantile Navy, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Bowring's Cheskian Anthology, fcp. 4vo. 7s. cloth.—Scott on Lavements, royal 12mo. 7s. bds.—The Druid, a Tragedy, by Thomas Cromwell, 8vo. 5s. cloth. well, 8vo. 5e. cloth.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832

April.	1 7%	Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday 5	From	33.	to	67.	30-41 Stationary
Friday · · · · 6					30.33 to 30.30
Saturday · 7		30.		51.	30-19 30-10
Sunday 8		33.	••	54.	30-10 - 30-11
Monday 9		30.	• •	57.	30-11 30-16
Tuesday · · 10	1	34.		57.	30.18 30.12
Wednesday 11	٠	31.		54.	30-12 Stationary

Prevailing wind, N.E. Except the early part of the mornings, generally clear. Edmonton. CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude ... 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

40 In calling attention to the question between the Major and Minor Theatres, as discussed by Mr. Mills in his Letter to the Lord Chamberlain, we beg it to be understood that we do not pledge our own opinions to either side. We consider the point at issue to be of much dramatic interest, and are therefore willing to devote as much space as we can to it. much space as we can to it.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL MALL. The Gallery for the Exhibition and Sale of the Works of British Artists, isopen daily, from Ton in the Morn-ing till Five in the Evening. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.

on, 1e. Catalogue, 1e. WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS, Neffolk Street, Pail Mail East:
The Ninth Exhibition for the Sale of Works of Living British rists, is now open, from Ten till Seven.
Admittance, Ir. Gatalogue, Is.
EDWARD PRENTIS, Secretary.

MINIATURE PAINTERS, and ATISTS generally, are solicated to inspect his very extensive and elegant block of Or-Mole Miniature France, Mata, Morocco Caces, &c., by W. Miers (Mater, by appearance, Mata, Morocco Caces, &c., by W. Miers (Mater, by appearance), the Her Majesty), as No. 111, Strand, where, each Brain art the Trade being now conflucted ander his own immediate inaction, he is enabled to exente Orders in the shortest possible time, as well as to regulate his Prices lower than any other Maker.

A liberal Allowance is made to Artists and to the Trade, and on Country and Porcigin Orders.

W. Miers, No. 111, Strand, near Waterloo Bridge.

Just published by R. Ackermann, 86, Strand,
THE BRITISH ARCHER; or, Tracts on Archery, illustrated with Six Places

Archery, illustrated with Six Plates.
By THOMAS HASTINGS, Beq.
Collector of His Majesty's Customs.
4to. price 14s. in green cloth.
Arrived in Sight, and Far Away.

of Female Figures, on Stone, by W. Sharp, after Drawings by Mrs. H. Browne. Beautifully coloured, price 18s. per Pair; and National Fancy Ball Costumes. Designed and drawn on Stone, by L. Mannien. Complete in Twelve Subjects, highly coloured, price 2s. 6d. each. Size, 8 inches by 6.

MUSIC.

HERZ and CZERNY at HALF-PRICE 1. New editions of the meet popular Compactions of these Authors, including Czerny's Var. on Sorte Secondami, Five Sheets for & Czerny's Var. on Rode's Art, 1s. 64. Herr's New Set of Tweive Brilliant Waitzes, 2s. Herr's admired Quadrilles, at 2s. Herr's Brilliant Rondo, "La Neige," Four Sheets for 1s. 64. Herr's Grand Rondo Carnotrinique, as performed before House King, is: Immense Variety of New Music of every description, warranted correct, at Half-price. Messrs. Walker, 17, Sobo Square.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Femily Library.

With Views, Pontraits, and a Map of the Course of the Niger, 8 vols. 5s. each, NARRATIVE of the ADVENTURES A TARKATIVE OF CHE TADVERY OF SHEET OF DER, was the Niger. Porming Nos. and the Niger. Porming Nos. Albertarie Street.

Family Library.

John Murray, Albertarie Street.

Interesting New Works. Now ready, in 2 vots. Svo. with a Portrait, 94s Lift Olacs of Six James Calander).

MEMOIRS of SIR JAMES CAMPBELL

Addinging (former) fit James Calander).

Written by Himsbir.

Sir James Campbell is the father of Mrs.

He served during the greater part of the Seven Years' War in Germany a Alde-de-camp to General Mestyn—visited meet of the German Courts—had familiar intercourse with Volcaire—was a member of the mest celebrated London Clubs, the "Savoft-was a member of the mest celebrated London Clubs, the "Savoft-was a member of the mest celebrated London Clubs, the "Savoft-was a member of the mest celebrated London Clubs, the "Savoft-was a member of the Savoft-was a member of the Savoft-was a member of the Savoft-was a member of the Revealution—the Savoft-was a member of the Revealution—the Savoft-was a member of the Mémoires de Hortense, Duchesse de St. Leu, Ex-Reine de Hollande, in 1 vol. with Portrait.

The Earl of Munster's Memoirs of the late

The Earl of Munster's Memours of the sate war is opened to Munster's Memours of the sate Cooks, of the sate Regiment. In 2 vols. post 8vo. 11s.

"These sketches are ameng the liveliest specimens of military description that we have happened to meet with anywhere. Lord Munster's picture of Soulit's flight from Oporto may rank with the best pages of 'Cyril Thornton', or 'the bublitarn'. His volume is full of interest,—evidently the work of a humane and gallant mind, an esthusiastic saidler of Wellington."—Quarterly Review, March.

Sir Jonah Barrington's Personal Sketches of his own Times, 2d edition, with considerable Additions, 5 vols. 870. 244.

"These volumes form a cente of Irish characters, Irish men-

"These volumes form a cents of Irish characters, Irish men-ners, Irish adventures, Irish wittictsma, and Irish opinions, for about fifty years; and a more amosing melange has seldom issued from the press."—Literary Genetics.

The Exquisites, or a New View of Exclusive Society: a Novel. 3 vols. 21s.
Henry Cothern and Richard Benzley, New Bustlagton Street.

Presents for Youldful Renders.

The following attractive Works for the Entertainment and Instruction of Young People, are done up in a style suitable for Presents, and are recommended as a very superior class of publications for Juvenile reading.

London: Printed for Beldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON; or,
Advantures of a Father and Mother and Four Sons in a Adventures of a Father and Mother and Four Sons in a sert Island. The 8th edition, ornamented with 18 Engravings, 19me, price 7a. 6d.

The Life and Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusce, with a Biographical Account of Daniel Defor, written expressly for this edition. A new edition, complete in
vol. 19mo. beautifully perinted by Whitingham, and erramement with 60 very superior Woodcuts, from Drawings by W. Harvey.
Price 8a.

Tales from Shakspeare, by Charles Lamb.
A new and elegant edition, with 22 superb Cats, from Designa
by Harvey, and finely printed by Whittingham, in 1 vol. 12meprice 7: 64.

Austin Hall; or, After-Dinner Conversa-tions between a Father and his Children, on Subjects of Amuse-ment and Instruction. 13mo. illustrated with fine Engravings, price 52.

A Discourse of the Objects, Advantages, and Pleasures of Science. A new edition, in foolcap 8 ro. illustrated with fine Engravings. Price 5a.

G. This fascinating little work, but without the fine illustrative Engravings given in this edition, forms the First Number of the "Library of Useful Knowledge."

These Hundard

Description of more than Three Hundred Animals, with numerous fine Cuts, elegantly printed by Whit-tingham, 12mo. New and enlarged edition, price &c.

Stories of Old Daniel. 12mo. the 10th edition, much improved, price 6. Ellen Cameron; a Tale for Young Ladies.

Fine Plate, from a Drawing by Harvey, 18mo, price 5s.
Keeper's Travels, with fine Engravings, after Drawings by Harvey. 14th edition, 18mo, price 6s.

Guy's Pocket Cyclopsdia; or, Epitome of Universal Knewledge. The 5th edition extensively improved, with numerous appropriate Cuts, 12mo. price 10s. 6c. Stories from the History of Italy. By Anne Manning, with fine Frontispiece and Vignette by Harvey. 12me. price 7s. 6d.

A History of France, in Familiar and Entertaining Language for Young People. By Mrs. Moore. $d edit. 12mo. Siz Engravings, price 7s. 6d.

Sketches of the Domestic Manners and Insti-

A History of the Roman. New edition, 18mo. 7s. 6d.
A History of the Roman Emperors. Ornamented with Portraits and Mays. 18mo. 7s. 6d.
Essays on the Institutions, Manners, &c. of Ancient Greece. By H. D. Hill, D.D. 8d edition, 12mo. 7s. 6d.

Tomkins's Select Poetry, a new edition, in

The Parent's Offering. By Caroline Bar-rd. A new edition, enlarged, 18me. Fine Freetispiece, &c. Sandford and Merton, a new and improved edition, complete in I vol. fine Engravings, 12mo. price 7s. 6d.

Mrs. Leicester's School; or, the History of Several Young Ladies, as related by themselves. The 9th edition, with fine Frontispiece. 15ms. price 4

Bucke's Entertaining English Grammar; Illustrations given in classical English Poetry. 12mo. 3c. Columbus, Cortez, and Pizarro; or, the Dis-

Columbus, Cortez, and Pizarro; or, the Discovery of America, and the Conquest of Morico and Peru. Perus Bettertainment and Instruction of Youth. 1 kms. Any of the Three Portions sold separate, price 5s. 6d. each.

Edgeworth's Parent's Assistant. A new edition, with Suc Pizaro, complete in 8 vols. 12mc price 10s. 6d.

Dr. Akin's Evenings at Home, a new and improved edition, by his Son. Complete in 4 vols. 12mc 10s. proved edition, by his Son. Complete in a vers. Leaner.

Joyce's Scientific Dialogues, with numerons ta. A new edition. in 6 vols. 18mo. price 15s.

Edgeworth's Harry and Lucy concluded, in Convenations suitable to Young People desirous of Useful and Scientific Knowledge. 4 vots. 18mo. 3d edition, price 17s.

For the Use of Schools.

In 19mo, price 7s. 6d. bound, the 3d edition, revised and corrected, of

EXCERPTA ex VARIIS ROMANIS PORTIS, qui in Scholis rarius leguntur, Seneca, Lucano, V. Flacco, S. Italico, Statio, Lucretio, Catullo, Propertio, Propert Tibullo

Notulis illustrata, quae s-legit
JOHANNES ROGERS PITMAN, A.M.
Venenat apud J., G., et F. Rivington, in Compet
Paulino, et Vico dicto Waterioo Place.

New edit. with the Population Return of 1831, price 18s. boards, or 18s. 6d. half-bound in parchment, PATERSON'S ROADS of ENGLAND and WALES, and of the SOUTH of SCOTLAND. By EDWARD MOGG.

By EDWARD MOGG.

Arranged upon a plan entirely novel; the whole remodelled and augmented by the addition of new Beads and new Admessurements: with an Appendix, a Tour through Wales, &c. - London: Printed for Leogman, Rees, Orme, and Co.; J. M. Rock; J., G., and F. Rivington; J. Beoker; W. Jey; Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.; T. Tegg; J. Duncan; Simpkin and Karabali; J. Dowding; J. Hearnes; Sutth, Eller, and Co.; T. and W. Boone; and E. Mogg; and G. and J. Robinsen, Livensea.

Possessing and POETESSES.

IVING POETS and POETESSES.

By the Author of "at he Slege of Constantinople."

Contents—Fifty living Authors, whose Lives are sketched and Works criticisted.

"The Editor of the Literary Gazette is drawn in this satire."

-Boulder.

(Michell is) a craw-fish-looking devil, with sharp claws.

Literary Gazette.

His sentiments are boldly expressed; we perceive nice discriminations of character: he is a man of talent."—Imperia

He displays facility of versification and descriptive power."

-_ zurer.

"Many pretty poems appended to the work."—Norwing Po

"He writes with as much elegance as any of his contentries: so agreeable a book we have not seen for a long time

Satirief.

"This Statire is bitter; in its progress Michell has displayed his knowledge of the writers of the age; many of the passages, armidst their caustic powers, possess poetic fire; the minor poeras are beautiful; this volume has woven fresh laurels for his brow."—Plymonds Herald, 7th April.

"The lovers of Satire will be giad to learn that the stremuous exertions used to suppress this Work tend only to make it more eagerly sought after, and that the presecution will be fearlessly met.

William Wild "The Satire will be giad to be suppressed to the prosecution will be fearlessly met.

William Kidd, 238, Regent Street.

William Ridd, 288, Regent Street.

In post 8vo. price 5s. boards, written during a Tour in France, Savoy, Switzerland,
Giermany, and the Notherlands.
By THOMAS MAUDE, Baq. A. M. Oxon.
(Dedicated, by permission, to Thomas Moore, Eq.)
Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co. London; and to be had, by order, of every Bootseller in Town and Country.
"We congratulate the author on his success: his is no common mind."—Weekly Dispatch.
"His passion for the picturesque is well displayed in his defluenation of the wild scenery through which his route lay. The following glance at St. Martin, the Vale of Chamouni, and Mont Ste. Bernard, is very felicitously given."—Allas.
"It exhibits many vivid pictures of the scenes through which the author passed. The poem is worthy a place in the best library."—Ledgy Magaziar.
"We hope that the deserved success of the Traveller's Lay,"
&c. Mc.—Intelligence.
"We hope that the deserved success of the Traveller's Lay,"
&c. Mc.—Intelligence.
"Very person to medivaln fail pour planer and casus deep polyvery contract the actival fail pour planer and casus deep polyvery contract the deserved and the proper planer and casus deep polyvery contract the deserved and the property of the property of the polyvery contract the provision fail pour planer and casus deep polyvery contract the provision fail pour planer and casus deep polyvery contract the provision fail pour planer and casus deep polywe plus use dévation de pensée peu commune."—L'Indépendant.

New Picture of Lendon.

New Picture of London, and Map of the Environt; or New Yelcture of London, and Map of the Environt; or New with the Addition of 108 Views. A New edition, carefully revised, presenting a luminous Gaide to the Stranger on all Subjects connected with General Information, Business, or Amusement; to which is subjoined, a Description of the Environs, and Plan for viewing London in Eight Days.

EIGH'S NEW PICTURE of LONDON,

— The work is also sold with the addition of 34 Pistes of Costumes, price 18s.; and with Rowlandson's Cestames also, where 18s.

price 16s.

London: S. Leigh, 18, Strand; and Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

Of whom may be had,
A Variety of Descriptive Guides for the Use of Travellers on the Continent, viz.:
1. Planta's New Picture of Paris, price 9s.

2. Reichard's Descriptive Road Book of Prance. 10s. 6d. 3. Boyce's Belgian and Dutch Traveller, 4. Romberg's New Picture of Brussels, &c. 5. Schreiber's Traveller's Guide to the Rhine.

6. Reichard's Itinerary of Germany, 12s.

7. Ebel's Traveller's Guide through Swit-

8. Reichard's Itinerary of Italy, 10s. 6d. 9. Vasi's New Picture of Rome and its

10. Vasi's New Picture of Naples and its virons, 100. 6d.

11. Reichard's Itinerary of Denmark, Swe den, Norway, and Russia, 7s.

12. Reichard's Itinerary of Spain and Por-

Second Series of Captain Basil Hail's Popages.
In 3 vots. Vignette Titles, 12s. beards,
RAGMENTS of VOYAGES and TRAVELS.

TRAVELS.

By Capt. BASIL HALL, R.N.

Printed for Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; and Whittaker and Co. London.

1. Capt. Basil Hall's Fragments of Voyages and Travels. First Series, 3 vols. 13. Flates.
2. Capt. Basil Hall's Travels in North America, 3 vols. 3 dedition, 11. 11. 64.; Etchings separate, 10s. 64.

In 1 vol. 19me. price & boards,

ERMAN PRIMITIVES; or, the Principal Radical Verbs, Nouns, and Adjectives, of the German Language, explained in English, Italian, and French.

By A. N. DROFFATS, L.B.

London: Solid by Thomas Ward, 38, High Holbern.

Of whom may also be had,

Q. Horatii Flacci Opera, with Ordo, and an Interlineal Translation by Stirling and Nattall. 4 vols. 18mo. price 16s. beards.

THE JESUIT; a Novel.

Woman's Love. A Novel.

Country Houses. A Novel. By a Lady.

The Invasion. By the Author of the " Collegians."

"A work of very great research, power, and of high enter-tainment."—Metropolitan.

Also V.

Also, V.

Mr. Lodge's New Work.

In 1 vol. price 18s. bound,

The Geneslogy of the British Peerage; with brief Sketches of the Family Histories of the Nobility. By Edmund Lodge, Esq. Norroy King of Arms, F.S.A. &c. With Engravings of the Arms.

Saunders and Otley, Public Library, Conduit Street.

a A this extended Establishment the perusal of all New Pablications, English and Foreign, may be obtained in Town or Country. Terms on application.

T HALF PRICE, the following New A THALF PRICE, the following New and Popular Work:—Supiror's Life of Canaling, 3 vois.

Sro.—Eugene Aram—Maxwell—Sayings and Doings, last Series—Chartley, or the Fatalist—The Way of the Worde-The King's Secret—Destiny—The Young Duke—Gordon's Memoirs—Mrs. Elwood's Journey overland to India—Jacqueline of Holland—Forest Scenes—A Year in Spain—The Adventures of Nastragus—Geraldine—The Heiress of Bruges—Jacob on Precious Metals—The Edinburgh Review for 1831—Blackwod's Magazine, and the New Monthly, for ditto.

The whole of them perfectly clean, and as good as new excepting the leaves being cut, having passed through a very select Reading Society.

To be seen at Mr. Bulcock's, 17, Park Walk, Chelsea.

Letters to be post-paid.

In 4to. THE THIRD and LAST VOLUME of the HISTORY of the PENINSULAR WAR.
By ROBERT SOUTHEY, Eq. LL.D.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Price 6s. boards,

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY

CALENDAR, for the Vear 1838.

Containing a List of all the Members of the University—The Tripos List of Mathematical Honours for the last Si Year—List of Classical Honours, Prises. Exhibitions, Scholarships, Patronages, Deprese conferred during the Year 1831—A List of Representatives in Parliament of the University for the last Century—the Examination of Prises of Escheler of Aris in January last, and for Smith's Prizes—Regulations for the previous Examination of Undergraduate—Alise a List of the Members of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, &c. &c.

Cambridge: Prists of the University Press, for J. and J. J. Deighton. Sold in London by Leagman and Co.; J.. G. and P. Rivington; Whittaker, Treacher, and Arnoti J. Hatchard and Son; E. Fellowes; Simpkin and Marshall; J. Richardson; and by Parker, Oxford.

THE LADIES' CABINET. The Fourth
Number of this very cheap and popular Miscollany contains a beautiful Steel Engraving, exhibiting a Orir leaning over a Cettage Door, with the interior of the Cottage, and her Mother sested at the Window sewing; also a well-rescued Woodens, illustrative of an interesting Boens in Seventy, and her Mother April. In addition to these Embeldishments, the Number contains Seventy-two pages of Entertaining and Instructive Matter, consisting of original Tales, Rietches, Review, Dramatic Notices, and Poetry, and Six Pages of the Music of a Song entitle the "Love Letter," expressly written and composed for this work.
When it is considered that the price is only Sixpence, it may be allowed that the Monthly Review was well justifed in speaking of the "Ladies' Cabinet" as one of the mireles of the age."
Lendon: Published by G. Hesdersens, 3, Old Bailey; and sold by all Booksellers.

Copies of the three preceding Numbers may be had on early application. THE LADIES' CABINET. The Fourth

A NEW CATECHISM of BOTANY, containing a Description of some of the most familiar and interesting Plants, arranged according to the Linnean System, with an Appendix on the Formation of an Herbarium.

By C. IRVING, LL.D. F.A.S. &c.

"More of the essentials of botany will be found in this little atechism than in most books on the same subject at ten times the price." Published by J. Souter, School Library, St. Paul's Churchyard.

Souter's New Series of Catechisms, by C.
Irving, LL.D. F.A.S., Dr. Busby, the Rev. T. Clark, C. Mackensle, J. G. Gorton, and A. Gombert. 9d. each, neatly sewed, or 1s. beams.

or Le. bound.

1. The History of England
2. The Geography of England
3. The Geography of England
4. The Geography of Ireland
5. The History of Scotland
6. Geography of Scotland
7. History of Scotland
7. History of France
9. The History of Greece
10. The Antiquities of Greece
11. The History of Rome
12. Sacred History
13. Mythology
14. Universal History
15. Classical Blography
16. Astronomy
18. Botany
19. Bertany
19. Bertany
19. Bertany
19. Highls Grammar
20. General Knowledge
19. The Antiquities of Rome
18. Sacred History
17. Natural Philosophy.
18. Wythology
17. Natural Philosophy.
18. Astronomy
19. Mythology
19. Natural Philosophy.
19. Astronomy
19. Botany
19. Mythology
19. Astronomy
19. Mythology
19. Natural Philosophy.
19. Astronomy
19. Botany
19. Botany
19. Mythology
19. Natural Philosophy.
20. Astronomy
21. Astronomy
22. Mythology
23. Natural Philosophy.
24. Astronomy
25. Astronomy
26. Astronomy
26. Astronomy
27. Natural Philosophy.
28. Astronomy
29. Astronomy
2

The whole, in four thick vois. neatly half-bound, 23s. may be had of J. Souter, School Library, 73, St. Paul's Churchyard, London; of the Bookesliers of Dublin; of Mears. Nimms and M'intire, Belfast; Meears. Whyte and Ce. Edinburgh; and of all Becknishers in the United Kingdem.

New Works by Distinguished Writers.

8, New Burtington Street.

75. Colburn and Bentley have the honour to announce th they have just published the following New Works:

In 3 vols. pout 8vo.

TALES of the EARLY AGES.

By the Author of Bramblety House," "Zillah," &c.
"A fresh testimony to the grains and research of Mr. Horace Smith. This work will be a favourite with the general reader for its romanile epidode, and the rich variety of scenes and subjects it places before him."—San.

II.
In 3 vols. post 8vo.
Stanley Buxton; or, the Schoolfellows. By John Galt, Esq. Anthor of the "Ayrahire Legators." III.

In 8 vols. post 8v Adventures of a Younger Son.

"We believe the celebrated Treiawney, (the friend of Lord Byron), to be the author of this work, and that it embodies a con-siderable portion of the events of his earlier life."—Literary Ge-

Complete in 1 vol. neatly bound and illustrated, and revised and corrected by the Author, expressly for this edition, price 6s.

The Pioneers. By Cooper. Forming the 14th Volume of the "Standard Novels."

Also, nearly ready, in 3 vols. post 8ve-

The Contrast. By the Author of "Ma-

II.
In 8 vois. post 8vo.
Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"
and "Herbert Lacy."

III. In S vol post 8ve. The Fair of May Fair.

FOURTH EDITION of the Rev. J. W. A FOURTH EDITIUN of the Rev. J. W. BELLAMY'S CONCORDANGE to the HOLV BIBLE, it just published in 4ts. price is, severel; to which are added, a Geographical Index, Calendar and Table of Lessons, and an Alphabetical Lief of Proper Names, accented.
This Work will be found very useful to bind up with any 4to-edition of the Bible, and is particularly adapted to the Maps and Notes of the Pamily Bible edited by Dr. D'Oyly and Bishop Mant. Printed for C., J., G., and F. Rivington, London.

In S vols. Sve. with Portrait, 94s-

MEMOIRS of GOETHE, Author of "Werter," Leonora," "Paust," &c. Written by HIMSELF.

"Goethe has justly been classed by the critics of Germany with the master-minds of modern Europe—with Shakspeare, with Dante, and with Cervantes—not an possessing powers of a similar kind, but as enjoying, like those great mee, the reputation of being, beyond all comparison, the first of his age and country." Frinted for Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Of whom may also be had, lately published 2. The Life and Correspondence of Salvator sa 2 vols. 8vo. with Portrait, 28s.

3. The Life of Benvenuto Cellini, written

D. A HE LAIR ON DERIVENIUM UNITED BY HIRSELF, revised from the Italian, with Notes. By Thomas Roscoe, Eq. 3d edition, 2 vols. 8vo. 24s.
"Ceilini was one of the most extraordinary men in an extraordinary set: his life, witten by himself, is more amusing than any novel I knee."—Horace Walpole.

THE DIAMOND MAGAZINE, with numerous Illustrations, is published this day, containing enty-four duodecime pages, price Three-Haifpence, to be westy-fear oncoccine pages, prior large-manufacts, to be minused Westly.

Also in Monthly Parts, containing 96 Pages, siltched in a Wrapper, price Sixpence.

Critical Opinions.

"Very oleverly managed, and its manufact original and cheap."— ational Omnibus.

National Omnibus.

"Conducted with great spirit and ability."—Literary Guardien.
W. S. Orr, 14, Paternoster Row; and sold by all Booksellers, &c.

The French Language copuired without a Teacher.
In 8vo. price 13s. neatly done up in canvass and lettered, the 5th edit. thoroughly revised and corrected,

GUIDE to the FRENCH LANGUAGE, especially devised for Persons who wish to study the senis of that Language without the Assistance of a Teacher. By I. J. P. LE BRETHON.

Also, in avo. price & canvass and lettered,

A Key to the Exercises in the above Work;
by means of which asy Person of a nesture understanding may acquire the Elements of the French Language practically, as surely as if a professed Teacher was sitting by his side; and with a very superficial knewledge of it, may teach it to ethers. Directions are given in the Key to Parents not accustomed to teactions are given in the Key to Parents not accustomed to teactions are given in the Key to Parents not accustomed to teactions are given in the Key to Parents not accustomed to assistance of this Book, how they must proceed.

§ So much esteemed is this very classical work on Teaching Language, that Twe Guineas have been given for a Copy at perfolds when new editions have been called for.
Landon: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row. Also, in 8vo. price 8s. canvass and lettered

In small Sve. price Sc. 6d. boards, MELANGE in English and French, Proce and Verseif comprising Revolution, a Metaphorical Sunrise-Sunset-Dramatic Scraps-Catherine, &c.

London: Published by Parbury, Allen, and Co. Leadenhall Street.

ILLUSTRATIONS

MODERN SCULPTURE.

By T. K. HERVEY, Eso.

No. I. is in a state of great forwardness, and will shortly be published.

noisseur. The Work will appear in Numbers, which the Publishers, at present, hope their arrangements will enable them to produce Monthly. Each Number will contain three subjects; two of which will, as a general rule (liable, of course, to occasional interrup-

The multitude of embellished Works which distinguish the present age of publication have hitherto taken n ground by which the Public might be made acquainted with the rich treasures of Modern Art, in the department of Sculpture. The efforts of Leen principal viduals, and Societical like eat of the Artists, and the third Modern Art, in the department of Sculpture. The efforts of Leen principal viduals, and Societical like eat of the Artists, and the third Modern Art, in the department of Sculpture. The efforts of Leen principal viduals, and Societical like eat of the Artists, and the third Modern Art, in the department of Sculpture. The efforts of Leen principal viduals, and Societical like eat of the Artists, and the third Modern Art, in the department of Sculpture. The efforts of Leen principal viduals, and societically eat of the Artists, and the chart of Leen principal viduals, and a second of the Artists, and the third Modern Art, in the department of the Work Leen principal viduals, and a second of the Artists and the Leen principal viduals, and the Capital viduals, and the Artists to bring their works, and Amateurs their possessions, under notice.

Twelve of the Monthly Nos. will form a Volume, for which a handsome title-page will be printed; and with the Nixth No. will be published an Introductory Essay, from the pen of the Editor, on the subject of Sculpiure, as applicable to the Work,—to bind up with Vol. I. The No. will be sewed in a richly embellished cover, for which a Drawing has been made by Mr. Corbould, and which will be engraved in the first style of excellence;—and nothing will be omitted which can add beauty or interest to a work which the Proprietors venture to think is one of great interest and novelty in itself.

The Work will be published, for the Proprietors, by Messra, Relfe and Unwin, Cornhill; Charles Tilt, Fleet Street; and Messra, Moon, Boys, and Graves, Pall Mall; and may be ordered from all Booksellers in Town or Country.

Rivington's Miniature Editions. WILSON'S (Bishop) INTRODUCTION to the HOLY SACRAMENT, with the Communion Service annexed. With Portrait.
Wilson's (Bishop) Sacra Privata. Ditto.

Andrews's (Bishop) Devotions. Translated

A Companion to the Altar, extracted from Hele's Offices of Devotion.

The above are neatly and uniformly printed, price 2s. each, bound in black sheep; 2s. 6d. in black caif; and 4s. 6d. in norocco.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

M'NISH'S ANATOMY of DRUNK. M'Nish's Philosophy of Sleep. 12mo. 7s.

M'Lean and Dewar's Gaelic Dictionary 1000 pages, Sts. cloth.
M' Gavin's Scots Worthies, 2 vols. 8vo. 22s.

M'Gavin's History of the Protestant Re-

Rennie's Life of Queen Mary, 7s. boards.

Catechism of Phrenology, 1s. sewed. Kerwan on Railways, 8vo. 1s. sewed. Turcan's Baker's and Confectioner's Assist-M'Kenzie's Life of Muir, 8vo. 4s. boards. Symington against Games of Chance, 18mo.

The Glasgow Mechanics' Magazine, 5 vols.

Dodsley's Economy of Life, Italian, 18mo. 92. 6d. sewed. Wilson's (Professor) Speech on Reform, 6d.

sewed.
Published by W. R. M'Phun, Glasgow; Simpkin and Marshall,
London; and may be had of all Booksellers.

In 19mo. price 9s. boards, dedicated, by permission, to His Grace the Lord Primate of Ireland, the 2d edition, improved, of

DASTORALIA; a Manual of Helps for the Parchial Clergy of the United Church of England and Ireland, containing a Scriptural View of the Clerical Duties—Prayers for the Use of the Clergy—Scheme of Pastoral Visitation—Dutlines of Sermons—and Books for the Use of the Clergy.

By the Rev. HENRY THOMPSON, M.A.

Of St. John's College, Cambridge, Curate of Wrington, Somerset, and formerly Assistant-Minister of St. George's, Camberwell-Frinted for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Pince, Pall Mall.

New and improved edition of the "Black Book," enlarged and corrected to March 1838, and complete in 1 vol. 8vo. price 184. embellished with Portraits of the Friends of the Reform Bill.

THE EXTRAORDINARY BLACK
BOOK; an Exposition of Public Abuses in Church, State, Courts of Law, Representation and Corporate Bodies; with an Address to Alarmists and Reformers; and a Précis of the House of Commons, past, present, and to come.

Besides correction, this edition has been greatly enlavged, especially the Articles on the Church, Bank, and East India Company, and New Chapters added on the State of Corporations in the Chief Cities and Towns; the Principles and Working of Taxion, with valuable Statistical Tables, illustrative of the Ecclusiantical Patronage of each of the Nobility, of Finance, the Reform Bill, Representation, House of Lords, Commons, East India Company, Bank, Inns of Court, Trinity College, Clerical Magistray, Colonies, Irish Tithes, Church-Rates, Discenters, &c. London: Published by Effingham Wilson, 88, Royal Exchange.

Miss Edgeworth's latest Work for Young People.
In 4 vols. 12mo. price 17s. neatly half-bound.

HARRY and LUCY, concluded; being the

HARKY and LUCY, concluded; being the Last Part of Early Lessons.
By MARIA EDGEWORTH.
"Looking merely at its literary merits, this is a delightful book; considered with a view to its object, it is a very important one. Miss Edgeworth, in her 'Harry and Lucy,' makes use of fiction as the vehicle of instruction. This is no new undertaking, but it is the most successful we have ever met with."—London Magazine.

By the same Author,
The Early Lessons, in 4 vols. price 11s. half-

Rosamond; being a Sequel to Rosamond in

Frank; being a Sequel to the Story of Frank 3 vols. price 9s. half-boun

The Parent's Assistant; or, Stories for Children. A new edition, complete in 3 vols. 18mo. with fine Engravings on Steel, from Drawings by Harvey. Half-bound Little Plays for Children; being a Continuan of the Parent's Assistant. 18mo. half-bound, price 3s. 6d. Poetry Explained, 18mo. half-bound, 2s. 6d. Readings in Poetry, 18mo. half-bound, 3s. Comic Dramas, 12mo. boards, price 7s.

Essays on Practical Education, 3 vols. 12mo. 6s. 6d. boards. London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In a few days, in 2 vols. post 8vo. with Views,
IX MONTHS in AMERICA.

By G. T. VIGNE, Esq.

Of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-st-Law.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London-

New Surlington Street, April.

MR. WASHINGTON IRVING'S NEW 8KETCH-BOOK will be ready for delivery on the ist of May, in 8 vols. Wo. uniform with the former Work of the same Author. Orders (which should be sent, if possible, by the 30th inst. to prevent disappointment) are now being received by every Bookseller throughout the Kingdom.

inst. to prevent disappointment) are now being received by every Bookseller throughout the Kingdom.

Miss Edgeworth's Tales and Novels, in Monthly Volumes, with superb Engravings.

On the list of May will be published, Vol. 1. price 5s. uniform in size and appearance with the Waverley Novels and Lord Byren's Life and Works, to be completed in 18 Monthly Vols.

THE TALES and NOVELS of MARIA

EDGEWORTH.

The Drawings to illustrate this attractive Edition of the most energing Writer of the age, are wholly by Harvey, and engraved by Charles Rolls, Goodall, H. Robinson, Bacon, &c. in the most insisted style of excellence; each Volume to contain a Prontspice and Vignetic; and the Work will be bound in a cloth manufactured and emboused for the purpose, and lettered in gold.

To delineate with accuracy the peculiar scenery of Ireland, and give to native character all lits humour and truth, Mr. Harvey visited many of its districts, and has thus been able to introduce into his talented sketches living character and much of the wild and beautiful scenery of the country.

"a" New Malter Nocti, in his general Preface to the First Volume of the Waverley Novels, thus alludes to Miss Edgeworth with the Control of the Mary of the Country.

"a" New Malter Nocti, in his general Preface to the First Volume of the Waverley Novels, thus alludes to Miss Edgeworth with the Mary of the Same Same and admirable tact, which the control of the Mary of the same kind with that which Miss Edgeworth so fortunately achieved for Irended the most popular look that was ever published.

"Without being so presumptuous as to hope to emulate the rich humour, pathetic tenderness, and admirable tact, which pervade the works of my accomplished friend, I felt that something might the attempted for my own country, of the same kind with that which Miss Edgeworth so fortunately achieved for Irended to procure sympathy for their virtues, and indulgence for their fobbles."

The whole of the Works have undergone a careful revision and correction by the Author.

The First Vol. comprising Castle Rackrent and Irish Bulls, is illustrated with fine Engravings by H. Robinson and I. Cook.

ton and I. Cook.

London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row:

and other Proprietors.

On Monday, April 16th, will be published.

THE HUNCHBACK; a New Play, in Five Acts. Five Acts.
By JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES.

Nearly ready, in foolscap 8vo. with a Design by Wilkie, The Maid of Elvar, a Poem. By Allan

Cunningham.

E. Mozon, 64, New Bond Street; and sold by all Booksellers.

N EASTER MONDAY, as an Easter Present, will be published "Flowers of Fable," culled from the best Writers, and prused of all objectionable matter. Embellished with 150 Engravings on Wood, price 5s.
Viretelly, Branston, and Co. Fleet Street;
Who have just published new editions of

Who have just published new editions of The Young Lady's Book, which possesses the hitherto unattempted novelty of concentrating, in one vol. all that is interesting, either as an exercise, a recreation, or a pursuit, and forms a complete repertorium of all those Accomplishments which grace the sex, and constitute the perfection of "Twenty years ago," agys the Literary Gazette, "all the talents in England could not have produced such a work."

Price One Guinea, richty bound in embroidered crimson allt, and embellished with upwards of 700 Engravings.

The Boy's Own Book; the most acceptable THE BOYS OWN BOOKS; the HOUSE exceptance present ever devised for youth, embracing the sports and exercises of out-door enjoyment, the pastimes of a winter's fire-tide, and the recreations of science, copiously detailed in nearly five hundred closely printed pages, embellished with upwards of 300 Engravings. Price 92. 6d. in ornamental boards; and 10s. 6d. handsomely bound in Arabesque emboused morocco, with git

On the 9th of April will be published, in 2 vols. 8vo

THE APOSTOLICITY of TRINITARIANISM; or, the Testimony of History to the positive Antiquity and Apostolical inculcation of the Decurine of the Hoty Trinity.

Trinity.

By GEORGE STANLEY FABER, B.D.

Master of Sherburn Hospital, Durham, and Prebendary of Sainbury.

In the First Book the Author traces up the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity to the Apotolic Age, in various, distinct, though perfectly harmonising, Lines of Evidences.

In the Second Book are noticed the Objections which affect the Historical Part of the Question.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mail.

In the press, post 8vo. 8s. 6d. boards, , by permission, to Her Most Gracious Majesty, Dedicated, by permission, to Her Most Gracious Majesty,
HE MESSIAH; a Poem, in Six Books.
By the Author of "The Omnipresence of the Delty," &c. Hail, Son of the Most High! Heir of both worlds, On thy glorious work Now enter, and begin to save mankind.—Milton.

London: S. Maunder, 30, Regent Street, Waterloo Place.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, a the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7. Wellington Street, Waterion Seriet, Street, and the Street, Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange; E. Marlborough, Ave Maris Lone, Ludgate Rill, A. Black, Edinburgh; Smith and Rom, D. Robertson, and Atkinson and Co. Glasgow; and J. Cumming, Dublis, —Agent for America, O. Rich, 13, Red Lion Squere, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leloester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 796.

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The History of the Peninsular War. By R. Southey, Esq. LL.D. Vol. III. 4to. pp. 936. London, 1832. Murray.

THIS great historical work is now happily concluded, and we have the published termination of the author's labours before us. The Peninsular war, most glorious for England, is a theme which may well delight and animate her sons: and its events are here related in that style of perspicacity and simplicity which is most consonant to effect as well as to truth. The narrative beguiles us onward through the account of operations, of sieges, of battles, of popular resistance, of cruelties, and of horrors; till, at the close of even so voluminous a production, we feel as if we had read only a brief tale, and long again to begin another of similar variety and interest. But as we have had occasion to deliver our opinion on the preceding parts, we shall now do our best duty by allowing the present volume to speak for itself. It commences in May 1810, and ends with the conclusion of the war, the return of Ferdinand to Madrid, and of the victorious Wellington to his native land. It was in 1810 that the guerilla warfare, first commenced by Don Juan Martin Diez, the famous Empecinado, was orfood for extract as specimens of his perform-

"These parties began to be formed immediately after Buonaparte swept the land before means of subsistence were cut off, happy if they him to Madrid, and from that time they continued to increase in numbers and activity, as the regular armies declined in reputation and in strength. The enemy made a great effort to put them down after the battle of Ocaña, and boasted of having completely succeeded, because the guerillas disappeared before them, dispersing whenever they were in danger of being attacked by a superior force. There was nothing in their dress to distinguish them from the peasantry; every one was ready to give them intelligence or shelter; they knew the country perfectly; each man shifted for himself in time of need; and when they re-assembled at the appointed rallving place, so far were they from being dispirited by the dispersion, that the ease with which they had eluded the enemy became a new source of confidence. They became more numerous and more enterprising after it had been seen how little loss they sustained, when, for a time, the intrusive government made it its chief object to extirpate them; their escapes, as well as their exploits, were detailed both in the official and provincial gazettes; and the leaders became known in all parts, not of Spain only, but of Europe, by their own names, or the popular appellations which had been given them indicative of their former profession or personal appearance. El wished for the reformation of the abuses which Manco, the man with a maimed arm, com-manded one band; the Old Man of Sereña glad to see this disposition manifest itself in a

el Pastor, the Shepherd; el Abuelo, the Grand-father. One chief was called el Chaleco, from the fashion of his waistcoat; he won for himself a better reputation than might have been expected from such an appellation: another obtained the name of Chambergo, from his slouched hat. Names of worse import appear among them; there was the Malalma, the Bad Soul, de Aibar, and the Ladron, the Robber, de Lumbier. A large portion of the men who engaged under these leaders were soldiers who had escaped in some of the miserable defeats to which the rashness of the government and the incapacity of their generals had exposed them; or who had deserted from the regular army to this more inviting service. Smugglers also, a numerous and formidable class of men, now that their old occupation was destroyed, took to the guerilla life, and brought to it the requisites of local knowledge, hardiness, and audacity, and the quick sense of sight and hearing which they had acquired in carrying on their dangerous trade by night. But the greater number were men who, if circumstances had permitted, would have passed their life usefully and contentedly in the humble stations to which they were born; labourers, whom there were now none to employ, - retainers, who partook ganised and became a national system; and the ruin of the great families to which they Dr. Southey's details of these afford us ample and their ancestors had been attached;—owners or occupiers of land, whose fields had been laid waste, and whose olive-yards destroyed; and the whole class of provincial tradesmen, whose had only their own ruin and their country's quarrel to revenge, and not those deeper injuries of which dreadful cases were continually occurring wherever the enemy were masters. Monks, also, and friars, frocked and unfrocked, were among them: wherever the convents were suppressed, and their members forbidden to wear the habit on pain of death, which was done in all the provinces that the French overran, the young took arms, the old employed themselves in keeping up the spirit of the people; and the intrusive government paid dearly for the church property, when those who had been previously supported by it exchanged a life of idleness for one of active exertion in the national cause, some to preach a crusade against the invaders, others to serve in it. These, whom oppression had driven out from the cloister, were not the only religioners who took arms. Not a few in the parts of the country which were still free took the opportunity, precious to them, of escaping from the servitude to which they were bound, disgusted with the follies of their profession, sick of its impostures, or impatient of its restraints. Public opinion encouraged them in this course; the multitude ascribing their conduct to a religious zeal for their country, while those who

Cantarero, the Potter; el Cocinero, the Cook; | ciscans applied to Mendizabal to deliver up a friar who had enlisted in his army; but the application was so little in accord with the spirit of the times, that Mendizabal's answer was read with universal approbation by the Spaniards. 'The head of the Franciscans,' said that commander, 'must have forgotten what Cardinal Ximenes de Cisneros did when he commanded the army which took Oran. If that prelate in those days thought of nothing but destroying the Koran, and substituting the Gospel in its stead, what would he do now, when the religion of our fathers and our mother country is in danger? I have taken a lesson from his eminency. Let the present head of the order send me a list of all the brethren capable of bearing arms, not forgetting himself, if he is fit for service, and we will march together and free our religion and our country. Inspire then your friars, that they may be agents in this noble work, putting away all kind of sloth; and let no other cry be heard than that of 'War against the tyrant, freedom for our religion, our country, and our beloved Ferdinand!" While this course was taken by the monks and friars, it is related of the nuns in the subjected parts of the country, that they passed the nights in praying for the success and deliverance of their countrymen, and the days in preparing medicines and bandages for the sick and wounded French."

Among other instances of heroic virtue it is recorded_

" Lorenzo Teyxeyro, an inhabitant of Granada, who had performed the dangerous service of communicating intelligence to the nearest Spanish general, was discovered, and might have saved his life if he would have named the persons through whom the communication was carried on; but he was true to them, as he had been to his country, and suffered death contentedly. The other instance was attended with more tragic circumstances. Captain Vicente Moreno, who was serving with the mountaineers of Ronda, was made prisoner, carried to Granada, and there had the alternative proposed to him of suffering by the hangman, or entering into the intruder's service. Sebastiani shewed much solicitude to prevail upon this officer, having, it may be believed, some feeling of humanity, if not some fore-feeling of the opprobrium which such acts of wickedness draw after them in this world, and of the account which is to be rendered for them in the next. Moreno's wife and four children were, therefore, by the general's orders, brought to him when he was upon the scaffold, to see if their entreaties would shake his resolution; but Moreno, with the courage of a martyr, bade her withdraw, and teach her sons to remember the example which he was about to give them, and to serve their country, as he had done, honourably and dutifully to the last. This murder provoked a public retaliation which the Spaniards seldom exercised, but, when they did, upon a tremendous scale. Gonzalez, who was another. There was el Frayle, the Friar; el class of men whom they justly regarded as one member in the Cortes for Jaen, had served with Cura, the Priest; el Medico, the Doctor; el of the pests of Spain. The general of the Fran- Moreno, and loved him as such a man deserved member in the Cortes for Jaen, had served with to be loved; and by his orders seventy French fell into their hands. . . Of the wretches prisoners were put to death at Marbella. So wicked a system as that which Buonaparte's generals unrelentingly pursued could nowhere have been exercised with so little prospect of success, and such sure effect of calling forth a dreadful vengeance, as among the Spaniards. Against such enemies they considered all means lawful; this was the feeling not here alone, but throughout the body of the nation; the treacherous commencement of the war on the part of the French, and the systematic cruelty with which it had been carried on, discharged them. they thought, from all observances of good faith or humanity towards them; and upon this principle they acted to its full extent. The labourer at his work in the fields or gardens had a musket concealed at hand, with which to mark the Frenchman whom ill fortune might bring within his reach. Boys, too young to be suspected of any treachery, would lead a party of the invaders into some fatal ambus women were stationed to give the signal for beginning the slaughter, and that signal was sometimes the hymn to the Virgin! Not fewer than 8000 French are said to have been cut off in the mountains of Ronda. There, however, it was more properly a national than a guerrilla warfare; the work of destruction being carried on less by roving parties than by the settled inhabitants, who watched for every opportunity of vengeance."

In La Mancha - "One adventurer raised himself to respectability and rank by his services, though known by the unpromising ap-pellation of El Chaleco. Francisco Abad Mo-reno was his name. He began his career as a common soldier, and escaping from some rout, joined company with two fugitives of his own regiment, and began war upon his own account. Their first exploit was to kill an enemy's conrier and his escort; and shortly afterwards. having added two recruits to his number, he presented to the Marquess of Villafranca, at Murcia, five carts laden with tobacco, quicksilver, and plate, which he had taken from the French, and the ears of thirteen Frenchmen who had fallen by their hands! His party increased as his name became known; and he cut off great numbers of the enemy, sometimes in Murcia, sometimes in La Mancha, intercepting their convoys and detachments. Shewing as little mercy as he looked for, and expecting as little as he shewed, he faced with desperate or ferocious courage the danger from which there was no escape by flight, swimming rivers when swollen by rain, or employing any means that might give him the victory. On one occasion he broke a troop of the French by discharging a blunderbuss loaded with five-andthirty bullets; it brought down nine of the enemy, according to his own account, and he received so severe a contusion on the shoulder from the recoil, that it entirely disabled him for a time; but the party was kept together under his second in command, Juan de Bacas, and its reputation enhanced by greater exploits."

But there were some melancholy contrasts to these devoted efforts.

"As in times of pestilence or earthquake, wretches are found obdurate enough in wickedness to make the visitation a cover for their guilt, and enrich themselves by plunder, so now, in the anarchy of Spain, they whose evil disposition had been restrained, if not by efficient laws, yet in some degree by the influence of settled society, abandoned themselves, when that control was withdrawn, to the impulses of whom this dissolution of government let loose upon mankind, the banditti were the boldest, but not the worst. A more extraordinary and flagitious course was chosen by José Pedra-zuela, who had been an actor at Madrid. He assumed the character of a commissioner under the legislative government; and being acknowledged as such in the little town of Ladrada in Extremadura, condemned and executed, under a charge of treason, any persons whom for any motive he chose to destroy: the victims were carried at night to a wood, where their graves had been made ready, and there their throats were cut, or they were shot, or beaten to death. The people supposing him to be actually invested with the authority which he assumed, submitted to him in terror, as the French had done to Collot d'Herbois and the other monsters whom this Pedrazuela was imitating. wife, Maria Josefa Garcia della Valle. privy to the imposture, and, if possible, exceeded him in cruelty. Before they could withdraw, as they probably designed to do when they had sufficiently enriched themselves, Castaños heard of their proceedings, and instantly took measures for arresting them in their career of blood. They were brought to trial at Valencia de Alcantara: thirteen of these midnight murders were proved against them; it was said that in the course of three months they had committed more than threescore. The man was hanged and quartered. the woman strangled by the garrote. The Spaniards had not brought upon themselves the guilt of revolution-but they were visited by all its horrors !"

Of these enough: our next selection describes an act of another and a superstitious kind, and of which we do not remember to have, previously heard: the date is August 1812. after the deliverance of Seville.

"The barefooted Carmelites in Cadiz presented a memorial, stating that Philip III. and the Cortes of 1617, had chosen St. Teresa for patroness and advocate of Spain, under the Apostle Santiago, that the nation in all its emergencies might invoke her, and avail itself of her intercession. At that time the saint had only been beatified; but her canonisation shortly afterwards took place, and then the Cortes of 1626 published the decree, which was confirmed by Pope Urban VIII., without prejudice to the rights of Santiago, St. Michael the Archangel, and the most Holy Virgin. Jealous, nevertheless, of the imprescriptible rights of their own saint, the chapter of Compostella exerted their influence at Rome with such success, that the decree was suspended against the wishes both of the king and Cortes. That wish, however, continued in the royal family; and Charles II., in a codicil to his will, declaring that he had always desired to establish the co-patronship of St. Teresa for the benefit of his kingdom, charged his successors to effect it. The Carmelites now urged that at no time could it more properly be effected than at the present, when her potent patronage was needed against invaders, who sowed the seeds of impiety wherever they carried their arms. This memorial was referred to a special ecclesiastical commission; and in confomity to the opinion of that commission the Cortes elected St. Teresa patroness and protectress, under Santiago, of those kingdoms—decreed that her patronship should forthwith take effect-enjoined all archbishops, bishops, and prelates, to see that the correspondent alterations should their own evil hearts. These banditti plun-dered and murdered indiscriminately all who required the regency to give orders for print- and the popular feeling in both cases outran ing, publishing, and circulating this decree. The community of the barefooted Carmelites then returned thanks for this appointment of their mother the saint. 'It was a decree,' they said, ' which would fill all the natives of those kingdoms with consolation and hope; and they flattered themselves that from that moment Spain would experience the powerful intercession of its new protectress.' 'My great mother, S. Teresa de Jesus, co-patroness of the Spains!' exclaimed the prior, in an address, which was printed among the proceedings of the Cortes, 'the very idea makes me eternally bless the law that sanctions it. This has been a business of much time, an affair of some ages, a work of many and mighty hands: but the glory of completing it has been reserved for the fathers of the country, for the congress of lights, for your majesty the Cortes, which has been the glorious instrument of this work of the Eternal. And it was fitting that the country of heroes should have the heroine of nations at its head, who, like another mother of the Maccabees, should encourage its sons to triumph and to glory. This Deborah is not less sage than she who judged Israel—not less valiant; and the Baraks who will come forward under her protection will not be intimidated by danger. She is not a Moubitess to pervert the armies of Israel. She is a Jack who will destroy the forces of Sennacherib-Semiramis, who will overthrow the hosts of the sanguinary Cyrus. At the sight of this fortunate Esther, Spain would lift her head and conceive higher hopes. The unanimous consent of the whole nation, the vows of the Spaniards of both hemispheres, would rise to heaven, and uniting themselves at this moment with the intercessions of their great co-patroness, form that imperious voice which commands the winds and the tempests, rules the seas, makes itself felt in the dark regions of the abyss, and ascending the eternal mountain of the Lord, puts aside the decree of extermina. tion that threatens us, substitutes for it that of our aggrandisement and elevation, and brings a blessing upon those judicious, prudent, and sage Mordecais, whose wise resolution has been the cause of this portent.' In this language did the descendants of the prophets who dwelt on Mount Carmel, the children of the great Teresa, offer upon the altar of gratitude the incense of their respect and veneration to the Cortes !"

We now turn to the author's remarks on the restoration of the king, and select an example of their quality and spirit.

May 1814. — " If Ferdinand had now performed the promises which were distinctly made in his declaration, he might have averted much, if not all, of the subsequent danger which he incurred, and the just reproaches which will be attached to his name in history. It ought not to be said that in making those promises he had no intention of fulfilling them; for though he scrupled at no dissimulation when under duresse, they were voluntary in this case, and the temper of the nation, then unequivocally declared, was such, that no purpose was to be gained by it. Ferdinand was a person of narrow mind, and his heart seems to have been incapable of generous feeling; but he was not a wicked man; nor would he have been a bad king, if he had met with wise ministers, and had ruled over an enlightened people. the two important subjects of civil and religious freedom he and the great body of the nation were in perfect sympathy, - both, upon both subjects, imbued with error to the core;

his. The word Liberty (Libertad) appeared in | have been followed by no curses ;-his laurels | those precious papyri. Some others are said large bronze letters over the entrance of the Hall of the Cortes in Madrid. The people, of their own impulse, hurried thither to remove it; they set up ladders, forced out letter by letter from the stone, and as each was thrown into the street, the spectators renewed their shouts of exultation. They collected as many of the journals of the Cortes, and of the papers and pamphlets of the Liberales, as could be got together; formed a procession in which the religious fraternities, and the clergy regular and secular, took the lead; piled up these papers in one of the public squares, and sacrificed them there as a political auto-da-fe, after which high mass was performed and To Doum sung, as a thanksgiving for their triumph. The Stone of the Constitution, as it was called, was every where removed, and replaced as it had been at Valencia. The people at Seville deposed all the existing authorities, elected others in their stead to all the offices which had existed under the old system, and then required those authorities to re-establish the Inquisition. In re-establishing that accursed tribunal by a formal act of government, in suppressing the freedom of the press, which had been abused to its own destruction, and in continuing to govern not merely as an absolute monarch, but as a despotic one, Ferdinand undoubtedly complied with the wishes of the Spanish nation. He did these things conformably to his own misguided conscience and weak judgment, as well as to his inclinations; and for so doing he was, by the voice of the people, a patriotic and popular king. In all this he cannot justly be charged with any thing worse than error of judgment; fearfully injurious indeed in its consequences. but in the individual to be pitied as well as pardoned. But, in his treatment of the more conspicuous persons among the Liberales, whom he condemned to strict and long imprisonment. many of them for life, he brought upon himself an indelible repreach, and incurred the guilt of individual sin. Quintana, who, more than any other person, contributed by his eloquent writings to excite and sustain the national spirit, and awaken the sympathy of other nations, was one of the victims thus sentenced and his life is said to have been not the only one which was shortened by severe confine ment."

The return to England of the triumphan conqueror, raised to a dukedom, enriched by rewards, and covered with honours, finely closes the scene; and we have great gratifica-tion in copying, though only a short passage or two, the glowing language in which it is told.

"In Gascony, as well as in Portugal and Spain, the Duke of Wellington's name was blessed by the people. Seldom, indeed, has it fallen to any conqueror to look back upon his career with such feelings! The marshal's staff, the dukedom, the honours and rewards which his prince and his country so munificently and properly bestowed, were neither the only nor the most valuable recompense of his labours. There was something more precious than these, more to be desired than the high and enduring fame which he had secured by his military achievements,—the satisfaction of thinking to what end those achievements had been directed; that they were for the deliverance of two most injured and grievously oppressed nations; ... for the safety, honour, and welfare, of his own country ;-and for the general interests of Europe and of the civilised are entwined with the amaranths of righteousness, and upon his death-bed he might remember his victories among his good works. This is the great and inappreciable glory of England in this portion of its history, that its war in the Peninsula was in as strict conformity with the highest principles of justice as with sound state policy. No views of ag-grandisement were entertained either at its commencement or during its course, or at its termination; conquests were not looked for, commercial privileges were not required. It was a defensive, a necessary, a retributive war; engaged in as the best means of obtaining security for ourselves, but having also for its immediate object ' to loose the bands of wickedness,' and to break the yoke of oppression, and to let the oppressed go free.' And this great deliverance was brought about by England with God's blessing on a righteous cause. If France has not since that happy event continued to rest under a mild and constitutional monarchy, - if Spain has relapsed into the abuses of an absolute one, -if the Portuguese have not supported that character which they recovered during the contest,-it has been be cause in all these instances there were national errors which retained their old possession, and national sins which were not repented of. But the fruits of this war will not be lost upon posterity: for in its course it has been seen that the most formidable military power which ever existed in the civilised world was overthrown by resolute perseverance in a just cause; it has been seen also that national independence depends upon national spirit-but that even that spirit in its highest and heroic degree may fail if wisdom to direct it be wanting. . . These lessons have never been more memorably exemplified than in the Peninsular War; and for her own peculiar lesson, England, it may be hoped, has learned to have ever from thenceforth a just reliance, under Providence, upon her resources and her strength ;-under Providence, I say, for if that support be dis-regarded, all other will be found to fail. My task is ended here; and if in the course of this long and faithful history it should seem that I have any where ceased to bear the ways of Providence in mind, or to have admitted a feeling, or given utterance to a thought inconsistent with glory to God in the highest, and good-will towards men, let the benevolent reader impute it to that inadvertence or inaccuracy of expression from which no diligence, however watchful, can always be secure; and as such let him forgive what, if I were conscious of it, I should not easily forgive in myself. Laus Deo." Amen!

Pompeiana; or, Observations of the Topography, Rdifices, and Ornaments of Pompeii. By Sir William Gell, F.R.S., F.S.A., &c. New Series. Part XII. Jennings and Chaplin.

THE present Part concludes this fine and in teresting work. It is chiefly occupied with explanations of the vignettes, thirty in number, with which the various Parts have been adorned; but there is an appendix, containing among other things a description of the Hercu lanean manuscripts, so curious and valuable, that we cannot refrain from communicating is to our readers.

"The Herculanean manuscripts were found in a suburban villa in the year 1753, in a room world. His campaigns were sanctified by the cause;—they were sullied by no cruelties, no had once a vaulted roof, to the strength of roughly penetrated the whole mass of a volume, crimes; the chariot-wheels of his triumphs which has been ettributed the preservation of a fresh difficulty arises in the unrelling; as also to have been found in a corridor or portico of the same habitation, which opened into the garden; but whether this had a vaulted roof or not cannot now be known, and that circumstance seems at least very doubtful in the instance of the library. Winckelman relates that 800 manuscripts were found; but from the statement of the accurate Canonico Iorio, who thoroughly examined the subject, and published the result in the year 1825, it appears that 1756 were rescued from the ruins, without reckoning a considerable number which were destroyed by the workmen, who imagined that the volumes were of no more value than fragments of charcoal, and actually called the place in which they were found the Bottega del Carbonaro. The papyri were found, according to Iorio, ranged in presses or shelves round the sides of the room to about the height of a man, while in the centre of the floor stood a species of insulated rectangular column of books, fronting every way, not much unlike those which are frequently found, of a circular form, in the drawing-rooms of ladies in England. papyri found in the country house near Hercu-laneum, according to the Canonico Iorio, from whose essay the whole of this information is obtained, were found in a small chamber payed with mosaic, and had been arranged in presses round the walls, or in a pier in the centre. The wood all crumbled when exposed to the air; and the workmen only began to suspect the papyri were not common charcoal when they observed the regularity of their disposition, and that one which broke into two parts had letters upon it. It must be remembered, that the excavation was carried on in a deep underground passage, without the advantage of daylight. It appears that some had stood in an erect, and others in a horizontal, position; and they were accordingly crushed in both directions. None were found with two umbilici. and many were without any, as they are presented in several ancient paintings. Instead of binding, a long slip of unwritten paper on the outside served to protect the book within. Many were found which were illegible, from having originally been written with pale ink. Some appeared to have been below the others, and to have been formed by the humidity into a hard and almost petrified substance. were considered as quite hopeless, having become a well-united mass, scarcely to be penetrated by a needle. Others had a degree of durability equal to plumbago, and might have been used as chalks. The papyri are only written on one side, except in a single instance, where the roll was not sufficiently long. Some were absolutely powder; and when the dust was blown away, the writing disappeared; so that the Canonico Iorio calls them the ghosts of papyri. It appears that the Latin MSS. are more difficult to unroll than the Greek; so that of 2,366 columns and fragments already opened, only 40 are Latin. The length of the Greek papyri varies from eight to twelve inches. A Latin roll, besides being much thicker, often extends to sixteen. In both languages the columns or pages of writing formed compart-ments placed at a right angle with the length of the roll. The papyrl of the ancients were formed by pasting a variety of shreds together at right angles to each other, so that what may be called the grain of one would be opposed in its disposition to tear longitudinally by the cross fibres of the other. It is easy to conceive, that what was originally a coating, only used to add substance to the paper, may now peel off for the operator instead of the inscribed face. Sir Humphry Davy, who employed himself a short time in observing the effects of a new process for unrolling the papyri, seemed to think they were not carbonised, and that the colour and substance produced by time resulted solely from humidity. That gentleman did not efface the characters by his process, as has been asserted on the spot; but, on the contrary, in the presence of the author, who was employed to copy the fragments, frequently added much to the brilliancy of letters scarcely discernible. Some of the manuscripts have been opened with so much difficulty, that it was found absolutely necessary to destroy the visible column, after having most carefully copied it, in order to arrive at the next; and the care, the patience, and the peculiar talent necessary in the process, are such, that those only who see it, and are aware of what has been done, can judge of the merit of those who are employed, and who are often accused of negligence and apathy by the passing traveller. Of the papyri, 371 were entire; 61 were nearly perfect; 161 wanted about one third of each roll. Of fragments, 1324 were found; and of those which had only the exterior perfect, 474 were discovered; but these had been cut half through, longitudinally, in order to discover their contents, their re spective centres having been carefully preserved for a future opportunity. 332 volumes have been already tried, and of 542 taken from the shelves for the purpose of unrolling, 210 are well and neatly done; 127 are in a great measure finished, and 205 remain in the presses at the Museum, which are considered as hopeless. Of some MSS, the title only is as yet known, which was written in a larger character. A person named Papira, in the year 1786, endea-voured to open three of the MSS. Sir Humphry Davy is said to have had twenty placed at his disposal. Twenty were sent to England, among which were several of those petrified and useless: Mr. Sickler destroyed some of these in the attempt to open them. Mr. Hayter, who was sent by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in the year 1800, to Naples, is said to have tried 195 fragments of the papyri, and to have been five years employed in unrolling them. Whether these or any of them have appeared in the collection of Herculanean MSS, published at Oxford in the year 1824, the absence of preface to the work leaves us in ignorance. The Treatise of Philodemus de Vitiis, one of an anonymous author De Ira, another of Philodemus de Vitiis atque Oppositis Virtutibus, and Demetrius de Poematis, are there given in lithographic fac-simile. These are all found in the Neapolitan list as if existing at present at Naples. The English work is to be continued, and the second volume has already appeared. Seven papyri have been sent to France. Among the works now known to exist in this singular collection are the following, both in Greek and Latin, the names of which are copied from the interesting account of the Canonico Iorio, the author of this work not holding himself responsible for the orthography, which seems often erroneous.

Demetrius—de geometria—de posmatis. In Polyeni difficultates. Epicuri—de natura, lib. il. xx. Colotis in Lysidem Platonis.

dicendi libertate. De poematis. De rhetorica, lib. i. De rhetorica, lib. iv. pars 2. De rhetorica. De rhetorica. De rhetorica commentaria—De rhetorica -De Phænomenis atque signis. De philosophis - De tatia. Carnisci—amicabilia. Now interpreting. Crisippi de providentia, lib. ii. Now interpreting. Epicuri de natura. Now interpreting. Anonymi de ira. Now interpreting.

This catalogue will suffice to give an idea of the library of the Epicurean philosopher of Herculaneum, for such he appears to have been. Among others now under examination, a papyrus on the subject of mythology calls Agamemnon a personification of Æther, Achilles of the Sun, Helen of the Earth, and Hector of Luna. The lucubrations of the author may be curious, but not such as will afford much knowledge or instruction. It is not impossible that some of these papyri may be original works, as no two are written in precisely the same character. Certain ciphers have been observed, which may have been the marks of the amanuensis at the conclusion of some MSS."

Several of the plates in this Part, especially the "Jupiter," the "Peleus and Thetis," and the "Restoration of the Temple of Fortune," are eminently beautiful; and it is further ornamented with a "View of the Site of Pompeii," from a drawing by Mr. Havell, and a characteristic portrait of Sir William Gell, from a drawing by Mr. Uwins.

A Dictionary, Practical, Theoretical, and Historical, of Commerce and Commercial Navigation: illustrated with Maps. By J. R. M'Culloch, Esq. 8vo. pp. 1143. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

THE industry and ability bestowed on this volume are altogether extraordinary: and it is in consequence a very extraordinary work. Unlike preceding publications of the same class, though it embraces all their information, it is extremely original, and displays the mind of a writer deeply imbued with a thorough knowledge of the most important subjects of which he treats-subjects, at this epoch, of great public interest. The Bank of England and the banking system; the East India Company, its charter and commerce; trade of every kind, with the questions of restriction, monopoly, currency, smuggling, &c.; in short, whatever either nationally or individually can be sought for as intelligence, in connexion with these inquiries, are explained, developed, and reasoned upon by Mr. M'Culloch, from their first principles to their present states. The mass of useful and practical instruction to be gathered from his pages is, indeed, prodigious—from the simple description of commodities and manufactures, to the discussion of those abstract arguments which are so apt to puzzle the clearest heads. It is known that we do not always and entirely agree with the author: but even where we differ from him farthest, we are bound to acknowledge that he places matters before us in so enlightened a manner, shews so much sound sense, and, even in his (as it appears to us rather fanciful) theories, gives us so many striking points to ponder upon, and curious opinions to consider, that there are certainly few men of his day more deserving of public attention. With regard to the present comprehensive design, we may intimate what it is from the commencement of the preface.

"It has been the wish of the author and spective businesses. It is hoped, however, that this object has been attained without omitting the consideration of any topic, incident to the subject, that seemed calculated to make the book generally serviceable, and to recommend it to the attention of all classes. Had our object been merely to consider commerce as a science, or to investigate its principles, we should not have adopted the form of a dictionary. But commerce is not a science only, but also an art of the utmost practical importance, and in the prosecution of which a very large proportion of the population of every civilised country is actively engaged. Hence, to be generally useful, a work on commerce should combine practice, theory, and history. Different readers may resort to it for different purposes; and every one should be able to find in it clear and accurate information, whether his object be to make himself familiar with details. to acquire a knowledge of principles, or to learn the revolutions that have taken place in the various departments of trade. The following short outline of what the work contains may enable the reader to estimate the probability of its fulfilling the objects for which it has been intended . It contains accounts of the various articles which form the subject-matter of commercial transactions. To their English names are, for the most part, subjoined their synonymous appellations in French, German, Italian, Russian, Spanish, &c.; and sometimes, also, in Arabic, Hindoo, Chinese, and other eastern languages. We have endeavoured, by consulting the best authorities, to make the descriptions of commodities as accurate as possible; and have pointed out the tests or marks by which their goodness may be ascertained. The places where they are produced are also specified; the quantities exported from such places; and the different regulations, duties, &c. affecting their importation and exportation, have been carefully stated, and their influence examined. The prices of most articles have been given, sometimes for a lengthened period. Historical notices are inserted illustrative of the rise and progress of the trade in the most important articles; and it is hoped, that the information embodied in these notices will be found to be as authentic as it is interesting."

From the body of a work so vast and various indeed from any dictionary-it is very difficult to select extracts which can sustain the part of fair and sufficient witnessing to its merits. We will, however, copy a few passages relative to the book-trade, which will shew how excellently facts and opinions are mingled by the writer.

"Taxes on Literature .- These taxes have been carried to such an extent in England as to be in the highest degree injurious. They are at once impolitic, oppressive, and unjustimpolitic, because they tend to obstruct the growth and diffusion of knowledge; oppressive, because they very frequently swallow up the entire reward of the labours of the most deserving persons; and unjust, because they are not proportioned to the value of the article on which they are laid, and are, indeed, much oftener paid out of capital than out of profit."

"On a late investigation into the affairs of an extensive publishing concern, it was found, that of 130 works published by it in a given time, fifty had not paid their expenses. Of the Colotis in Lysidem Platonis.

Polystratide temerario contemptu. Now interpreting.

Philodemi—de religione—de moribus—de Epicuro—de morte, lib. lv. De vitils, lib. i. De vitils atque oppositis virtuibus corumque subjectis et objectis, lib. viii. De vitils—de musica—de conversatione—de Omeri—de irs—de divitiis—de poematis—de ec quod agendum est—de causa atque allis rebus tractatus memorabiles. De moribus ac vitils, opus ex libro Zenonis contractum, seu de la conducting the details of their responses. Of the author and their expenses. Of the publishers of this work that it should be as ex—eighty that did pay, thirteen only had arrived tensively useful as possible. If they be not deceived in their expectations, it may be advantageously employed, as a sort of vade meoum, general it may be estimated, that of the books deceived in their expenses; and ship-published, a fourth do not pay their expenses; bus so vitils, opus ex libro Zenonis contractum, seu de printed with advantage. As respects pamph- respect, far preferable to ours. In America, lets, we know we are within the mark when Prussia, Saxony, and Bavaria, only one copy we affirm that not one in fifty pays the expenses of its publication! Now, when such is the fact, can any thing be more glaringly unjust than to impose the same duty on all works before they are published? In a very few cases, such duty may fall principally on the buyers, and be only a reasonable deduction from the profits of the author and publisher; but in a vast number more it swallows them up entirely; and in very many cases there are no profits for the duty to absorb, so that it falls wholly on the capital of the unfortunate author or publisher. Were the judges of the courts of law to decide cases by a throw of the dice, there would be quite as much of reason and justice in their decisions, as there has been in the proceedings of our finance ministers as to taxes on literature. If books must be taxed, let publishers be put under the surveillance of the excise; let them be obliged to keep an account of the books they sell, and let them be taxed accordingly; but do not let the loss arising from an unsuccessful literary speculation—and more than half such speculations are unsuccessfulbe aggravated to a ruinous degree by the pressure of a system of taxation, than which there is nothing, even in Algiers, more unequal or oppressive. The reduction of the advertisement duty will do something to lessen this injustice. But the relief is most inadequate. It acknowledges without correcting the evil. Instead of being reduced, the advertisement duty ought to have been entirely repealed. It only amounts to about 170,000% a year; and there cannot be a doubt that the loss of revenue occasioned by its repeal, and by the repeal of half the paper duty, would, at no distant period, be made up by the greater productiveness of the remaining duty on paper, resulting from its greater consumption. The advertisement duty presses very severely on all sorts of works, but particularly on pamphlets; it may, indeed, be said to have utterly destroyed the latter class of publications, in so far at least as they are a source of profit.

"The delivery of eleven copies to public libraries is exceedingly burdensome upon the more expensive class of works, of which small impressions only can be printed; eleven copies of such works would in many instances be a very fair profit for the author; and the obligation to make such a sacrifice has frequently, indeed, caused their publication to be abandoned. A tax of this sort would not be tolerable even were it imposed for a public purpose; but such is not the object of its imposition. Though called public, the libraries which receive the eleven copies are, with the exception of the British Museum, private establishments, be-longing to particular corporations or institu-tions, and accessible only to their members. Why, when an author produces a book, should he be compelled to bestow copies of it on the lawyers of Edinburgh and Dublin, and on the universities? On what principle can these bodies pretend to demand from him a portion of his property? Perhaps it might be expedient, in order to insure the preservation of every work, that copies of it should be deposited, one in London, one in Edinburgh, and one in Dublin. Even this would be calling upon authors to make a considerable sacrifice for the public advantage. But to call upon them to sacrifice ten copies, exclusive of that given to the British Museum, for the benefit of so many private institutions, is a proceeding of any work is required from the author; in France and Austria, two copies are required; and in the Netherlands, three. The governments of the most despotical states treat authors better than they have hitherto been treated by the legislature of England.

" From inquiries we have made, we believe it may be laid down that about 1500 volumes of new publications (exclusive of reprints, pamphlets, and periodical publications not in volumes) are annually produced in Great Britain: and, estimating the average impression of each volume at 750 copies, we have a grand total of 1,125,000 volumes; the value of which, if sold at an average publication price of 9s. a volume, would be 506,2501. The number of reprinted volumes, particularly of school-books, is very great; and if to these we add the reviews, magazines, pamphlets, and all other publications, exclusive of newspapers, the total publication value of the new works of all sorts, and new copies of old works, that are annually produced, may be estimated at about 750,000l. The old-book trade carried on in Great Britain is very extensive, and employs many dealers. The price of old books depends very much on their condition; but, independently of this circumstance, it is very fluctuating and capricious; equally good copies of the same works being frequently to be had in some shops for half or a third of what they can be bought for in others.

" Book-Trade of France. - The activity of the French press has been very greatly increased The Count since the downfal of Napoleon. Daru, in a very instructive work, Notions Statistiques sur la Librairie, published in 1827, estimated the number of printed sheets, exclusive of newspapers, produced by the French press in 1816, at 66,852,883; and in 1825, at 128.011.483! and we believe that the increase from 1825 down to the present period has been little if any thing inferior. The quality of many of the works that have recently issued from the French press is also very superior; and it may be doubted whether such works as the Biographie Universelle, the new and enlarged edition of the Art de vérifier les Dates, in 38 vols. octavo, and the two octavo editions of Bayle's Dictionary, could have been published in any other country. The greater number of new French works of merit, or which it is supposed will command a considerable sale, are immediately reprinted in the Netherlands, or Switzerland, but principally in the former. To such an extent has this piratical practice been carried, that it is stated in the Requite presented by the French booksellers to government in 1828, that a single bookseller in Brussels had, in 1825 and 1826, and the first six months of 1827, reprinted 318,615 volumes of French works! Having nothing to pay for copyright, these counterfeit editions can be afforded at a lower price than those that are genuine. This is a very serious injury to French authors and publishers, not only by preventing the sale of their works in foreign countries, but from the ease with which spurious copies may be introduced into France."

Our remaining selections refer to the interesting questions of the Bank and East India Company; and we have only to add, that they are but particles in the great account of the general information.

" Banks afford safe and convenient places of deposit for the money that would otherwise utterly at variance with every principle of jus-have to be kept, at a considerable risk, in of this power of overdrawing is often a great tice. The law of other countries is, in this private houses. They also prevent, in a great convenience to merchants, while it is rarely measure, the necessity of carrying money from place to place on purpose of making payments, and enable them to be made in the most convenient and least expensive manner. A merchant or tradesman in London, for example, who employs a banker, keeps but very little money in his own hands, making all his considerable payments by drafts or checks on his banker; and he also sends the various checks, bills, or drafts, payable to himself in London, to his bankers before they become due. By this means he saves the trouble and inconvenience of counting sums of money, and avoids the losses he would otherwise be liable to, and would no doubt occasionally incur, from receiving coins or notes not genuine. Perhaps, however, the great advantage derived by the merchant or tradesman from the employment of a banker, consists in its relieving him from all trouble with respect to the presentation for payment of due hills and drafts. The moment these are transferred to the banker, they are at his risk; and if he either neglect to present them when due, or to have them properly noted, in the event of their not being paid, he has to answer for the consequences. This circumstance alone must cause an immense saving of expense to a mercantile house in the course of a year. Let us suppose that a merchant has only two bills due each day: these bills may be payable in distant parts of the town, so that it may take a clerk half a day to present them; and in large mercantile establishments it would take up the whole time of one or two clerks to present the due bills and the drafts. The salary of these clerks is therefore saved by keeping an account at a banker's: besides the saving of expense, it is also reasonable to suppose that losses upon bills would sometimes occur, from mistakes or oversightsfrom miscalculation as to the time the bill would become due-from errors in marking it up_from forgetfulness to present it_or from presenting it at the wrong place. In these cases the indorsers and drawees are exonerated; and if the acceptor do not pay the bill, the amount is lost. In a banking-house such mis-takes occur sometimes, though more rarely; but when they do occur, the loss falls upon the banker, and not upon his customer.' (Gilbart's Practical Observations on Banking.)—It is on other grounds particularly desirable for a merchant or tradesman to have an account with a banking-house. He can refer to his bankers as vouchers for his respectability; and in the event of his wishing to acquire any information with respect to the circumstances or credit of any one with whom he is not acquainted, his bankers will render him all the assistance in their power. In this respect they have great facilities, it being the common practice amongst bankers in London, and most other trading towns, to communicate information to each other as to the credit and solvency of their customers.

" The directors of the Bank of England do not allow any individual to overdraw his account. They answer drafts to the full extent of the funds deposited in their hands; but they will not pay a draft if it exceed their amount. Private bankers, at least in the country, are not generally so scrupulous; most of them allow respectable individuals, in whom they have confidence, to overdraw their accounts. Those who are entitled to do this have what is called an overdrawing account. paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent on whatever sums they overdraw. The possession which is overdrawn is usually replaced within a short period; -- sometimes, indeed, in the course of a day or two. It is not very easy to see why the directors of the Bank of England should so strictly enforce the rule against overdrawing. There can be little doubt that it prevents them from getting a considerable accession of valuable business.

"The system of taking securities having been found to answer so well in the case of the Bank of England, is a powerful argument in favour of its extension. Were securities taken from the country banks, their ultimate failure, in the capacity of banks of issue, would be rendered impossible; and a degree of solidity would be given to our money system, which it is idle to expect it can ever attain, so long as it continues on its present footing.

" According to the existing law, all descriptions of notes are payable at the pleasure of the holder, in coin; but the policy of such a regulation is exceedingly questionable. It may, we think, be easily shewn, that it would be a very great improvement were it enacted, that country bank notes should be payable only in those of the Bank of England.

" Previously to 1759, the Bank of England issued no notes for less than 201. She began to issue ten pound notes in 1759, five pound notes in 1793, and one and two pound notes in March 1797. The issue of the latter ceased in 1821."

In conclusion, we have but to repeat that we are not acquainted with a more valuable work, for what it purposes to do, than this very important volume.

Mr. Jesse's Gleanings in Natural History. [Third notice: Conclusion-from p. 165.]

No remarks of ours can so well illustrate this volume as it illustrates itself. Witness the five following quotations-with which we con-· clude our too-long-postponed review:-

Long Vitality of Seeds.—" This was shewn in trenching for a plantation a part of Bushy Park, which had probably been undisturbed by the spade or plough since, and perhaps long before, the reign of Charles I. The ground was turned up in the winter, and in the following summer it was covered with a profusion of the tree mignionette, pansies, and the wild raspherry, plants which are no where found in a wild state in the neighbourhood; and in a plantation recently made in Richmond Park, a great quantity of the foxglove came up after some deep trenching. I observed a few years ago the same occurrence in a plantation in Devonshire, the surface of which was covered with the dark blue columbine, a flower produced in our gardens by cultivation, and, I believe, not known in this country in its wild state. field also, which had previously little or no Dutch clover upon it, was covered with it after it had been much trampled upon, and fed down by horses; and it is stated from good authority, that if a pine-forest in America were to be cut down, and the ground cultivated, and afterwards allowed to return to a state of nature, it would produce plants quite different from those by which it had been previously occupied. So completely indeed is the ground impregnated with seeds, that if earth is brought to the surface, from the lowest depth at which it is found, some vegetable matter will spring from it. I have always considered this fact as one of the many surprising instances of the power productive of loss to the banker. The money | storing up a deposit of useful seeds in its depths, | where they must have lain through a succession of ages, only requiring the energies of man to bring them into action. In boring for water lately at a spot near Kingston-on-Thames, some earth was brought up from a depth of three hundred and sixty feet; this earth was carefully covered over with a hand-glass, to prevent the possibility of any other seeds being deposited upon it; yet in a short time, plants vegetated from it. If quick lime be put upon land which from time immemorial has produced nothing but heather, the heather will be killed, and white clover spring up in its place. A curious fact was communicated to me, respecting some land which surrounds an old castle, formerly belonging to the Regent Murray, near Moffatt. On removing the peat, which is about six or eight inches in thickness, a stratum of soil appears, which is supposed to have been a cultivated garden in the time of the Regent, and from which a variety of flowers and plants spring, some of them little known even at this time in Scotland."

Remarkable Coincidence in the Royal Hunt .-"It is sometimes very difficult to take stags for hunting. One fine stag was so powerful, and offered so much resistance, that two of his legs were broken in endeavouring to secure him, and he was obliged to be killed. who had shewn good sport in the royal hunt, was named 'Sir Edmund,' by his late Majesty, in consequence of Sir Edmund Nagle having been in at the 'take' after a long chase. This stag lived some years afterwards in the park; and it is a curious fact that he died the very same day on which Sir Edmund Nagle died."

Hares will try and find each other by the scent, as we see dogs hunt. I have disturbed a hare from her seat in the spring, during the breeding season, and when I have retired to a little distance, I have seen her followed, when she was no longer in sight, by a male. He has evidently traced her by the scent; and when he has been at fault, I have observed him make a cast, and hunt his ground as a dog would do, till he has again hit off the right way, and followed with the greatest eagerness.

Bats..... 'It is probable that we had formerly a larger breed of bats in this country than we find at present. One of the workmen employed in the repairs of Cardinal Wolsey's Hall, in Hampton Court Palace, brought me the skeleton of a bat, which he found at the end of one of the rafters of the ceiling. animal, when alive, must have been as large as a pigeon. The hooks were very strong. The natural history of the bat is very curious, and we have some particulars respecting it in M. St. Hilaire's work, to which I have already referred in speaking of the mole. The claws of the hind feet of the bat are all of an equal length, and thus better adapted for enabling the animal to suspend itself, which it does with the head downwards, that being its natural posture of repose. By adopting this attitude, the bat, on being disturbed, can readily dis-engage itself, and dropping into the air, can take flight immediately. If, on the contrary, the animal rested upon a surface, it is well known that it could not easily raise itself. Even if it perched with its head upwards, it could not disengage itself so readily, or be aware of the approach of danger, so soon as it does while resting with its head downwards. The wings of the bat serve them as a sort of mantle or cloak when at rest, and in which and bounty of Almighty God, who has thus they sometimes also cover up their young, you have sent over the water to him, and does literally filled the earth with his goodness, by though they will at other times fly about with not intend to come."

two of them hanging to the breast in the act of sucking. The wings, by their delicate structure and extent, serve as feelers to the animal in guiding its flight in the dark."

Cows. -- "It is a well-ascertained fact, that if a cow produces twins, one of which is a male and the other a female, the latter is never known to breed. She is called a ' free-martin.' The farmers about me say that they fatten kindly."

We might proceed to extract specimens of curiosity and interest to a much greater length, but we are almost ashamed of the pillage we have already, though most complimentarily, committed on a single volume; and shall only mention that there is a remarkable account of the depredations of mice in the Dean Forest; and an antiquarian inquiry, sustained by ancient arms, &c. found on the spot, and in possession of Mr. Jesse, respecting the passage of the Thames by Casar and his legions. Mr. J. inclines to fix this event at Kingston, and not at the Cowey Stakes, or lower down the river. We learn, with much regret, that he is prevented from opening a barrow on the Middle-sex side, which might throw great light upon the question. There is also an excellent paper entitled "Our Village," and marking the decline of rural manners and happiness. Our few remaining quotations may be accompanied by brief comments.

The Lapwing.—" When the lapwing wants to procure food, it seeks for a worm's cast, and stamps the ground by the side of it with its feet, somewhat in the same manner I have often done when a boy, in order to procure worms for fishing. After doing this for a short time, the bird waits for the issue of the worm from its hole, who, alarmed at the shaking of the ground, endeavours to make its escape, when he is immediately seized, and becomes the prey of this ingenious bird.

We have often supposed that this sort of pattering brought the worm up, by its resemblance to the sound of rain.

Fish.... "That fish have the power of hearing, there can, I think, be no doubt, as I have seen them suddenly move at the report of a gun, though it was impossible for them to see the flash. They also appear to have the sense of smelling, as they will prefer paste and worms that have been prepared by particular per-fumes. They have also some curiosity, which I have witnessed by putting some new object into the water, which they have assembled around, and appeared to reconnoitre; carp, especially, would come up to a new fish which was put among them."

With regard to the sense of hearing, it is not clear that the motion of the fish may not be produced in consequence of the vibration of the water. We observe a few trifling inaccuracies in style, but they require hypercriticism to point them out; therefore we conclude with a few samples of the lively maxims on fishing, with which the volume also terminates.

"Do not imagine that, because a fish does not instantly dart off on first seeing you, he is the less aware of your presence; he almost always on such occasions ceases to feed, and pays you the compliment of devoting his whole attention to you, whilst he is preparing for a start whenever the apprehended danger becomes sufficiently imminent.'

"If you pass your fly neatly and well three times over a trout, and he refuses it, do not wait any longer for him; you may be sure that he has seen the line of invitation which artificial fly, it must have time, when you have drawn it out of the water, to make the whole circuit, and to be at one time straight behind you, before it can be driven out straight before you. If you give it the forward impulse too soon, you will hear a crack: take this as a hint that your fly is gone to grass."

"It appears to me that, in whipping with an artificial fly, there are only two cases in which a fish taking the fly will infallibly hook himself without your assistance, viz.: I. When your fly first touches the water at the end of a straight line. 2. When you are drawing out your fly for a new throw. In all other cases it is necessary that, in order to hook him when he has taken the fly, you should do something with your wrist which is not easy to describe."

"If your line should fall loose and wavy into the water, it will either frighten away the fish, or he will take the fly into his mouth without fastening himself; and when he finds that it does not answer his purpose, he will spit it out again before it has answered yours."

" Never mind what they of the old school say about 'playing him till he is tired.' Much valuable time and many a good fish may be lost by this antiquated proceeding. Put him into your basket as soon as you can. Every thing depends on the manner in which you commence your acquaintance with him. If you can at first prevail upon him to walk a little way down the stream with you, you will have no difficulty afterwards in persuading him to let you have the pleasure of seeing him at dinner."

" Do not leave off fishing early in the evening because your friends are tired. After a bright day, the largest fish are to be caught by whipping between sunset and dark. Even, however, in these precious moments you will not have good sport, if you continue throwing after you have whipped your fly off. Pay attention to this; and if you have any doubt after dusk, you may easily ascertain the point, by drawing the end of the line quickly through your hand, particularly if you do not wear gloves."

"When you have got hold of a good fish gentle reader, think of your wife, who, like the fish, is united to you by very tender ties, which can only end with her death, or her going into weeds. If you are single, the loss of the fish, when you thought the prize your own, may remind you of some more serious disappointment."

Captain Basil Hall's Second Series of Fragments of Voyages and Travels.

[Second notice: conclusion-from p. 181.] ANXIOUS for the fate of our friends the alligators, we anticipated, in our preceding notice of this work, the ordinary progress of review; and we must therefore beg our readers to return with us from Bombay, and set out on their voyage to India. The following remarks, on sailing from the shores of Old England for the East, are quite in Captain Hall's manner.

" It is always more teasing to be delayed at the outset of a voyage than at any other stage of its course, just as it is mortifying and hurtful to be checked in the commencement of a profession. In both cases, the influence of early disappointment is apt enough to sour the early disappointment is antended to see the rest of the career; while, in the opposite or successful case, we often see the cheering effects of a few days fair wind continue for months or years afterwards. Upon this occasion, we had a fine rattling easterly breeze for scribed.

"Remember that, in whipping with the eight-and-forty hours after starting, which tificial fly, it must have time, when you have swept us all, dull sailors and good ones, merrily out of the British channel. This fair start is always a grand affair, whatever succeeds; for if the prevalent westerly wind catches a ship before the channel is left well behind, she may be driven back to Plymouth or Falmouth. and all the agony of bills, news, leave-taking, and letters, has to be endured over again. Whereas, if she once gets the Lizard Light some fifty leagues astern of her, all these ferreting distractions may be considered at an end. A totally new world—the 'world of waters'-is now entered upon, far beyond the reach even of those long-armed persons, the gentlemen of the press,' or the startling sound of the postman's knock, that call which so often sets off the steadiest-going pulse at a gallop! No one, indeed, who has not tried the experiment, can have an idea of the extraordinary and delightful change which a few hours can bring about in this respect, or of the peculiar calm, which, when the ship is once fairly at sea, succeeds to the furious storms, or rather squalls, of the parting scene in port.

Oh the joy! the relief unspeakable! of feeling one's self fairly under weigh, and of seeing the white cliffs of Old England sink fast in the north-eastern horizon right to windward! Let the concocters of romances and other imaginary tales say what they please of the joys of returning home; give me the happiness of a good departure, and a boundless world of untried enjoyments ahead. If a man be out of debt and out of love, or only moderately involved in either of these delicate predicaments; if he have youth and health and tolerable prospects, a good ship under his foot, a good officer above him, and good messmates to serve with, why need he wear and tear his feelings about those he leaves behind? Or rather, why need he grieve to part from those who are better pleased to see him vigorously doing his duty than idling in other people's way at home? Or wherefore should he sigh to leave those enjoyments in which he cannot honourably participate ros. 'How do you do, sir? Very glad see till he has earned his title to them by you. D—n your eyes! Johanna man like English very much. God d—n! That very there so insensible as not to feel the deepest apprehension-very often, as I know by sad experience, almost devoid of a single drop of pleasure-on returning from a long and distant he will now find the friends from whom he parted so long ago, and of whom he may, perhaps, not have heard a word for many a long season of anxiety? Is it not too probable that his busy fancy will conjure up many more images of death and sickness, of losses and sorrows, than it can paint pictures of health, good fortune, and happiness? And will it ever happen, if the interval of absence have been long, that some of these gloomy forebodings will not be realised? May it not prove but too often the case, that those who, from being the dearest to us, we had ingeniously and fondly exempted from the fatal doom, are its first victims? Indeed, I have on these occasions been grieved and irritated at myself for canvassing beforehand, in my own mind, and in spite of every effort to change the current of my thoughts, which of all the friends in whom I was interested I could consent to lose with the least regret! And when the pile of accumulated letters is first placed in our hands after a voyage, with what sickening eagerness do we not turn from the superscription to discover the colour of the seal!

A sea-change of linen is whimsically de-

" I merely wish (says the Captain) to give a hint to those who never tried the experiment, that there is a prodigious difference between a shirt scrubbed in salt water, and one which has been washed in fresh. We all know the misery of putting on wet clothes, or sleeping in damp sheets. Now, a shirt washed in salt water is really a great deal worse than either; because, in the cases alluded to, one may apply to the fire or the sun, and remedy the evil at the cost of a little time and trouble; but in the wretched predicament of putting on salt-waterwashed linen, no such process avails any thing. You first dry your unhappy shirt, by exposing it to the sun or the fire till it seems as free from moisture as any bone; you then put it on, in hopes of enjoying the benefit of clean linen.
Alas, not a whit of enjoyment follows! For if the air be in a humid state, or you are exposed to exercise, the treacherous salt, which, when crystallised, has hidden itself in the fibres of the cloth, speedily deliquesces or melts, and you have all the tortures of being once more wrapped in moist drapery. In your agony, you pull it off, run to the galley-range, and toast it over again; or you hang it up in the fiery heat of the southern sun; and when not a particle of wet seems to remain, you draw it on a second time, fancying your job at last complete. But, miserable man, you are as ill off as ever; for the insidious enemy has merely retired out of sight, but still lurks so close, that no art we yet know of will expel him, save and except that of a good sound rinsing in fresh water."

A bit of the Island of Johanna must be our next selection, though we have to skip the amusing chapter on sailors' pets.

"Most of the natives of Johanna, even the negro slaves, talk a little English; but the best examples of persons possessed of such acquirements were found, where they ought to be, amongst the grandees of the island. The following is a fair specimen of the conversation of English very much. God d_n! That very good? Eh? Devilish hot, sir! What news? Hope your ship stay too long while, very. D—n my eye! Very fine day.' After which, in a sort of whisper, accompanied by a most voyage? How can he tell in what condition insinuating smile, his lordship, or his grace, as he will now find the friends from whom he the rank of the party might be, would add:— 'You want orange? You want goat? Cheap! I got good, very. You send me your clothes; I wash with my own hand—clean! fine! very! got every thing, plenty, great, much! n!' And then, as if to clench the favourable opinion which these eloquent appeals had made, the speaker was sure to produce a handful of certificates from mates of Indiamen, masters of Yankee brigs, and middles of men-ofwar; some written in solemn earnest, some quizzically, but all declaring his lordship, the bearer, to be a pretty good washerman, but the sort of person not to be trusted far out of sight, as he would certainly walk off with your clothes-bag if he could safely do so. We had exhausted most of the topics, and all the English words of our friends of the fashionable world of Johanna, excepting the oaths, which their profligate visitors appear to have been particularly successful in sowing amongst them, when the king was graciously pleased to rise from his bamboo couch and summon us to his presence. The audiencechamber might have measured twelve feet long, and eight wide, with a window at one end made to slope like the stern-post of a ship. Under the light sat the king, with his crown on his head-an appendage which, I must say, seems | lieutenant's reserve in his commander-in-chief's | quite proper; and if it were always observed elsewhere, it would save many a bitter disappointment to children and nurses, as I can answer from actual experience in my own family, at the Tuileries, and elsewhere. But, in place of a sceptre in one hand, and a globe in the other, which he ought by rights also to have wielded, his majesty leaned both his hands on the hilt of a monstrous rusty sabre, or ship's cutlass, stuck perpendicularly between his legs, while his elbows rested on the sides of a clumsy, wooden arm-chair, exchanged probably with some master of a merchant ship for a bullock or two. The crown was amazingly grand, being stuck all round with stones, precious enough, I dare swear; and over all was thrown, not inelegantly, an Indian shawl, which dropped on either side nearly to the elastic bamboo floor, covered with rattan mats. Under the shawl we could observe a cumbersome black velvet robe, strangely ill cut, streaked across with gold lace, and garnished with a whole regiment of huge buttons. The folds of the robe concealed from our view the cut and quality of his majesty's small-clothes; but certes he wore no covering below the knee, nor any thing on his feet, except a pair of sandals, consisting of a slip of deal, half an inch thick, tied to the great toe, and laced over the instep by small bands, made of the long grass of the island. This load of finery well nigh concealed a round, fat, good-humoured, elderly personage, whose countenance gave no great promise of intellect beyond what we had found amongst his subjects below stairs."

At Bombay the author was, as we have stated, under the command of Sir Samuel Hood, of whom and his pursuits his account is altogether very interesting: we conclude by selecting a portion of it which describes the earlier scenes of their intercourse, before they arrived at the intimacy of alligator-ing together.

"A telegraphic signal had been made from the flag-staff at the admiral's house to the ship, in these words: 'Send Mr. Hall on shore, with a crow-bar, two pick-axes, and two spades.'
All the way to the landing-place I puzzled myself with thinking what on earth could be the object of these tools-little dreaming, good easy lieutenant! that I was so soon to dig the grave of my own hopes. The admiral received me at the door, with his coat off; and holding out his remaining hand (his right arm was shot away in action), he squeezed mine with even more than his wonted kindness. 'I have been waiting for you with some impatience,' he said. to be present at the hunt after a white ant's nest—a sort of thing I know you like. These rogues, the Termites bellicosi, as I find the naturalists call them, have made their way into the house; and having carried their galleries up the walls and along the roof, have come down in great force upon a trunk of clothes. which they would have destroyed entirely before night had I not caught sight of them. Now let us to work; for I propose to rip up the floor of the verandah, in order to follow their passages and galleries till I reach their nest, if it be a mile off: won't this be a glorious piece of service?' exclaimed the admiral, as he warmed himself by anticipating the chase. He could hardly have been more delighted, I am persuaded, had he been giving orders for a fleet under his command to bear down upon the enemy's line. Of course I failed not to feign presence. We may cherish and obey him, as much or more, than any wife ever did, or promised to do, her spouse; but I never yet saw a sure that there are many too arrogant to learn, naval man, in uniform or in plain clothes, on who might be both benefited and instructed by shore or affoat, sober or merry, that could, even in appearance, bring himself to take a liberty with one who, in times past—no matter how long-had once been his commanding officer. This truth is doubly, trebly true at moments of actual service; and though Sir Samuel was all smiles and favour, standing without his coat in the verandah with a crow-bar in his grasp, his bare breast and single arm exposed naked to the sea-breeze, then just beginning to puff at intervals over the low, red-hot isthmus or neck of land between the inner harbour and the eastern beach, I could not venture to do more than bow, and say I was much obliged to him for having so considerately thought of me at such a moment."

Having regularly routed out the ants, "at last (says the narrative) we reached the great queen ant, the mother of millions of her race, a most enormous personage to be sure, nearly four inches long, and as thick as a man's finger, with a head not bigger than that of a bee, but a body such as I have described, filled with eggs, which continually rolled out like a fluid from a reservoir. Never shall I forget the shout of rapture which the gallant admiral sent over half the harbour, as he succeeded in gaining the object of his labour. There are some men who go about every thing they undertake with all their hearts and souls, and this great officer was one of those. He did nothing by halves and quarters, like so many other men. The greatest deeds of arms, or the most trivial objects of passing amusement, engrossed his whole concentrated attention for the time. He was equally in earnest when holding out examples of private generosity, or lending the heartiest and kindest encouragement even to the least distinguished of his followers, as when performing acts of the highest public spirit, or making the greatest sacrifices to what he considered his duty. Every thing, in short, that he did, or thought, or uttered, bore the stamp of the same peculiar impress of genuine zeal. So eminently exciting, and even fascinating, was this truly officer-like conduct, that even those who had served under him the longest often wondered at the extent of their own exertions when roused by his example, and were led almost to believe that his very look had something stimulating in it which actually gave fresh vigour to their arms as well as to their thoughts. all this, he was the gentlest of the gentle, and accomplished all he undertook without apparent effort, or the least consciousness that what he was doing was remarkable."

Enfin; there is much solid matter in this work, though Capt. Hall cunningly steals upon us under the guise of a writer for the young. The naval service may be much improved by his unassuming suggestions; and we are sure that while he teaches the old idea how to shoot, there is enough of anecdote and interest in his narrations to recommend them to general favour. Another series of three volumes is, we learn, to conclude a design which might run to a much greater extent, and still be most welcome.

Popular Lectures on Vertebrated Animals of the British Islands. Part I. Of the British the author writes of their reception. rusal of his notes has afforded us much pleasure, though all reminiscences; but we are Samouelle's Entomological Cabinet. Small 8vo. No. I. London, 1831. Andrews.

Few sciences have made so rapid a progress within the space of a few years as that of entomology. In imitation of the attention and devotion that was given to the subject on the continent, Dr. Leach perfected this minute and difficult branch of natural history; and Mr. Samouelle's compendium may be justly said to have been the parent of many sub-sequent similar works. While the elements of the science have been exposed in the most alluring, and, at the same time, most lasting manner - a philosophy which originated in considerations on the affinities of insects has been so lofty as to affect other more important branches of natural history; and it now only remains for the industrious entomologist to continue the impulse given, by extending the boundaries of discovery in every possible direction, and increasing its conquests by disseminating information. We are glad that Mr. Samouelle has taken what we consider to be an excellent method of effecting this, in commencing a series of illustrations of British entomology: we will not make any comparisons; but we are sure that such a work is wanted, and that very generally. Apart from the more dry parts of science, and referring to its ordinary enjoyments, a naturalist, it has been observed. cannot sit idle in his chair, or confine himself to his apartment; he must range the fields and meadows in search of objects, with which to amuse and instruct, and need never fear that the charm of novelty will be wanting to sti-mulate him in his researches into the beauteous wonders formed by the plastic hand of a benevolent Creator, who has made nothing in vain. But the "glorious show" which nature presents to the observer of her exquisite works, will but too often be viewed with silent admiration, and with little curiosity, without some help or guide which may accompany the stu-dent in his rambles over the fair face of our delightful country. Such a guide is now presented to the public by our indefatigable guide, who has been for many years the keeper of the insects in the British Museum. The illustrations are what they should be, at once correct and carefully executed; and in the first Number, the beautiful green Cicindela, " the tiger of insects;" the chaste and elegant Hinparchia galathea; and the singularly-formed Ranatra, are well opposed to the betterknown earwig and the Blatta germanica, the smaller species of cockroach: in all six plates, with about twelve pages of letter-press.

Among the illustrations of the second Number (which we have just received), as beautiful and as correct as those of the first, we particularly observe representations of that rare insect the Cimber annulata. The Ornithomyia avicularia, a parasite of swallows, but still more so of swifts, was found by the editor on a lark. We have met with it on the bodies of different species of the grallatores or waders. Illustrations of the pupæ or eggs of insects add to the value of this Cabinet of British entomology.

or feel the enthusiasm of my commander-included and the state of both, perhaps; for the utmost possible, or even conceivable, familiarity of an admiral, will scarcely ever crack the ice of a regrieved to see the desponding tone in which point of view.

Additions, by H. M'Murtrie, M.D. &c. 4 vols. 8vo. Plates. New York, G. and C. and H. Carvill.

Among the not unpleasant incidents of our present literature may be reckoned the transmission of these four volumes from the New York press to a London Literary Journal, for such candid and impartial notice as can be given to them. We lately spoke our sentiments with regard to American talent (for we know no difference of men or of countries in the Literary Gazette), and what we then said of the poet, we are, where desert exists, to say of the naturalist and philosopher. This edition is on inferior paper, and the plates far inferior to those of Whittaker's translation; but it is a very cheap edition-a great recommendation in these economical times. The translator has endeavoured, with considerable success, to surmount the difficulties of nomenclature; it will remain a puzzle, we fear, till there is a common language.

The Philological Museum, Nos. I. and II. Cambridge, Deightons; London, Rivingtons; Oxford, Parker.

OF this quarterly journal only two Numbers have yet appeared, in November and February; and if the sincere tribute of our approbation can be of service to it, we most cordially offer that tribute to its excellent plan and distin-guished classical learning. We have often re-gretted that no periodical of this class has ever succeeded to the extent it ought, either from the insufficient number of readers for whose understanding such discussions and inquiries are calculated, or from some other unexplained cause. Yet the subjects connected with ancient history and philology are noble investigations for the human mind; and even when dry and apparently unimportant in themselves, the reminiscences they awaken, and the incidental information they supply, if even tolerably well treated, are enough to recommend them to every man of education and refinement. We trust this Museum will, by its wide diffusion, become an exception by by-gone rules.

The Bee and the Wasp: a Fable in Verse. With Designs and Etchings by G. Cruikshank. Pp. 16. Tilt.

A LUDICROUS trifle, but not calculated to point a moral or teach the young idea aught but error in natural history. The whimsical designs, though the insects are limbed as never insects were, are its recommendation: the Wasp and Bee getting drunk is worth the price of the book.

Hume and Smollett's History of England. With Portraits of Hume and Smollett, and a short Memoir of Hume, written by himself. Large 8vo. double columns, pp. 1352; and Index, pp. 59. London, 1832, J. O. Robinson; New York, Leavitt; Boston, Crocker and Brewster.

WE cannot call this volume multum in parvo, but it certainly is multissimum in magno; and a work of extraordinary compass, in a concentrated form, and at a very low price. be able to get for five and twenty shillings what was wont to cost almost as many pounds, is a great thing in these economical and hard times. Besides, the reading of a good old English history is just now to be much recom-

The Animal Kingdom. By Cuvier, &c. &c. called upon to look forward to so wide a and diminished irritability; the second vice Translated from the French, with Notes and prospect, it is wise and useful to turn also and versa. Whenever the remiration is high an Additional Property of the Property of the Second Vices and Versa. cast a look back.

> Tales and Novels. By Maria Edgeworth. In 18 vols. Vol. I. Containing Castle Rack-rent, an Essay on Irish Bulls, and an Essay on the noble Science of Self-justification. London, Baldwin and Cradock.

> No writer of our day is more deserving of being given to the public in the prevailing fashion of neatness and cheapness than Miss Edgeworth; and we are happy to renew our acquaintance with her delightful works in a series so likely to be popular as this is. These Tales and Novels opened the way to the study of Irish character, since so ably followed up by other authors; and having undergone a careful revision from Miss Edgeworth, they are still farther recommended to public regard as admirable and original sketches of national feelings and manners. The embellishments, a frontispiece and vignette for each volume, are painted by W. Harvey, and engraved by artists of the first class.

> Scripture Natural History, &c. With Forty-three Engravings. By W. Carpenter. 2d Edition. 12mo. pp. 549. For the Society for Promoting Religious Knowledge.

> MR. CARPENTER was lately expiating his politico-religious offences in gaol; and when we see so pleasing and useful and well-meant and meritorious a volume as the present, we cannot but express our regret that any overzealous and misguided principles should have seduced him from his better pursuits. We do not find one objectionable passage in it: on the contrary, it is most fit to be put into the hands of youth, as explaining and illustrating every thing belonging to natural history which is mentioned in the Bible.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

DR. M. HALL on the relation which subsists between the quantity of respiration and the degree of the irritability in the various species and forms of the animal kingdom. Dr. Hall is the author of an elaborate paper on this subject, which was read before the Royal Society two or three weeks ago, and noticed in these columns at the time. We shall now take up some of the points which were then passed over. Respiration is always inversely as the irritability; being high in the bird tribe and the mammalia, and lower in the reptiles and the batrachian order. The irritability was exemplified by the contractions of the heart of the eel, which continued vigorous after the beating was terminated. Birds and the mammalia consume much oxygen; but their heart speedily ceases to beat on the interruption of respiration. Tortoises, snakes, and the batrachia, have a low respiration, but their heart continues its contractions for hours, even after being removed from the body! The immature and very young animal resembles, in these respects, the reptile; the adult has comparatively a high respiration and a low irritability. The changes in form, or in the anatomy of the various tribes of animals, is always from lower to higher; changes in function, or in the physiology, on the contrary, are always inverse, i. e. from high to low. As examples of the first of these changes were adduced, the egg, the tadpole, the larva; of the second, the state of diurnation and hibernation, of mented stimulus is better borne than its abstraction; the reverse is true in cases in which there is high irritability: cold destroys in the former case, heat in the latter. In the former the privation of air and of food are speedily fatal; in the latter they are borne with comparative impunity.

In the library were some exceedingly beautiful models of steam-engines, by Mr. Adcock and Mr. Lealand; and under the microscopes of Mr. Varley and others were exhibited highly interesting instances of circulation. The evening meetings were adjourned for the Easter holydays.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

G. B. Greenough, Esq. V. P., in the chair. Read a memoir on the "Progress of Discovery in the Interior of Australia," compiled under the authority of Lord Goderich, by A. Cunningham, Esq., from original documents in the Colonial Office; and forwarded, with a map and letter, from R. W. Hay, Esq., placing it at the Society's disposal.

Mr. Cunningham begins by remarking on the comparatively little interest which has been always taken in researches in Australia, compared to what has been excited by geographical investigation in other parts of the world; and in consequence of this, he considers that less, perhaps, has been really effected, and more remains still to be done here, than might be presumed, considering the length of time that the principal coasts have been occupied by British settlers. Twenty-five years passed away before the Blue Mountains, immediately behind the colony of New South Wales, were traversed; and even the impulse of severe distress from prolonged drought, seemed necessary to accomplish the object. A variety of expeditions have been since then fitted out, in some of which Mr. Cunningham himself took a part; and the success has been various, and on the whole satisfactory. Still, however, the progress made is relatively inconsiderable, and a vast extent of interior yet remains to excite the curiosity and stimulate the enterprise of future adventurers.

It was in 1813 that the successful enterprise which marks the commencement of inland discovery in Australia took place. The individuals engaged in it were Messrs. Blaxland, Wentworth, and Lawson; their great object being, if possible, to discover new pastures for the cattle of the colony, the supplies for which were entirely burnt up in the known plains. They ascended the mountains near the Grose River (a tributary of the Hawkesbury), and, by steadily following its windings, and availing themselves of every facility furnished by the ravines traversed by it, they at last accomplished their purpose, penetrating to a point twentyfive miles west of the Nepean River, when the Bathurst Downs were seen to spread out along the base of the mountains. Want of provisions obliged them now to return; but their course was followed up by Mr. Evans, the government surveyor; and in the following year a practicable road was even cut to these plains by convict labour; great additional resources being thus obtained for the colony, and the rivers Lachlan and Macquarrie being progressively discovered.

The next considerable expedition took place in 1817, under the late Mr. Oxley, then surveyor-general, joined, among others, by Mr. mended, since important changes are being torpor from cold, and of the effects of want Cunningham himself, just arrived in the colony made in the constitution; and when we are of food: the first have augmented respiration as king's botanist. The first object was to trace the course of the Lachlan, which, it was hoped, might be found to join the Macquarrie at some distance, and form with it a considerable stream. But this expectation was not verified; this river, on the contrary, being found to lose itself in about long. 144° 30' E., and without receiving a single tributary along its whole course, in a vast swampy plain, not raised above 250 feet above the level of the sea, and bearing evident marks of being frequently overflowed. From this point, then, Mr. Oxley commenced his return, little thinking that twenty miles more to the south-west he would have found another river, the Morrumbudgee, since ascertained to drain the Lachlan marshes in its progress to the sea at Spencer's Gulf; and directed his steps to the eastward, with a view to re-cross the Lachlan, and gain the Macquarrie, to ascertain the direction of its course. After six days' severe exertion, he accomplished the former purpose; the second was also successfully obtained soon after; and, though now obliged to return, the great width and depth of the Macquarrie where thus cut, and its steady progress to the north-west, gave great hopes that, on some future occasion, it would be found to realise the expectation, then at its height, of discovering a navigable river communication, across the whole continent, with the Indian ocean. The following year, however, extinguished this also. The Macquarrie was then found equally to lose itself in an extensive marsh; and the chief result of these two expeditions was thus, the discovery of the great extent of the Bathurst, Liverpool, and other plains, which skirt the western base of the Blue Mountains in a northerly direction.

From 1819 to 1823 the chief researches were made to the southward; and the line of mountains being then also passed, the Morrum-budges, and the fine plains called the Brisbane Downs, which it waters, were successively exsmined. In 1824 Mesers. Hovell and Hume, two enterprising agriculturists, determined also, at their own expense, to endeavour to penetrate from Argyle, in New South Wales, south-west to the shores of Bass's Straits; and after sustaining and overcoming great hardships and difficulties, they effected their purpose, and came out at Port Philip. Their return was along a more westerly and, consequently, lower line, and was not, therefore, so fatiguing as their outward course. It still farther, however, added to the knowledge previously gained of this south-east nook of Australia.

Mr. Cunningham next proceeds in his memoir to give the particulars of a journey to the north-west, prosecuted under his own direction in 1825, and of which we may probably also furnish an analysis in a future No. of the Lit. Gas. The thanks of the Society were voted to the Right Hon. the President, to Mr. Hay. and to Mr. Cunningham, for this very valuable and interesting communication. beauty of the map accompanying which, also compiled from the best authorities in the Colonial Office, was much admired.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY.

MR. LAMBERT in the chair. A communication, entitled "On the imperfect developement of the reproductive organs in certain species of Euphorbis and Saxifraga," by Mr. Don, was read. The author remarks, that examples of imperfect developement of the stamens and pistils are much more frequent than is generally believed, and he particularly notices those simple, is now regarded as a species of umbel, composed of an indefinite number of monandrous flowers, with a solitary pistilliferous flower occupying the axis of the umbel. There were also read some remarks on the llama, alpaca, vicûna, and guanaco, by Mr. W. Bollaert, formerly chemical assistant at the Royal Insti-tution. These animals, referred by Linneus to the same genus with the camel and dromedary, were separated from it by Illiger under the name of suchenia. Two of them, the llama and alpaca, are only to be met with in a domestic state; the other two are wild. Buffon and most naturalists consider the guanaco as the wild llama, and the vicuna as the wild alpaca; but Mr. Bollaert is disposed to regard them as constituting four distinct species. The guanaco constituting four distinct species. ranges from near the equator to the Straits of Magellan, and its skin affords the principal clothing of the Patagonians.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES

APRIL 12th. - Mr. Hallam in the chair. A communication was read from the venerable father of the Society, and late treasurer, Mr. Bray, who, in an accompanying letter begged their acceptance of it as a last token of his respect and regard, at the advanced age of ninety-six. The subject was an ancient gravestone in the churchyard of Great Bookham, Surrey, which has escaped the notice of previous topographical writers: it is without date or inscription, and has a cross floree carved in relief, the length of the stone; and Mr. Bray considers it to have been placed over the remains of Rutherwic, abbot of Chertsey, in 1342. paper was also communicated by Mr. Ellis on Cedmon's Scriptural Paraphrase, one of the Anglo-Saxon works proposed to be published by the Society. Mr. Woodward communicated, through Mr. Hudson Gurney, an account of some judicial proceedings at Norwich against the royalists, in the year 1675.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

APRIL 4th. -W. R. Hamilton, Esq. in the chair. A paper was read containing an explanation of five classical Greek vanes, lately found at Vulci, in the ruins of some ancient Greek city, formerly existing on the shores of Etruria. near the modern city of Viterbo, in the papal territory. This paper was by the Chev. P. C. Bronsted, and was nearly the same as the articles 21, 22, 27, 30, and 32, of a work since printed by the author, "on Thirty-two an-cient Greek Vases," &c. Four of the splendid earthen vessels, to which the explanations relate, were exhibited to the meeting.

Numerous presents of books were laid upon the table.

CENSORSHIP OF THE PRESS IN AUSTRIA. AUSTRIA, which has never recognised a real freedom of the press since the time of Joseph II., exercises not only a more rigorous consorship over the press than any other state of the German confederation, but also a less tolerant police with respect to reading. The censor is to take into consideration not only the illegal or immoral contents of the work, but its object and tendency, and even the goodness, the scientific or intellectual value of the MS. If he finds it contrary to the law, he pronounces a Non admittitur over it; if he merely conwhich occur in Euphorbia and Saxifraga. It siders it as unworthy of being printed, he would seem that certain families of plants are sentences it by a Typus son meretur. An admoss prome to abortions of this kind. The mittieur is pronounced when he has ne object manner.

flower of Euphorbia, considered by Linnaus as | tion whatever to make to it: it is only in this case that it can appear with the name of the place in the Austrian dominions in which it is printed. Many an admittitur, however, allows indeed the printing of the MS.—but either without naming any place of publication, or a fictitious name of some place abroad. Toleratur allows the MS. to be printed and announced in the catalogue of books, but not to be advertised in the newspapers. Compilations and the like, though their contents may be quite unobjectionable, are to be treated with the greatest strictness; above all, political writings. Duplicates must be delivered of every MS.; one copy is kept back, that it may be compared with the printed copy.

The censorship with regard to permission to read has four degrees. Admittitur allows a work to be publicly sold and advertised in the newspapers. Transeat allows it to be publicly sold, but not advertised. Erga schedam allows it to be sold only to literati and people in business, who sign an acknowledgment in writing; but the list of the purchasers is to be laid before the emperor himself every three months. Damnatur puts an extinguisher on it at once.

PINE ARTS.

SUPPOLE STREET GALLERY. [Fifth and concluding Notice.] SCULPTURE ROOM.

MANY of the works in this department of art display considerable talent. Some of them have already come under our notice: of those which have not, our limits will only allow us briefly to point out. No. 894. Zophyrus and Aurora, a group in marble. C. Rossi, R.A. Beautiful in form and sentiment; and to which the term " breathing marble" may be well applied .--No. 898. The Murder of the Innocents. Smith. Better calculated to abow the skill of the artist, than as a subject, either for sculpture or for painting. — No. 900. The Orphun Girl. T. Kirk. The expression, although good, a little artificial. A tear does not belong to sculpture. - No. 844. A Horse's Hoad. M. C. Wyatt. A most animated resemblance of this noble animal; worthy of the antique: with perhaps too much of the pedantry of the antique in the wrinkles about the nostrils.

Of the busts, which are numerous; and, generally speaking, full of character, a few of the principal are, - No. 838. Baron Bolland. R. W. Sievier; No. 841. Posthumous Bust of the late H. Liverseege. J. Stephens; No. 842. Marble Bust of a little Girl. C. Moore; No. 854. Bust of his Father. W. Wooles; No. 885. Colonel Jones. J. Haskoll; No. 888. William Mulready, Esq. R.A. C. Moore; No. 893. James Stewart, Esq., Historical Engraver. H. Weigall.

Most of the engravings in this room we have elsewhere mentioned. But we do not recollect to have before seen.—No. 928. Departure of the Children of Israel from Egypt, from a pic-ture by D. Roberts. J. P. Quilley. Distin-guished for grandeur and effect.—No. 918. Madeline, from a Painting by W. Boxall. J. Bromley. A charming example of skill, both in the painter and in the engraver .-No. 914. Portrait of J. Liston, Esq., from a Painting by G. Clint, Esq. A.R.A. H. S. Sadd. Strange that this mirth-inspiring mortal should have so sad a countenance; but still stranger that he should have had a Sadd engraver of his portrait; who, however, despite of his name, has performed his task in a highly satisfactory

FATER-COLOUR ROOM.

In variety and interest as attractive as the rest of the exhibition. Some of its most prominent features are, - No. 596. Sketch of James Northcote, Esq. R.A., made in his bed-room a short time before his death. D. M'Clise. Admirable in resemblance, execution, and effect. No. 736. Composition. S. Gompertz. A spirited and beautiful drawing; well calculated to serve for the foundation of a tale of romance.. No. 618. The Mower. No. 798. The Oysterman. R. Brandard. No. 769. Study from Nature. W. Derby. All clever examples of subjects in familiar life. — No. 759. Greenwich Hospital. J. M. Ince. Mr. Ince has several admirable productions; we select this as one of the best: it is distinguished by its clearness and brilliance. — No. 579. Palace of Philip le Bel, Peris. J. Holland. A new feature in the practice of this artist; equal in skill to his former productions.—No. 776. Frame containing four drawings. D. Roberts. All worthy the name and the fame of this highly-gifted artist. No. 819. The Roodloft at St. Alban's, with Monks watching the Shrine of the Saint. S. A. Hart. A clever composition well calculated for a large picture. - No. 820. The Disconsolate. C. Hancock. Every one must sympathise with the faithful and sorrowing animal. - No. 797. Sketch of a young Lady. S. J. Rochard. A drawing of more fascinating expression, or more skilfully treated, we do not recollect to have ever seen .- No. 792. Dieppe Castle. C. Marshall. A very clever specimen of picturesque architecture: broad in execution, and clear in effect. - No. 782. Water-mill at Gangville. J. W. Allen. We select this from a number of Mr. Allen's fine drawings, as especially remarkable for its picturesque character, for the chaste simplicity of its colour, and for the skilful manner in which it is handled.-For similar reasons, we refer the visitor to No. 559. Study from nature; No. 808. A Sketch from nature; and No. 814. Hampetead Heath, a Sketch. T. C. Hofland.—No. 586. Pola, a composition. W. P. Bayley. Beautifully imaginative. There are also many clever studies by Stark, Burgess, Herriot, &c.

Among the miniatures, the works of Mrs. James Robertson continue to hold the foremost rank; although these are several whose performances are scarcely less distinguished for their excellence; among whom we may name J. Holmes, W. Barclay, J. W. Wright, Miss T. Corbaux, &c.

The fruit, flowers, and still-life, are the remaining claims upon our notice. No. 523. A composition of Flowers and Fruit, from nature. Mrs. Withers. This beautiful assemblage is invested by the hand of the fair artist with some of the highest qualities of art; as is also No. 831. A Group of Flowers. Miss J. F. Min. ton. In No. 606, Group of Hollyhocks, by W. Spry, we recognise one of the finest examples of the kind that we have ever met with. No. 793, Composition of Flowers, and No. 799, A Greenfinch's Nest, by G. Sintzenich, are equally admirable for truth of representation, and delicate and highly-finished execution. No. 730, A Teal, and No. 732, Yarmouth Herrings, G. S. Shepherd, are also fine specimens of the class of art to which they belong.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

THE gallery of the New Society of Painters in Water-colours, in Old Bond Street, opened on and that of the most fascinating kind, if this Monday last. We are happy to say that it be not one? It sparkles like an emerald of presents a very pleasing exhibition of varied the purest water.—No. 141, Fisherman Mend-to it, with whom, but for the opportunity thus afforded, the public might, for some time at least, have remained unacquainted; but whose works would in no way have discredited the rooms of the old, and long-established Society of Painters in the same branch of art. As might be expected, the leading feature in this exhibition is landscape, in which department the members of the Society are well supported by the artists of well-known skill. There are also some clever subjects from familiar life, as well as from still-life, fruit, and flowers. These, with the addition of a few very beautiful miniatures, make a goodly show; highly creditable as a commencement, and which may fairly be said to deserve, if not to command success.

As a novelty in landscape painting, and as possessing great merit, the productions of Mr. Bentley are very striking; appearing to us in their spirit and character not a little to resemble those of the lamented Bonington. The finest of them seem to us to be-No. 61, View in the Highlands; No. 77, View near Dunkirk; and No. 171, Near Litchfield. No. 165, Evening, composed from the surrounding Scenery where the Poem (Gray's Elegy) was written, by J. Powell, is solemn and grand; in excellent accordance with the subject. No. 43, St. Alban's, from Holywell Hill, Herts; and No. 138, Figures on the Beach at Folkestone, are also among the best specimens of Mr. Powell's talents. No. 48. The Old Mill and Bridge, at Mantes, on the Seine. C. R. Stanley. Commend us to any old mill, or old bridge, or old edifice of whatever kind, and Mr. Stanley as the painter of it. Under other Nos. with his name may be found other works, equally characterised by their picturesque beauty, and skilful execution. No. 66. Retirement, Worsbro' Dale, Yorkshire. W. Cowen. This young artist has studied in Italy, and with effect, as may be seen in No. 25, Lago Maggiore; but he has here found a scene at home in which his talents appear to at least as much advantage. A little less vividness of green would, we think, be beneficial to some of his performances.—No. 30. Street Scene at Kiel, in the Duchy of Holstein. J. M. Ince. Sparklingly brilliant, and beautifully clear. Mr. Ince has several other drawings of great merit. - No. 42. A singular Cavern in the Vale of Clwyd, North Wales. T. Wood. A more romantic scene, or one executed with more skill, we have seldom met with: it is worthy of the pencil of Salvator. - No. 49, Interior of Tottenhall Church, Staffordshire, S. R. Lines, jun. The church at least is no junior; and for its picturesque character, it is difficult to conceive any thing to surpass it.— No. 137, View of Millbank—Morning; No. 251, Tower Stairs_Twilight; No. 262, View from Greenwich-Sunset; G. F. Phillips. These, among others by the same artist, may rank in point of effect and execution with the best of their class: they exhibit talents hitherto very little known, but which we have no doubt will soon be justly appreciated.—No. 36, A Cottage near Cromer; J. Stark. Though new in his water-colour practice, Mr. Stark, as in his oil pictures, still "holds the mirror up to nature:" there is "truth and daylight" in all his views. -No. 73, Study from Nature; E. Duncan. Chaste, faithful, and elegant. In taking notice of some of the subjects from familiar life, we shall commence with No. 120, A Study, E. T. Parris. Where shall we find, or what shall we call, a finished performance, talent. There are several of the contributors | ing his Net; R. Brandard. One of the most spirited sketches we have seen, even from Mr. Brandard's hand. Similar praise may be bestowed on No. 81, Four Skeiches from Nature, R. W. Buss .- Among the more finished productions of this class are, No. 166, Juliet, J. Holmes, and No. 173, Lavinia, W. Patten. In the last-mentioned work, the older female is admirably depicted.

[To be continued.]

ORIGINAL POETRY.

RIVA DI SAN MARCO.

RIVA DI SAN MARCO.

It must be borne in mind that the legend which we are about to produce is recorded by more than one authentic chronicler, and that it was sufficiently believed to give birth to a public religious ceremony. In the year 1341, an inundation of many days' continuance had raised the water three cubits higher than it had ever before been seen in Venice; and during a stormy night, while the flood appeared to be still increasing, a poor old fisherman sought what refuge he could find by mooring his bark close to the Riva di San Marco. The storm was yet raging, when three persons approached, and offered him a good fare if he would convey them to the two castles of Sido. Scarcely had they gained the strait, when they saw a galley, rather flying than sailing up the Adriatic, manned (if we may so say) with devils, who seemed hurrying with flerce and threatening gestures to sink Venice in the deep. "The strangers conjured the flends to depart: at the word, the demoniacal galley vanished, and the three holy passengers were quietly landed. "Go to the doge," said one, "and the procuratori, and assure them that, but for us three, Venice would have been drowned. I am St. Mark, my two comrades are St. George and St. Nicholas." On the morrow, the fisherman did as he was told, and he not only received his fare, but an annual pension to boot. Moreover, a solenn procession and thanksgiving were appointed, in gratitude to the three holy corpses which had rescued from such calamity the land affording them burial.—Abrigged from Sketches of Venezian History.

Now glory to St. Nicholas, St. George, and Now glory to St. Nicholas, St. George, and good St. Mark,

And to the ancient fisherman who steered the blessed bark;

When lowered the mighty firmament - one black foredooming page!

And, wild and high, the waves howled by, foamy and white with rage!

The thunders clamoured to the blast, the lightnings flashed about,

Like flaming brands by demons forged amidst that hellish rout;

The proudest halls of Venice rocked unto their very base,

And mothers gazed in agony upon their children's face!

Still eastward swept the sainted bark, and smote the billows back,

Calm as the eagle floats along its cloud-beleaguered track;

The whirlwhind owned the spirit-grasp of some superior sway,

And, ahrieking, vanished like a fiend defeated of its prey!

Then gazed the aged fisherman upon the glorious three,

And moved the helm with trembling hand, and marvelled silently ;

For rays of light upon his sight in angel-beauty gleamed From brows more eminently fair than poet's fancy dreamed!

Now blacker vapours choked the breath, and sadder sights appeared,

As through the Adriatic strait the venturous vessel steered!

A galley thronged with demons foul was scudding o'er the wave, Which deeper grew, and faster flew, at every sign they gave!

And horrid conjurations there, and curses long and wild,

Doomed to the last and worst despair, mother, and sire, and child!

Devoted towers, and palaces, and temples, to shop to the pump; though laws have been made that tide

Whose dreadful billows leaped around in their tempestuous pride!

But lo! the sacred bark wore on, the galley shook with dread.

The demons imped their wings of flame, and, howling, turned and fled!

The horrors of that spectral sea at once were put to flight,

As the morning stole, like a parting soul, from the grave of the buried night!

Joy! joy for Venice!-fast and far the song of gladness flows;

The grateful mother clasps her child, and half forgets her woes:

The sea hath mouned itself to sleep within the its ray !

Now bid the voice of prayer arise, and wreathe the holy shrine,

For shielded hath our city been by influence divine!

Thanksgiving to the Virgin pour beside this hallowed bark :

And glory to St. Nicholas, St. George, and good St. Mark!

C. SWAIN.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

WALKS ABOUT TOWN BY THE DEVIL INCOG! Picked up near the Crater of Mount Stromboli.

NO. I.

Memoranda on Men and Things. ONE half of the world is ignorant of what the other is doing. Ay, three parts of mankind have but little knowledge of the proceedings of the other quarter. With all the organ of inquisitiveness so largely developed in the human race, and with all the societies for the diffusion of useful knowledge which have been established from London to Loo-Choo, society is in a lamentable state of ignorance with regard to the real state of things going on around them. People imagine that they are wise, that they know the secrets of their neighbours, that they have fathomed the mystery which has produced certain effects; but, generally speaking, they know nothing, or, at the most, so little as not to be worth mentioning. I am fully aware, that plausible deductions may be drawn from close observation; but things are not as they seem, and general observers look at the truth through a perverted medium. Most people endeavour to appear amiable; in fact, from a superficial acquaintance with the world, one would really imagine it was peopled by a race of philanthropists. There is so much of the greatest-happiness principle; so much of the equal distribution of property; so many Useful Knowledge, Temperance, Prevention of Cruelty, Suppression of Vice, Philanthropic, and Humane Societies; so much charity, so much friendship, so much religion; -- subscriptions are entered into, donations given, and legacies left, for the most benevolent purposes. Should an ancient church become unsafe and ruinous, a meeting is called, speeches are made, and in due course of time the building is restored to all its former beauty; should some distant part of the world be visited by any unforeseen calamity, a vast number of people dine together, and consider the best means of affording effectual relief to the sufferers. Humanity is universal. Yet, in spite of knowledge, Lord — does not know schedule A from schedule B; though a Temperance so-for the prevention of cruelty to animals, cockfighting, bull-baiting, and hare-hunting, are as much in fashion as ever; though several gentlemen have joined together for the suppression of vice, vice prospers among the high and among the low; though so much philanthropy exists, burking has been very generally practised and although Humane societies have for some time been established, people will patronise Waterloo Bridge as the most comfortable place whence to drown themselves. In spite of the greatest-happiness principle, the cholera prevents us from receiving any enjoyment; and in contradiction to an equal distribution of property, honest men are incarcerated for appropriating other people's goods and chattels.

Philosophers talk of the march of intellect, tranquil bay,

And sunny is the welcome sky, and beautiful claim that the schoolmaster is abroad, yet I think it would have been better for them if they had kept him more to themselves. Political economists publish their theories, yet the population, for whose good they are so anxious, starve, and take little notice of their labours. Orators speak very furiously against slavery in the co. lonies, yet go home and submit to domestic slavery without a murmur. In all cases it is the same. Savings and doings are as far apart as alpha and omega; and the universal notions of things are as opposite from their true charac-ter as the poles. People have two faces, one for at home, and the other for abroad; and two sets of opinions, one for themselves, and the other for their friends. Mankind judge of each other by what they see; but they never see the truth. Men may be phrenologists and physiognomists—they may peruse the features and become familiar with the cranium; but they never read the heart. It is very well to talk of metaphysics, but more people have become ignorant through a little knowledge of its mysteries, than have been enlightened by the most intense study of its abstruse theories. For my part, I have always paid particular attention to investigations of the intellectual faculties. During my stay at the German universities I studied with Kant, and was initiated into the profound truths of his philosophy. At one time or other I have taken my degrees in every college in Europe. Learning is of as much value to a demon, as it can possibly be to any body else— an accomplished devil always makes his way in the world, and is respected by his superiors-I have found it so. I should never have been so successful in Germany had I not been learned in the sciences; and I should have done nothing with Faust, had he not honoured me for my superior knowledge. It is an important truth that knowledge is power; but it is a twoedged weapon that requires a skilful hand to wield it with effect. Mankind use it as a weapon of offence, but more frequently harm themselves than their opponents. It is a pity that they do not know how to manage it better. I regret the mischief it occasions, the heartburnings, jealousies, disputes, hatred, and uncharitableness. Man will quarrel about the pronunciation of a Hebrew name, and fight about the explanation of an Egyptian hieroglyphic. But I will leave off moralising, and explain what brought me here.

For the last thousand years I have been laboriously occupied, from one extremity of the world to the other; - now encouraging the slave-trade on the coast of Africa, now patronising a tyrant on that of Portugal; educat-Thames; sometimes aiding a despot in Russia,

I stirred up a revolution in France, and twice led on the barbarians to the slaughter of Poland. Business increased, and I found the labour more than any devil could do. My long and valuable services, I thought, deserved some relaxation; so, after the capture of Warsaw, I asked leave of absence, and had a furlough granted me with very flattering marks of approbation. I flew with the wings of the wind, keeping up my spirits, during my long journey, with anticipations of the happiness I should enjoy in again beholding my wife and family, whom I had not seen since the flood. I need not describe our meeting: an affectionate hus-band can only feel as I felt after so long a separation. I clasped my last boy in my arms, (he was three thousand years old last birthday), and imprinted on his lips one burning I am naturally a devil of warm feelings; and I could not help—perhaps it was a weak-ness—shedding scalding tears of joy at our reunion. Men of fashion may sneer at conjugal felicity; but I felt that perfect domestic happiness which none but devils enjoy.

I was left to the bliss of my undisturbed tranquillity for several months, amusing my leisure by instructing my little one in polite accomplishments, and writing articles on our foreign and domestic policy for the Infernal Review, a periodical of great merit, yet somewhat given to puffing a practice, to be sure, in our warm climate, not so much to be condemned. I succeeded in establishing a Geological Society, and delivered a lecture on the properties of sulphur and bitumen, which made a prodigious sensation; and the Royal Satanic University were so pleased with it, that they immediately created me an LL.D., which means learning-loving devil. But from my academic honours I was hastily summoned by a letter from the prime minister, requesting my imme-diate presence at court. With all the ardour of a loyal subject, I hastened to obey the command. My gracious sovereign, with that urbanity which none know so well how to assume, welcomed me to his presence, and shortly afterwards withdrew with me into the council-chamber. There I met the officers of state, the hereditary legislators, and the judges, engaged in some serious and important debate. When his majesty entered, all was attention and respect. Introducing me in a most flattering manner to the assembled conclave, he addressed them thus:

"My Imps and Devils,—Having seen the most convincing proofs of the attachment of our friend and cousin Mephistophiles to our person, and having received from him great and important services, we have thought it necessary to reward his fidelity to our crown by creating him a prince of the empire and privy counsellor of state; and as we have lately obtained such testimony of the excellent understanding existing between our allies in England and ourselves, we, in addition to the honours already granted, appoint him our ambassador extraordinary to the court of London."

Overpowered by the excess of my gratitude for this munificent act of the royal bounty, I knelt down at his majesty's feet, and kissed the king's hand. He raised me gently, and I was immediately installed into my new dig. nities.

I saw nothing during my journey worthy of notice, except the comet; but as that has already been sufficiently described, I need not mention it here. London's a fine place: it is ing pirates in the Egean, or smugglers in the much altered since I was here last with my old friend St. Dunstan. The devil is evidently ciety has been established, people prefer the gin- at others enjoying a rebellion in Ireland; once patronised by the people; for I beheld the walls covered with announcements of forthcoming plays, under the titles of "Dominique, or It is the Devil," "Fra Diavolo," "Robert the Devil," "The Fiend Father," and several others. I was well aware that mankind had long been in the habit of playing the devil, but was not previously aware that they played the devil with the drama. I entered a bookseller's, to see some new publications, and was shewn "The Devil's Walk," "The Devil's Visit," "The Devil in Search of a Wife," "Satan, a Poem," and many others bearing similar titles. The literature I considered at a devilish low ebb : but I could not help laughing at the illustrations. Had the bookseller imagined that the very respectable gentleman to whom he was shewing the books was the original of those designs, I question much whether he would have exhibited, for any length of time, either his goods or himself.

I am now, for the present, "a young man about town," frequenting the best company, and enjoying all the pleasures of the fashion-able world. As I can transform myself into what shape I please, and become invisible when it suits my purpose, I have the best opportunity of judging of men and things: all is open to me, from the king's chamber to the beggar's cell. The fruit of my observations on the proceedings around will be developed in some future papers, of which this is but the introduction. MEDUISTOPHILES.

MUSIC.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Remembrance, or Songs of the Year, for 1832. Songs and music dedicated to the Duchess of Kent. Edited by T. Latour. London, Chappell, Andrews, Cramer and Co., Collard.

THIS publication is beautifully got up (as the phrase is, and as is so much the aspiration of musical publishers now a' days); and the music is at least simple and pretty enough to render it one of the most pleasant of this species of Annuals. "Float down the Tide, fair Rose," a duet, by Wade, has especially charmed our fancy: the change in the air from soft and melancholy to lively is quite delightful. An Italian arietta, "Vien di quest'elci all' ombra," composed by Costa, is delightful; and an impromptu, by the editor himself, is sufficient to confirm the reputation he has long enjoyed. There are a number of prints __ among others the four seasons; a sort of hint that the music may last throughout the whole year.

The Musical Forget Me Not. Edited by T. Mackinlay. London, R. Ackermann. ANOTHER musical Annual, and quite as good as any we have seen. We will only particularise two sweet songs, "Oh! sing me to rest," by Horn, and "The Sailor's Grave," by Mrs. H. Shelton, the composer of the popular ballad "The Land which no Mortal may know." Several other pretty airs make the Forget Me Not an extremely acceptable

The Nosegay. Edited by F.W. N. Bayley and J. F. Dannelly. London, Dannelly. Or this volume, we need only say, that it is a very sweet nosegay, though without any exotics, if we may not rank a selection from the Spanish and another from the German as such. The first song is stated to be original, by Lord Byron: it ruus thus_

"They say that Hope is happiness,
But genuine love must prize the past;
And memory wakes the thoughts that bless
They rose the first—they set the last!

And all that Memory loves the most Was once our only hope to be! And all that Hope adored and lost Hath melted into Memory.

Alas! it is delusion all,
The future cheats us from afar,
Nor can we be what we recall,
Nor dare we think on what we are."

Too sure I never can forget. This does great credit to the popular composer of the "Deep, deep Sea." The Galopade bears a close resemblance to the "Market Chorus" in Masaniello, also sung in The Widon.

Ladye Jane. By G. Linley, Esq. London, E. Dale.

BEAUTIFUL music; but we could say with Yates, in Damon and Pythias, " the name of Jane always puts us in mind of a mop and a pail."

The bright Summer Time: the Sea Maiden's

Two very sweet ballads by G. F. Harris, which will, we are sure, be heard with pleasure in every drawing-room.

Under the Rose. Written and composed by S. Lover, and arranged by Horn. London, NICE lively ballad, delightfully sung by Madame Vestris in The Widow.

DRAMA.

On Saturday last Miss F. Kemble performed Lady Macbeth at Covent Garden, and in a manner, severe as is the test, not to detract from her high reputation.

The Adelphi closed its very meritorious and successful season, as did also the Olympic; and at both suitable addresses were delivered.

Mr. Yates, Mr. Rayner, and some others, (we believe,) began the week with entertainments which were supposed not to be contrary to usual observances of the period; but the lord chamberlain interfered on Wednesday, and all the houses were closed.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Covent Garden, April 5 .- I forgot in my last to mention a circumstance, which struck me as a capital joke, on the first night of the Hunchback. It was remarked by those around me, and has been since, pretty generally, that Modus is a somewhat close transcript of Gradus, in Who's the Dupe? Mr. Knowles himself is so fully aware of this, that in one scene, instead of "Here comes your cousin Modus," he inadvertently said, "Here comes your cousin Gradus."

King's Theatre, April 12 .- Madame Grandolfi, as Romeo, poisons herself, not with a phial, but with a lozenge — a most absurd effect!

Strand Theatre, April 13. - Ramo Samé has grown quite a wag. When about to swallow a stone, some person expressed his doubt as to the stone being a stone..." Him be tone!" exclaimed the Indian; "him cum from Regin Pak (Regent's Park); and (putting it in his mouth) me 'sure you him not so soff as mosh potatto !"

VARIETIES.

Sir W. Scott. - Naples, end of March. Sir Walter Scott, it is said, has not suspended his that engage his attention here. He is said to his health is not such as to permit its indulgence as special be about a new novel, or tale, the subject of culated upon at Naples.—Ed. L. G.

which is taken from the history of the Knights of Malta, and was probably suggested to him by his visit to that island.

Stamped Journals .- A few worthies who had made themselves obnoxious to the laws by the publication of cheap periodicals, some of them exceedingly blasphemous, others only personal and libellous, fancied the other day that it would be a good joke to get the Literary Gasette to fight their battle for them against the revenue. They therefore, in their honourable course, took up the trade of common informers; and, by way of meeting their own trouble, tried to involve in difficulties a publication which has nothing in common with them. The old proverb says, it is a consolation to have friends in misfortune; but on this occasion it would not do. The Literary Gazette, of which one edition (with a very brief notice of the news of the week) is stamped to render it a newspaper transmissible by post, and another is published Song. Published at the Royal Harmonic for delivery in town as a pamphlet without a Institution. crown officers, and on an arrangement perfectly understood by the stamp office; and having paid, in double duties to the revenue, the amount of some 30,000% in a few years, its proprietors could scarcely be placed in the same situation with those who infest the public with political squibs and attacks on church and state, and who never contributed five pounds in taxation since they first undertook to illuminate mankind. We are bound to say that several of our best-humoured contemporaries refused to countenance this notable scheme.

Ivory Surface Globes. - An admirable globe of this description has just been produced, for facilitating the teaching of astronomy and geography by delineation with the pencil. A handsome sphere, set in a neat frame, which is so contrived as to allow the poles to be elevated and depressed at pleasure, and with the great lines, &c. marked upon its polished surface, is presented to youthful students for the exercise of their skill and ingenuity in tracing upon it either celestial or terrestrial figures. We can hardly imagine a more pleasing occupation, or one so likely to make a lasting impression on the memory; and we warmly recommend this invention to parents and schoolmasters.

Banks of the Rhine, March. - The ancient fable of the mountain spirit of Rodenstein is again revived. A German journal contains the following letter : - " From the Odenwald, March 1832. The belief that there will be war in the German empire in the course of this year, has become a certainty in the mouths of the lower classes of the inhabitants of the Odenwald; and this certainly is not founded on the complicated state of political affairs, but on a circumstance which, in the opinion of these people, admits of no dispute. It seems that in the course of this month the mountain spirit went from the well-known ruined castle of Rodenstein to the mountain called Schnellertsburg, which is about a league and a half distant. Many inhabitants of the little village of Eberbach, at the end of which stand the ruins of the castle of Rodenstein, in a wild romantic spot, and on a moderate eminence, surrounded by woods, heard, in the first days of this month, in the afternoon, a great noise in the air, as of the rumbling of waggons, cracking of whips, barking of dogs, the sound of horns, the clash of arms, &c., which seemed to approach them. In vain did they strain their eyes to discover something which might account for what they heard. The noise, which was at first so near and loud, passed over and gradually grew fainter, till it died away in the distance. It may be easily supposed what a sensation this noise, heard by so many persons, must have made in this country, when we recollect how many stories about the mountainspirit of Rodenstein are current among the people. It is accordingly universally believed now, that as the spirit of the mountain has gone forth, a bloody war will certainly ensue.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Literary Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XVI. April 21, 1832.]

The Rev. J. Fletcher, D.D., is preparing a Life, &c. of he late Rev. W. Roby, of Manchester, for the Select ibrary. The next volume is to be Lives of Celebrated Missionaries, by Mr. Carne, the author of Letters from situationaries, by Mr. Carne, the author of Letters from the East. Elements of Greek Grammar, by the Rev. S. Connor. Travels of an Irish Gentleman in Search of Religion; with Notes by the Editor of Captain Rock's Memoirs. The Anniversary Calendar, Natal Book, and Universal Mirror The Democrat, a tale, is just ready for publication.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Stafford on the Spine, 8vo. 10e. 6d. cloth.—Jackson's Waterloo, a Poem, 8vo. 5e. bds.—Parry's History of Woburn, &c. 8vo. 7s. bds.: India proofs, 1uc. bds.—Southey's History of the Feninsular War, Vol. 111. 4to. 2l. 10e. bds.—Country Houses, a Novel, 3 vols. 8vo. 1l. 1ls. 6d. bds.—Rajah Rammohun Roy's Exposition of the Judicial and Revenue Systems of India, 8vo. 6s. bds.—Memoir of the Rev. Matthias Bruen, 12mo. 7s. cloth.—Turnbull's Laws of Christ, 12mo. 5s. hf.-cloth.—Martin's Christian Philosopher, 18mo. 6s. bds.—Hills on Cupping, 18mo. 3s. 6d. bds.—Hills on Cupping, 18mo. 3s. 6d. bds.—Hills on Cupping, 18mo. 3s. 6d. bds.—Listory of Rome, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Timpson's Church History of Rome, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Timpson's Church History of Rome, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Timpson's Church History of Rome, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Parker's Villa Rustica, royal 4to. 1l. 6s. bds.—Dr. Park on Prophecy, &c. 8vo. 7s. 6d.—The New Gallomania, 8vo. 8s. 6d. bds.—Private Devotions for every Day in the Week, abridged from the New Manual by the Rev. E. Berens, 18mo. 1s. 3d. bd.—Biblical Cabinet, Vol. I., "Ermesti's Institutes," by the Rev. C. H. Terrot, 12mo. 5s. 6ds.—The Little Girl's Own Book, by Mrs. Child, 4s. 6d. bds.—Ptoung's Elements of Mechanics, 12mo. 10s. 6d. cloth.—The Bee and the Wasp, Plates by G. Cruikshank, 18mo. 1s. sewed.—Hastings' British Archer, royal 4to. 16s. cloth.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

April.	Thermometer.				Barometer.
Thursday 12	From				29-95
Friday · · · · 13		36.	••	58.	29.82		29-93
Saturday · 14	 	32.		59.	29-98	••	30-09
Sunday 15		39.	• •	61.	30-05
Monday . 16	1	30.		61.	29-98
Tuesday · · 17					30.00
Wednesday 18	l 				29-79
					5 ,0

Prevailing wind, N.E. Except the 13th, 14th, and 16th, generally cloudy; rain times on the 13th, 15th, 17th, and 18th. Rain fallen, 225 of an inch.

CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Latitude 51° 37′ 39″ N. Longitude ... 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

.* We are glad to take advantage of a holyday week to clear ourselves of arrears in all our departments; after which we shall start afresh. The whole of the poem to Eliza Hill is too long up hill for us; but we indulge our correspondent with a sample:

No miller ever loved his mill, No tradesman ever loved his till, As I love thee, Eliza Hill.

Yet, no one dreads a lawyer's bill, Or hates, when sick, to make his will, As thou dost me, Eliza Hill.

As thou dost me, EIRR HIIL

We have no information on the subject of Major Rennell's posthumous work on Currents.

Mr. Bischoff sent us his volume too late for notice this week: and we saw it elsewhere before, which ought not to happen where authors desire an early review in the Ltt. Gaz. We have again to repeat, that with our impression, which occupies so much time in printing, we cannot pay attention to communications sent at the last hour.

The letter in favour of the Minor Theatres is of neces

ADVERTICEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL MALL. The Gallery for the Exhibition and Sale of the Works of British Artists, isopen daily, from Ten in the Mornthe Works of British Artists, ...,
ing till Five in the Evening.
Admission, is. Catalogue, is.
WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.—Electricity. NIV FARST 1 Of MONDON.—Electricity, Ritchle will deliver a Course of Six Lectures adapted to Young People, upon these Subjects, commencing on Statuday, the Bis instant, at Haif-past Three of Clock precisely; and to be continued on the Tuedays, Thursdays, and Saurday fellowing, as the same hour.

Ladies will be admitted by Tickets, on the nomination of a Preprietor. Fee for the Course, II.

Dr. Ritchie will commence a Popular Evening Course of Siztern Lectures on the same Nablecte, on Tuesday, the 8th of May, at Neven o'Clock; to be continued every Tuesday and Priday, at the same hour. Fee II.

the same hour. Fee 26.
It is not necessary that persons attending this or any Course of Lectures in the University, should be matriculated Students.
THOMAS COATS6.

Council Room, April 16th, 1888.

TINIVERSITY of LONDON SCHOOL

Head Master, — the Professors of Latin and Greek.

The School Year is divided into Three Terms, the First commercing on the 1st of October, the Second on the 18th of January, and the Third a Week after Easter: The Fee for each is M. The School cless for the Holidays on Wednesday, the 18th, and reopens on Monday, the 30th of April.

The Subjects taught are Reading, Writing, the Properties of the most familiar Objects, Natural and Artificial; the English, Latin, Greek, and French Languages; Ancient and Modern History; Geography, both Physical and Political; Arithmetic; the Elements of Mathematics and of Natural Philosophy; and Drawing.

THOMAS COATES.

THOMAS COATES. Council Room, 16th April, 1838.

LING'S COLLEGE, LONDON. — Lec-tures on Geology.

CHARLES LYELL, Esq. M.A. F.R.S. and For. Sec. GS. will, on Tuesday the ist of May, begin a Course of Lectures, to be continued every Tuesday and Friday, at Two o'Clock, p.m., on the Science of Geology. The Course will consist of Twelvy Lec-tures. Fee It. 11s. 6s.

W. OTTER, M.A. Principal.

PREPARATORY EDUCATION for LARICARALURY EDUCATION for YOUNG GENTLEMEN—A Lady, who limits her number to Six, will have Two Vacancies after Easter. Terms, Pifty Guineas per Annum. No extras. The most respectable references can be given. Letters may be addressed (post-paid) to A. Z. at Mr. Wightman's, Bookseller, Paternester Rev.

ONDON HIGH SCHOOL, Tavistock

UNDON HIGH SCHOOL, Taviston
House, Tavistot Square.
(Late University School, 18, Gower Street.)
Head Master, JOHN WALKER, A.B.,
Of Trinity College, Dublin.
Second Master, Rev. CHABLES MATURIN, A.M., Pellow of King's College, Cambridge.
First Classical Assistant Master... Cabriel Maturin, A.M.,
Second Classical Assistant Master... Rev. H. Hughes.
Mathematical and English Master. Mr. B. B. Wyand, Tesober of the French Language... Mean. P. P. Merlet.
Teacher of the German Language... Mr. Elsuwer Klattowsky
Teschers of Drawing & Perspective Messes. Croed and Wyand
The Third Term of the Season will compresse the start by English Teachers of Drawing & Perspective Messe. Oread and Wyand.

The Third Term of the Session will commence after the Easter Recess, on Thursday the 59th inst. and will continue until the last week in July.
The Annual Pee for each Pupil is 15th. which includes all charges, except for books and drawing materials. This fee is payable by three equal instalments, each respectively in advance, on the recommencement of School business after the Sammer, Christmas, and Easter Vacations.
The hours of daily attendance are from nine to three o'clock, including an hear for recreation, during which the Pupils are exercised in Dancing or Fencing.
The Holydays consist of dive weeks in Summer, commencing the latter end of July—a fortnight at Christmas—and a week at Easter.

the latter end of July—a tertingnt as Chizashing—asset Seater.

As the extent of the premises admits of the appropriation of distinct school-rooms, and of a separate play-ground for junior boys, a Preparatory School for these under eight years of age, has been opened in connection with the High School.

A Prospectus, detailing the Course and System of Education, may be obtained at Mr. Sam's (Bookseller to his Majesty), St. James's Street; Mr. Joy's, Bookseler, St. Paul's Churchyardi, Mr. Tagg's, Bookseler, 75, Chespidiej or at the Schoolhous, Tavistock Square, where an interview may be had with the Hoad Master between twelve and one o'clock daily.

Zavistock House, April 18.

THE PASSES of the ALPS, illustrated by

WILLIAM BROCKEDON, complete in Two Velumes; containing above One Hundred Plates.
The price of this splendid Work, in 2 vols. bearded in cloth and lettered, imperial 8vo. 10d.; reyal etc. Proofs, 18d.; ditto, India paper, 80d.; Proofs before the letters; imperial sto. 30d.; ditto, with etchings, 30d.; colombier folio, with etchings, 30d. TO BE HAD OF THE AUTHOR, 29, Devenshire Street, Queen Square.

Queen Square.

By an early application, Copies of the few Proofs that

"This beautiful and, we may add, magnificent work, has been completed in a style which makes us anxious to recommend so interesting a performance to our readers. A hundred and nine plates, charmingly engraved, will show them what English art can do in representing the wildest and the most lovely secures of nature; while the narrative is at once historically important and highly entertaining."—Likerery flatelit.

MINIATURE PAINTERS, and INIATURE PAINTERS, and ARTISTS generally, are solicited to impose; his very extensive and elegant fitock of for-Motta Miniature Frames, Mata, Morocce Cases, &cc., by W. Miers (Maker, by appointment, Mata, Her Majesty), at No. 111, Strand, where, such Branch of the Trade being now conducted under this even immediate inspection, he is enabled to execute Orders in the shortest possible time, as well as to regulate the Prices lower than any other Maker.
A liberal Allowance is made to Artists and to the Trada, and an Country and Foreign Orders.
W. Miers, No. 111, Strand, near Waterioo Bridge.

MUSIC.

HERZ and CZERNY at HALF-PRICE! I Now editions of the most popular Compositions of these Authors, including Carray's Var. on Sorre Secondami, Five Sheets for So. Czerny's Var. on Rode's Air, It. 46. Herr's New Set of Twelve Brilliant Waltzes, 2s. Herr's admired Quadrules, at its. Herr's Brilliant Ronde, "La Neige," Peur Sheets for Is. 6d. Herr's Grand Bonde Caracteristique, as performed before the Kine." 11.04. Pers View Music of every description, warranted immense Variety of New Music of every description, warranted correct, at Half-price.

Mesers. Walker, 17, Boho Square.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY. A NALYTICAL COURSE of PURE MATHEMATICS. By Mr. J. R. YOUNG. Price 10s. 64.

Elements of Mechanics, comprehending the Theory of Equilibrium and of Motion, and the First Principles of Physical Astronomy; tegether with a variety of Statical and Dynamical Problems. Illustrated by numerous Plates. Published by J. Souter, School Library, 78, 8t. Paul's Churchyard.

O'when may be had, lately published, by the same Auther,

1. Elements of the Integral Calculus; with its Application to Geometry, and to the Summation of Infinite Series, &c. by in cloth.

2. The Elements of the Differential Cal-

2. The Elements of the Differential Cal-cular, compenhending the General Theory of Curve Surfaces and of Curves of Double Curvature. St. in cloth.

3. An Elementary Treatise on Algebra, Theoretical and Fractical; with Attempts to Simplify some of the more Difficult Parts of the Science, particularly the Demon-tration of the Binomial Theoretin is to most general form—the Scientics of Equations of the higher order—the Summation of Infinite Series, Sc. 80 to boards, 10c. st.

4. An Elementary Treatise on the Computa-tion of Logarithms; intended as a Supplement to the various Books on Algebra. 18mo. 2s. 64.

Books on Algebra. 18mo. 5s. 6d.

5. Elements of Geometry; containing a New and Universit Treatise on the Doctrine of Proportion, tegrither with Notes, in which are pointed out and corrected several important Bryors that have hitherto remained unnoticed in the Writings of Geometre. Sec. 6s.

6. The Elements of Analytical Geometry; comprehending the Doctrine of the Conic Sections, and the general Theory of Curves and Surinees of the Second Order, with a veriety of ional Problems on Lines and Surinees. Intended for the Use of Mathematical Students in Schools and Universities. 8s. clash.

the Use of Mathematical Students in Schools and Universities. So, cloth.

"If werks like the present be introduced generally into our schools and colleges, the continent will not long boast of its incases experiently over the country of Newton in every branch of modern analytical science."

For other testimortials, see the Philosophical Magazine, Prebyterian Review, Dr. Gregory's edition of Hutton's Mathematics, &c.

In the press

An Analytical Treatise on Plane and Spherical Trigonometry, comprehending the Theory of Navigation and Nautical Astronomy, together with the necessary Logarithmic and Trigonometrical Tables.

d Trigenometrical Tables. Mr. Young gives Private Instruction in the Mathematics. Incluire at 73, St. Paul's.

Smith's Botanical Works.

In 4 vols. 87c. new edition, 2f. 8c. board

F. N. G. L. I. S. H. F. L. O. R. A.

By Sit J. B. SMITH, M.D. F.R.S.

Frasident of the Linnana Society, &c. Vol. V. (Cryptogamia), by Dr. Hooker, is early ready.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

Of whom may be had, also by Sir J. E. Smith, Compendium of the English Flora. 12mo. Grammar of Botany, illustrative of Artificial and Natural Classification; with an Explanation of Justices Systems. 8vo. 8d edition, with 3F Plana, 122, plain; 31c. 6d. cold. Introduction to the Study of Physiological and Systematical Botany. 8vo. 6th edition, with 15 Plana, 14c. plain; 28c. coloured.

School and College Classics, with English Explanatory State, Examination questions, &c.
I V Y. Books I. to V.
By Dr. HICKIE,
Head Master of Hewkahead Grammar School.
Small Str. 8. od. boards.

2. Cicero's Select Orations, from the Text of Jo. Casp. Orellins. Small 8vo. 7s. 6d. boards.

3. Herodotus. Containing the Continuous.

3. Herodotus. Containing the Continuous.

History alone of the Persian Wars. By the Rev. C. W. Sucere,
D.D. 9 vois amail 8vo. 18s.

Printed and published by A. J. Valpy, M.A. Red Lies Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Beoksetlers in London, Oxford, Combridge, 8c.

On the First of May will be published, Part I. of

THE BYRON GALLERY:

A SERIES OF

Wistorical Embellishments.

ILLUSTRATE THE POETICAL WORKS OF LORD BYRON;

Engraved in the highest style of Art, from Drawings and Paintings by the most celebrated Artists, and adapted, by their size and excellence, to embellish every edition of the Poet; more especially that of Lord Byron's Life and Works, now in the course of publication by Mr. Murray.

ADDRESS.

ADDRESS.

It is a subject of general observation and regret, that, nowithstanding the present outhusiastic admiration and encorragement of the Fine Aria, no series of Plotorial Illustrations has hitherto appeared, which is worthy of the name and genius of Byron. The Finese which Mr. Murray is now publishing, simultaneously with his complete and elegant edition to the noble sets of the present sets of the control of the present of the present of the control of the present of the pre

CONDITIONS OF PUBLICATION.

I. The Illustrations will be engraved in the highest style of the Art, and by the best Engravers in the Kingdom, from Drawiage and Paintings by the most celebrated Artists.

It. They will be completed in Six, or at most, in Eight Parts, each containing Five Plates, which will be adapted, by the size of the paper, for binding up with any edition of Byron's Works. Ample directions will be given in the last Part to the Binder.

III. Part I, will appear on the ist of May neat, and the succeeding Parts on the first of every the beginder. The Neries will thus reach its term of completion at the same time with the new edition of Byron now publishing by Mr. Murray, which it is more especially the object of these Engravings to Illustrate.

IV. The Price of such Part, neatly done up in a coloured wrapper, will be Four Shillings and Sixpence,—at which run, when the style of their execution is considered, these Illustrations are offered as the cheapest that have ever been published; and from which the Proprietors can only hope for remuneration by a very extensive sale.

A limited Number of Proofs will be taken on royal quarto:

Booksellers in the Country desirous of having Prospectuses and Specimens of these elegant Plates to show to their friends, will please to apply direct to the Publishers, (postage free), giving the Names of their Londes Agents, through whom they will be immediately forwarded.

Published by Smith, Bilder, and Co. 65, Cornhill.

New Nevels by Distinguished Writers.
8, Mew Eurlington Street.
Messrs. Celburn and Bentley have just published the following:
In 8 vols. post 8 vo.

TALES of the EARLY AGES.

By the Author of "Brambletye House," "Zillah," &c.

"A fresh testimony to the grains and revearch of Mr. Heraco Braith. This work will be a favourite with the general reader for its reamantic episcoles, and the rich variety of scenes and subjects it places before hip.,"—"Sass."

H. In 8 vols. pest 8ve.
Stanley Buxton; or, the Schoolfellows. By John Gait, Sec. Author of the "Ayrahire Legatese."

III. In 8 vols. pest 8re.

The Younger Son.
"We believe the celebrated Trelawner, (the friend of L.
Byron), to be the author of this work, and that it embeddes a celebrated protion of the events of his earlier life."—Literary is

IV.

In 2 vol., post 2 vo.

Eugene Aram. By the Author of "Pelham." Paul Clifford, "&c.
" One of the most capital books of our time."—Chronicle.

V. In 3 vels. post 8ve

In 3 vels. peet 8ve.

Sir Ralph Esher; or, Adventures of a Gensieman of the Ceart of thartes II. By Leigh Hant.

"A mong the numerous historical portraits in this work, srethe Merry Mosarch bimesif—Duchess of Cleveland—Duchess of Richmond—Bari Clarendon—Duke and Duchess of York—Duke of Ruchingham—Sir Charles Sedley—La Belle Stewart—Lady Casstemain, &c. &c.

Complete in 1 vel. nestly bound and illustrated, and revised and corrected by the Author, expressly for this edition, price &s.

The Pioneers. By Cooper. Forming the 18th Volume of the "Standard Novels."

Also, just ready, in 3 vels. post Svo.

The Fair of May Fair.

II.
3d edition, in 3 vols. post 8vo.
Cavendish; or, the Patrician at Sea.

III. Complete in 1 vel. needly bound and embellished, price &.
Self-Control. By Mrs. Brunton. Forming the 16th Vol. of the "Standard Nevels," to be published May let.

New Companion for the Breakfast Table. Sixteen 4to. pages, price 2d. No. VIII. of

THE ORIGINAL; as Weekly Miscellany of Humour, Literature, and Art.
Contents: The Punsar's Journal—The Unitely Emigrant—Awkward Effects of a Litenase (with Portraits of the Parties)—Convertation between Two Muiss—De Beranger Anglicised—Bervitice and Levittes—Reviews—Fine Arts, &c. &c.
G. Cowle, 315, Strand; and to be had of all Becksellers and Newspaces.

Thomas à Kempis, in 800. with Large Letter.
In 800. (reprinted from the edition of 1705), price 5s. in cleth,
THE CHRISTIAN'S PATTERN; or, a
Traylise of the Imitation of James Charta.

THE CHRISTIAN'S PATTERN; Or, a Treatise of the imitation of Joses Christ. In Four Books. Written originally in Latin, By THOMAS & KEMPIS.

To which are added, Meditations and Prayers.

"This is the mest excellent book which ever came from the hand of man; the Goapel being of divine original."—Fostenells.

"This is one of the most excellent treatises that have been composed. Happy is be whe puts its contents into practice, and is not eatified with merely admiring them."—Leidend with merely admiring them."—Leidend Longman, Bots, Orme, Brown, and Co.

Rivington's Theological Library, Vol. II.
In small 8vo. price 8c.
THE CONSISTENCY of the WHOLE SCHEME of REVELATION with ITSELP and with HUMAN REA-ON.
By PHILIP NICHOLAS SHUTTLEWORTH, D.D.
Warden of New College, Oxford, and Sector of Foxley, Witts.
Lately published, Theological Library, Vol. I. constaining
The Life of Wiclif. By Charles Webb Le
Ras. M.A.

Bas, M.A.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

THE IMMORTALITY of the SOUL,

with other Poems.

By DAVID MALLOCK, A.M.

Holdsworth and Ball, St. Paul's Churchyard.

New Works published this day,

THE THIRD and LAST VOLUME of the HISTORY of the PENINSULAR WAR.
By ROBERT SOUTHEY, Beq. LL.D.

Nearly ready,

Contarini Fleming; a Psychological Autobiography. 4 vols. feelscap Sve.

Lectures on Coins. By Edward Cardwell,

Gleanings in Natural History. By Edward

Pen and Pencil Sketches of India. By Capt. Mundy, late Aide-de-Camp to Lord Comberners. With 28 111 trations by Landscer, of Indian Field Sports, dc. 2 vols.

John Marray, Alternatic Street.

Interesting New Works. MEMOIRS of SIR JAMES CAMPBELL of Ardkingles (formal)

M EMUIKS of SIK JAMES CAMIF DELLI of Ardkinglas (formerly Sir James Calander).

Written by MIMMELP.

Str James Campbell is the father of Mrs. Theone Sheetdan. He served during the greater part of the Seven Year. War in Germany as Aide-de-camp to Greater Mostyn—visited must of the German Courte—had familiar intercourse with Voltaire—was a member of the mest celebrated London Clubs, the "Bavolrega" of the "Fandemonium," &c.—held the post of Servetary to the British Embassy at Paris on the eve of the Revolution—journeyed extensively in the East, and was again mixing in Parisian society during the Allied occupation of Park. Π.

Mémoires de Hortense, Duchesse de St. Leu,
-Reine de Hollande, in 1 vol. with Portrait. III.

The Earl of Munster's Memoirs of the late

The Earl of Munster's Memoirs of the late War: together with the Persean Narrative of Captain Cooke, of the 63d Regimeat. In 3 vals post 8vc. 21s.

"These textches are among the livellest specimens of military description that we have happened to meet with anywhere. Lord Munster's picture of Soult's flight from Oporto may rank with the best pages of 'Cyril Thornson,' or 'the bubaltern.' His volume is full of interest, evidently the work of a humane and gallant mind, an enthusiastic soldier of Wellington."—Quarterly Services. Mex.

Sir Jonah Barrington's Personal Sketches of his own Times, 3d edition, with considerable Additions, 2 vols. 870. 34c.

"These volumes form a cente of Irish characters, Irish manners, Irish adventures, Irish withcliems, and Irish opinions, for about fifty years; and a more amusing melongy has seldoes issued from the press."—Literary Gezette.

The Exquisites, or a New View of Exclutive Society; a Novel. 3 vols. 21s. Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

MCollective Commercial Dictionary.
In a closely printed few rotume of 1145 pages, with large Maps, N. 10s. boards, with parchment back,

D ICTIONARY, PRACTICAL,

THEORETICAL, and HISTORICAL, of COMMERCE and COMMERCIAL NAVIGATION.

It has been the wish of the author and publishers of this work that it should be as extensively useful as possible. If they be not decrived in their expectations, it may be advantageously employed, as a sort of wede-nearum, by merchants, traders, thip owners, and ship-masters, in conducting the details of their respective businesses. It is hoped, however, that this object has been attained without omitting the consideration of any topic incident to the subject, that seemed calculated to make the bock generally servicesule, and to recommend it to the attention of all classes.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brewn, Green, and Co.

New Nearth with Author of "Grashe."

New Novel by the Author of " Grashy."

In 3 vols. post 8vo.

R L I N G T O N.

By the Author of " Granby," and " Herbert Lacy."

Henry Colburn and Bichard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

The Berl of Mulgrounds New Monel.

In 8 vols. peat 8 ve.

THE CONTRAST.

By the Author of "Matilda," and "Yes and Ne."

Henry Calbarn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

In feelings two price 4. 6d. boards,
POLAND, HOMER, and other Poems.
"We like this minutes of the community "We like this volume much; there is an enthusiasm, and a feeling for the basuithit, which are as the signs of a mora ing that promise a fine day. There are fine lines, and some spirited vertification."—Livery Gastite.
Longman and Co. London; and A. Black, Edinburgh.

FICTION WITHOUT ROMANCE.
By Mrs. MARIA POLACK.
Printed for A. K. Newman and Co. London.

Where may be had, published this Spring,
The Water Queen, by Mr. Coates, 3 vols.

Pirate of Bofine, by W. F. Dunne, 3 vols.

The Algerines; or, Twins of Naples, 3 vols.

Glenalpin; or, the Bandit's Cave, 2 vols.

Eve of St. Agnes, by C. Ward (now Mason),

Gerald Fitzgerald, by Anne of Swansen,

N I E B U H R'S R O M E, Vol. II.
Translated by Measrs. HARS and THIRLWALL.
Price 16s.
Printed at the Cambridge Frees, for John Taylor, Bookseller and Publisher to the University of Lendon, Upper Gower Street.
A Second Edition of Vol. I. has been re-

The Little Girl's Own Book, 3d edition.

With 110 Cuts, price only 4s. 6d. in beards, or 6s. 6d. beand, gift edges, gift edges, and the state of the Little Girl's OWN BOOK.

By Mrs. CHILD,

Author of "the Mother's Book."

The 3d edition.

Lenden: Princed for Thomas Tegg, Chespeide; N. Hailes, Piocedilly; and Bowdery and Karby, Onferd Street.

Lady Sandford's Stories from Roman His-

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF THE KING.

Favourable opportunity for new Subscribers commencing the Work.

Subscribers not yet up to the Press are urgently recommended to begin with the next Number, and have their Parts as published—for the value of their Work will be much enhanced by having them as early as others.

April 30th will be published,

THE FIRST NUMBER OF THE FOURTH VOLUME

FISHER'S NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY,

Containing PORTRAITS and MEMOIRS of

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN LORD BROUGHAM AND VAUX SIR D. BREWSTER, LL.D. F.R.S. H. R. H. THE PRINCESS VICTORIA Painted by H. DAWE, Esq. SIR THOS. LAWRENCE. SIR H. RAEBURN. ANTHONY STEWART.

Three Volumes of the National Portrait Gallery are now before the Public; and the Proprietors of the Work have the satisfaction of looking back, with a feeling of hencet pride, upon the result of three years of unceasing exertion and vast expenditure.

Until the discovery of engraving upon steel, it was impossible that a Series of Fortraits like the present could have been produced in the necessary style of excellence under a sum so large as to place a collection of the kind beyond the reach of individuals of moderate fortune. But the durability of this new material enables the Proprietors of the National Portrait Gallery to present the public with fine impressions of the best and most interesting portraits ever painted in the country, at a price so moderate, and in a mode of publication so convenient, as to be within the means of all; whilst meriting, both in contents and appearance, a place in the best and most costly collections, public and private.

The object of this Publication was twofold:—

Pirst, to effect an authentic and impartial record of the lilustrious of all ranks, professions, and parties, of a period marked by more important events than any preceding age, and at which British greatness in intellect, arms, and art, stands pre-eminent in the history of the world.

Secondly, while effecting this object, to advance the cause of the Pine Arts: and, in every possible case, to give not merely a faithful resemblance of the individual, but, by procuring works from the easels of the most distinguished Artists, and entrusing them to Engravers eminently qualified to do justice to their marius, to exalt the reputation of the British School of Painting, which is especially celebrated for its superiority in Portraiture.

The Three Volumes now complete contain Portraits of their Majesites

GEORGE BILL, GEORGE IV., WILLIAM IV., AND KING LEOPOLD,

GEORGE III., GEORGE IV., WILLIAM IV., AND KING LEOPOLD, 5 of Members of the Royal Family 99 of Illustrious Statesmen 9 of Distinguished Nobility 11 of Naval 10 of Military Commanders 7 of Emineat Divines

Of the original Pictures of these Portraits,

Ortham, &c.

It is with a higher feeling than that of ordinary gratification, the Proprietors receive daily evidence of the estimation in which their Work is held, as this evidence will materially contribute to the imprevement of future volumes. When the work was commenced, they experienced considerable difficulties, however, which, by perseverance, they aurmounted—in procuring genuine porturains of the illustrients personages of whom it is their object to form an assemblage. This difficulty no longer exist:

from various quarters numerous offers are made to them of desirable portraits, to supply the spaces which remain unoccupied in their Gallery; and these offers call for their grateful acknowledgments. The power of section is thus sefforded; and the Proprietors therefore confidently trust, that, with the cordial co-operation which they receive from the Nobility and Gentry of England, and the perfect exclusion of party spirit, the Portrait Gallery will not only continue to maintain their professions, but in every respect support, with conscious integrity, its National Character.

The respect support, with conscious integrity, its National Character.

Opinions.

Mr. Southey, in a letter to the Proprietors, remarks—"Your National Portrait Gallery is indeed a very beautiful, and will hereafter be deemed a very valuable work."

"As in a previous notice we did fall justice to the beauty and cheapness of the National Portrait Gallery, we have now rather dwelt on its literary merits; but we cannot but call public attention to a work which is at once a spendid historical monument, a source of annuement, and, both in contents and appearance, fitted for the most magnificent library; yet bed at a price so moderate, as to be within reach of a limited income."—New Monthly Magazine.

"Three such plates for three times the cost of the publication, would, in our esteem, be a gratifying acquisition."—Literary Ges.

"In conclusion, we think this delightful publication well worthy of its name, National; for we cannot conceive any work more likely to create a desire in noble and generous youths to go and "do litewise": thus ratings a spirit of emulation that may prove of inestimable service to our country."—Gentleman's Magazine.

"We have averent times had occasion to speak in terms of high praise of the portraits which illustrate this marvellously cheap and aplendid work."—John Bulk.
London: Fishery, Son, and Co; of whom, and of all respectable Booksellers throughout the United Kingdem, Prospectuses may be obtained; and to whom Country Booksellers are requested to apply for the Agency of the Work.

MANUAL.
Containing,—I. Anatomical Observations—S. Sergical Observations—S. Diseases, Precautions, and Treatment—4. Genera Management of Sheep and Lambs. Being the XXIVth Number of the Farmer's Series.

The Publications of the Society under the Title of the "Farmer' Series," consist at present of

The Horse, in 15 Numbers at 6d.; or, hand-

Four Numbers of Accounts of "Select Farms." led to exhibit good Specimens of Husbandry in various Parts

A Treatise on Planting, Nos. 1 to 4. To be completed in Two more Numbers

• A Work on Cattle is in forwardness; also, a Work on Husbandry.

In 18mo. 7th edition, enlarged, with 21 Engravings, 7s. 6d. plain, or 12s. coloured,

CONVERSATIONS on BOTANY. The ONVERSATIONS ON BUITANT. Inc object of this work is to enable young persons to acquire a knowledge of the vegetable productions of their native country.
For this purpose the arrangement of Linnana is explained, and a native plant of each class (with a few exceptions) is examined, and illustrated by an Engraving.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Treatment of Sheep.

Under the Superintendence of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, by Baldwin and Cradock, price 6d.

THE MOUNTAIN SHEPHERD'S MANUAL.

Containing.—I. Anatomical Observations—3. Surgical Observations—5. Diseases, Precentions, and Treatment—4. General Printed for J., G., and Lilvington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

The following works of Mr. Jones may be purchased separately 1. A Course of Lectures on the Figurative Language of the Holy Scriptures. New edition. 8vo. price 7s. boards.

2. The Catholic Doctrine of a Trinity proved.

3. Letters from a Tutor to his Pupils, upon Literary and Moral Subjects. 13mo, price 8s. in bo

4. The Book of Nature; or the True Sense of Things Explained and made Easy to the Capacities of Child-ren. 13mo. price 1s. 6d. bound.

THE HUNCHBACK; a New Play, in Five Acts.
By JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES.

Nearly ready, in foolscap 8vo. with a Design by Wilkie, The Maid of Elvar, a Poem. By Allan Cunningham.

B. Mozon, 64, New Bond Street; and sold by all Booksellers.

A new edition, in 18mo. price 4t. handsomety half-bound, or with the Flates coloured, 7t.

DINGLEY'S PRACTICAL INTRO.

DUCTION to BOTANY, illustrated by References, under each Definition, to Plants of surpress, and with Plates. A new and greatly improved distinct, Plants, Plants, Plants, A hancomphic's Constances, 200 dec. 100 dec. 10

Abercrombie's Gardener's Pocket Journal, contining, in monthly order, every thing necessary to be done in the Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower Garden, thrubbery, Green-House, Hot-House, &c.; with Lists of Plants, Shrubs, Fruit and Foreit Trees, Flowers, &c. &c. 19th edition, corrected and enlarged by an eminent Botaniat, price only 2s, sewed.

Hortus Cantabrigenous and Escic Plants, cultivated in the Cambridge Betanic Garden. By James Donn. A new and greatly Improved edition, by Sinclair, with numerous Cuts, price 12st. boards.

Culpeper's English Herbal, enlarged by Dr. Parkins, and corrected by an experienced Herbalist. Fourth edition, many Plates, price 6c. boards; or with coloured Plates, &c.
Dr. Aikin's Woodland Companion; or, a erief Description of British Trees, with some Account of the

The Catechism of Nature, improved by Joyce.

Best's Art of Angling, confirmed by a Life of Experience; to which is added, Nobb's Complete Troller. The lith addition, with a Plate of Flies, much improved. Price

The Complete Grazier; or, Farmer's and Landowner's Complete Guide. By a Lincolnshire Grazier. 5th edition, emiarged and extensively improved, illustrated with nu-merous Cuts, 8vo. price 17th. beards.

Under the Superintendence of the Society for the Diffusion of Unoful Knowledge.

A Treatise on Planting, Nos. 1 to 4, price

6d. each.
"Select Farms," Nos. 1 to 4, price 6d. each.
London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Rev.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

Dr. Lardser's Cabinet Cyclopedia.
In monthly volumes, small 8ve. 6s. in cloth.
On May I, being Vel. XXX. of the above, Vol. II. of HISTORY of SPAIN and PORTUGAL,
(4 vol.)

THE DEMOCRAT.

Washington Irving's New Sketch-Book.
On the 1st of May, in 2 vois. 8vo. uniformly with the "Sketch-Book,"

THE ALHAM BRA.
By GEOFFREY CRAYON.
Author of the "Sketch-Beek," and "Bracebridge Hall," &c.
Henry Colburn and Richard Senticy, New Burlington Street.

DINBURGH REVIEW, No. CIX. will be published on Thursday, the 86th of April.

Contents:—

1. Mrs. Somerville's Mechanism of the Heavens.

2. Bowles's Life of Bishop Ken.

2. Jacob on the Supply and Consumption of the Precious Resists.

4. The Waverley Novels.

6. Government of British India—Revenue Systems.

6. Life and Writings of Dr. Carrie.

7. Life and Writings of Dr. Carrie.

8. The General Stavery.

8. The General Stavery.

9. Mr. Best. catheresses.

9. Mr. Best. ovels—Engene Aram.

10. History, Wrongs, and Islans of Poland.

11. Nares's Memoly and Islans of Poland.

12. Religious Aepocts of his age and Religious Aepocts of his age and Adam Black, Edinburgh.

New Burlington News Activities.

M. BURKE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1832.

M. BURKE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1832.

The Fourth edition of the above valuable work is now nearly ready for publication, considerably improved and enlarged from the highest authorities, and with entirely new Engravings of the Arms; and the public are requested to be particular in seeding their Orders to their respective Booksellers, to prevent the substitution of any other Work.

To be published by Messra. Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street; Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh; and J. Cumming. Dublin.

In the press, post &vo. &s. &d. boards,
Dedicated, by permission, to Her Most Gracious Majesty,
HE MESSIAH: 8 Poem, in Six Books.
By the Author of "The Omnipresence of the Detty," &c.
Chail, Som of the Most High! Heir of both worlds,
On the Most High! Heir of both worlds,
Now enter, and begin to save mankind.—#illon.
London: S. Maunder, 20, Regent Street, Waterloo Place.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE UFFICE, 7, Wellington Street. Waterloo Bridge, Stand, and 18, South Smallen Street, Office Street: sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Engal Exchange, Office Harriston, and American Mark, Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Athiann and Co. Blasquer; and J. Camming, Dublin-Agent for America, O. Rich, 19, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 797.

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Tales of the Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. Third Series of the Sketch-Book. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley. WHAT Columbus was to the American continent, Washington Irving has been to American literature,-the first who discovered its shores of beauty and fertility, the first to enter thereon and take possession. Others have followed in his steps, and have discovered their gold and silver mines; but still, it was Washington Irving who broke the egg and who found the land. England owes him a deep debt of gratitude, and so does America; something, too, beyond the ordinary claim of authorship. He was the first to awaken that kindly feeling, which surely seems the only natural one to subsist between people speaking one common language, and sprung from one common stock. It is now some twelve or fourteen years since his writings were first brought before the British public, and in this very paper. The Literary Gazette was the earliest to see and to do justice to the sketches of Geoffrey Crayon, some halfdozen of which were made known to England in our columns. Their after-popularity well justified our choice. It is the individual who makes the many; and to do justice, we must remember what he found Transatlantic literature, and compare that with its present posi-tion. Ten years ago, we should have asked, "Can any good thing come out of Galilee?" Now we look to American literature, and feel that it only wants time to take its stand by our own. One circumstance, too, we cannot but especially mention,-the liberal and enlightened tone Washington Irving has always taken in speaking of the two countries. Never have his pages been defaced by misrepresentations, cultivating a miserable jealousy, and still more miserable vanity; but he has ever written in that honourable spirit of appreciation and equality, which is the only one befitting two great nations. What have we to do with the quarrels of our grandmothers or grandfathers? The young eagle grew too great for the parent nest; but is that any reason why they should keep quarrelling on in the air to all eternity?
No; it is the part of both to cultivate a good understanding, to do each other justice, and own the great claims they have on each other's forbearance and admiration. Look at the enterprise, the talent, the industry, England has shewn in literature, in philosophy, and in commerce-no one can deny the glory of her past. Look at the enterprise, the talent, and the industry, now displaying in America—no one can deny the glory of her present. A mutual and generous appreciation is the golden bridge over which the opinions of the two nations ought to pass; and it is this spirit that Washington Irving has ever and most powerfully cultivated. There never was a writer whose popularity was more matter of feeling, or more intimate than the one whose pages are no other guardianship.' So saying, he ordered now before us; perhaps because he appealed at that a tower of the Alhambra should be prenow before us; perhaps because he appealed at that a tower of the Alhambra should be pre-once to our simplest and kindliest emotions. pared for their reception, and departed at the home;" the pictures he delighted to draw were those of natural loveliness, linked with human sympathies; and—a too unusual thing with the writers of our time—he looked upon God's works, and "saw that they were good." The pathos of his serious is as irresistible as the comic of his lighter ones. If the definition be true, that the distinction between wit and humour is, that humour is closely allied to pathos, humour is the characteristic of our author; and if to this we add, that wit smacks of bitterness, which humour does not, we shall still more clearly describe the style of the author of the Sketch-Book. With him, the wine of life is not always on the lees. An exquisite vein of poetry runs through every page, -and of poetry, his epithets who does not remember -" the shark, glancing like a spectre through the blue seas?" But our task is not one of retrospective criticism, and we must turn to the pages before us.

Mr. Irving has fairly trusted himself " to the golden shores of old romance," and yielded to all their influences. He has carried us into a world of marble fountains, moonlight, arabesques, and perfumes. We do not know whether reform and retrenchment have left any imagination in the world; but this we know, that if there be any fantasies "yet alumbering deep within the soul," the Tales of the Alhambra must awaken them. Without further preamble, we place before our readers the follow-ing playfully told legend. In spite, however, of the judicious recommendation of the giant, Bebir, mon ami, commence au commencement," we must begin in the middle; only premising, that the three beautiful princesses have been brought up in most salutary seclusion, and with a most discreet duenna, who, nevertheless, begins to think that fifteen is an age which has its perils.

"Mohamed the Left-handed was seated one morning on a divan in one of the cool halls of the Alhambra, when a slave arrived from the fortress of Salobrina, with a message from the sage Cadiga, congratulating him on the anniversary of his daughters' birth-day. The slave at the same time presented a delicate little bas-ket decorated with flowers, within which, on a couch of vine and fig-leaves, lay a peach, an apricot, and a nectarine, with their bloom and down and dewy sweetness upon them, and all in the early stage of tempting ripeness. The monarch was versed in the Oriental language of fruits and flowers, and readily divined the meaning of this emblematical offering. 'So, said he, ' the critical period pointed out by the astrologers is arrived: my daughters are at a marriageable age. What is to be done? They are shut up from the eyes of men; they are under the eyes of the discreet Cadiga-all very good,-but still they are not under my own eye, as was prescribed by the astrologers: I must gather them under my wing, and trust to

His affections were those of "hearth and | head of his guards for the fortress of Salobrina, to conduct them home in person. About three years had elapsed since Mohamed had beheld his daughters; and he could scarcely credit his eyes at the wonderful change which that small space of time had made in their appearance. During the interval they had passed that won-drous boundary line in female life which separates the crude, uninformed, and thoughtless girl from the blooming, blushing, meditative woman. It is like passing from the flat, bleak, uninteresting plains of La Mancha to the voluptuous valleys and swelling hills of Andalusia. Zayda was tall and finely-formed, with a lofty demeanour and a penetrating eye. She entered with a stately and decided step, and made a profound reverence to Mohamed, treating him more as her sovereign than her father. Zorayda was of the middle height, with an alluring look and swimming gait, and a sparkling beauty, heightened by the assistance of the toilette. She approached her father with a smile, kissed his hand, and saluted him with several stanzas from a popular Arabian poet, with which the monarch was delighted. Zorahayda was shy and timid, smaller than her sisters, and with a beauty of that tender beseeching kind, which looks for fondness and protection. She was little fitted to command. like her elder sister, or to dazzle like the second: but was rather formed to creep to the bosom of manly affection, to nestle within it, and be content. She drew near her father with a timid and almost faltering step, and would have taken his hand to kiss, but on looking up into his face, and seeing it beaming with a paternal smile, the tenderness of her nature broke forth, and she threw herself upon his neck. Mohamed the Left-handed surveyed his blooming daughters with mingled pride and perplexity; for while he exulted in their charms, he bethought himself of the prediction of the astrologers. 'Three daughters! three daughters!' muttered he repeatedly to him-self, 'and all of a marriageable age! Here's tempting Hesperian fruit, that requires a dra-gon watch! He prepared for his return to Granada, by sending heralds before him, commanding every one to keep out of the road by which he was to pass, and that all doors and windows should be closed at the approach of the princesses. This done, he set forth, escorted by a troop of black horsemen, of hideous aspect, and clad in shining armour. The princesses rode beside the king, closely veiled, on beautiful white palfreys, with velvet caparisons, embroidered with gold, and sweeping the ground: the bits and stirrups were of gold, and the silken bridles adorned with pearls and precious stones. The palfreys were covered with little silver bells, that made the most musical tinkling as they ambled gently along. Woe to the unlucky wight, however, who lingered in the way when he heard the tinkling of these bells-the guards were ordered to cut him down without mercy. The cavalcade

It was too late for the soldiers to get out of the way, so they threw themselves on their faces on the earth, ordering their captives to do the like. Among the prisoners were the three identical cavaliers whom the princesses had seen from the pavilion. They either did not understand, or were too haughty to obey the order, and remained standing and gazing upon the cavalcade as it approached. The ire of the monarch was kindled at this flagrant defiance of his orders. Drawing his cimeter, and pressing forward, he was about to deal a left-handed blow, that would have been fatal to, at least, one of the gazers, when the princesses crowded round him, and implored mercy for the prisoners; even the timid Zorahayda forgot her shyness, and became eloquent in their behalf. Mohamed paused, with uplifted cimeter, when the captain of the guard threw himself at his feet. 'Let not your majesty,' said he, 'do a deed that may cause great scandal throughout the kingdom. These are three brave and noble Spanish knights, who have been taken in battle, fighting like lions; they are of high birth, and may bring great ransoms.' 'Enough!' said the king, 'I will spare their lives, but punish their audacity-let them be taken to the princesses continued pale and languid in the Vermilion Towers and put to hard labour. Mohamed was making one of his usual lefthanded blunders. In the tumult and agitation of this blustering scene, the veils of the three princesses had been thrown back, and the radiance of their beauty revealed; and in prolonging the parley, the king had given that beauty time to have its full effect. In those days people fell in love much more suddenly than at present, as all ancient stories make manifest : it is not a matter of wonder, therefore, that the bearts of the three cavaliers were completely captured; especially as gratitude was added to their admiration; it is a little singular, however, though no less certain, that each of them was enraptured with a several beauty. As to the princesses, they were more than ever struck with the noble demeanour of the captives, and cherished in their breasts all that they had beard of their valour and noble lineage. The cavalcade resumed its march; the three princesses rode pensively along on their tinkling palfreys, now and then stealing a glance behind in search of the Christian captives, and the latter were conducted to their allotted prison in the Vermilion Towers. The residence provided for the princesses was one of the most dainty that fancy could devise. It was in a tower somewhat apart from the main palace of the Albambra, though connected with it by the main wall that encircled the whole summit of the hill. On one side it looked into the interior of the fortress, and had, at its foot, a small garden filled with the rarest flowers. On the other side it overlooked a deep embowered ravine that separated the grounds of the Alhambra from those of the Generalife. The interior of the tower was divided into small fairy apartments, beautifully ornamented in the light Arabian style, surrounding a lofty hall, the vaulted roof of which rose almost to the summit of the tower. The walls and ceiling of the hall were adorned with arabesque and fret-work, sparkling with gold and with brilliant pencilling. In the centre of the marble pavement was an alabaster fountain, set round with aromatic shrubs and flowers, and throwing up a jet of water that cooled the whole edifice. and had a lulling sound. Round the hall were suspended cages of gold and silver wire, conjourney. But, bless me, children! what is the the guard nodding drowsily at his post, they taining singing birds of the finest plumage or matter that you blush so, and are in such a seated themselves among the herbage at the foot sweetest note. The princesses had been repreenraptured with the Alhambra. To his surprise, however, they began to pine, and grow their night's rest, and they were out of all patience with the alabaster fountain with its eternal droop-drop and splash-splash, from morning till night, and from night till morning. The king, who was somewhat of a testy, tyrannical disposition, took this at first in high dudgeon; but he reflected that his daughters had arrived at an age when the female mind expands and its desires augment; 'they are no longer children,' said he to himself, ' they are women grown, and require suitable objects to interest them.' He put in requisition, therefore, all the dress-makers, and the jewellers, and the artificers in gold and silver throughout the zacatin of Granada, and the princesses were overwhelmed with robes of silk, and of tissue, and of brocade, and cachemere shawls, and necklaces of pearls and diamonds, and rings, and bracelets, and anklets, and all manner of precious things. All, however, was of no avail; the midst of their finery, and looked like three blighted rose-buds drooping from one stalk. The king was at his wit's end. He had in general a laudable confidence in his own judgment, and never took advice. The whims and caprices of three marriageable damsels, however, are sufficient, said he, to puzzle the shrewdest head. So, for once in his life, he called in the aid of counsel. The person to whom he applied was the experienced duenna. 'Cadiga,' said the king, 'I know you to be one of the most discreet women in the whole world, as well as one of the most trustworthy; for these reasons I have always continued you about the persons of my daughters. Fathers cannot be too wary in whom they repose such confidence; I now wish you to find out the secret malady that is praying upon the princesses, and to devise some means of restoring them to health and cheerfulness.' promised implicit obedience. In fact she knew more of the malady of the princesses than they did themselves. Shutting herself up with them, however, she endeavoured to insinuate herself into their confidence. 'My dear children, what is the reason you are so dismal and downcast, in so beautiful a place, where you have every thing that heart can wish?' The princesses looked vacantly round the apartment and sighed. What more, then, would you have? Shall I get you the wonderful parrot that talks all languages and is the delight of Granada? 'Odious!' exclaimed the Princess Zayda. 'A horrid, screaming bird, that chatters words without ideas: one must be without brains to tolerate such a pest.' 'Shall I send for a monkey from the rock of Gibraltar, to divert you with his antics?' 'A monkey! faugh! cried Zorayda; 'the detestable mimic of man. I hate the nauseous animal.' 'What say you to the famous black singer Casem, from the royal harem, in Morocco. They say he has a voice as fine as a woman's.' 'I am terrified at the sight of these black slaves,' said the delicate Zorahayda; 'beside, I have lost all relish for music.' 'Ah! my child, you would not say so," replied the old woman, elyly, 'had you heard the music I heard last evening, from the three Spanish cavaliers whom we met on our

of Moorish soldiers with a convoy of prisoners. | sented as always cheerful when in the castle of | pray proceed.' 'Well; as I was passing by the Salobrina; the king had expected to see them Vermilion Towers last evening, I saw the three cavaliers resting after their day's labour. One was playing on the guitar, so gracefully, and melancholy, and dissatisfied with every thing the others sung by turns; and they did it in around them. The flowers yielded them no such style, that the very guards seemed like fragrance, the song of the nightingale disturbed statues, or men enchanted. Allah, forgive me! I could not help being moved at hearing the songs of my native country. And then to see three such noble and handsome youths in chains and slavery!' Here the kind-hearted old woman could not restrain her tears. 'Perhaps, mother, you could manage to procure us a sight of these cavaliers,' said Zayda. 'I think,' said Zorayda, 'a little music would be quite re-viving.' The timid Zorahayda said nothing, but threw her arms round the neck of Cadiga. 'Mercy on me!' exclaimed the discreet old woman; 'what are you talking of, my children? Your father would be the death of us all if he heard of such a thing. To be sure, these cavaliers are evidently well-bred, and high-minded youths; but what of that? they are the enemies of our faith, and you must not even think of them but with abhorrence.' There is an admirable intrepidity in the female will. particularly when about the marriageable age, which is not to be deterred by dangers and prohibitions. The princesses hung round their old duenna, and coaxed, and entreated, and declared that a refusal would break their hearts. What could she do? She was certainly the most discreet old woman in the whole world, and one of the most faithful servants to the king; but was she to see three beautiful princesses break their hearts for the mere tinkling of a guitar? Beside, though she had been so long among the Moors, and changed her faith, in imitation of her mistress, like a trusty follower, yet she was a Spaniard born, and had the lingerings of Christianity in her heart. So she set about to contrive how the wish of the princesses might be gratified. The Christian captives, confined in the Vermilion Towers, were under the charge of a big-whiskered, broad-shouldered renegado, called Hussein Baba, who was reputed to have a most itching palm. She went to him privately, and slipping a broad piece of gold into his hand, 'Hussein Baba,' said she; 'my mistresses, the three princesses, who are shut up in the tower, and in sad want of amusement, have heard of the musical talents of the three Spanish cavaliers, and are desirous of having a specimen of their skill. I am sure you are too kind hearted to refuse them so innocent a gratification.' 'What! and to have my head set grinning over the gate of my own tower! for that would be the reward, if the king should discover it.' 'No danger of any thing of the kind; the affair may be managed so that the whim of the princesses may be gratified, and their father be never the wiser. You know the deep ravine outside of the walls that passes immediately below the tower. Put the three Christians to work there, and at the intervals of their labour let them play and sing, as if for their own recreation. In this way the princesses will be able to hear them from the windows of the tower, and you may be sure of their paying well for your compliance.' As the good old woman concluded her harangue, she kindly pressed the rough hand of the renegado, and left within it another piece of gold. Her eloquence was irresistible. The very next day the three cavaliers were put to work in the ravine. During the noontide heat, when their fellow-labourers were sleeping in the shade, and the accompaniment of the guitar. The glen was deep, the tower was high, but their voices rose distinctly in the stillness of the summer noon. The princesses listened from their balconythey had been taught the Spanish language by their duenna and were moved by the tenderness of the song. The discreet Cadiga, on the contrary, was terribly shocked. 'Allah, preserve us!' cried she, 'they are singing a love-ditty, addressed to yourselves. Did ever mortal hear of such audacity? I will run to the slave-master, and have them soundly bastinadoed.' 'What! bastinado such gallant cavaliers, and for singing so charmingly!' The three beautiful princesses were filled with horror at the idea.

With all her virtuous indignation, the good old woman was of a placable nature, and easily appeased. Beside, the music seemed to have a beneficial effect upon her young mistresses. A rosy bloom had aiready come to their cheeks. and their eyes began to sparkle. She made no further objection, therefore, to the amorous ditty of the cavaliers. When it was finished, the princesses remained silent for a time; at length Zorayda took up a lute, and with a sweet, though faint and trembling voice, war-bled a little Arabian air, the burden of which was, 'The rose is concealed among her leaves, but she listens with delight to the song of the nightingale.' From this time forward the cavaliers worked almost daily in the ravine. The considerate Hussein Baba became more and more indulgent, and daily more prone to sleep at his post. For some time a vague intercourse was kept up by popular songs and romances, which, in some measure, responded to each other, and breathed the feelings of the parties. By degrees, the princesses shewed themselves at the balcony, when they could do so without being perceived by the guards. They con-versed with the cavaliers also by means of flowers, with the symbolical language of which they were mutually acquainted. The difficulties of their intercourse added to its charms. and strengthened the passion they had so singularly conceived; for love delights to struggle with difficulties, and thrives the most hardily on the scantiest soil. The change effected in the looks and spirits of the princesses by this secret intercourse surprised and gratified the left-handed king; but no one was more elated than the discreet Cadiga, who considered it all owing to her able management. At length there was an interruption in this telegraphic correspondence—for several days the cavaliers ceased to make their appearance in the glen. The three beautiful princesses looked out from the tower in vain. In vain they stretched their swan-like necks from the balcony; in vain they sang like captive nightingales in their cage: nothing was to be seen of their Christian lovers-not a note responded from the groves. The discreet Cadiga sallied forth in quest of intelligence, and soon returned with a face full of trouble. 'Ah, my children!' cried she, 'I saw what all this would come to; but you would have your way; you may now hang up your lutes on the willows. The Spanish cavaliers are now ransomed by their families; they are down in Granada, and preparing to return to their native country.' The three beautiful princesses were in despair at the tidings. The fair Zayda was indignant at the slight put upon them, in thus being deserted without a parting word. Zorayda wrung her hands and cried, and looked in the glass, and wiped away her tears, and cried afresh. The gentle Zorahayda leaned over the balcony and wept in means, my good Cadiga; cannot you fly with silence; and her tears fell drop by drop among us? 'Very true, my child; and, to tell the their discreet counsellor. That excellent old the flowers of the bank where the faithless truth, when I talked the matter over with of her nine lives in the stream. A fisherman, cavaliers had so often been seated. The dis- Hussein Baba, he promised to take care of me, creet Cadiga did all in her power to soothe if I would accompany you in your flight. . . their sorrow. 'Take comfort, my children, said she; 'this is nothing when you are used to it. This is the way of the world. Ah! when you are as old as I am, you will know how to value these men. I'll warrant, these cavaliers have their loves among the Spanish beauties of Cordova and Seville, and will soon be serenading under their balconies, and thinking no more of the Moorish beauties in the Alhambra. Take comfort, therefore, my children, and drive them from your hearts.' comforting words of the discreet Cadiga only redoubled the distress of the three princesses, and for two days they continued inconsolable. On the morning of the third, the good old woman entered their apartment all ruffling with indignation. 'Who would have believed such insolence in mortal man!' exclaimed she, as soon as she could find words to express herself; but I am rightly served for having connived at this deception of your worthy father. Never talk more to me of your Spanish cavaliers.' 'Why, what has happened, good Cadiga?' exclaimed the princesses in breathless anxiety.

'What has happened? Treason has happened; or what is almost as bad, treason has been proposed, and to me, the faithfulest of subjects. the trustiest of duennas! Yes, my children, the Spanish cavaliers have dared to tamper with me, that I should persuade you to fly with them to Cordova, and become their wives!' Here the excellent old woman covered her face with her hands, and gave way to a violent burst of grief and indignation. The three beautiful princesses turned pale and red, pale and red, and trembled, and looked down, and cast shy looks at each other, but said nothing. Meantime the old woman sat rocking backward and forward in violent agitation, and now and then breaking out into exclamations—'That ever I should live to be so insulted !—I, the faithfulest of servants!' At length the oldest princess, who had most spirit, and always took the lead, approached her, and laying her hand upon her shoulder, 'Well, mother,' said she, supposing we were willing to fly with these Christian cavaliers, is such a thing possible?'
The good old woman paused suddenly in her grief, and looking up, 'Possible!' echoed she; 'to be sure it is possible. Have not the cavaliers already bribed Hussein Baba, the renegado captain of the guard, and arranged the whole plan? But, then, to think of deceiving your father-your father, who has placed such confidence in me!' Here the worthy woman gave way to a fresh burst of grief, and began again to rock backward and forward, and to wring her hands. 'But our father has never placed any confidence in us,' said the eldest princess; but has trusted to bolts and bars, and treated us as captives.' 'Why, that is true enough, replied the old woman, again pausing in her grief; 'he has indeed treated you most unreasonably; keeping you shut up here, to waste your bloom in a moping old tower, like roses left to wither in a flower-jar. But, then, to fly from your native land! 'And is not the land we fly to the native land of our mother, where we shall live in freedom? And shall we not each have a youthful husband in exchange for a severe old father?' 'Why, that again is all very true; and your father, I must confess, is rather tyrannical. But what, then, relapsing into her grief, 'would you leave me behind to bear the brunt of his vengeance?' 'By no

"The appointed night arrived. The tower of the princesses had been locked up as usual, and the Alhambra was buried in deep sleep. Towards midnight, the discreet Cadiga listened from a balcony of a window that looked into the garden: Hussein Baba, the renegado, was already below, and gave the appointed signal. The duenna fastened the end of a ladder of ropes to the balcony, lowered it into the garden, and descended. The two eldest princesses followed her with beating hearts; but when it came to the turn of the youngest princess. Zorahayda, she hesitated and trembled. Several times she ventured a delicate little foot upon the ladder, and as often drew it back, while her poor little heart fluttered more and more the longer she delayed. She cast a wistful look back into the silken chamber-she had lived in it, to be sure, like a bird in a cage; but within it she was secure. Who could tell what dangers might beset her, should she flutter forth into the wide world? Now she bethought her of her gallant Christian lover, and her little foot was instantly upon the ladder; and anon she thought of her father, and shrank back. But fruitless is the attempt to describe the conflict in the bosom of one so young and tender, and loving, but so timid, and so ignorant of the world. In vain her sisters implored, the duenna scolded, and the renegado blasphemed beneath the balcony; the gentle little Moorish maid stood doubting and wavering on the verge of elopement—tempted by the sweetness of its sin, but terrified at its perils. Every moment increased the danger of discovery. A distant tramp was heard. 'The patrols are walking the rounds,' cried the renegado; 'if we linger, we perish. Princess, descend instantly, or we leave you.' Zorahayda was for a moment in fearful agitation; then loosening the ladder of ropes, with desperate resolution, she flung it from the balcony. 'It is decided!' cried she: flight is now out of my power! Allah guide and bless ye, my dear sisters!' The two eldest princesses were shocked at the thoughts of leaving her behind, and would fain have lingered, but the patrol was advancing, the renegado was furious, and they were hurried away to the subterraneous passage."

The flight is finely described; but we can only give its conclusion.

"In our hurry to make good the escape of the princesses across the river, and up the mountains, we forgot to mention the fate of the discreet Cadiga. She had clung like a cat to Hussein Baba in the scamper across the Vega, screaming at every bound, and drawing many an oath from the whiskered renegado; but when he prepared to plunge his steed into the river, her terror knew no bounds. 'Grasp me not so tightly,' cried Hussein Baba; ' hold on by my belt, and fear nothing.' She held firmly with both hands by the leathern belt that girded the broad-backed renegado; but when he halted with the cavaliers to take breath on the mountain summit, the duenna was no longer to be seen. 'What has become of Cadiga?' cried the princesses in alarm. 'Allah alone knows!' replied the renegado; 'my belt came loose when in the midst of the river, and Cadiga was swept with it down the stream. The will of Allah be done! but it was an embroidered belt, and of great price. There was no time to waste in idle regrets; yet bitterly did the princesses bewail the loss of their discreet counsellor. That excellent old the stream, brought her to land, and was not a little astonished at his miraculous draught. What further became of the discreet Cadiga, the legend does not mention; certain it is that she evinced her discretion in never venturing within the reach of Mohamed the Left-handed. Almost as little is known of the conduct of that sagacious monarch when he discovered the escape of his daughters, and the deceit practised upon him by the most faithful of servants. was the only instance in which he had called in the aid of counsel, and he was never afterwards known to be guilty of a similar weakness. took good care, however, to guard his remaining daughter, who had no disposition to elope; it is thought, indeed, that she secretly repented having remained behind. Now and then she was seen leaning on the battlements of the tower, and looking mournfully towards the mountains in the direction of Cordova; and sometimes the notes of her lute were heard accompanying plaintive ditties, in which she was said to lament the loss of her sisters and her lover, and to bewail her solitary life. She died young, and, according to popular rumour, was buried in a vault beneath the tower; and her untimely fate has given rise to more than one traditionary fable."

We have no space this week to enter into the beautiful descriptions of the scenery and the peasantry which in these pages bring Spain so very vividly before us; but we must find room for one or two detached remarks, which have pleased us infinitely. "I have remarked, that the stories of treasure buried by the Moors are most current among the poorest people. It is thus kind Nature consoles with shadows for the lack of substantials. The thirsty man dreams of fountains and running streams, the hungry man of ideal banquets, and the poor man of heaps of hidden gold-nothing is certainly more magnificent than the imagination of a beggar."

"The more proudly a mansion has been tenanted in the day of its prosperity, the humbler are its inhabitants in the day of its decline; and the palace of the king ends in being the nestling-place of the beggar.

An Andalusian Sabre .- " He carries it always about with him, as a child does its doll, calls it his Santa Theresa, and says, that when he draws it, 'Tembla la tierra'—the earth trembles."

Before our next, this delightful publication will be in a thousand hands, and may then be better appreciated than it can be by our extracts, and the very favourable opinion we must express of its merits, ere it has yet seen the common light.

The Maid of Elvar: a Poem, in Twelve Parts. By Allan Cunningham. Pp. 214. London, 1832. Edward Moxon.

THOUGH reminding us strongly of the old poetical Romaunt, in construction, in story, and in imagery, this production, by Allan Cunningham, is at least a novelty for the present day. The general term of rustic epic, might, perhaps, be the most applicable, for its chief force lies in the description of rural affairs and scenery; and in many places, Tusser's Hundred Points of Good Husbandry are not more accurate than our author's descriptions. The tale itself is simple enough. The Maid of Elvar, to escape from Sir Ralph Latoun,—a rough and bold English baron, who is foiled in an attempt to conquer Nithsdale, by Eustace Græme,—assumes the guise of a lowly maiden, and seeks who was drawing his nets some distance down | refuge in the home of old Miles Græme, the father of Eustace, and in the circumstances of a substantial farmer. Here she makes conquest of the heart of the young peasant, minstrel, and here, as she had previously done, in her own character of heiress of Elvar, at a competition in song, where Eustace won the chaplet. During her abode with Miles, she witnesses the humble country life painted by the poet; but being discovered on the eve of her nuptials, is forcibly carried off by Latoun, pursued by her lover and his friends. They cross the Solway, and Sybil (so is she named) is rescued from her captivity by Eustace, who slays his rival. The long-lost father of the maid appears, and forbids her marriage with a churl; but Miles Græme turns out to be his ancient companion in arms, Lord Herries, -forfeited and proscribed in one of the feuds of the age, and the whole ends happily.

Such is an outline of the twelve books of a legend laid in the age of Mary Queen of Scots, when, as the hard says-

"Chief drew his sword on chief;
Religion, with her relique and her brand,
Made strife between our bosom-bones, and grief
And lawless joy abounded in the land;
Our glass of glory sank nigh its last annd.
Rank with its treason, prienthood, with its craft,
Turned Sociland's war-lance to a willow wand;
Knee-deep in Tweed stood England with her shaft, of whiles she mensed war, and whiles in sorm niles she menaced war, and whiles in scorn she laught."

In the midst, however, of these miserable scenes, Beauty not only sat on the Scottish throne, but, according to Cunningham, as well as to the historians who have given us the lovely portraits of Mary's attendants, adorned the land throughout. He thus presents his heroine.

"Fair Sybil comes: the flowers which scent her feet Bloom for her sake alone: the polished shells Raise as she touches them a sound as sweet And musical as the breeze breathed on bells: Her hand waves love, and her dark eyes rain spells; Her mouth, men might mistake it for the rose, Whose opening lips afar the wild bee smells; Her hair down gushing in an armful flows, And floods her ivory neck, and glitters as she goes."

The state of the country and the people is described in a strain not unworthy of this personal sketch.

Much mirth was theirs—war was no wonder then; Dread fied with danger, and the cottage cocks, The shepherd's war-pipe, called the sons of men When morning's wheel threw bright dew from its when mornings wheel threw bight dew spokes,

To pastures green to lead again their flocks;
The horn of harvest followed with its call;
Fast moved the sickle, and swift rose the shocks
Behind the respers like a golden wall.
Gravely the farmer smiled, by turns approving all.

The ripe corn waved in lone Dalgonar glen, That, with its bosom basking in the sun, Lies like a bird; the hum of working men Joins with the sound of streams that southward run. Joins with the sound of streams that southward ru With fragrant holms atween, then mix in one Beside a church, and round two ancient towers Form a deep fosse. Here sire is heired by son, And war comes never; ancie-deep in flowers In summer walk its dames among the sunny bowers."

We must quote another portion or two in which the author indulges in his love of pastoral images. " The sun

"The sun
Behind the mountain's summit slowly sank:
Crows came in clouds down from the moorlands dun,
And darkened all the pine-trees, rank on rank;
The homeward mich-cows at the fountains drank;
Swains dropt the sickle, hinds unloosed the car,
The twlo hares sported on the clover-bank,
And with the shepherd o'er the upland far,
Came out the round pale moon, and star succeeding star. Star followed star, though yet day's golden light Upon the hills and headlands faintly streamed; To their own pine the twin-doves took their flight, From crag and cliff the clamorous seamews scream in glade and glen the cottens windows cleaned.

rrom crag and cliff the clamorous sea-mews screamed, in glade and glen the cottage windows gleamed, Larks left the cloud, for flight the gray owl sat, The founts and lakes up silver radiance steamed, Winging his twilight journey hummed the gnat, The drowy beetle deoned, and skinmed the wavering bat."

Again :-

" Morn came, and with the morn Of harvest horns no more was heard the sound; Of harvest horns no more was neard the sound;
No more the resp-hook 'neath the ripened corn
Moved, while the merry song rung round and round;
The harquebus' shot, the hallooing to the hound,
The shepherd's whistle and the thrasher's flall,
All these, and other gentler sounds abound;
The ice fringed brook scarce singing down the dale—
The gentle maldens sigh at some and shepherd's tale.

The golden hours of the glad year are gone.
The forest's fragrant plumes are plucked; how short,
And stormy too, the journey of the sun!
The vessel gladly makes her destined port,
The hares unto the green kale-yards resort,
The plough lies idle in the half-drawn furrow,
The barnman's chaff comes down like snow, his sport
The hunter takes, the rabbit keeps his burrow, and old men shake their locks and sigh, 'Tis winter thorough! thorough!

That year stern Winter trod on Autumn's heel, Snow wrapt the mountains, and the Frost came next, And laid his cold hand on the miller's wheel, And nearly stayed it.

There is great truth and merit in these passages, which we have selected as fine specimens of one of the author's best qualities; but we must shew that he is not confined to this limit. Listen to his opinions of the race to which himself belongs :

" Bards' scorn cuts sharper than a two-edged sword, "Bards' scorn cuts sharper than a two-edged sword,
Their wit's more dangerous than a flying arrow,
Their taunt taints blood as doth the hangman's cord.
O, how the pinched penurious soul they harrow,
And pour their liquid hell-fire through his marrow!
But for heroic souls the immortals will
A blessing twice, as they have blessed the Yarrow.
More bright than all earth's rivers runs the rill,
And conscious winds its way in fame by holm and hill."

True gentle love is like the summer dew,
Which falls around when all is still and hush,
And falls unseen until its bright drops strew
With odours, herb and flower, and bank and bush.
O, love! when womanhood is in the flush,
And man's a young and an unspotted thing:
His first breathed word, and her half-conscious blush, Are fair as light in heaven, or flowers in spring—
The first hour of true love is worth our worshipping."

Honest Allan seems to have a consummate dread of any fiercer flame, and thus speaks of such a visitation, and of those on whom it may chance to lighten :-

" Fools of the flock. On whom love like the tiger gives one bound, And then the heart is rent—a thunder-stroke That makes men dust before they hear the sound, A shaft that leaves dark venom in the wound, A frost that all the buds of manhood nips, A sea of passion in which true love's drowned, A demon attending virtua in his manner. A demon strangling virtue in his grips, A day when reason's sun is quenched in dread eclipse." This "grips" does not please us so much as another bold metaphor, where the heroine is offended, and " Her glowing neck seemed ivory wet with wine!" But we leave these delicate topics for an extract which describes a curious antique dance: it follows-

"And she hath called to mind an interlude, "And she hath called to mind an interlude,
Or rustic play, where Waste makes war on Thrift.
Forth to the floor there steps a peasant shrewd,
Who of each national drollery knows the drift;
With lighted torch he sings and dances swift.
Soon by his side a maiden o'er the floor
Moves grave, and scarce her foot at first can lift;
She bears a distaff in her hand, and sure
Draws out the thrifty thread, and sings a song demure.
Thyld dances as should not such that the strain.

Draws out the thritty thread, and ange a song demure. Thrift dances as she sings, and all her strain Is of domestic gladness, fire-side bliss, And household rule; not thought loose, light, or vain, Stains her pure vision of meek happiness; Religion's comforts, wedlock's holy kils, The white web bleached by maiden's whiter hand, The lisping children in their homespun dress, The wealth which gathers' neath Thrift's magic wand, The fame of a chaste life amid a virtuous land.

I'ne fame of a chaste life amid a virtuous land.

Waste danced, and sang a free strain and a light,
Of young Joy's foot, which gaily out can measure
Life's weary way; of Love, whose fingers white Strew all youth's way with fresh flowers plucked from pleasure;
And Laughter loud, who never yet found leisure
To pause and think; and Merriment, who coins
The tears of sadness into current treasure;
And Wantonness, his hot lips moist with wines,
And Pleasure ever gay, with loose ungirded loins.
They danced with many an antique truch and turn.

They denced with many an antique touch and turn, And like wild levin fisshed and flew about—

Waste with his torch strove aye the roke to burn,
While Thrift, as nimble as the starting trout,
When slacks the sharp shower and the sun shines out,
Turned, wheeled, and flew; and there rose such a clamour.

clamour—
' O, well done, Thrift!' the hoary-headed shout;
While young men's tongues rung sharp as a steel hammer—

' Waste, well done, Waste! now nought will save the roke but glamour.'"

We would recommend this subject to one of our artists-it would make an excellent picture. The other best descriptions in the volume are of a kirn or harvest-home, and of Hallow-The superstitions of the latter we can hardly relish after Burns: from the former, which is too long for selection, we copy the verses relative to the supper-meal after the dance

"The barn has mirth, so has the farmer's hall—
The song and jest are held in full esteem;
For there a motley and a mirthsome throng
Good liquor better far than dancing deem,
And social talk than either; o'er the steam
Of fragrant bowls they scatter sayings sage,
And from the milk of humour skim the cream;
Age claps his hands to youth, and youth to age,
And drouth grows dryer still the more they it assuage.

And drouth grows dryer still the more they it assuage.

Than drink, more solid dainties load the board—
The damasked haggis large and fragrant reeking.
Black luscious puddings, unctuous collops scored,
Potatoes mashed in milk and butter smeeking,
A singed sheep's head that puts a man past speaking,
With feet, as with a garland garnished round,
And ale that by the hearth-fire long lay beeking,
Which made the corks up to the rafters bound;
With bracksha, best of food on moor or mountain found.

Ith orackens, nest of food on moor or mountain found.
The savour of the supper seemed to find
Its way among the dancers—lighter smote
Their feet upon the floor, and in the wind
The fiddler felt the fragrance coming hot,
His good bow-hand drew out a feeble note;
A voice cried loud, 'Cease mirth, now carle and kim-

mer.—
Music, I say, keeps naething in her pot,
No living soul has ever seen it simmer:
Come, supper loads the board, ale foams aboon the timmer.'"

We cannot predicate how Southron readers may relish this theme; perhaps, no better than some of the dishes it mentions; but we will say that it is very characteristic, notwithstanding any objection which may be made to it. It fairly exhibits, indeed, the experimentum crucis by which the work will probably be tried; especially out of Scotland, where it is certain, from the quaintness and provinciality of much of the phraseology, it must be difficult even to understand the writer's meaning, and still more so to appreciate the force lurking under a peculiar word or epithet. This may be particularly observed where the poet attempts the familiar and ludicrous. Ex. gr. the concluding stanza of the following: - or the following:

"Eastward she looked, then from her foot took she Her shoe and launched it on the shuddering wave; Like to a beaten beby moaned the sea—
The heaven above in darkness matched the grave; First rose a mist, the mist a whirlwind clave, Then from the middle darkness started out A goodly shallop, manned and masted brave; On board stept the enchantress fell and stout, On man, on beast and bird, she dealt her spells about.

On man, on beast and bird, she dealt her spells about. The first spell fell on fish: in streams and lakes The trout and salmon lay, and gasped for life. The second fell on beasts; cows at the stake, And sheep on moorlands, where the goroock's rife, Moaned like things lying 'neath the butcher's knife. The third spell fell on man; a bridegroom blithe Fled forth the chamber from his bedded wife: A matran with a visage like a scythe, Cried, 'Sirs! I mind him weel, his name was Hugh Forswithe. sythe.

sytne.

His mother's name was Girzie Kingan, kin
To unwhile Kingans of the Kittle-naket;
And his wife also was a buirn of sin,
A giggling hemple, glib of tongue and glaiket;
Before she was a wedded dame she traiket
With young Barcloye. See! darker far than pitch,
Yon black cloud pours, like pouring from a bucket—
Her grandame too—ye mind her weel—a witch,
As sure as ever rode through Sanquhar on a switch."

Without a glossary, umwhile, kittle-naket. hempie, glaiket, traiket, &c. &c. will, we fancy, perplex the Cockney and general English readers as much as a rebus or conundrum in a proofs.

lady's magazine. But we rather think that in some cases Mr. Cunningham would find it difficult to reconcile his own countrymen to the use and meaning of some of his expressions for instance, and we mark them in italics :

"Maidens and youths in many a lusty throng." p. 24.
"But one by one into hell's scorching brine." p. 50.
"And threw the frying brine in furrows from each aide."

p. 56.
"Proud waxed her heart, she carried grew, and vain." p. 75.
She listened—all within the house was dushed." p. 177.

The public would not attach the least credit to our Reviews unless we shewed that we could be critical as well as laudatory; and now, having exhibited the beauties, and only five questionable lines of our worthy and estimable poet, we shall take the liberty of improving him for future editions by a few words and examples of another kind.

We consider it a blemish in his performance that he not only introduces a spectre to foretell to Latoun, but fairies to predict to Eustace, and a dream to warn Sybil, what the catastrophe is to be. We also think we have too long a harvest; for the good folks are always shearing, alias reaping, and that bees are brought in too frequently: a hum now and then does very well, but there may be too much humming; and the phrases fain, lovesome, gladsome, heartsome, strook, sennel, with many others of the same genus, occur too often for a composition of the nineteenth century, though referring to the sixteenth. To be further spiteful, the mixture of Scots and English is a facility, but a blemish: for example, home and hame, &c. employed indiscriminately as the rhyme may require, though convenient to a writer, can scarcely be reconciled to correctness by a reader. We shall add to these strictures some brief instances of the imperfect, or grotesque.

"Gray Miles for gladness was nigh fit to flee [fly]." p. 15.

"He (Latoun) snatched in haste his helmet and his spear, Leaped in his selle, and loudly did he hollo— 'Those who would fain the minstrels' harpings hear, Mount, and my banner o'er the Border follow; I'll tame these ballad-bards, by Chaucer and Apollo!" I'll tame these ballad-bards, by Chaucer and Apollo!" "
Loud laughed the rider: 'Thou the minstrel's skill
Lovest much, I hear; now by my hope of spurs,
I'd leifer hear the fox howl on the hill,
The croak of toads, the cry of beaten curs,
Eat thistle-heads, dine on unbuttered burs.'
He said, he bowed, he gave his horse the rein,
And pricking freely o'er the grassy furs,
He looked on no one, nor of speech seemed fain—
He stopt where minstrels stood, and tents filled all the plain.

plain.

And leaping from his wearied courser, said,

'A stranger I to mark your minatrel sleight
Am come, and in this masquing trim arrayed
I wish to bide; perchance, ere fall of night,
My hand may give some measure of its might.
A warrior I less skilled in harps than swords,
Yet led here by the poet's blessed light,
I fain would bide.' A minstrel all his chords Touched, saying, 'Sir, abide;' nor waiting other words."

"Sing one by one—come carp, my minstrels, carp:
Though come from Caithness, Bellenden, or Belvar,
Whoso sings sweetest to the lute or harp,
Be he knight, squire, or shepherd, ditcher, delver,
His is this golden gift from our Fair Maid of Elvar."

"Fair Sybil shone
Like to a new-found star, all lovely and alone.
He knelt, and as he knelt she turued away,
And like a sunbeam down the vale she flew."

The rain comes plunging, rooks in clamorous march Sail with the storm."

'O, here,' he grouned, 'from eighty to eighteen l've flahed."

Which last we declare to be a bull, and utterly reversing the order of nature, which ordains a man, it may be, to fish from eighteen to eighty, but never contrariwise!

Now to conclude and make an end: all we have blamed in our worthy friend are but atoms when put into the balance against his poetical fancy and good feelings; of which the close of his volume is one of the most interesting

"My song is ended: may my country see
Order and beauty in my rude design:—
My song is ended; I have poured it free:
May they who read it deem its roughest line
Tastes of fresh nature, like well-flavoured wine.
My song is ended: it was long to me
As light to morn—as morn to Solway brine—
As showers to corn—as blossom to the bee;
And dearer, since, dear wife, 'twas pleasant unto thee." From which last line we perceive there is a considerable difference between the poets, Lord Byron and Allan Cunningham.

Prometheus Bound: a Tragedy. Translated from the Greek of Æschylus, into English Verse, by T. Medwin, Esq. author of "the Conversations of Lord Byron." 8vo. pp. 74. London, 1832. Pickering.

ÆSCHYLUS is the Shakespeare of antiquity. the founder of immortal tragedy, and the unrivalled monarch of the sublime and terrific in poetical enchantment. From him, it has been sprung completely armed, like Pallas from the head of Jupiter. The cothurnus of Æschylus has, as it were, an iron weight: gigantic figures stalk alone before our eyes." To this we may venture to add, that the individual mind of the poet lives, moves, and breathes, with noble energy, through all his works. He was a patriotic lover of Athenian liberty; and in the godlike arrogance of Prometheus we can trace his own high nature. He was a warrior who had fought magnanimously in the battles of Marathon and Salamis; and who does not perceive shadows of his martial character reflected vividly in the scenic grandeur of the "Seven before Thebes?"

The presumption of modern literature is prone to speak lightly of "the infancy of the dramatic art:" but such an infancy as Æschylus enjoyed was that of "a Hercules who strangled serpents in his cradle." In order, however, fully to appreciate his terrible genius, we must disrobe the mind of its sympathy with existing time, and summon before us the mythological shapes, phantoms, and deities, which crowded the theology of ancient Greece; for among this gorgeous and mystic assembly did the spirit of tragedy delight to dwell. Yet, after all our exertion to waft the soul back to the associations of antiquity, how dim and devoid of sympathy is our view of the Grecian drama, compared to what was presented to the Greeks themselves! A theatre of colossal extent, with the blue heaven gleaming over the vast multitude of spectators; an audience both physically and intellectually capable of the most exquisite excitement; a language of omnipotent grace, sweetness, fulness, and pathos; a recitation faultlessly beautiful in tone and rhythm; together with a race of actors who stalked the stage in form and feature like animated statues :surely the tragedies of the ancient world must have surpassed in glorious effect any thing which a modern representation can accomplish. But we must unwillingly detach ourselves from this subject, and approach the vivid translation with which Capt. Medwin has enriched our literature.

Those who enjoy the privilege of reading Æschylus require not to be told, that of all the classical tragedians, he is, for many reasons, the most obscure; and consequently the translator of his works must triumph nobly who overcomes the difficulties which throng his pages. Most sincerely can we say, that in no translation which we have yet perused have the text and meaning of Æschylus been so correctly exhibited, and eloquently rendered, as they are by Capt. Medwin. He has brought to his task the prime qualifications of a poetical translator, viz. an admirable acquaintance with the language, style, and sentiments of his author, a noble mastery over his own tongue, a thrilling sense of the beautiful and sublime, together with a thorough sympathy with the freshness and glory of the classical drama. The limits of our review debar us from a full analysis of Capt. Medwin's work; but we must in fairness give a specimen of his text, and a few quotations from his best passages.

> I dide althe, sal raximates rocal, ASTALLAS EL ANYAI, ASTALAS EL XULLATAS ἀνήριθμον γέλασμα, κ. τ. λ.

In his version of the above passage, the admired phrase, ἀνήριθμον γίλασμα, is thus rendered by a fine periphrasis:

"Best and divinest air! ye swift-winged winds! Ye river-springs! and ocean-billows! ye That counties in your multitudes lauch out With long loud peals, exulting to be free!"

In modern Greek, γίλασμα is excessive laughter; and Capt. Medwin, with much reason, thinks that, by his translation, the billowy freedom of the sea is in good contrast with the fettered doom of Prometheus. Perhaps the ἀνήριθμον might be paralleled by the Shake-spearian word "multitudinous."

" The multitudinous sea incarnadine."

φίς σως άχαρις, ώ φίλος, si-Sí, Sou Tis adrá;

Instead of mingling these lines with the preceding antistrophe, which Blomfield, in accordance with Burney's arrangement, has done, Medwin has made them the commencement of an epode, and thereby avoided the unnatural division of the i from the mi in i'mi.

Αξεις δ ύξριστην ποταμόν, ου ψευδώνυμον-

Pages have been dedicated to a discussion of the vegative, and, after all, done nothing more than render the "darkness visible" more perplexing and profound. Blomfield says, " eligat sibi lector, pensatis que pro suo quisque flu-mine scripsit." Nothing can be more urbane! Schutz, the Falstaff of critics, wisely remarks, after considerable proxing, " quemnam fluvium eo nomine designaverit poëta, conjecturá vix exputari potest, nedum certo definiri." Medwin has, we think almost incontestably, proved, by a remarkable passage from the "Periplus" of Hanno (vide Cory's "Ancient Fragments"+), that the river alluded to by Prometheus is the Lixus, derived from Liyyw or Ligo.

We promised to gratify the reader with a specimen of the translation: we shall select a lyrical and a blank verse specimen, and leave them to their own certain triumph over his heart.

" Chorus.

"Chorus.

"Chorus.

"To wet hee and for thy fate;
And from my pity-streaming eyes,
To wet my cheek with an exhaustless river,
Do fountain-springs of tears arise,
And flow, and still flow on for ever.
The sovereign will decreed for thee
An evil lot, in evil hour,
A most funereal destiny;
And in the greatness of his power
Made gods, whom he supplanted, feel
The keen edge of his tyrant steel.
I mourn for thee, and for thy fate,
Thou victim of immortal hate! Thou victim of immortal hate!

* By the way, it is highly interesting to find how the genius of poetry thinks and feels alike in all ages. In many passages of Æschylus, for instance, (to the utter confusion of detectors of plagfarism,) there are the same thoughts, and, exteris paribus, the exact nodes of expression to convey them, which are to be found in Shakespeare. Milton was evidently deeply imbued with the poetry of Æschylus: some of his finest lines in the Samson Agomistes, the Comus, and the Paradise Lost, are reflected from similar ones in the Prometheus and Agamemono.

† Reviewed, with the paregyric so justly merited, in the L. G. No. 795.

And with its echoes, all the region round In harrowing accents tells thy tale, Joins in a sadly lengthened wall, Sets up a doleful sound. With one accord they weep for thee And the gone glories of thy state: Of thee and thine, proud, old, and great, They mourn the destiny; Thee, all the mortal race, who dwell In Asia's venerable seat. In Asia's venerable seat. Lament, and thou dost merit well
The voice of wail they all repeat.
They mourn for thee, and for thy fate,
Thou victim of immortal hate!

Antistrophe,
Thee mourn the dwellers of the Colchian land,
The fearless virgins who delight
To mingle in the din of fight,
And thee, the Scythian band;
Thee, too, Arabia's flower and pride,
A bold and hard; mountain race,
Who in their fortress at the base who in their fortires at the base Of Caucasus abide, And poise the spear, the javelin shake, Through all the tract of mountains near The shores of the Merotic lake, Lament—their voice of wall I hear: They mourn for thee, and for thy fate, Thou victim of immortal hate!

Epide.
Save one, the Titan Atlas, whom with thes Save one, the Titan Atlas, whom with the Shall I compare in misery,
Or match in fate?
He, racked with never-ending pains,
And bound in adamantine chains,
Earth and the vault of heaven sustains.
An unimaginable weight.
The surge's of the ocean,
In undulating motion,
To thy perpetual wall accordance keep;
Responsive waits the lowest deep,
And in a lower deep unfathomable,
Beneath the seas, beneath earth's seats. Reneath the seas, beneath earth's seats, Through all its black abysses, Hell, With many a voice, thy moan repeats: Rivers, and all the fountains as they flow, In murmurs tell their woe:
They mourn for thee, and for thy fate,
Thou victim of immortal hate!"

Our second quotation is the concluding apostrophe of the sublime and unappalled Prometheus, amid the turmoil of the elements.

Chorus.

"It comes! the earth
Trembles, and shakes, and totters, as convulsed
With throes of agony! the sullen roar
Of thunder after thunder howls around
In echoes deep, and deepening, flash on flash,
Each fiercer than the last, glares the forked lightning: Each nercer una the sate, gaines the toract lighted.
The hurricane's wings upbear the volumed dust,
In eddying columns whirled; together rush
From every quarter of the heavens, and meet
In ruinous assault the rebel winds,
Making wild anarchy; sky and sea are mingling!
This chaos of all nature has been sent This chaok of all nature has been sen!
To shake my soul. Rage on, ye elements!
Mother of all my adoration, Earth!
Ether! who pourest the effluence of light
Round all things, thou who penetratest all things,
Look on my injuries—see what I suffer!"

We have nothing to add but our fervent admiration of Capt. Medwin's noble effort, and to express a hope that it will meet with a generous welcome, so as to encourage him to proceed in his high course, from all who can feel the magnificent poetry of Æschylus, or who understand how "the tragedy of the ancients leads us, even in the course of the representation, to the most elevated reflections on our existence, and those mysteries which can never wholly be explained."

Mrs. Trollope's Domestic Manners of the Americans.

[Second notice: conclusion.]

HAVING been interrupted in the midst of our extracts, we recommence as we left off, with examples of the author's style in sketching national manners.

A Day in a Boarding-house. - " She must rise exactly in time to reach the boarding-table at the hour appointed for breakfast, or she will get a stiff bow from the lady president, cold coffee, and no egg. I have been sometimes greatly amused upon these occasions by watching a little scene in which the by-play had much more meaning than the words uttered. The fasting, but tardy lady, looks round the table, and having ascertained that there was no egg left, says distinctly, 'I will take an egg if you please.' But as this is addressed to no one in particular, no one in particular answers it, unless it happen that her husband is at table before her, and then he says, 'There are no eggs, my dear.' Whereupon the lady president evidently cannot hear, and the greedy culprit who has swallowed two eggs (for there are always as many eggs as noses) looks pretty con-siderably afraid of being found out. The breakfast proceeds in sombre silence, save that sometimes a parrot, and sometimes a canary-bird, ventures to utter a timid note. When it is finished, the gentlemen hurry to their occu-pations, and the quiet ladies mount the stairs, some to the first, some to the second, and some to the third stories, in an inverse proportion to the number of dollars paid, and ensconce themselves in their respective chambers. As to what they do there it is not very easy to say; but I believe they clear-starch a little, and iron a little, and sit in a rocking-chair, and sew a great deal. I always observed that the ladies who hourded wore more elaborately worked collars and petticoats than any one else. The plough is hardly a more blessed instrument in America than the needle. How could they live without it? But time and the needle wear through the longest morning, and happily the American morning is not very long, even though they breakfast at eight. It is generally about two o'clock that the boarding gentlemen meet the boarding ladies at dinner. Little is spoken, except a whisper between the married pairs. Sometimes a sulky bottle of wine flanks the plate of one or two individuals; but it adds nothing to the mirth of the meeting, and seldom more than one glass to the good cheer of the owners. It is not then, and it is not there, that the gentlemen of the Union drink. Soon, very soon, the silent meal is done; and then, if you mount the stairs after them, you will find from the doors of the more affectionate and indulgent wives, a smell of cigars steam forth, which plainly indicates the felicity of the couple within. If the gentleman be a very polite husband, he will, as soon as he has done smoking and drinking his toddy, offer his arm to his wife, as far as the corner of the street, where his store or his office is situated, and there he will leave her to turn which way she likes. As this is the hour for being full dressed, of course she turns the way she can be most seen. Perhaps she pays a few visits; perhaps she goes to chapel; or, perhaps, she enters some store where her husband deals, and ventures to order a few notions; and then she goes home againno, not home - I will not give that name to a boarding-house, but she re-enters the cold, heartless atmosphere in which she dwells, where hospitality can never enter, and where interest takes the management instead of affection. At tea they all meet again, and a little trickery is perceptible to a nice observer in the manner of partaking the pound-cake, &c. After this, those who are happy enough to have engagements, hasten to keep them; those who have not, either mount again to the solitude of their chamber, or, what appeared to me much worse, remain in the common sitting-room, in a society cemented by no tie, endeared by no connexion, which choice did not bring together, and which the slightest motive would break asunder. I remarked that the gentlemen were generally obliged to go out every evening on business, and, I confess, the arrangement did not sur-|fore could feel no doubt of their being consiprise me."

* Schlegel.

American Cookery ._. "The ordinary mode of living is abundant, but not delicate. Thev consume an extraordinary quantity of bacon. Ham and beef-steaks appear morning, noon, and night. In eating, they mix things toge-ther with the strangest incongruity imaginable. I have seen eggs and oysters eaten together, the sempiternal ham with apple-sauce, beefsteak with stewed peaches, and salt fish with onions. The bread is every where excellent, but they rarely enjoy it themselves, as they insist upon eating horrible half-baked hot rolls both morning and evening. The butter is tolerable; but they have seldom such cream as every little dairy produces in England; in fact, the cows are very roughly kept, compared with ours. Common vegetables are abundant and very fine. I never saw sea-cale or cauliflowers: and either from the want of summer rain, or the want of care, the harvest of green vege-tables is much sooner over than with us. They eat the Indian corn in a great variety of forms sometimes it is dressed green, and eaten like peas; sometimes it is broken to pieces when dry, boiled plain, and brought to table like rice—this dish is called hominy. The flour of it is made into at least a dozen different sorts of cakes; but in my opinion all bad. This flour, mixed in the proportion of one-third with fine wheat, makes by far the best bread I ever tasted. I never saw turbot, salmon, or fresh cod; but the rock and shad are excellent. There is a great want of skill in the composition of sauces, not only with fish, but with every thing. They use very few made-dishes, and I never saw any that would be approved by our savans. They have an excellent wild duck, called the canvass back, which, if delicately served, would surpass the black cock; but the game is very inferior to ours—they have no hares, and I never saw a pheasant. They seldom indulge in second courses, with all their ingenious temptations to the eating a second dinner; but almost every table has its dessert (invariably pronounced desart), which is placed on the table before the cloth is removed. and consists of pastry, preserved fruits, and creams. They are 'extravagantly fond,' to use their own phrase, of puddings, pies, and all kinds of 'sweets,' particularly the ladies; but are by no means such connoisseurs in soups and ragoûts as the gastronomes of Europe. Almost every one drinks water at table; and, by a strange contradiction, in the country where hard drinking is more prevalent than in any other, there is less wine taken at dinner: ladies rarely exceed one glass, and the great majority of females never take any. In fact, the hard drinking, so universally acknowledged, does not take place at jovial dinners, but, to speak plain English, in solitary dram-drinking. Coffee is not served immediately after dinner, but makes part of the serious matter of tea-drinking, which comes some hours later."

Distinction of Rank .- " I was really astonished at the coup d'eil on entering, for I saw a large room filled with extremely well-dressed company, among whom were many very beautiful girls. The gentlemen also were exceed-ingly smart; but I had not yet been long enough in Western America not to feel startled at recognising in almost every full-dressed beau that passed me, the master or shopman that I had been used to see behind the counter, or lolling at the door of every shop in the city. The fairest and finest belies smiled and smirked on them with as much zeal and satisfaction as I ever saw bestowed on an eldest son, and I theredered as of the highest rank. Yet it must not be supposed that there is no distinction of classes: at this same ball I was looking among the many very beautiful girls I saw there for one more beautiful still, with whose lovely face I had been particularly struck at the school examination I have mentioned. I could not find her, and asked a gentleman why the beautiful Miss C. was not there. 'You do not yet understand our aristocracy,' he replied; 'the family of Miss C. are mechanics.' 'But the family of Miss C. are mechanics.' 'But the young lady has been educated at the same school as these whom I see here, and I know her brother has a shop in the town, quite as large, and apparently as prosperous, as those belonging to any of these young men. What is the difference?' 'He is a mechanic; he assists in difference?' making the articles he sells; the others call themselves merchants.' The dancing was not quite like, yet not very unlike, what we see at an assize or race-ball in a country town. They call their dances cotillons instead of quadrilles, and the figures are called from the orchestra in English, which has a very ludicrous effect on European ears. The arrangements for the supper were very singular, but eminently characteristic of the country. The gentlemen had a splendid entertainment spread for them in another large room of the hotel, while the poor ladies had each a plate put into their hands, as they pensively promenaded the ball-room during their absence; and shortly afterwards servants appeared, bearing trays of sweet-meats, cakes, and creams. The fair creatures then sat down on a row of chairs placed round the walls, and each making a table of her knees, began eating her sweet, but sad and sulky repast. The effect was extremely comic; their gala dresses and the decorated room forming a contrast the most unaccountable with their uncomfortable and forlorn condition. This arrangement was owing neither to economy nor want of a room large enough to accommodate the whole party, but purely because the gentlemen liked it better. This was the answer given me, when my curio-sity tempted me to ask why the ladies and gentlemen did not sup together: and this was the answer repeated to me afterwards by a variety of people to whom I put the same question."

We will not enter into the details of religious fanaticism described by Mrs. Trollope; but quote the following instance for the sake of drawing the attention of the American press to the statement, either for its corroboration or denial, as we can scarcely credit so monstrous an example of sectarian tyranny.

" I had the following anecdote from a gentleman perfectly well acquainted with the circumstances. A tailor sold a suit of clothes to a sailor a few moments before he sailed, which was on a Sunday morning. The corporation of New York prosecuted the tailor, and he was convicted, and sentenced to a fine greatly beyond his means to pay. Mr. F., a lawyer of New York, defended him with much eloquence, but in vain. His powerful speech, however, was not without effect, for it raised him such a host of Presbyterian enemies as sufficed to destroy his practice. Nor was this all: his nephew was at the time preparing for the bar. and soon after the above circumstance occurred his certificates were presented, and refused, with this declaration, 'that no man of the name and family of F. should be admitted.' I have met this young man in society; he is a person of very considerable talent, and being thus cruelly robbed of his profession, has become the editor of a newspaper.

there is a great deal more of amusing gossip, and, like all gossip, containing much that is false, and more that is exaggerated. It is, however, a curious circumstance to find our liberals, men or women, who cross the Atlantic to indulge in the blessed spectacle of a perfectly free and happy people, thus returning to publish nothing but complaints and censure. Fearon, Capt. Hall, and now Mrs. Trollope, the friend and companion of the renowned Miss Frances Wright—all, all tell the same story. The imaginations of the spirit-dealer, the tar, and the philosophical lady, are horribly disappointed: America is tried by a standard which does not apply to human nature and human infirmity; and, what between senseless boasting on one hand, and the reaction of ridiculous expectations on the other, it is difficult to obtain a fair glimpse of brother Jonathan and his ways.

Let us conclude: Mrs. Trollope deserves that it should be with a compliment to her talents.

Klosterheim, or the Masque. By the English Opium-Eater. 12mo. pp. 305. Edinburgh, 1832, Blackwood; London, Cadell.

WE regret that we cannot compliment the English Opium-Eater upon this product of his brain, which is redolent of his propensity, and has had a similar effect upon our sensorium. It is a tale of the Thirty Years' War. improbable, dry, and uninteresting. We care for nobody introduced, their escapes or their misfortunes. A few slight historical traits are the only redeeming qualities of the volume.

The Little Girl's own Book. By Mrs. Child. 3d edition. London, 1832. Tegg. WE are well pleased to see this nicely ornamented and nice child's book in a new edition.

The Flowers of Fable, &c. &c. Embellished with 150 Engravings on wood. pp. 352. London, 1832. Vizetelly, Brauston, and Co. ONE of the prettiest and most amusing and instructive publications of this enterprising house, which has done so much to allure the young mind, through the attractions of clever design and admirable engraving, to the pursuit of useful knowledge. As a book to give to children of all ages, we could not point out a more welcome present; and as a production of art, while it has that which must amuse them, it has a great deal to beget the admiration of elder amateurs. The fables—from ancient and modern, foreign and native authors-are judiciously selected; - indeed, the Flowers of Fable is a perfect parterre of beauty and fine odour in every way.

Ricordanza, or Friendship's Memento. 24mo. pp. 133. Birmingham, Wrightson and Webb; London, Hamilton and Adams.

A SELECTION of poetry, neatly got up, to which Mrs. Hemans and L. E. L. contribute a large proportion; —we dare say, without leave or license from either. This is really, we beg the ladies' pardon, to plough for profit with other folks' heifers.

Waverley Novels, Vol. XXXVI. Redgauntlet, Vol. II. Edinburgh, Cadell; London, Whittaker.

A WELL-CONCEIVED frontispiece, with costume and accessories, cleverly delineated by D. O. Hill, and well engraved by A. Fox; together with a capital and characteristic vignette of Peter Peebles by W. Kidd, the engraver We have no room for further extract; but J. Horsburgh, particularly recommend this volume to the regard of the subscribers to the surdity — for the sea is not to be scared, and series of which it forms part.

Van Worrell's Tableau of the Dutch and Flemish Painters of the Old School. pp. 104. London, 1832. Hatchard and Son.

An excellent and most convenient abridgment of what might make a large dictionary. divided into columns, with, 1, the names of the artists in alphabetic order; 2, their bye-names or sobriquets, where they were known by such; 3, places of birth-4, dates; 5, places of death-6, dates; 7, their peculiar styles and studies; and, 8, remarks on their characters and works. This extremely useful and portable volume contains names and information unknown to our most elaborate treatises.

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE have glanced over this novel, but have no room for criticism this week. It belongs to the fashionable class, and is, we have heard, the work of Mrs. Gore.

Histoire de l'Empereur Napoléon, &c. Par L. A. J. Mordacque. 12mo. pp. 401. Londres, de Porquet et Cooper.

EMBELLISHED with a portrait and map, this volume has been compiled for the use of the young and of schools; but the history of Napoleon is far too near our own times, and its motives, events, and results, far too doubtful to admit of its being faithfully applied to the moral instruction of youth. As a brief account of his rise, victories, power, disasters, and fall, the narrative is well enough, and sufficiently favourable to its hero.

New French and English Pronouncing Dictionary, on the basis of Nugent's, &c. By F. C. Meadows, M.A. Glasgow, Griffin and Co.; London, Tegg.

A Dictionary of the French and English Languages. By L. F. Porquet. London, Porquet and Cooper.

THESE are both pocket dictionaries. Of Mr. Meadows' performance, we must say that it does him infinite credit, and is an honour to Glasgow and its university. Ample and able in every respect, the student of the French language and pronunciation can hardly consult a better oracle. M. Porquet's work is also most praiseworthy, especially for its improvement in explaining a multitude of new words which new circumstances have introduced into the French

A Guide to Southampton, Netley Abbey, the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth, Gosport, Winchester, and Basingstoke. By Charles Andrews. CLEAR, concise, and satisfactory.

The Grecian History familiarly put into Verse, for the use of Children. pp. 35. Harvey and

WE are very guarded in expressing our opinion of books for children, for we never saw six in our lives which did not contain something objectionable. The idea of this tiny production is good, and it will serve to fix events and dates in Grecian history on the memories of young and old; but, for the very young, there are other ideas which must puzzle them in their search after truth: ex. gr.

So great these then Darius' host, As might have scared the sea they crost.

Where, for the sake of the familiar rhyme to help the recollection, we have not only an ab- unite the facts pointed out in the sciences of lers which has reached England :-

children do not understand the figure of speech -but also bad grammar, as witness our italics. Still, however, this is a nice little book.

Rodolph, a Dramatic Fragment; and other Poems. By a Minor. Pp. 48. London, Griffiths; Wittenoom and Cremer.

OUR minor poet, having composed this book before he had completed his nineteenth year, affords us a fair specimen of his talent in a single verse, upon "the kiss," in which he tells us he "professedly imitates the style of Mr. Little."

"What's sweeter on earth than a kiss From a maiden's rosy lip? Or what joy more like to bliss Than one long delicious sip?!!"

Tour of a German Prince, &c. Vol. IV. E. Wilson.

WE had intended to conclude our review of this amusing work this week; but a folio will but contain a folio, a sheet will only hold a sheetful; so we must be content with a coninuation in two short paragraphs.

" August 8th. - Canning is dead. A man in the plenitude of his intellectual power, who had but a few weeks ago arrived at the goal of his active life, who had risen to be the ruler of England, and, in that quality, unquestionably the most influential man in Europe; endowed with a spirit of fire that would have guided the reins he held with a mighty hand, and a soul capable of embracing the good of his species from a station more elevated than any to which human ambition could raise him. One shock has overthrown this proud structure of many years. And this high-spirited man was doomed to end his days by a sudden and tragic death, amid fearful sufferings, the victim of a relentless destiny, who steps on with iron foot, treading down all that comes in her way, heedless whether it be the young seedling, the swelling blossom, the lordly tree, or the withering plant, that she crushes. What will be the consequences of his death? Years must elapse before that will be seen: perhaps it will hasten on a conclusion which seems to threaten us on many sides, and to which only a large-minded, liberal, and enlightened statesman, like Canning, were capable of giving unity and a favourable direc-

The Romance of History. England: from the Norman Conquest to the Reformation. By Henry Neele. France: from the Time of Charlemagne to the Reign of Louis XIV. By Leitch Ritchie.

Italy: from the Lombard Epoch to the Seven-teenth Century. By Charles Macfarlane. Spain: from the Time of Roderick to the Seventeenth Century. By M. Trueba. Each 3 vols. Bull.

PRINTED uniformly with the Waverley Novels. and other works which have adopted that neat and convenient size, this edition of the four series of Romances of History, published with so much success at a higher price, will, we think, recommend these productions to a still more extensive circulation. We have expressed our very favourable opinion of them all as they have appeared; and need now only say, that the twelve volumes make a little library of very pleasant reading.

The Golden Farmer, &c. By E. J. London, 1832. J. Ridgway. By E. J. Lance.

A VERY useful pamphlet, being an attempt to geology, chemistry, and botany, with the practical operations of husbandmen. We cannot say that the author was quite equal to such a task; but if his work turns the attention of any farmer to the "golden" advantages to be obtained from the union of science and art, or of practice and theory, it will answer a very valuable purpose. "Gentlemen farmers" are in bad repute among husbandmen, because they trust too much to theory, and by constant experiments become ultimate losers: but the same knowledge as is usually possessed by welleducated men, put into application by practical observers, would not only be advantageous to the agricultural class, but would benefit the country at large, and that upon a scale commensurate only with the magnitude of the obiect.

A Series of Experiments performed for the purpose of shewing that Arteries may be obliterated without Ligature, Compression, or the Knife. By Benjamin Philips. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

WE have perused these experiments with some interest, and object to them as inconclusive. The accidents which appear to have accompanied the introduction of the needles, would in the human body be of the most serious character; nor do the experiments at all satisfy us with regard to the extent of the inflammation which may be anticipated from the proceeding recommended by the author. If, as he states, galvanism is capable, when conducted along the needle, of inducing the formation of a coagulum, such an experiment would certainly be well worth repeating; and, in the present state of the subject, we cannot do better than advise Mr. Philips to continue the prosecution of his researches.

Sermons, originally composed for a Country Congregation. By the Rev. Cornelius Ives. 12mo. pp. 293. Oxford, 1832, Parker: London, Rivingtons.

PLAIN practical sermons, well adapted either for a country congregation or for family reading; the principles sound, and the language good, though unassuming. We could safely recommend them, were not the sanction of the venerable and highly respected Bishop of Durham, under whose auspices they appear, a sufficient guarantee of their value.

Johnson's Dictionary; with Walker's Pronunciation of all the difficult or doubtful Words, &c. A pocket edition, in diamond type. Pp. 234. London, Orr; Tilt; Cowie.

An extremely neat and practically useful volume; so abridged by the application of dots as to afford all the most necessary intelligence in the smallest possible compass.

The Use and Abuse of Grand Juries. Pamphlet. By Peter Laurie, Esq. B.C.L. Smith, Elder, and Co.

A most important inquiry and exposition, into which we shall enter more fully; but in the meantime must recommend to the notice it so generally merits.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

AFRICAN EXPEDITION.

Oun readers will recollect our account of the expedition to explore the interior of Africa, projected by Mr. Coulthurst and his friend Mr. Tyrwhitt. The following letter, from the Gambia, is the first intelligence of the travel-

Feb. 16, 1839.

My dear Sir, - The St. George being ready to sail for Fernando Po to-morrow, before I had an opportunity of ascending this river, I thought I should best fulfil the object in view by availing myself of the opportunity presented me. I am, however, happy to add, that the merchants here are about to despatch a gentleman named Grant from hence, to ascend the Gambia as high as it is navigable for canoes; there to establish a regular communication by Coffila with the nearest point on Joliba. Should we be favoured in our passage down, I shall yet have time to reach Funda before the rains come on in earnest; and this time of the year I shall have the benefit of a south-westerly wind up the rivers in the gulf. I have the honour to be, my dear sir, very truly yours,
C. H. COULTHURST.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENA FOR MAY.

Transit of Mercury over the Sun's Disc. - 4d and 5d _ the very interesting phenomenon will occur of the planet Mercury continuing visible on the solar disc, as a circular black spot, for nearly seven hours - a celestial spectacle not witnessed in this country since the year 1802, and not again occurring visible at Greenwich till the year 1845. The following are the circumstances of the transit, calculated for the meridian of Greenwich.

	Apparent Time.			Mean Solar Time.					me.
				8.				H.	M.	8.
External ingress · · · ·	4	21	2	26	• • • •	٠.	4	20	58	56
Central ingress		21	3	51		٠.		21	Ō	21
Internal ingress		21	5	16		٠.		21	1	46
Middle · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	5	0	27	53		٠.	5	0	24	23
Internal egress · · · · ·		3	5 0	30		٠.		3	47	0
Central egress		3	51	55		٠.		3	48	25
External egress		3	53	20				3	49	50

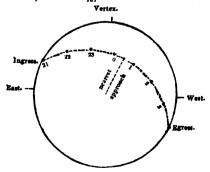

Nearest distance of Mercury to the Sun's centre 8' 4".2; Sun's semidiameter 15' 52".4; Mercury's semidiameter 5".7.

το	tne	tın	ie or i	ine	piac	æ:∣	i
Tr	ue Ti	me.		Mea	n Ti	me.	ı
н.	M.	8.		н.	M.	8.	ı
21	12	17		21	8	48	í
21	15	38		21	12	9
					34	38	ı
					57	7	ı
4	3	58		4	Ö	28
	Тт н. 21 21 0	True Ti H. M. 21 12 21 15 0 38 4 0	True Time. H. M. S. 21 12 17 21 15 38 0 38 8 4 0 37	True Time. H. M. 8. 121 12 17 21 15 38 0 38 8 4 0 37	True Time. Mes H. M. S. H. 21 12 17 21 21 15 38 21 0 38 8 0 4 0 37 3	True Time. Mean Ti H. M. S. H. M. 21 12 17 21 8 21 15 38 21 12 0 38 8 0 34	0 38 8 ····· 0 34 38 4 0 37 ···· 3 57 7

At Berlin, the central ingress will take place at 21h 58m 20°, and the central egress at 4h 47m 8°.

The following diagram will point out the situation of the planet at ingress and egress; also the intermediate places at the times annexed, 21h, 22h, 28h, corresponding with 9h, 10h, 11h, of the morning of the 5th day (next Saturday). The black spot representing the planet, to be in proportion to the large circle, the sun, should be 187 of the latter.

part of Asia, the whole of South America, and the principal parts of North America.

A very pleasing method of observing the transit, by which several persons may see it at the same time, may be adopted, by trausmitting the sun's image through a telescope into a darkened room: the image of the sun can be received on paper, and the progress of the planet traced without distressing the sight.

The transit of an inferior planet over the disc of the sun is exactly the same, mathematically considered, as a solar eclipse :- transits are, in fact, true annular eclipses of the sun, and the same formulæ may be applied to calculate the one and the other. The recurrence of the transits of Mercury depends on four of his revolutions being nearly equal to one revolution of the earth, or according to the following ratio: -

7 revolutions of the Earth = 29 revolutions of Mercury. = 137 = 191, &c.

Consequently transits of Mercury will happen at intervals of 7, 13, 33, 46, &c. years; the two bodies coming into the same position relatively to each other at the expiration of these periods. A transit occurs when Mercury is in his nodes, (those points where the orbit intersects the ecliptic,) and the Earth is in the same longitude. The node, from which Mercury ascends northward above the ecliptic, is in longitude 46° 14' 29"2, and, of course, the descending node is in the opposite point of the heavens. The Earth is in these points about the 6th of November and the 4th of May; and when Mercury comes to either of his nodes at his inferior conjunction about these times. he passes immediately between the Earth and Sun, and appears to traverse the solar disc. disrobed of his brilliancy and clad in gloom. At other inferior conjunctions he either passes above or below the Sun, and is consequently invisible, being lost in the Sun's rays. Owing to the very slow motion of his nodes (42". annually), the transits of Mercury, for many ages to come, will occur in the months eff May and November.

A transit of Mercury happened at the descending node in May 1799; the succeeding transit at the same node is the one occurring in the present month; the next will follow in May 1845, 1878, and 1891, of which that in the latter year will be invisible in this count ry. The last transits that have occurred in this century at the ascending node, were in 18102, 1815, and 1822; the next, at the same node, will be in November 1835, 1848, 1861, 1868, 1881, and 1894; of which those in 1848, 1861, and 1868, will be visible to the British isle so. five only, before the commencement of the year 1900.

The first astronomer who predicted the transits of the inferior planets was Kepler. He foretold that of Mercury in 1631, but; died shortly before its occurrence. This trans at was seen by Gassendi; the first that was ever | snown to have been witnessed by any human be sing.

The last transit of Mercury, visible in Eu. rope, was in November 1802, and is remarkable for the delight which it afforded to the closing days of the celebrated astronomer La. lande, then in his seventieth year.* It enabled

* "The passage of Mercury over the Sun's disc," he says, "was this morning observed for the nineteenth time. The weather was exceedingly favourable, and astronomers enjoyed, in the completest manner, the sight will be vertical to the northern shores of the Red Sea; at the middle, to the river Gambia; wisely confined himself to his astronomical studies during and at the end, to the West Indies. It will be the heat of the revolution; and when he had consequently visible to the whole of Europe, Africa, a great thank my stars for it."

him to verify the elements of this planet; from which he concluded that his tables, the result of forty years' labour, had reached the utmost perfection-though, doubtless, every transit will tend to promote a greater degree of precision than could have been anticipated thirty years

The transits of Mercury, which occur much oftener than those of Venus, are applicable to the solution of the same problem as that deduced from the transits of the latter planet in 1761 and 1769, the determining the distance of the Earth from the Sun, which before was supposed to be thirteen millions of miles less than it is now believed to be: but the observations of Mercury are subject to greater errors than those of Venus, owing to his greater distance, which occasions the difference of the parallaxes to be so little as always to be less than the solar parallax sought. The parallax of Venus is nearly four times as great as that of the Sun, consequently transits of this planet are of more practical importance.

The first transit of Venus since the Creation, that is known to have been seen, was observed in 1639; the next took place in 1761 and 1769. These latter were very generally observed from different parts of the world. To that of 1769 we ove the first of the celebrated voyages of Capta in Cook, who was sent to Tahiti to observe it. The next of Venus occurs in 1874, invisible here; the two following, in 1882 and 2004, will be visible in this country. Between the years 2000 and 3000 there will be seventeen transits of Venus; the last of which will happen 14th Jun.e. 2984.

An atmosphere was suspected about the planet Venus, which was supposed to have of casioned some singular phenomena, observed both at the ingress and egress. The planet Mercury was examined during the transit of 1802, to endeavour to detect such a medium, but no indications of an atmosphere were perceived.

Relative to the present transit, it is ardently hoped that the weather may prove favourable, that not only the scientific, but also the curious observer may be gratified with so unusual a spectacle.

20d 14h 54m_the Sun enters Gemini.

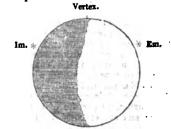

Lunar Phases and Conjunctions.

	D.	н.,	N.
First Quarter in Leo	6	90	8
O Full Moon in Libra	14	5	24
C Last Quarter in Aquarius	99	9	90
New Moon in Taurus	29	11	56

The Moon will be in conjunction with

Saturn in Leo	D. H. M. 8 occultation
Uranus in Capricornus	21	7	0
Mars in Pisces · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	24	ì	82
Jupiter in Pisces		4	30
Mercury in Aries		18	45
Venus in Aries		7	51

_8d__this will occur Occultation of Saturn. under peculiarly favourable circumstances of phase and position of the Moon, and time of occultation. Immersion 9h 10m 45s, emersion 10h 10m 45s. The following diagram will illustrate the phenomenon.

At the time of occultation, the major axis of the ring of Saturn will be 42"7, the minor axis 4"45; or nearly as 16 to 1.

4^d 23^h 45^m Mercury at his inferior conjunction. 16^d in aphelion. 17^d stationary near 38 Arietis. 29^d in conjunction with Venus.

7⁴—Venus in conjunction with • Piscium: difference of latitude 4′. 21⁴—with • Arietis: difference of latitude 1′.

25d 22h—Mars in conjunction with Jupiter: difference in declination 51'.

The Asteroids.—4^d—Vesta 2° N.E. of y Cancri; Juno 1° 8′ S. of Regulus, and 50′ N. of 31 Leonis. Pallas and Ceres are too near the Sun to be satisfactorily seen.

None of the eclipses of the satellites of Jupiter will be visible this month.

10^d — Saturn stationary near 1 Leonis. 29^d 14^h 30^m—in quadrature.

8d 14h 30m — Uranus in quadrature. 22d — stationary.

Deptford.

J. T. BARIKER.

PINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

[Second Notice: Conclusion.]

IN No. 302, Belinda at her Toilet, by Idiss F. Corbeaux, the fair artist has very hap pily represented the triumph of female beauty and female decoration.—No. 285. The Soun iferous Volume. J. M. Moore. Whatever may be the power of the volume to close the eyes, that of the performance is well calculated to keep them open. Were it a little less purplish in its hue, we should say that we never saw a finer gen; of art .- No. 209, Guinea Fowl, and 227, Hare. G. S. Shepherd. In this our day of skilful ex. ecution, it is no ordinary talent that can give interest to subjects of this class: we consider Mr. Shepherd eminently successful in both these productions. Nor are we less inclined to admire the versitility of his talents in the landscape department of art; of which No. 200, Carting of Wheat, with Gleaners, and No. 233, Haymaking, showery weather, are striking proofs. - No. 88, Nobody comes to marry me. T. Uwins. The burden of the old ballad is well expressed; and a strong interest excited for the pretty rustic, who is lamenting her state of "single blessedness."—On the composition and expression of No. 53, A Bit of Courtship, J. P. Knight, we have already expressed our opinion in our notice of the British Gallery. Of this, the original sketch for the picture, we may justly say, that in handling and texture it is a brilliant example of Mr. Knight's skill in the management of water-colours. - No. 112, The Gamester's Last Hit, T. Clater. A repetition in water of the picture in oil now exhibiting at the Suffolk Street Gallery. Full of character and expression, with a Rembrandt-like effect of chiaroscuro. - No. 132, Four subjects: Bird-Catchers, Toilet, He sitation, and the Holyday refused. R. Farrier. Very clever; but why does an artist of Mr. Farrier's ability repeat himself so frequently? - No. 293, Mr. Kecley, T. Wageman. A very able specimen of Mr. Wageman's talents in theatrical portraiture .-No. 16, Part of the Beauchamp Chapel, Warwick, J. Holland. The artist has added much to the solemn interest of the scene, by the introduction of a female in the act of prayer. It seems to tell some tale connected with the family history. — No. 65, Old Buildings, Sandwich, Kent, J. Fuge. This, and other productions by the same artist, all partake of the highly picturesque; and are executed with great truth and simplicity.—Of a similar character are Mr.

T. Maiser's drawings: No. 182, Remains of the Old Mill, Aberdilis, Vale of Neath, South Wales, is an admirable example of them.

The department of Flowers and Fruit in this exhibition is well filled, and contains some exceedingly beautiful specimens, among which are, No. 93, Gloxinea Spectosa, Mrs. Withers; No. 134, Convolvulus Major, Mrs. Denis Dighton; and No. 275, Grapes, Miss Bowley.

The miniatures also, generally speaking, are in style and execution highly attractive. Among those which principally drew our notice were No. 287, Portrait of a Lady, Mrs. Green; No. 289, A Zephyr, and No. 300, Jeune Dame de Qualité, S. J. Rochard; No. 282, A young Gentleman; No. 300, T. Moisey, Eq. and No. 305, Joseph Powell, Esq., W. Patten, &c. &c. &c.

Although our limits, and the pressure of various matter, will not allow us to particularise many other clever works in this new exhibition, we trust we have said enough to shew that it is well worthy of patronage; and we have no deubt, that next year the Society will put forth still stronger claims to public attention and favour.

MEW PUBLICATIONS.

Vinetally, Braneton, and Co.'s Gold Frame Tablets.

WE recently noticed the next and ingenious invention of tinted frame tablets by Visctelly and Co., on which drawings might be so readily and prettily meunted. On this plan the present handsome improvement seems to have been formed. It consists of the same material, but round the edge of the drawing there is a splendid imitation of a carved gold frame; so that with a little gum we can in five minutes have our picture deposited in a highly ornamented nichs, resembling an old master of the age of Leuis XIV. This clever design needs only to be known to be in great demand.

The Hon. Mrs. Howard.

THE eighty-ninth of the engravings of ladies of high rank for La Bells Assemblée. It is by Gochran, from a painting by Davis; and for style, beauty, and grace in art, equal to the finest of the whole number.

Fignette to Cumningham's Maid of Elvar.

A) SHEPHERD piping, with his dog at his foot

— a charming design by Wilkie, and slightly but beautifully etched by J. Burnet.

Der H. Johannes der Tæufer von Joh. Hemling, &c. &c.

The responsibility of the admirable engravings of the works supplied by the lithographic press of Munich. Their resemblance to the old painters is perfect: without colour, they are fac-similes of the originals, and enable us to fer me a complete idea not only of the particular pictures, but of the manner, style, and attributies, of the artist. A collection of these would be most valuable to students, professors, and virtuosi.

ORIGINAL POETRY. DEATH AND THE YOUTH.

"Nor yet—the flowers are in my path,
The sun is in my sky;

Not yet-my heart is full of hope-I cannot bear to die.

Not yet—I never knew till now How precious life could be: My heart is full of love_oh, Death, I cannot come with thee!"

But Love and Hope, enchanted twain, Passed in their falsehood by; Death came again, and then he said— "I'm ready now to die!"

THE DYING CHILD.
Puraphrased from the German.

"On mother, what brings music here?
Now listen to the song—
So soft, so sweet, so beautiful—

The night-winds bear along!"
" My child, I only hear the wind,
As with a mournful sound

As with a mournful sound
It wanders mid the old oak trees,
And strews their leaves around."

And dimmer grew his heavy eyes,
His face more deadly fair,
And down dropped from his infant hand
His book of infant prayer.

"I know it now, my mether dear,
That song for me is given;
It is the angels' cheral hymn
That welcomes me to heaven."

THE LITTLE SHROUD.

SHE put him on a snow-white shroud,
A chaplet on his head;
And gathered early primroses
To scatter o'er the dead.

She laid him in his little grave—
'Twas hard to lay him there,
When spring was putting forth its flowers,
And every thing was fair.

She had lost many children—now
The last of them was gene;
And day and night she sat and wept
Beside the funeral stone.

One midnight, while her constant tears
Were falling with the dew,
She heard a voice, and lo! her child
Stood by her weeping too!

His shroud was damp, his face was white: He said—"I cannot sleep, Your tears have made my shroud so wet; Oh, mother, do not weep!"

Oh, love is strong!—the mother's heart
Was filled with tender fears;
Oh, love is strong!—and for her child
Her grief restrained its tears.

One eve a light shone round her bed, And there she saw him stand— Her infant, in his little shroud, A taper in his hand.

"I.o! mother, see my shroud is dry, And I can sleep once more!" And beautiful the parting smile The little infant wore.

And down within the silent grave
He laid his weary head;
And soon the early violets
Grew o'er his grassy bed.

The mother went her household ways— Again she knelt in prayer, And only asked of Heaven its aid Her heavy lot to bear.

L. E. L.

The hints for these poems have been taken from the German. Two were mentioned to me in conversation; but that of "the Little Shroud" was translated, in prost, a week or so ago, in that most entertaining little paper in the Original, which also did me the honour of recommending it to me.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. X. Majors and Minors.

MR. EDITOR,—I submit a few observations upon an article in your No. 795, upon the dramatic monopoly, trusting to your impartiality for its equal publicity in your columns. The writer of the article in question is an enthusiastic advocate for the monopoly of the great theatres; and in his enthusiasm he does not acruple to exaggerate facts for the purpose of supporting his argument. Now, the ques-tion which has occupied so much of your correspondent's time as to enable him to fill six columns of your journal with his lucubration, resolves itself simply into this :- either the public are to purchase their amusement wherever they think proper, or they are not. The idea of a patent granted some years since, when London was but the tithe of what it now is, being able to cuff down all the little theatres, is about as ridiculous as would be the enforcement of any of the obsolete laws of the feudal times, which are still unrepealed upon our statute-book. The meaning to be attached to the word "burletta," upon which your correspondent lays so much stress, is of very trivial importance: it may serve to evade a prosecution-but I imagine that the minor theatres take their stand upon ground more tenable than the mere quibble of a word. To decide fairly, let us speak truly, and not attempt to darken one side of the argument in false shadows, for the purpose of advancing the brightness of the other. Let us avoid all personalities, and refrain from considering the interests of Madame Vestris as the interests of all the other minor theatre proprietors. It is evident that your correspondent has some pique against the fascinating madame-for his allusions are too pointed to be mistaken : they are rather coarse, too, and cannot be admitted in argument.

The most strange passage in the article to which these observations refer, is that which describes the minor theatres as disgusting to every modest woman. Is it possible that any gentleman can make such an ungrounded assertion? Can any man with the knowledge of the disgraceful state of the upper-boxes and saloons of the great theatres, venture to talk of the excitement of disgust? Your correspondent, sir, has boldly declared wives and sisters to be "disgusted" at the minors: now, sir, let us see what proportion of shame hangs upon the boasted majors, which are so strenuously thadowed forth. Any one who has been in the habit of frequenting the second tier of boxes at either of the patent theatres, will, I imagine, go with me in saying no disgust has ever been so complete as that excited by the scenes which therein nightly transpire.

I have to apologise, sir, for trespassing upon to an any father take his children into those boxes?—any husband allow his wife to mingle sensible, insolent and adactous? Let your his communication, I imagine to be an intercorrespondent look to this, and then let him ested party), I trust you will have no obsay if it is to be wendered at that fathers, jection to publish the reply of a common brothers, and husbands, shun the doors of the observer, wholly anconnected with theatres, national establishments, where such scenes and such people are to be found. How frequently may be seen young and lovely women hanging down their heads as they pass from the theatre through groups of wantons,-or, it may be, that have mistaken the direction, and become bewildered in that hotbed of infamy, the saloon. What must the feelings of a virtuous women be at such a moment? Of course she will not again subject herself to such feelings, and her father or her husband takes her to other scenes, where amusement can be obtained without the contact of degradation and infamy.

Your correspondent adduces the opinion of Sheridan in support of his argument; but we cannot receive the opinions of an interested man.

The hubbub that has been made respecting the majors and minors, is indeed very ridiculous: the subject should have been allowed to slumber, and the majors the last of all to have disturbed it-for the ultimate loss will certainly be theirs. It is not possible to prevent the minors from playing dramatic pieces, for the people will not travel eight or nine miles to see a play—they will have players nearer home; they have a right to it, an unquestionable right, and it is monstrous to enforce a monopoly. The great theatres should have been -for the little ones will assuredly triumph, and then play the "legitimate drama" in despite, though I imagine they will not gain much reputation by so doing : the minors cannot play Shakspeare—they have not the men; they may burlesque him, but how many would go to such performances? A week or two ago I read a criticism in one of the Sunday papers, from which it appeared that at one of the chief of the minors Julius Casar was played most ludicrously; - and I understand that that criticism was perfectly just. If the crusade was against such performances, -if the majors endeavoured merely to restrain their little rivals from playing the mere "legitimate" drama,—I would most assuredly be upon their side; but they strike a deeper blow, and would restrict them to dancing and singing! But a stroke so monstrous will assuredly fail. There is a power greater than that of these beasted patents, the public will; and the public will declares that the minors shall remain in the enjoyment of all their privileges that custom has rendered lawful. It is notorious that the minors produce the most attractive novelties: the majors lumber on, and give us "nothing but soup," as the author of the memoir of Mr. Rayner, in one of the magazines, says. "They tell the people. ' If you do not choose to have soup for breakfast, soup for dinner, and soup for supper, you must go without food altogether-for nobody else shall supply you with roast beef. We have patents for feeding you, and therefore drink our soup you must; if any body offers you beef, you must not receive it; for if you do, we will send the purveyors off to the treadmill, as rogues and vagabonds.' "

And is it to be supposed that the shallow arguments of your correspondent will uphold this monopoly? - does he suppose that the lord chamberlain, to whom he has the confidence to with the meretricious women that there as- anonymous individual (who, from the tone of who has been induced thereto by the manifest unjustness of the preceding article, and the threat of its being continued.—I am, sir, &c.

> WALKS ABOUT TOWN BY THE DEVIL INCOG! Picked up near the Crater of Mount Stromboli.

WO. II.

All Max in St. Giles's, and Almack's in St. James's.

THE organisation of society has given rise to many hypotheses; yet although many of its delineators have produced pictures, neither their colouring nor their drawing is much to be depended on. People see things at one view, yet there are two sides to every tablet. Society is a kind of kaleidoscope; every one beholds the beauty and harmony of its appearance, but few are aware of the worthlessness of the material by which such pleasing effects are produced. I am a deep observer, and even among my own particular friends am accounted a shrewd devil. I can discern the links which join the different ranks of mankind into one grand and harmo-nious whole, from the packthread or whipcord at the beginning to the gold lace at the extremity. I am not easily cheated: there are people who boast of being able to take in Old Nick himself, but this is an empty boast. I can judge of the kernel by the shell, and know the flavour of the fruit by its appearance. A handsome exterior does not hinder me from ascertaining the barrenness within, and the liberal opinions of the speaker never mislead me in my judgment of the man. Professions, I am well aware, are different from practice, and precepts are as contrary to example. true study of mankind is never learnt from books. From ourselves, ourselves only can we know. To know the world is not merely gaining a familiarity with the customs and ordinances of fashionable society; we must become acquainted with the habits of thinking, the pursuits, and the pleasures of all sorts and con-ditions of men. Therefore I have made it my business to mingle as much with the lower classes as to associate with the higher, to contrast the pompous histories of the rich with "the short and simple annals of the poor."

The other day I bent my steps towards St. Giles's. As I passed Monmouth Street, the depôts for second-hand apparel gave me the comfortable assurance, that people when they cast off their had habits invariably leave the worst behind. This district is chiefly colonised by the Irish-a people who are partial to potatoes and patriotism, and so hospitable that they are ready to treat you with all they can afford, and to break your head into the bargain. They are very active and industrious, fighting and drinking all day, and drinking and fighting all night. They are sociable in their dispositions, one room being generally inhabited by at least twelve tenants, each of whom has the privi-lege of taking in lodgers,—and are so partial to the animal world, that they usually indulge the pigs and the cows with a share of their own beds. They make very agreeable companions, falling out whenever they can find an opportunity; and are so devoted to friendship that they quarrel with each other every hour in the day, merely for the pleasure of making it up again. When a relation dies, they think the most striking proof they can shew of their respect for the deceased, is by their disrespect for the living — they drink peace to his manes, and then commence a general row over his remains. They are great sticklers for ceremony, and their wand of office is either a poker or a shilelah - but they are not particular. They are stanch republicans, -at least if we may judge by their continued attacks upon crowns; and their philosophy consists in considering a broken head better than no head at all.

After some time spent in observing the knots of unemployed labourers, who were grouped in the different corners of the different thoroughfares, discussing with furious gesticulation the conduct of a certain Daniel O'Connell, I turned into some of the by-streets. The first I entered was narrow, and from its appearance I should have guessed that brooms and mops had never been heard of there. Women, whose faces were guiltless of being washed, were haranguing each other from opposite windows, in a dialect not exactly Tuscan; and children of all ages were engaged in the elegant pastime of bespattering each other with handsful of the nice, soft, fragrant soil, which nature seemed so liberally to provide for their use. Their dresses were picturesque in the extreme. Nothing could have better displayed the beauty of those forms they were intended to adorn. As for shoes, it was evident to me that the understanding of so civilised a people would have been insulted if required to wear things so useless and unnecessary. A bagpipe, afflicted with a melancholy hoarseness, was being operated upon by a musician of some note in those parts, but what note he patronised l have never been able to ascertain. Two breechless urchins were employed in tying an old tinkettle to a cur's tail, and an old woman, with a military appearance, was telling her fortune to a girl who seemed as if she considered that the future was much to be preferred to the present. Seeing a house, or something like a house, on which good entertainment for man and beast was about as well written as spelt, I entered in the disguise of an Irish labourer. The place was a noted rendezvous of choice spirits, liquid and corporeal. Around me were various casks of ample dimensions, some of which bore the titles of "max," "Old Tom," "the cream of the valley," and others too numerous to mention. A portly dame was supplying her numerous customers at the bar, who had evidently been used to places bearing a similar name, and several men were executing orders, who appeared as if their own persons had been ordered for execution. Conversation was going forward with great earnestness, and as every one determined to talk, it consequently followed that no one was left to listen. A short time after I had entered, the fortunetelling woman followed me. She had doubtless come to renew her acquaintance with spirits, as it was generally supposed that her knowledge was supplied from other sources than the schoolmaster's. I watched her. She complained of the dryness of the weather, and called for whisky. Glass after glass she swallowed in quick succession. Her eyes brightened, her shrivelled features put on a smoother aspect, and her whole person exhibited an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace. Seeing that her thirst seemed to increase with what it fed on, I put on an austere expression of countenance and accosted her.

manding tone of voice, "why don't you go home to your family, instead of spending your time and money in swallowing these poisonous liquors?" "Blood and tunder!" she exclaimed, with the voice and look of a fury, "bad luck to the likes of ye, ye dirty blackguard! What bizness is it of ye's, ye ill-looking spalpeen. Arnt I an honest coman, an gets my bread in a respectable manner? And arnt I a right to cheer my ould heart vid a drop o' the crater ven it place God to give me the manes? And do you mane to come axing your imperent questions of a dacent body like me? By the blessed St. Pathrick, if I haven't a great mind to make a hole in your ugly nose, you thase o' the world!" She flourished her leg-of-mutton fist in my face, with the intention of putting her threat into instant execution, when I interrupted her.

"Good woman!" I repeated, in the same manner and tone as I had previously addressed her, " will you take a glass of gin?" Her arm dropt in an instant, she put on a smile which might have beguiled a serpent, and exclaimed, in a half-coaxing, half-reproachful manner, -- "O you insinniwating willain!

Thence I bent my steps towards King Street, St. James's. The street and neighbouring thoroughfares were thronged with splendid equipages, each anxious for pre-eminence. The horses were lashed, and the panels were smashed, that the young ladies should not be kept waiting. Coachmen swore, constables shouted, and there was a din louder than Pandemonium ever witnessed; but the inmates of the different carriages seemed insensible to the uproar: they were talking of the last ballet, and left to John the responsibility of breaking their necks, or his own. By dint of some exertion I got into the ball-room. Sounds of the most delicious music greeted me as entered, and a thousand odours were mingled with the music as it came floating on the air: throngs of beautiful females, brilliant with jewels, and adorned with all the graces that fashion can bestow upon its votaries, were twirling round in all the luxurious evolutions of the mazurka and galopade. I watched them unseen. Notwithstanding the splendour with which they were arrayed, there seemed little happiness and less humanity among them. The lovely looked upon all as lovely as themselves with a jealous eye: and their common pursuit was, not men of sense, but men of fashion. A commoner was in little estimation, - a peer found his path illumined with sunshine. Rank, riches, and éclat, were the presiding deities of the temple; and love, and beauty, and worth, were sacrificed at their shrines. I could discern that even the young and inexperienced, new to the world, and pure from its contami-nations, were as much influenced by the general feeling as those who had been more used to its depraving influence. Their fresh hearts thrilled with the same ambition, their hopes were animated with the same impulses, they put in practice the same arts, for the same purposes, of admiration, influence, and conquest. gazed upon a fair and sinless-looking creature, to whom all seemed thronging to do homage, and saw beneath the veil of gentleness and simplicity imprinted on her features, a vortex of ungovernable passions raging in her breast. listened to the conversation of two angelic sisters, of high distinction; they were in general esteem as the two most amiable women in the room. They were conversing about the new débutante.

"I wonder how Lord George can be so much "Good woman!" I exclaimed, in a repri- attracted by that pale-faced piece of sensibility?" said the younger sister. "And there's his grace," replied the other, "paying her as much homage as if she were one of those pieces of ancient sculpture of which he talks with so much enthusiasm." "I am sure she possesses no beauty to boast of," exclaimed the more juvenile of the two, with an indignant toss of her own beautiful head. "Very little. Her features are attractive, and her figure pleasing _" " But look at her -(using a vulgar word, worse than thick) ancles!"

interrupted the other with a contemptuous sneer, as she glanced at her own pretty little foot. I turned away from this specimen of haut ton in language and character, and proceeded to a more retired part of the room, where I perceived a very lovely woman, a wife and a mother, a ruler of the beau monde, and considered by that world a most exemplary character, engaged in earnest conversation with a young officer of the Guards. As I approached them, I overheard the subject of their discourse.
"Do not urge me," she whispered, with a tremulous voice, while her whole frame shook with agitation,—"do not urge me, I implore you." "Dear Lady Julia," exclaimed her handsome companion, with all a lover's fervour, "is this the reward of my long and ardent devotion; am I to remain the victim of a hopeless passion, which is destroying my life and youth: and are you to be left to the neglect of a man who values not the jewel he possesses, but renders to another's charms that homage which he ought to bestow on one so worthy of man's adoration; will you allow yourself to be wronged, to be disgraced, insulted, trifled with, for such a woman?" "If I thought that ____" "Tis familiar to all: there is not a doubt on the subject." "But it is not generous in you to take advantage of that knowledge; consider the consequences." "If you suffer such indignities to pass unretaliated, the world will no longer consider you as a woman of spirit, or worthy the example of the thousands on whom you bestow fashion and influence, by honouring them with your acquaintance." "If I were sure," exclaimed her ladyship, hesitating. "Adored Julia! I have loved you too long and well to wish to deceive you. My heart and soul are unalterably yours,—I live but in the sunshine of those bewitching eyes. May I, dare I hope ——" "Hush, hush!" she whispered, trembling violently, "some one observes us. Let me see you to-morrow morning in my boudoir; my lord is going out of town, Adieu! we must not be seen together again to-night." She snatched her hand, which he would have been mad enough to raise to his lips, and disappeared among the dancers. "Capitally done, by Jove!" exclaimed the coxcomb, while adjusting his cravat; "'pon my honour, never managed any thing of the kind half so cleverly."

The musicians still continued their seductive music, and the greater part of the company threaded the mazes of the different fashionable dances with as much earnestness as if they had been paid for it. I could not help considering. that it was the most agreeable way of spinning out existence which human ingenuity had ever invented. Independent of the consequences which may arise through an introduction so agreeably commenced, it produces a good effect, inasmuch as it makes each endeavour to appear amiable to a new partner. The social virtues have also opportunities of encouragement, as I have already shewn; and the chains of con-nexion which bind society together are rendered more firm by the sacred character with which the votaries of pleasure are invested.

MEPHISTOPHILES.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

In Tuesday, Rossini's Elisabetta was the noelty of the evening -if the revival of an opera an be called so, for the purpose of introducing Tosi to an English audience. This lady has gained a considerable share of fame on the continent; and it would be unfair to judge too harshly of an attempt evidently made without a knowledge of the size of the house, or the pitch of voice required to fill it, which, by being over-strained, had the effect of rendering some of the higher passages little better than screams. On Thursday the opera was repeated, and Tosi much improved. Though not a firstrate songstress, her voice wanting richness, which sometimes gives it a wiry sound, still she has much taste, as also great musical acquirements. We shall therefore be glad to see her in an opera more suited to her, and in which she may have occasion to display those powers which we are sure she possesses. Winter and Curioni were very pleasing in Leicester and Norfolk. Of the rest, there being an apology made, we need not say any thing.

After the first act of the opera, a trifle, called Daphnis et Cephise was produced, for the purpose of bringing forward Heberle as a danseuse. She is said to have been the model on which Taglioni formed her school; and it is delightful to behold both the mistress and the pupil so near perfection. Heberle is of a slight and pleasing figure, with an animated countenance, and dressed (query, half?) in the most tasteful and graceful style. Her dancing—but why describe that which to understand every body must see, and that which every one is sure to admire? Albert gets quite young again; Brugnoli delights us more and more with the elegance of her attitudes, and the fascinations of her toe-nails. The house was very full on Tuesday, and deservedly so; for the manager is certainly doing much to merit public favour.

DRURY LANE.

On Easter Monday, an Oriental spectacle, called the Magic Car, was brought out, and has since stood more than "three days' trial." It is a fairy tale, in which individuals travel from the earth to an enchanted region, by means of a car, and return thence most miserably discontented. Into the why or wherefore, we do not think it necessary to inquire; suffice it to say, that Miss Faucit is a fine-looking fairy queen, Miss Kenneth a princess in distress, Cooper a gay Persian noble, and Harley a humourserving man, with means to make folks suddenly ugly, and as suddenly restore them to beauty. A poor little child, Miss Adelaide Byrn, is made to caricature Italian dancing, which one must be sorry to see: it is painful to think on these sacrifices of infants, and the sorrows they must endure before they can be taught to disgust every good feeling in an audience.

On Thursday, a new play in five acts-another proof, if one were wanting, that there are yet some remains of life in our dramatic literature _was acted for the first time; and although, perhaps, it cannot boast of the prettiness and polish of a portion of Miss Kemble's poem, or of the force of character and strong interest of the Hunchback, is nevertheless a most respectable production, and will entitle the author to a very decent niche in the temple of the drama. The play, which is called the Merchant of London, is of a domestic kind, and relates to the adventures of a man who married in early life to the good and well-merited success. To enter into sister of a nobleman; is denounced by his new the plot of such a piece is hardly necessary.

convent. The action of the scenes makes known to us that some years have elapsed since this unfortunate occurrence; that the "denounced" has returned to England a merchant and a man of wealth; that by repeated loans he has gained virtual possession of his brother-in-law's estates; that the son of the noble, and a youth who has been educated with him, are suitors to the merchant's niece; that, notwithstanding his former determination to avenge his wrongs, he relents, and after discovering himself to, and reproaching his wronger, is about to restore him his property, when he learns that the son of his enemy has carried off his niece by force; that this aggression calls back all his former injuries, and that he is about to wreak his vengeance on the whole offending family, when the youthful page is discovered to be his own son; and this event, with the rescue of the lady, who is afterwards married to the youth, reconciles all parties, and terminates in a happy dénouement. Macready, upon whose shoulders the chief weight of the drama rests, sustained his burden with the power of an Atlas. In the early scenes, his description of his courtship and his wrongs was most touchingly delivered; and in the parts of violence and passion, those in which he reproaches his persecutor, and deplores the loss of his beloved "Mariana," we have never seen him display more sensibility, more true pathos, or produce a more powerful effect upon his audience. The author, indeed, though he may claim considerable merit, is greatly indebted for his success to this gentleman's exertions; and if the drama should receive encouragement, Macready's Merchant will henceforth rank with his Roman father and his patriot of the mountains. The other characters are not very prominent; but Cooper's, which is the best of them, was well embodied. Miss Phillips was also good. Harley's, however, is a bad part, and might be omitted altogether without impeding the action, or doing the slightest injury to the piece. The scene of the "Alsatians" also requires great curtailment: it very nearly placed the whole play in jeopardy. The performance was received with great favour; and Macready, who announced the play for repetition, was welcomed with leaves little to be desired. thunders of applause.

COVENT GARDEN.

A CIRCUMSTANCE, most likely unprecedented in stage-history, occurred on Monday evening, viz. the performance at each of the patent theatres of a drama from the pen of the same author, and in one of which the same gifted individual acted the principal character. sides this unusual occurrence, it gives us pleasure to record two others almost as rare upon an Easter night-a very good house, and a very attentive audience; and we are now thoroughly satisfied, that if managers, instead of lion-hunting and tiger-taming, would take to seeking out good writers—cherishing them when found, instead of disgusting them, as they too often do -paying them liberally—and supporting them against the inordinate claims and unwarrantable caprices of the inmates of the green-room, they would have little reason to find fault with the public, or to complain of the decline of the drama. After the Hunchback, in which Miss Kemble was, if possible, better than ever, a new tale of entertainment called, The Tartar Witch and the Pedlar Boy, was acted for the first time, and, we are happy to announce, with relation for a heretic; flies his country, and We expect on these holyday occasions some leaves his wife to perish heart-broken in a good scenery, some clever dancing, an animating procession or two, some ingenious mechanism, and a little fun; and when we say that the Grieves satisfied us on one of these points, that Keeley, little Miss Poole, D'Albert, Mrs. Vedy, and Mrs. Vining, were equally good on others, and that the machinist and the pantomime people were quite at home in their several departments, we think we may pronounce the Tartar Witch to be a clever and a gorgeous production. The first scene, the march over the bridges, the sudden appearance of the witch, the attack upon the prince's escort, and the subsequent battle is highly spirited; and in the second act, the scene in which Keeley gets up the chimney, and afterwards issues from it in "deep mourning, though bordering closely upon pantomime, truly laughable. Mrs. Vining, need we add? makes a very dapper prince, and dances well at the royal wedding; and Miss Poole does a great deal with a character which is not so prominent as those usually entrusted to her. The whole afforded much gratification to the holyday

STRAND THEATRE.

This neat house resumed its season with great spirit and success on Monday; when three entirely new pieces were produced. The first a nautical drama, by Mr. Bernard, called the Long Finn, with O. Smith as the hero, and Rayner and Miss Somerville in other leading parts, is very clever and effective, and is likely to have great popularity. The other novelties are also good of their kind, and well enacted; so that there is no wonder the theatre is filled with applauding audiences every night.

THE QUEEN'S THEATRE

HAS enlisted Dowton; and, with a fair company to support him, is nightly participating in the gale of public favour which attends these minor speculations.

FRENCH PLAYS.

WE are glad to see this place of amusement going on so prosperously; all the novelties have met with deserved success, and the company

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Covent Garden, April 23.—First night of the Tartar Witch. The first contretemps was the measuring her length on the floor by Miss Taylor, after the most approved Inversity fashion! An inanimate being is raised to life by a spell, but first rises through a trap, whereon, for a time, he lies dormant; the spell is spoken, the gentleman rises - as much as he can, for he is literally trapped; he is firmly fixed by his inexpressibles to the earth! Peals of laughter welcomed his semi-resuscitation, which it will be conceived were not diminished when he nobly, to fulfil the spell, sacrificed his garments, and with the general cachinnations and sibilations mingled the sound of their ruthless rending! A platform covered with people, which should have sunk through the earth near the conclusion of the piece, only kept curtsying, as it were, to the audience, till at last, one side of it giving way, one of the gentry who stood upon an extreme end of it was so completely jolted off his balance that he fell upon his neighbour, and he again upon his next, so that the whole regiment were laid sprawling upon each other like a pack of cards, amid the almost deafening peals of the spectators.

King's Theatre, April 24. _ I went to see

Mademoiselle Heberle's début; and one act ef Elieabetta having preceded the pastoral divertisement in which she appeared, the coulissess were thronged with youths of Arcady, Eliza bethian maids of honour, sylphs, and beefesters!

Drury Lane, April 24 .- I was in time to pay my respects to the Magic Car, and observed that one set of messieurs were the slaves of a fairy queen, the attendants of an earthly one, (rival, too, to the former,) and the pilgrims of a caravan! There was not the slightest variation of their costume in any of these strongly coatrasted callings! Miss Faucit should have been suddenly changed by the transforming waters into a being the reverse of heautiful, so she ran off the stage' and the being ran on with an ugly face and black petticeat, which fly-ing open in its gesticulations, discovered that not only her appearance but her sex were changed ! - or else that she had donned a modern pair of black trousers!

VARIETIES.

Stamp-duties. - Le Globe, the St. Simonian paper, although distributed gratuitously, has been repeatedly fined for violations of the French stamp laws. On the last occasion it was required to pay the sum of 44,000 francs (above 1.8804) in the course of four-and-twenty hours!

Large Otter. - The otter is becoming a rare animal in England; but one measuring 521 inches in length, and 24 in circumference at the shoulders, was lately caught in the river Coquet, Northumberland. It had mine white apots upon its skin.

Saint Simonians. - The schisms in this new religion have at last got to such a pitch, that, with a heavy fine of taxes by the government, several of the Paris journals proclaim the breaking up of the school. Their public places are given up, and the leaders announce their retraite. A general meeting is, however, summoned for the 1st of June, when the pere suprême, the apôtres, &c. are expected to reappear upon the scene.

M. Delmotte, librarian of the city of Mons. has found in the loft under the roof of the church of Saint Wandru, the collection of the charters, &c. belonging to the former chapter of that church, which was supposed to have been long since destroyed. The most ancient diplomas are of the reign of Baldwin V. There are many of Baldwin VI. surnamed Baldwin of Constantinople. There is also the original of the farmons charter of the year 1200, which regulated the legislation of fiefs in Hainauk, and a list of the hereditary officers of the court of Hainault, &c.

Rome, March 20 .- Our celebrated architect. Luigi Rossini, is about to publish two new works:-- l. The Triumphal Arches of the ancient Romans; 2. Five of the principal Views of St. Peter's, in the Vatican. It was a custom with the Romans to erect triumphal arches upon the occurrence of great events. Rome, and the whole Roman empire, were full of these monuments of valour. However, the triumphal arches were not all built in honour of victories, since some were erected in commemoration of distinguished benefits, and of citizens who had sacrificed their private interest to the public good. The origin of these menuments is extremely curious. The author havumphal Arches, never hitherto entirely edited. Pietro Santi Bartoli published the figurative part of those in Rome, illustrated by Bellori. The author intends to give not only those of Rome, but all the others in the Papal domimions and in Italy; and at the same time to indicate the various epochs, as well of the architecture as of the ornamental parts, which was not correctly done in the Arch of Coust the has-reliefs being all ascribed to the time of Trajan, though the decline of the age of Constantine may be observed in them. Each of the more magnificent arches is to form one No. of ten plates, and the less important ones of four or five plates. A perspective view of their present state is announced, and any other suitable view; also the restoration, the ground-plan, and the details,—all on a large scale, with the most minute measures stated. A sheet of text is to accompany each of the Nos. of which the work is to be composed-probably under twenty.

very fine, I took a stroll into the Zoological him. Gardens, in the Regent's Park, with my friend, and going up to the cage that contains two ravens, my friend threw in two pieces of bun, when one of the dark-feathered inhabitants immediately jumped from his perch, and before his comrade could reach either of them, he had both secure in his beak, and regained his former position on the perch, holding them until be saw his comrade at the farther end of the cage. He then flew down, buried one of the pieces, and covered it with gravel, and jumping up to his perch with the other piece, devoured it. He then jumped down for the second morsel, and segmining his perch a second time, consumed that, much to the annoyance of his companion. This very artful and cunning device served to amuse a circle that had by that time collected round the cage, and proved, I should say, something more than we understand by common animal instinct. (Frem a Correspondent.)

the mouth of February, Ibrahim Pasha, the governor of Dgidda, addressed the following tirmen to the Mollah, the Sheikh, and the other magistrates of Jerusalem :- " Jerusalem contains temples and menuments which Christians and Jews come from the most distant countries to visit. But these numerous pilgrims have to complain of the enormous duties levied upon them on the road. Being desirous of putting an end to so crying an abuse, we order all the Museulmans of the pashaliks of the Saide, and of the districts of Jerusalem, Tripoli, &c., to suppress all duties or imposts of that mate on all the roads, and at all the stations, without exception. We also order, that the priests out exception. who live in the buildings belonging to the churches in which the Gospel is read, and who officiate according to the ceremonies of their religion, he no longer compelled to pay the arbitrary contributions which have been hitherto imposed upon them.'

Russia_Odesea. _ The works now carrying on for the improvement of Odessa have afforde an additional evidence that, as had been pre-sumed from the measures of distances given by Arrian, and the anonymous author of a voyage in the Euxine, a settlement formerly existed there, under the name of Irequire Aspain, or harbour of the city of Istros. Previous discoveries made in enlarging the harbour, when that part of the harbour, has lately presented to the museum of antiquities at Odessa an amphora in excellent preservation, and a fragment of another vase of the same kind, of a coarse earth. These vaces, it is well known, were used for domestic purposes, and the ancients kest wine and oil in them. The name of the manufacturer, which it was customary to energye within the neck of the amphora, is too much effaced to be legible.

Cross-readings. - Cross-readings used, some years ago, to be a source of amusement in the journals, and still we occasionally find entertainment in what may be called straight-readings. For example, in the Oratorio bill of Friday week, where we discover, "O Lord, grant the king a long life," followed by "Great queen, be calm"! Then comes "Mr. Phillips, the last man," and "Miss Pearson, in infancy;" and Mr. Templeton with "the eyes of my love are as blue as the sky, composed expressly Anecdate of Animal Sagacity. The day being for him," which we consider to be lucky for

LITERARY MOVELTIES.

I Library Gazelle Weekly Advertisement, No. XVII. April 98, 1981.

Cavendish and his Critics, or Whis versus Tory.

A new fashloustie Monthly Magazine is amounced by Mr. Harral, under the title of La Cour des Dames; or, Genetie of Fashlon, Liberature, and the Fine Arts: with a series of Pertraits, dec.

LIST OF YEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Lardmar's Cabinet Cyclopadia, Vel. XXX. History of Spain and Portugal, 4 vols. Vol. 11. 6s. cloth.—Eyre on St. Paul's Epistica, 2 vols. 8vo. 11. 4s. bds.—Instruction for Preparing Abstracts of Titles, 18mo. 5s. bds.—The Maid of Elvar, by Allan Canmingham, 12mo. 6s. bds.—Abs.—Adapsworth's Tales and Novels, in 18 vols. with Plates, Vol. 1. foolscap, 5s. cloth.—Arlington, 3 vols. post 8vo. 11. 11s. 6d. bds.—The Cootrast, by the Earl of Mulgrave. 3 vols. post 8vo. 12s. bds.—Flowers of Fable, 18mo. 5s. bds.—Eurost Svo. 12s. bds.—Flowers of Fable, 18mo. 5s. bds.—Eurost Gyprian, Bishop of Carthage, 8vo. 5s. bds.—Burder's Self-Discipline, 38mo. 2s. cloth; 3s. silk.—Malloch's Immortality of the Soul, with other Poems, 12mo. 5s. cloth.—Rutherford's Maternal Sketches, 12mo. 7s. cloth.—Emigrant's Pocket-Companion, 12mo. 6s. bds.—Valpy's Classical Library, No. XXIX. Plutarch, Vol. VII. 4s. 6d. cloth.—Christian's Family Library, Vol. I. Luther and the Reformation, Vol. I. 18ms. 8s. cloth.—Pritchard's Microscopic Cabinet, 8vo. 18s. bds.—The Veuth's Corsucopia, 13mo. 6s. 6d. cloth; 7s. 6d. roam.—Roscopic Shorels's Library, Vol. XI. Tristman Shandy, Vol. 2. 6s. cloth.—Marthaga's libutrations of Political Economy, Na. 15. Demerara, 1s. 6d.—Comor's Greek Grammar, 8vo. 7s. 6d. cloth.

WETEOPOLOGICAL JOURNAL 1000

			•	 	, .	993.
April	1 7	-	mote	1 Bar	-	tor.
Thursday 19	From			29-86
Friday 30				29-69
Saturday . 21	•			39-01
Sunday 98				30-110
Monday - 23	!			29-61
Tuesday - 24				20-08
Walnut 26				29-80

Provedling spinds, N.W. and S.W. Except the 21st, 23d, and 23d, generally cloudy, with t wein aquent rain. Rain fallen, •175 of an inch.

CHARLES H. ADAMS Latitude 51° 37′ 22″ N. Longitude 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Of W. H. the thoughts are natural and touching; the composition inferior.

We like the Original very much: its valuable matter is well relieved by its pleasantry.

We have received the engraved portrait intended for the flevivalist, a monthly twopensy periodical, designed to promote evangelical religion: it is pleasing and ap-propriate, with all its inscriptions relative to Sunday schools, &c.

five large plates, and his other, on the Roman Monuments from the 18th continy, has since been engaged on the two works above mentioned. The first will consist of the Tri gineer, who has the obarge of the works is the continue.

Fracta: We do not like to interfere in matters of a personal nature, and have only (in allusion to the lesse of Antiquative) to represe our regret that any difference of views or opinion in a literary, we may say national literary conserve, should have bed two gentlement of views or opinion in a literary, we may say national literary conserve, should have bed two gentlement of views or opinion in a literary, we may say national literary conserve, should have bed two gentlement of views or opinion in a literary Fraces.-We do not like to interfere in matters of a

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

ITERARY FUND...The Forty-Third Amiversary Festival of this Society will be celebrated tons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 9th of May, when he Duke of Somerset, the President of the Institution

The Lord Bishop of Chichester Lord Ingestrie
Riv John Edw. Swinburne, Bt.
Sir Hichard Faul Jodrell, Bart.
Sir John Malcolm, G.C.
Dr. Birkbeck
Laman Bisnohard, Esq.
Henry Brandreth, Jun. Esq.
James Cochrane, Esq.
G. W. Dilke, Esq.

e Earl of Mulgrave
e Lord Bishop of Chichester
rd Ingestrie
John Edw. Swinberse, Bet,
Richard Faul Jodrall, Bart.
John Malcolm, G.C.B.
Birk beek
man Bisnohard, Eeq.
mon Gochrane, Eeq.
W. Dilke, Beq.
W. Dilke, Seq.

Dinner at Six o'Clock precisely. Tickets, 50s. each, to be had of the Stewards; also of Mr. Snow, at the Society's Chambers, No. 4, Lincoln's Inn Fields; and at the Bar of the Freemanns.

JOSEPH SNOW.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL MALL. The Gallery for the Exhibition and Sale of the Werks of British Artists, isopen daily, from Ten in the Mora-ing till Five in the Evening is. Catalogue, is. Admission, is. Catalogue, is. WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

COCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.

SOCIETY Of D. L. a. a. a. a. Saffock Street, Pall Mail East.
The Ninth Exhibition for the Sale of Works of Living British Artists, is now open, from Ten till Seven.
Admittance, i.e. Catalogue, 1s.
EDWARD FRENTIS, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON. -- German UNIVERSITY of LONDON. — German Language and Literature.—Dr. Hasuman will begin, on Monday, the 7th of May, at 8ix of Cleck, r.A., an Elementary Course of Thirty Lectures on the German Language, to be continued every Wednesday, Priday, and Monday, at the same hour. Pee, 3t. 10t. Dr. Hanaman intends to read during the next teaton, with those Medical Gentiemen who are desirence of becoming acquainted with German Medical Literature, some Works owneed with Medical Subjects, for which they would be prepared by attending the above Course.

Electricity, Magnetium, and Electro-Magnetism.—Dr. Ritchie will commence a popular Evening Course of Sixteen Lectures on the same Subjects, on Tuesday, the 8th of May, at 8ven of Clock, to be continued every Tuesday and Friday, at the same hour. Pee, 3t.

Pec, 2l.

It is not necessary that persons attending this or any Course of Lectures in the University, should be marriculated Students.

THOMAS COATES.

Council Room, April 10th, 1888.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON SCHOOL

UNIVERSITY of LONDON SCHOOLA—
Head Masters, Thomas Hewitt Rey, M.A. Professor of Latin, and Henry Malden, M.A. Professor of Ureek.
Classical Assistants—A.J. W. Mersteon, E.A. Rehedear of Trinity College, Cambridger and Thomas Dawes, B.A. of Corpus
Christ College, Cambridger and Thomas Dawes, B.A. of Corpus
Christ College, Cambridger and Thomas Dawes, B.A. of Corpus
Christ College, Cambridger and Thomas Dawes, B.A. of Corpus
Mr. Witton G. Turner, of the University of London.
Prench—Mr. Merles, of the University of London.
Drawing—Mr. Lequeutre.
Writing—Mr. Haselwood.
The School Year is divided into Three Terms, the First commencing on the lat of College, the Bosond on the 15th of January, and the Third a Week ufor Rester The Fee for each is M. The School Creen of the School of April.

"The Subjects taught are Reading, Writing, the Properties of the most familiar Objects, Natural and Artificial; the English, Latin, Greek, and Prench Languagen; Ancient and Rodern
History; Geography, both Physical and Political; Arthmetic; the Elements of Mathematics and of Natural Philosophy; and Drawing—
Council Ranna. 18th 8—add 1850.

Council Room, 16th April, 1888.

THOMAS COATES.

TO BOOKSELLERS, LIBRARIANS TO BOOK KSE LLEKS, LAIDERAKEANS, and PRINTNELLERS.—To be disposed of, one of the prost complete and best appointed Establishments in the West of England, including the above Branches, and an excellent Fancy Stationery Business, with an extensive Connexion. The coming in will be arranged to sait the Purchaser, on theval Terms. Particulars may be known by application to Mr. Robert Bent, 66, Upper Stamford Street, London. If by letter, post-paid. To any Tree Young Men about to establish themselves in Business, the above offers such a favourable opportunity as cannot be asceniled.

To Admbrens of the Pine Arts. Pielding's Lake Scenery in Westmoreland, Cumberland, and Lameablirs. Just published, a Sarles of

FORTY-FOUR elegant AQUATINTA CRTV-FOUR elegant AQUATINTA ENGRAVINGS; the whole entrawed, and beautifully coloured, from the original Designs by Fielding, Illustrative of the Coloured, from the original Designs by Fielding, Illustrative of the grandeur, and sublimity, in the above Counties. These are reticularly adapted for the Artist, Teurist, Portfolla, SeraBook, or Album. Price Gd. each, mounted on tinted DrawingBook, or Album. Price Gd. each, mounted on tinted Drawingboard, and may be had also complete in various bindings; these forming a complete Panorama of the Three mest remantic Counties in England, and the best Guide to the Lakes ever published.
The Publisher can confidently assure the Nobility and Gentry, that these Views are far asperier to any over published at the price, and vaspectfully solicits an inspection, lest the lew price sight tend to despreciate their acknowledged merits.
London: Fabilabed by W. M. Clark, Stackoner to the King, 56,
Charing Crees; and may be poscured of every respectable Bookseller and Stationer in the United Kingdom.

POYAL SOCIETY of LITERATURE.

The General Anniversary Meeting of the Royal Society of Literature, for the Election of the President, Vice-Presidents, Council, and Officers, for the ensuing Year, and for the usual
Business, will be held on Friday, May 4th, at the Society's House,
St. Martin's Place, Charing Cross, at These O'Clock sprecisely.
The Right Honourable LORD HOVER in the Chair.
RIGHARD CATTERMOLE, Secretary.

BY AUCTION, by Mr. SOTHEBY and 1 AUUTIUN, by Air. SUTHEBY and SON, at their House, Wellington Street, Strand, on Thursday, May 10th, and following day, at Twelve o'Clock, the Choice and Select Collection of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, of the Modern English and French Schools, the Property of ALARIC A. WATTS, Boq.: Including many of the Subjects engraved in the Literary Souvenir, and other Hestrated Publications. Among the Drawings are very fine Specimens of the following Artists :—

Landscer (Charles)
Lawrence (Sir Theo
Martin
Monvaisin
Nash
Prout
Pugia
Pyne
Ramelet
Robson Fielding (Copley)
Plelding (Thales)
Fielding (Newton) Atkinson Barrett Finch
Fragonard
Francia
Fleury
Green Boys attermale harlet Coignet (Leon) Harding Ramelet Robson Roberts (David) Stothard Stanley Stephanoff (P. P.) Stephanoff (James) Hollins Holmes Colin OSWAY Hastings Hamilton Danby Danest Ince Jadin Turner Vernet (Lausan) Westall (W.) Jenn Johannet (Alfred) Johannet (Teny) Jemand (Baron) Decamps Deiscroix Dewint Jones Leslie

The Fictures include Specimens by Fraser Reynolds (Str Jesh.)
Gady Stothard Gill West (W. E.)
Gigonz Whealley
Hollins Wood Allan Arnold Bode (R. T.) Boxall Decamps Edmonstor Fragonard Jadin Lepoisevin

To be viewed on Monday, May 7, and till the time of Sale, when Catalogues may be had.

when Catalogues may be had.

MR. LEIGH HUNT.—Though the publication of books by subscription is no longer the mode, as it was in the days of Pope and Dryden, when those eminent men resorted to it, and when Prior, who had been an ambassador, and though there are many reasons why the revival of the custom though there are many reasons why the revival of the custom the property of the property of the custom the property of the culties.

It is proposed, for this purpose, that the Poetical Works of Mr.
Leigh Hunt, now first brought together, and estected by himself (with corrections and emendations, the result of his experience), and accompanied by Notes and a New General Freface, should be printed in one very handsome volume 8ro. price a Guirnes, and audithed by audecription. A selection from his Proce Writings would have accompanied them—but these are in the hands of a bookseller, who will not give up the copyright, and who is about to bring them forth.

bookseller, who will many to your and the bookseller, who will not printed a New Poem by the Author, in Two Canton,—the first of any length he has written for thany

Two Cantas,—the first of any length he has written far thany years.

Several of the friends of literature baving been made acquainted with the pressing difficulties under which a man of genius is unhappily sinking, are anxious to unite in one common purpose of justice and honevolence towards him, that they may testify their respect of intellectual exercises, and recome the cause of letters from an unworthy reproach. They approve of the annexed plan, proposed with a view to a general subscription. They invite every friend of generals in the countrainty to join with them in promoting its success; so as to secure, by their nuited extents, as old testimony to Mr. Leigh Hunt of their desire to see a man of letters of his standing and reputation not only rescued from the ismediate denger of necessity, but put in possession of such a security of means as would so longer leave him to the chance of repeated illinesers, and all the anxieties they produce in a man of centibility and at labor.

Subscriber's names will be received by Mr. Tilt, 36, Fleet Street; Nr. Edingham Wilson, Royal Eachange; Mears. Colonical of the several Newspapers; and at Mr. Edward Morcou's, 64, New Bond Street, by whom the Volume will be published in the course of acet Mosths.

April 1886.

E DINBURGH REVIEW, No. CIX. BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

DIN BURURI RELIVERS AND TO A STATE OF THE ST

THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE, for May,

THE MONTHLY SIAMFALLIAN, price 2s. M. Contents: —I. Portrait of James Sheridan Knowles, from a Painting by Gildon Manton, Esq.—II. A Tale, by the Author of the "Hunchback"—III. A Critique on Miss Kembie's Critica—IV. A Paper an the recently discovered Books of Cicero—V. Lamentations of Landlordia.—VI. Resources of Austria.—VIII. Windlass Hall—VIII. Rights of Dramatists—IX. Fresh-water Whale, by the Author of "Three Courses and a Desert"—X. Legal Andrew Course and a Desert"—X. Legal Andrew Course and Author of the Course of Austria. The Course of Cour

Post Fre. Le. 6d.

INGLAND and FRANCE; or, a Cure for the Ministerial Gallomania.

"Against that morbid desire of conquest and aggrandisement, which, for the last forty years, has been the characteristic of the history of the French nation."—Speech of the Duke of Wellington in the House of Lords, March 17th, 1832.

Albemaric Street.

The Little Girl's Own Book, 3d edition.

With 110 Cuts, putes only 4a. 4d. in heards, or 5a. 4d. hound, glittedges,

THE LITTLE GIRL'S OWN BOOK.

R. M. CULIN

BY MILLO OWN DOOR
By Mr. CMILD,
Amther of "the Mether's Book."
The 2d edition.
orden: Printed for Themas Tegr, Chespalde: N. Halles, Piccedilly; and Bowley and Keeby, Oxford Street.

Where may be had, price to ad.

Lady Sandford's Stories from Roman His-

HAMBERS' EDINBURGH JOURNAL; containing 16 Folio Columns of Original and Selected Articles, without Advertisements, for Three-Haif pence.

No. 13, published this day, contains:—The Down-Draughts—
Popular Information on Literature—Great Britain—Original Anecdoes of Burns—Adventure with a Naake—A Column for the Fancy—A Few Words respecting the Journal.

London: W. S. Orr, 14, Paternovier Row.

G Country Agents may have them delivesed 100 Miles from Town on Saturday Morning, by application to the Publisher.

Dedicated to the Queen.

ITERARY PRESENTS.—The First
Two Numbers of the Royal Lady's Magnatine are strongly recommended to Husbands, Falhers, Birchters, &c. as the most accaptable present that can be offered to a Lady of education.
They contain nearly 200 ceriginal Talles, Essays, Foems, &c. by the most distinguished Writers in the United Kingdom; and the continuation, in control of the Continuation, is countily Numbers, contain an iteration. The Continuation, is countily Numbers, contain an iteration.

Published by S. Robenson, &c. Paul's; and W. Sams, Bockseller 4e the King.

The Barl of Mulgrand's New Novel, &c.

Inst published by Henry Colturn and Richard Bensley,
New Burlington Barnet.

In 3 vols. post 5 vo.

HE CONTRAST.

By the Author of "Medida," and "Yes and No."

Arlington. By the Author of "Granby," III.

Tales of the Early Ages. By the Author of "Brumbletys House," &c. 3 vols.

"A deeply interesting and vomentic work, in which "the deeds of days of other years' are related in a style that cannot fail to capitate every reader."—Chellenhom Chronicle.

Memoirs of Female Sovereigns. By Mrs. Jamesen. In 6 wels.

"Written by one of the most elegant of our female writers; full of feeling and fancy; a true enthusiest, wish a glowing seni."

Rickwest.

Stanley Buxton; or, the Schoolfellows. By Also, just ready, in 2 vols.

The Fair of May Fair.

Second edition of Cavendish; or, the Patrician at Sea. S vols.

In deemy 8vo. price 6c. boards,

RAJAH RAMMOHUN ROY'S EXPOBITION of the JUDICIAL and REVENUE SYSTEMS of ENDIA, and of the General Character and Condition of its Next vo Inhabitants; with a brief Secth of the Ancient and Roders Boandacies, and of the History of the Construct, circlidated

Smith, Elder, and Co. 65, Cornhill.

Of whom also may be had, by the same Author, An Essay on the Rights of Hindoos over sesseal Preparty. Price Sc. 44.

GEOLOGICAL TRANSACTIONS.-Second Part of Val. III. to land modelshad

With a Biographical Sketch, a Portrait of each Author, Notes, Maps, &c. price 4s. 6d. small 8ve. bound in cloth,

VALPY'S FAMILY CLASSICAL LIBRARY:

ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS

MOST VALUABLE GREEK AND LATIN CLASSICS.

Just completed.

Plutarch's Lives, in Numbers 23 to 29, with Heads of each of the Lives recorded.

Menage says, if all the books in the world were in the fire, there is not one which he would se eagerly snatch from the flames as Pittarch. That author never tires him; he reads him often, and always finds new beauties.

"If you destry year son, though no great scholar, to read and reflect, it is your duty to place into his hands the best translations of the best classical authors." Dr. Parr.

The Numbers already published contain the following Authors, which may be purchased separately:

Demosthenes. I. Demosthenes.
I. Completion of ditto, and Sallust
III. and IV. Xenophon's Anabasis and Cyropædia
V. to VII. Herodotus
VIII. and IX. Virgil
X. Pindar, with Anacreon XI. to XV. Tactius
XVI. Theophrastus, with 50 Characteristic Engravings
XVII. and XVIII. Horace and Phadrus
XIX. Juvenal and Persius
XX. to XXII. Thucydides
XXIII. to XXIX. Plutarch's Lives, with Engravings.

No. XXX. will be published on the 1st of June, containing Hesiod, Bion and Moschus, Nos. XXXI. and XXXII. will contain Cesar's Commentaries.

NOS. XXXI. and XXXII. will contain Cessar's Commentaries.

Each volume averages 350 pages, and is delivered monthly, with the Magazines, on application to any Bookseller.

Each volume averages 350 pages, and is delivered monthly, with the Magazines, on application to any Bookseller.

"From a careful examination of the volumes now before the public, we do not hesitate to declare our conviction, that a more important or a more interesting accession than this Library to our mational learnest to the classic writers in the hands of important or a more interesting accession than this Library to our mational learnest of the classic writers in the hands of serious or well-arranged plan has been proposed, before this time, they wrote. How example and the proof."—Monthly Review, solid instruction with the most emobiling in monthly volumes, there is nose that merits public patronage more than the 'Family Classical Library.' A series of enabled in monthly volumes, there is nose that merits public patronage more than the 'Family Classical Library.' A series of enabled control of enabled the control of enables of families and the instruction of yeath. It ought to find a place in every school library in the kingdom."—Stamford Bec.

Edited, printed, and published by A. J. Valpy, M. A. Red Lion Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

Popular Works,
Published by Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; Whittaker and Co.
London; and sold by all Bootsellers.

VAVERLEY NOVELS.—New Edition.
Values Thirtage, which accounts to the control of the control

VAYEMELE I MUVELS.—New Edition.
Volume Thirty-six, which concludes Reaganulet, and is illustrated by a Frontispicor and Vignette.
Volume 33, which contains the celebrated
Pertrait of the Author, appeared on its of February.
2. Vol. Seventeenth of the New Issue of the Waterlew New Leader and Leader

Waverley Novels, which concludes Ivanhoe.

3. Captain Basil Hall's Naval Life and Early

Voyages. First and Second Series. 6 vols. 20s. with engraved Titles.

Titles.

"A father may have given his son an excellent education, may have given his son an excellent education, may have executed for him, on going to sea, high patronage; may even the sea of the s rica, in 1837 and 1828. Sd edition, 8 vols. 16. 11s. 6d.; Plates separately, 10s. 6d.

5. Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather, First, Second, and Third Series. New editions, 10s. 6d. each Also, History of France, 3 vols. 10s. 6d.

6. Destiny. By the Author of " Marriage." 3 vols. 1/. 11s. 6d.

7. Marriage. 3 vols. 3d edition, 11. 1s.

8. The Inheritance. 3 vols. 2d edition, 9. The Cook's Oracle. A new edition,

7s. 6d. • • Of this popular work apwards of 60,000 copies have been sold.

10. Mrs. Dalgairns' Cookery. A new edit.
being the third. 72. 64.
Few works of this description have so speedily attained popularity, three editions having been called for in little more than Post 8vo. 5s. 6d.

HULSEAN LECTURES for the YEAR
1831.—The Veracity of the Historical Books of the Old Testament, from the Conclusion of the Pentateuch to the Opening of the Prophetis being a Continuation of the Argument for the Veracity of the Five Books of Moses.

By the Rev. J. J. BLUNT,
Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

The Society of Antiquaries of London: by desire.

The Society of Antiquaries of London: by desire.

The Society of Antiquaries of London: by desire.

The London State of the Assessing the State of the Assessing the State of the Assessing the State of Assessing the State of Lineary, Among the rest, are the following:—

Bowwart of Johnson.

The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century. Mr. Sheridan Knowley Hunchback.

On Parties, No. 1. By an Independent Pittite.

Voyages and Travels; Hall, Londer, Bruce.

Tithes in Ireland.

James Hong's Autobiography.

Epistles to the Literati, No. IV.

James Hong's Autobiography.

Epistles to the Literati, No. IV.

James Preser, 218, Ragean Bereet.

Now ready, in 8 vols. 8vo. with a Portrait, 34s.

MEMOIRS of SIR JAMDS CAMPBELL of Ardkinglas (formerly 8ir James Callander).

Written by HIMSELF.

Sir James Campbell is the father of Mrs. Thomas Sheridan.
He served during the greater part of the Seven Years 'War in Germany as Aide-de-camp to General Mostpn-visited most of the German Courts—had familiar intercourse with Voltaire—was a member of the most celebrated London Clubs, the "Savoirvivre," the "Pandementum," &c.—held the post of Secretary to the British Embassy at Paris on the eve of the Revolution—journeyed extensively in the East, and was again mixing in Pariatan acclety during the Ailled occupation of Paris.

Mémoires de Hortense. Duchesse de St. Lou-

Mémoires de Hortense, Duchesse de St. Leu, Bz-Reine de Hollande, in Vol. with Poetrait. III.

The Earl of Munster's Memoirs of the late

The Earl of Munster's Memoirs of the late War; together with the Personal Narraive of Captain Cooke, of the 45d Regiment. In 2 vols, post 8 vo. 21.

"These sketches are among the liveliest specimens of military description that we have happened to meet with anywhere. Lord Munster's picture of Soult's flight from Oporto may rank with the best pages of 'Cyril Thornton,' or 'the Nubsitern.' His volume is full of interest,—evidently the work of a humane and gallant mind, an enthusiastic soldier of Wellington."—Quarterly Review, March.

Sir Jonah Barrington's Personal Sketches of his own Times, 2d edition, with considerable Additions, 2 vols.

one observed when the center of Irish characters, Irish manners, Irish adventures, Irish vitticisms, and Irish opinions, for about fifty years; and a more amusing welange has seldom issued from the press."—Literary Gazette.

The Exquisites, or a New View of Exclu-aire Society; a Novel. 3 vols. 21s. Henry Colbura and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

Emigration: Emigrant's Manual.
On the 7th of May will be published,
MANUAL for EMIGRANTS to

A MANUAL AMERICA.
By COLVIN COLTON, A.M. of America.
Being designed to give all needful information to all Classes of Persons who think of going to America.
London: Westley and Davis, Stationers' Court, and Ave Maria Lane.

On Monday next will be published,

TAIT'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE,
No. II. for May 1838.

No. I. The Second Reading—2. The World of Books—
2. Nong of the Rhenish Provinces—4. The Irish Peasantry—
5. Wheesht!—6. The Sub-Lieutenant in Italy; to the Tri-Color—7. Use and Abuse of Political Terms—8. Sixonian Poetry—
9. Scotish Ballad, by W. Motherwell, Esq.—10. A Soldier's Tale, by John Maicolm, Esq.—11. Present State of Scotish Lairds and their Tenants—19. Female Letter-Writers—13. Eikon Basilike, or the Portraicture of his late Sacred Majesty—14. Political Sixo for the Three Northern English Counties—15. The Philosophy of Shaking Hands—16. Non-Proposals, or Doubts Resolved—17.
Rectish Yeomany—18. Keep Him Down—18. Incidence of Tithes—30. British Writers on America—21. Secoland Taxed because of Church-of-Englandism—32. On a Sharp Debate in a certain Noble House—62. Irish Melodies, Nos. 1. and II. New Series—34. Self-March Simpkin and Marshall,
London; and John Casanning, Dublin.

On Monday, the 2d edition, with 24 Plates, in 2 volspost 8vo. 21s.

THE DOMESTIC MANNERS of the AMERICANS.

AMERICANS.

BY FRANCES TROLLOPE.

"This is exactly the title-page we have long wished to see, and we rejoice to say, that now the subject has been taken up, tit handled by an English lady of sense and acutemese, who possesse very considerable power of expression, and enjoyed unusually from the control of the

New Burlington Street, April 1881.
BURKE'S PEERAGE and

R. BURKE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1838.

The Fourth edition of the above valuable work is now neutready for publication, considerably improved and enlarged from the highest authorities, and with entirely new Engravings of the Arms; and the public are requested to be particular in seeding their Orders to their respective Booksellers, to prevent the sustitution of any other Work.

To be published by Messers. Colburn and Bentley. New Barlington Street; Bell and Brasfute, Edinburgh, and J. Cumming. Publin.

Standard Novels, Vol. XV.

On the 1st of May, complete in 1 vol. neatly bound and illustrated, price 6s.

SELF-CONTROL.

By Mrs. BRUNTON.

The following have already appeared in the Standard Neveis—
The Pilot-The Spy-The Last of the Mohlcans—The Piecem—
Caleb Williams—St. Leon—Thaddeus of Warnaw—The Scient Chiefs—Frankenstein—The Ghoat Seer—Edgar Hunty, of the Sleep-Walker—The Hungarian Brothers—and Lee's Cantebury Tales.

"a" Most of the above, revised by their respective Authers, are complete in a single valume, price &c.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

In a few days, 9d edition, with great Additions, consisting of a Body of new Receipts, a Series of Modern Bills of Pare, and numerous engraved Designs for laying out the Table, in 1 visco. nextly and closely printed in double columns, comprising upwards of 500 pages,

THE COOK'S DICTIONARY.

By RICHARD DOLBY,

Of the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's Street.

a o This work contains no less than 5000 of the most approved and Modern Receipts in Cookery, Confectionery, Brewing, Baing, for making British Wines, and every other Branch of Demonstrations. The Alphabetical mode of arrangement, now it adopted, enables the housekeeper to find any given receipt is an instant.

Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

D On the lat of May will be published, price 1s. 64.

E M E R A R A; a Tale.

By HARRIET MARTINEAU.

Being No. IV. of Illustrations of Political Economy

No. I. Life in the Wilds, 2d edition: No. II. The Hill and the Valley; No. III. Brooke and Brooke Farm.
Charles Fox, 67, Paternoster Row.

On Monday, 7th of May, will be published, price 2s. 6d. the Third Part of FINDEN'S LANDSCAPE ILLUSTRA-TIONS to the Life and Works of Lord Byron.

1 Ones to the Life and worker of cort Dyren.

1. Geneva. J. D. Harding, after a Sketch by W. Page.

2. Chamouni. J. D. Harding, after a Sketch by W. Page.

3. Bellagio, Lage di Como. H. Gastinean.

4. Spoleto. J. D. Harding.

5. Portrait of Miss Chaworth, drawn by F. Stone.

5. Potrait of Miss Chaworth, drawn by F. Stone.

* The numerous subscribers are respectfully assured, that the want of regularity in the appearance of a Part on the first of every month, has solely arisen from an anxiety to prodect series of Plates every way worthy of the unprecedented secres which the work has met with, and from the time necessarily excupied in printing the large number required previous to pablication. Such arrangements, however, have at length been completed, as will ensure a more rapid appearance of the future Parts. John Murray, Albemarie Street; sold also by Charles Tilt, Fleet Street.

New Work by Washington Irving.
On the lat of May, in 8 vols. 8vo. uniformly with the former Series,

THE NEW SKETCH-BOOK; the ALHAMBRA.
By GEOFFREY CRAYON.
Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

In a few days will be published, in 8vo. price 7s. 6d. boards.

LEMENTS of GREEK GRAMMAR.

By the Rev. S. CONNOR.

London: Printed for Longman, Berger, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Nearly ready for publication,
TRUTH versus TACTICS; or, an Expose of certain recent Pyrotechnic Proceedings of the Counci
of the Royal Society, BIR JAMES SOUTH.
Printing for B. Fellowes, Ludgate Street.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Stret, Waterloe Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulton Stret, Oxfel Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 92, Royal Exchange; I. Marilsorough, Are Maria Lane, Ledgate Hill: A little Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinst and Co. Glazgew; and J. Cumming, Dublin.—Agent for America, O. Rich, 18, Red Lion Equary, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 798.

SATURDAY, MAY 5, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Calabria, during a Military Residence of Three Years: in a Series of Letters. By a General Officer of the French Army. 8vo. pp. 360. London, 1832. Wilson.

This pleasant volume contains many interesting notices of Calabria, which the writer traversed in every direction, and is besides enlivened, if we may use the word when speaking of moving accident by flood and field, with the most eventful history of the military operations and adventures of the French, in their occupation of the country during the three years from December 1807 to about the same period in 1810. Being ably translated from an original manuscript, it is as new as it is entertaining; and the reader must, we think, be very fastidious and difficult, who can hastily lay it down after beginning this narrative.

The contents are very various: encounters with brigands, perilous marches, sketches of the state of society, slight but valuable notes on ancient remains, and picturesque descriptions of productions and scenery, all combine to attract the attention, and satisfy, without fatiguing the mind. Our quotations shall be framed to shew this. We begin with a sample of the brigands and their system.

" In the month of September last a company of voltigeurs, of the 29th regiment of the line, while crossing the high mountains of the Syla to proceed from Catanzaro to Cosenza, was cut off on its march by Francatripa's band. This company lost its way, and just before it arrived at a village called Gli-Parenti, which is the common haunt of brigands, who share their plunder with the inhabitants, Francatripa, fear-ing to engage in open combat, thought it more advisable to have recourse to an odious stratagem, which succeeded far beyond his expectations. Meeting the company before it entered the village, he represented himself as the com-mander of the National Guards, and said he came on the part of the commune to offer refreshments to the troops. The officers of this detachment being unacquainted with the country, accepted the invitation without any distrust, and suffered themselves to be conducted by him to a large mansion, where, confiding in the feigned cordiality of their perfidious hosts, they were improvident enough to cause the arms of the troops to be piled on the ground in front of the door. To inspire the soldiers with a still greater sense of security, Francatripa and his villanous associates pressed them to take with them refreshments for the march; and just at the moment when they were preparing to resign themselves to repose, a pistol-shot fired from a window was the signal for a general massacre. The three officers, seated together in the parlour, were instantly despatched. A shower of balls from the adjacent houses, and from every approach to the spot, left no point of retreat open to those unfortu-nate soldiers, of whom not more than seven succeeded in making their escape. So soon as orders to burn Gli-Parenti, and put all the inhabitants to the sword; but the brigands had already retired, together with their accomplices, and the village, thus abandoned, became an immediate prey to the flames. This horrible treason, intelligence of which was now promulgated through the whole of Calabria, excited in the French a powerful desire of vengeance against the vile assassins."

Again :- " A brigand chief, whose cruelties have earned for him the name of 'Il Boia' (the executioner), more enraged than any of his sanguinary associates against such unhappy Frenchmen as had the misfortune to fall into his hands, used to inflict upon them the most horrible tortures. Being wounded in one of his attacks, he was at last secured and doomed to the scaffold, to the great joy of all those who were the objects of his vengeance. The enormities he had committed, the dreadful injuries he had done to a rich landowner, whose swineherd he had been formerly, made many of the inhabitants of Cosenza solicit as a favour that this wretch might be subjected to the same refinement of barbarity which he himself used daily to practise. It was urged that his nose should be first cut off, then his ears, then his lips; in short, they wished to employ a thousand different modes of torture upon him; contending that he should be made to drag on a life of agony until the hot weather, when his body, daubed over with honey to attract insects, should hang naked under the rays of a burning sun, so that he might thus expiate his criminal existence amidst the most excruciating torments. A great number of young men residing in the town did not blush to volunteer their services to carry these horrors into execution. The proposition, however, was rejected with indignation, and Il Boia was hung with many of his associates, who died, like himself, with an indifference which was not to be ascribed to courage, but to an inconceivable brutishness. Judge, then, of the disgust attending the duties we have to perform on the military commission! We are obliged to sit to a very late hour, shocked in the mean time with a repetition of the same atrocities: the greater part of the judges knowing very little of Italian, the heads of the several charges must be explained to them. The hideous appearance of the accused very often decides the sentence; and perhaps it often happens that some of these gallows-looking wretches are condemned on light grounds. It must not, however, be supposed that our hearts are so hardened, and our minds so prejudiced, as to act upon slight evidence in a matter of such serious moment. We often succeed in vindicating the triumph of innocence, and were, on a late occasion, fortunate enough to develope a horrible plot. A detachment of our troops, quartered in a village at some distance from Cosenza, was supplied with provisions by the commune. The commander of the civic guard took into custody the baker who furnished the bread, and denounced a very strong detachment was sent off, with | guilty of mixing arsenic with the dough. Three witnesses signed their names to the charge, and some pounds of dough were produced to confirm it. These having undergone a chemical process, left no doubt whatever of the presence of arsenic. Such proofs seemed quite convincing: but a variety of circumstances served to excite doubts in our minds, and at last it was clearly established that the accuser, a most determined villain, had no other grounds for the charge he had so wickedly concocted, than the feeling of deadly vengeance he indulged against the baker, whose daughter he wished to seduce. Cited before the tribunal, he was found to have absconded, together with his false witnesses; and this satisfied us as to the affair. Would it not really seem to you that this Calabria, the soil of which is so often shaken, reposes upon the very fire of hell; and that every shock of an earthquake which it feels vomits forth on its surface a legion of devils?"

From these atrocious transactions, we turn to the author's general picture of Calabria:

"If the eye reposes with pleasure on the beauty and variety of the situations which the mountains present, it cannot contemplate without dismay those deep and dark ravines, the inhabitants of which never find their silence disturbed, except by the roar of waters which, in the rainy season, form frightful torrents. There is not in Calabria any navigable river. The Laino, the Chratis, the Nieto, the Amato, and the Angitola, are only emanations from that multitude of torrents which furrow up and ravage the cultivated lands, inasmuch as their beds are never at rest. Such is the general aspect of the interior of the country; that of the plains washed by the sea is less animated, less varied, presenting alternately a soil arid and parched by a burning sun, and rendered fresh and fertile by genial rains. The plains, in-habited during the hot months, contain only a few indigent families. Worn down by intermitting fevers, they never enjoy any relaxation from them, except during the winter months; and thus their lives, passed between severe alternations, are generally cut short. Residence in this quarter, however, is dangerous only to those who are obliged to pass their nights on the spot. In the autumn season, the harvest people come down from the mountains and spread themselves over the flat country in great numbers; but as they return to their habitations before sun-set, they escape the noxious effects of the vapours which issue from the dry beds of the torrents, and from waters corrupted by passing over a foul course. The demands of the service frequently oblige our troops to bivouse in these pestilential places, where persons are oppressed with a heaviness and an inclination to sleep, which can scarcely be resisted. Our men, however, have generally escaped by a total denial of sleep, and by lighting large fires. But what severe losses had we not sustained before we became acquainted with the climate,—losses a thousand times more murderous than those occasioned by the brigands! this melancholy event was known at Cosenza, him before the military commission as being As soon as the snow falling on the mountains purifies the atmosphere, the plains are rendered habitable, and become a delightful retreat. The first rains of autumn refresh the arid soil, and bring forth a new crop, which covers the whole country with herbs and flowers. Then the people breathe a mild air, charged with perfumes from countless shrubs and plants, such as are kept in our conservatories for variety and ornament. The landed proprietors then quit the mountains to enjoy the charms of a new spring, and devote themselves to the pleasures of the chase. At this season the mountains are covered with thick fogs: the swelling mists dissolve themselves in snow over the more elevated parts, and deluge all the lower grounds with torrents of rain. The inhabitants of the villages, separated by these raging torrents, are excluded from all communication with each other at this dismal period. The rains continue for about two months with extreme violence, and prevail at occasional intervals until April. The climate of Calabria varies according to the character of the soil, and is consequently favourable to all sorts of produce. In the plains, sheltered against the north wind, there are found sugar-canes, aloes, and date-trees; while the pine and the birch cover the tops of the mountains. For four months, an excessive heat prevails all over the whole of the elevated parts, and particularly during the sirocco. A burning wind then diffuses itself around, like inflamed vapour proceeding from the mouth of a furnace; it lights upon the shores of the kingdom of Naples, where it exercises the most malign influence, after having traversed the maning inmusers, are having a traverse the scorching deserts of Africa. All nature seems to languish while it prevails: it withers the herbs and plants, which, however, revive, together with man, the moment the wind changes to the north. Iced water and seabathing are the only means that can be effectually employed to give tone to the nerves, and relieve that lessitude which oppresses both the mind and body. The great variety and richness of the productions of Calabria furnish an abundance of all the necessaries of life. It has grain of every description; wines which might be rendered as good as those of Spain and Languedoo, if the inhabitants had more intelligence and industry; and olive-oil in such profusion, that it is kept in vast cisterns. Great quantities of silk-worms are bred here, which, together with the growth of cotton, form a considerable article of produce. The licorios-root grows without any cultivation in the neglected lands; and in the forests is found a sort of manna, which is in great request. Immense droves of horned cattle pass alternately from the rich grazing grounds of the Syla to the aromatic pasture of the plains, where they remain during the winter. use of beer is not known to the Calabrians. They cook their food with hog's-lard, and use their milk in making cheese, which is justly prized for its delicacy. Their vast herds and flocks form not the sole wealth of the great landed proprietors; it consists principally of their race-horses, bred from superb stallions, of which they take the most scrupulous care. These horses are of the middle-size, extremely swift, and full of fire and vigour. But the animal which is of most use in a country where communications are so difficult as in this...that animal, without which the inhabitants could neither collect their crops nor transport their produce—is the mule; the beauty and strength of which are no less admirable, than its sagaof y and steadiness in making its way through violent shocks which were repeated at several armed with muskets, pistols, poniards, and a the most dangerous passes. In the marshy intervals from the 5th of February to the 28th sort of belt in the shape of a cartouch-box, plains, buffaloes are met with in considerable of May destroyed the greater part of the build- which contains a great quantity of ammunities.

numbers. The appearance of these animals is formidable, and their attack dangerous. When tamed, they are employed in labouring work. It is only by their aid, when they are harnessed to very high carts, that the inhabitants are enabled to effect a passage over the rivers. In all parts of Calabria there is a great quantity of game of every description. The sea-coasts abound with fish: the sword-fish supplies food to a part of the inhabitants during several months of the year, and the tunny forms a lucrative branch of commerce. These provinces, so highly favoured by their climate and productions, are deprived of the advantage of a good harbour. Still, however, before the war, they carried on a very considerable trade in corn, wine, silk, cotton, licorice, manna, oranges, lemons, chestnuts, and dried fruits; but their staple commodity was oil. This latter article constitutes at present the principal part of their commercial wealth, and supplies the soap manufactories of Marseilles and Trieste. These exportations ought to produce opulence and comfort. Nature has done every thing for the country, but the vices of the government have marred its prosperity for many ages. The condition of the peasants is most wretched: property is extremely disproportioned, there being in Calabria very few persons of moderate incomes. Small proprietors are very rarely to be met with, and in no country is there a more sudden transition from dire indigence to superabundant wealth. The consequence is, that total want of emulation which is every where to be observed. The climate and the soil do more than half the work, and the hand of man defeats the execution of the remainder. Thus it happens that productions of every kind are at this day in Calabria only the spontaneous gifts of nature, without any aid from art. With the exception of a few cities, and some towns that are regularly built, all the other frequented places present the most miserable and disgusting appearance. The whole interior of their houses is a mass of revolting filth. The pigs live familiarly with the inmates, and it often happens that children in the cradle are devoured by them. These animals are of a particular species, and quite black: they are so numerous, that they obstruct all the streets and the approach to every house. When we consider that ancient Greece has been, of all countries in the universe, the best peopled, the most civilised, and the best cultivated, it is impossible, in the present day, not to deplore the lot of so fine a country as this, condemned for ages to see itself perishing through each succeeding year, and becoming the abode of misery and pestilence. The rivers desolate the lands on which they border, and leaving in their course a noxious deposition of mud, infect a great part of the country, so that the inhabitants are obliged to abandon their ancient possessions. Earthquakes have also caused many melancholy changes; every thing bears testimony to the cruel ravages occasioned by that of 1783. This frightful catastrophe, which has altered the aspect of these countries in an inconceivable manner, was first announced with the most appalling indications. Close, compact, and immovable mists seemed to hang heavily over the earth: in some places the atmosphere appeared red-hot, so that it was every moment expected it would burst out in flames: the water of the rivers assumed an ashy and turbid colour, while a suffocating ings of farther Calabria. The number of inhabitants who were crushed under the ruins of their houses, or who perished on the strands of Scylla, was estimated at about 50,000. The rivers, arrested in their course by the fall of mountains, became so many infected lakes, corrupting the air in all directions. Houses, trees, and large fields, were hurried down together to the bottom of deep glens without in short. all being separated by the shock;the extraordinary calamities and changes which can be effected by earthquakes were beheld at this deplorable period, under the various forms which characterised them. After such convulsions of nature, it will not appear extraordinary that Calabria retains but few monuments which attest its grandeur and opulence as a colony founded by the ancient Greeks."

Of the people, the author says :-

" The finesse and subtlety of the Calabrians are truly astonishing. These qualities may in some respects be referred to their climate, and perhaps they have been inherited from the Greeks. Their language, which is a corrupt Italian, more unintelligible than that of the other provinces, is full of originality and force. The uninformed classes express themselves in it with a facility, a spirit, and an animation of sentiment, which would seem to indicate genius. According to the general practice of the Italians, their conversations are accompanied with a most significant pantomime. A sign, a gesture, a word, an exclamation, are all sufficient to make them perfectly understand each other. The whole frame is in motion when they have an interest in persuading those whom they address. Their manners are supple and insinuating; their minds very acute; and persons not acquainted with the perfidious arts which they are capable of practising, might easily become their dupes. Endowed with a rare talent of forming an accurate estimate of the character of each individual with whom they have any transactions, vile cheats, and gross flatterers, they know how to bring into play all possible expedients in order to accomplish their ends; and if the ordinary means fail, a musket-shot, or a stab of a poniard, avenges them for their miscalculation. There are few persons among the Calabrians, of any class, from the highest to the lowest, who are not stained with many murders; a foul reproach, which is principally to be attributed to the neglect of the tribunals. The thirst of vengeance, which is perpetuated in families, and a strong propensity to litigation and chicanery, make a real hell of this fine country. These people have no true principle of religion or morals. Like all ignorant individuals, they are superstitious to excess: the most atrocious brigand carries in his bosom relics and images of saints, which he invokes at the very moment he is committing the greatest enormities. The Calabrians are of the middle size, well-proportioned, and very mus-cular. Their complexion is swarthy, their features strongly marked, their eyes full of fire and expression. In common with the Spa-niards, to whom they bear a strong resem-blance, they are dressed at all seasons in large black mantles, which give them a sombre and lugubrious appearance. The crown of their hats is extremely high, terminating in a point, and has something fantastical and disagreeable to the eye about it. In consequence of the inveterate animosities by which families are stench of sulphur diffused itself around. The divided, they never go out without being violent shocks which were repeated at several armed with muskets, pistols, poniards, and a intervals from the 5th of February to the 28th sort of belt in the shape of a cartouch-box, Always prepared for attack or defence, they haps, has quickened its appearance, with the pass fiercely before their enemies;—that is, following dedication: pass fiercely before their enemies;—that is, before those who they know are watching for the very first opportunity to take away their lives. Barricaded in their houses at nightfall, nothing but the most urgent business can make them stir out. The Calabrian who has become a brigand, and he who cultivates the soil, have so many relations in common, that they cannot well be distinguished from each other. Their manners, dress, and mode of arming, are the The only difference is, that the brigand employs the fruits of his plunder in the purchase of a cotton-velvet waistcoat, garnished with silver buttons, and in providing plumes and ribands to ornament his hat."

We have now only to conclude with two brief extracts.

Cape Vaticano, where Sextus Pompey gained wistow over the fleet of Augustus, " is now a victory over the fleet of Augustus, (says the author) covered with myrtles, laurels, and the finest aloes I have ever seen. It projects for some distance into the sea, and affords shelter to a great number of fishing-boats. which find here secure anchorage against the which and here seems and wage against the winds. We dined very pleasantly under the cool shade upon fish of every kind, and an abundance of quails. This is the season at which these birds of passage arrive from Africa. They are so fatigued by their long aerial voyage, that there is no difficulty in catching them with the hand. The fishermen catch them in thousands, by extending their nets along the rocks; and this they call 'quailfishing.

"One of the greatest sources of trade in the duchy of Corigliano, consists in the making of licorice-juice. In the month of November they pluck up this plant by the roots, and dry it in stoves. Then it is put into a mill, which reduces it to shreds resembling tow; after this it is placed in a cauldron of boiling water, whence it passes into another that brings it to the consistence necessary for its being made up in the form of sticks, as it is sent to foreign countries. Nature would seem to have studiously furnished this region with all sorts of productions, even such as are not met with in the most favoured climates. The mountains adjacent to Corigliano supply the best manna in all Calabria; the tree that produces it is the ash, which buds forth in small leaves, and is known by the name of ornus. It grows without any cultivation in the midst of forests, and its substance is collected by means of a horizontal incision made in the trunk of the tree.'

Once more we recommend this entertaining volume to our readers: it will make a wet day (such as this on which we write our Review pass off without ennui; and should the weather be fine, teach how to appreciate the wildnesses, the clime, the manners, and the character, of Calabria, too little known to the majority of readers.

A Queer Book. By the Ettrick Shepherd. 12mo. pp. 379. Edinburgh, 1832, Black-wood; London, Cadell.

This is a queer book -queer in title, queer in plan, queer in execution, queer in beginning, in middle, and in end: must we add, it is more queer than amusing, although some of the auld warld stories are curious, and there are many poetical thoughts and beauties scattered by the Shepherd over his pages? We fancy this to be the volume to which he alludes in his late publication, as one of which Mr. Blackwood had long been in possession, but which it was likely be would never produce; and that hint, per-

Made up of all the fowls' feathers that fly in the air,
From the rook to the wild awan.
And from the kitty wren to the peacock,
As the Shepherd's rade-mocum,
As the varied strains in which his soul delighteth, He dedicates most respectfully to Christopher North and Timothy Tickler, Esquires.

There are twenty-six poems in the Queer Book, the great majority tales of witches and glamour; and a few of a very miscellaneous character, including a love-affair or two, and one or two allegorical pieces on the Reform Bill, in which Mr. Hogg does not see all the perfections proclaimed by its friends and advocates. His opinions, too, on the Catholic question are, it may be gathered, rather adverse to concession; but they are so poetically couched, that we will venture to copy part of the Shep-herd's dialogue in which the subject is discussed.

"The Yarrow, like a baldrick bright,
Upon the vale lay bathed in light;
And all her burns and branching rills,
Like silver serpents of the hills;
While far around the eastern heaven
The dark blue mantle of the even
Was softly heaving up the sky,
So silent and so solemnly,
As if day's fading beauties bland
Were shaded by an angel's hand.

One portion more of mortal prime, A splendid shred of living time,
Down in the shades of Death was fading,
And o'er its bier the pall was spreading.

And o'er its bier the pall was spreading.

A.A., Will! here we can look abroad
On all the goodness of our God.
We see the heavens benignant smile
On this belowed and favoured isle;
Our Maker prompt the land to bless,
And our hearts glow with thankfulness.
But what avail these blessings sent,
If by our rulers all misspent?
It grieves me more than I can tell,
To see the king we loved so well,
And hero firm, whose course sublime
Has been the marvel of our time,
Betray the trust in them reposed,
Abandon faith, and, undisclosed,
To have their perjured measures driven
On, in the teeth of earth and heaven.
Confound them all! for I seever
They're all mansworn, and d—d for ever!

—Take time, take time, dear neighbour Sar

They're all mansworn, and d—d for ever!

—Take time, take time, dear neighbour Sandy,
Ere with rebelikon's birn I brand thee.
There's such a thing, can you not see,
As flerce and fell necessity:
And here I solemnly protest,
I think that all's done for the best.
If 't will not work as hoped—what then?
The senate must annul' t again.
But glad am I, as one approver,
That that most sickening plea is over;
For sye since I could climb a hill
We have been bothered with that Bill.
Ruin awaited the denia!—
Tis fair and just to make the trial.

Poor will, def. will! think on the time.

Tis fair and just to make the trial.

—Poor Will! daft Will! think on the time When, o'er these beights and rocks sublime, Our fathers, for the sacred cause Of truth, our liberties and laws, From wrath of Popula tyrant's slaves, No shelter found but in their graves; Hunted like bandits to the last, Their forms lay bleeching in the blast, Till found by shepherds on the waste, With Bibles in each bloody breast; And these were all were left to tell Their names, or in what cause they fell. Who thinks of that must think with pain Of setting up that race again— Who thinks of that must think with pa Of setting up that race again— Who, like the devil, let them get But one small finger in the stare, And soon they'll wrench a hole therein, Will let both Pope and Popery in; And the reformed religion must, Once more degraded, bite the dust.

The Lord forbid! as I should pray it, I dare not think it, far less say it— But wiser men than you or me But waser men than you or me
In this expediency agree.
As counterbalance to your clamours,
I take the Reverend Doctor Chalmers,
Whose heavenly and whose bold appeal
On my conviction placed the seal; Thomson and Inglis, men of note, Frank Jeffrey and Sir Walter Scott; The world more to their judgment looks Than kings or queens, or lords or dukes— When ruling heads like these combine, What's to be thought of yours or mine?

Sandy.—Of Chalmers I shall say but little;
He meddled with a point right kittle,
And said what ill became that day
A Protestant divine to say.
The best of men deceived may be— A Protestant divine to say.

The best of men descrived may be—
They have been so, and so was he;
But he'll yet live to change his boast,
And see his error to his cost.
I grieve for Thomson's dereliction;
But he's so giv'n to contradiction,
That, feud and ferment to prolong,
He'll take a side he knows is wrong.
Jeffrey's religious belie?
Is something like himself—a brief;
And though Sir Walter may be steady,
He's more than half a pope already,
Which I can prove a strict reality,
From something said in Old Mortality.
But though an angel stood on high,
Even in you bright and beauteous sky,
And swore with right hand to the heaven,
That popery's rights should back be given,
I would distrust the dire award,
And dread a demon's voice I heard. And dread a demon's voice I heard.

And dread a demon's voice I heard.

'See yon, and hold your peace for ever!'
Cried startied Will, with quake and quiver,
And pointed to a dreadful guest
That reared his pale form in the west.
Standing upon a friese of gold,
He filled the west with human mould;
His eye scowled with the gleam of death,
As if in sorrow and in wrath;
His right hand, like a polar ray,
Was heaved above the milky way;
The evening star kithed like a gess.
In buckler of his diadera;
And altogether such a lightness,
Such angel features, and such brightness,
Never appeared on Scottish sky,
To startled shepherd's fearful eye.
Will saw in it the guardian sprite

Will saw in it the guardian sprite
Of Erin, smiling with delight;
But Sandy knew the visitant
For Angel of the Covenant,
Rising in wrath with lifted hand,
Indignant o'er a guilty land;
To swear in language motioned stros
The church's time should be no longe

With beating hearts and bristling hair, Our shepherds left their mountain lair; For the last moorcock of the fell Had mounted from the heather bell, Had mounted from the heather bell, With rigid wing and crow elate, And silent sank beside his mate. Hushed was the pipe of gray curiew, And lonely plover's plaintive whew. The bleating kid had sought its dam, The ewe cowered down beside the lamb, And bogies of the darksome cleugh, Put on their robes of deadly hus, The hardened sinner to belsy, And turn his stems another way. The hardened sinner to belay,
And turn his steps another way—
An eirier scene man never saw,
From the dark cone of Benger-Law.
The eastern emerald glimmered high,
The polar bear had ope'd his eye,
While, worst and dreadfullest by far,
The giant of the western star
Frowned in his majesty sublime,
O'er shadows of the western clime—
Sooth it was time, one's spirit feels,
For our two herds to take their heels.

There seems to us to be poetry enough in this quotation to excuse any thing; and those most adverse to the Shepherd's doctrines, as well as the critics, who will be apt to comment on his heterogeneity, must perforce confess the lavish beauty of his imagery and descriptive powers. Examples of these we shall now proceed to select, without caring from what places they are taken; and afford one continuous specimen of a tale, in order to enable our readers to form their own judgment of the whole.

The following pretty idea is from the "Wife of Ezdel-more.'

"And the merlin hang in the middle air,
With his little wings outspread,
As if let down from the heavens there,
By a viewicas silken thread."

The opening of "Elen of Reigh" also claims our tribute.

"Have you never heard of Elen of Reigh, The fairest flower of the North Countrie? The maid that left all maidens behind, In all that was lovely, super, and kind;

As sweet as the breeze o'er beds of balm.
As happy and gay as the gamesome lamb,
As light as the feather that dances on high,
As blithe as the lark in the breast of the sky,
As modest as young rose that blossoms too so
As mild as the breeze on a morning of June;
Her voice was the music's softest key,
And her form the comeliest symmetry.

But let bard describe her smile who can, For that is beyond the power of man; There never was pen that hand could frame, Nor tongue that faltered at maiden's name, Could once a distant tint convey Nor tongue that faitered at maiden's name, Could once a distant int convey Of its lovely and benignant ray. You have seen the morning's folding vest Hang dense and pale upon the east, As if an angel's hand had strewn The dawning's couch with the elider-down, And shrouded with a curtain gray The cradle of the infant day; And 'mid this orient dense and pale, Through one small window of the veil. You have seen the sun's first radiant hue Lightening the dells and vales of dew, With smile that seemed through glory's rim From dwellings of the cherubim; And you have thought, with holy awe, A lovelier sight you never saw, Scorning the heart who dared to doubt it; Alas! you little knew about it! At beauty's shrine you ne'er have knelt, Nor felt the flame that I have felt; Nor chanced the virgin smile to see Of beauty's model, Elen of Reigh!" the death and funeral of this Elen's c

The death and funeral of this Elen's companion, who grew with her like a twin cherry on the same stalk, has also some touching natural inos.

"The grave is open; the mourners gaze
On bones and akulis of former days;
The pall's withdrawn—in letters sheen,
Maria Gray, aged eighteen;
Is read by all with heaving sighs,
And ready hands to moistened eyes.
Solemn and slow the bier is laid
Into its deep and narrow bed,
And the mould rattles o'er the dead!

And the modild ratties o'er the dead!
What sound like that can be conceived!
That thunder to a soul bereaved!
When crumbling sones grate on the bier
Of all the bosom's core held dear:
"Tis like a growl of hideous wrath—
The last derisive laugh of Death
Over his victim that lies under;
The heart's last bands then rent asunder, and no communion more to be And no communion more to be Till time melt in eternity!"

From the "Grousome Carle" we transcribe a picture of another sort.

"As he came up by the Craigieburn,
With stalwart step and free,
He lookit up to the Saddle-Yoke,
As he would take wings to flee;

And ave he cuist his burley head
To fling the hair from his ee;
And he hemmed and he snockered so awsome loud,
That the leaves shook on the tree:

And the little wee birds held up their necks, And made their crops full sma', And till that Carle was out of sight,

A breath they durst not draw And the woodman grippit to his long bill, Thinking his life was gone, And ran behind the hazel bush, Till the stalwart Carle passed on.

And the deers took to their heels and ran, With their noses from the wind, And, till they wan to Carryfron Gans, They never looked them behind.

And the very dogs of the shepherd lads Were seized with burning dread, For they took their tails between their houghs, And made to the bracs with speed:

And they shot out their crookit tongues, In length more than a span, And laid their lugs back to their necks, And whinkit as they ran.

And the owsen cockit their stupid heads, And switch their tails full long, And aye they capered round and round, And wist not what was wrong.

And aye when the Carle gave a yowte, Or snockered with belch and bray, Then all the rocks played clatter again, And nichered for miles away.

And the wedders started on the steep,
Or scoured alongst the lea,
And the little wee kids rose from their lairs,
And blette most eldrichlye.

But if this Carle was flesh and blood,
Or a monster come from hell,
Or risen out of the deeps of the sea,
No man in the land could tell.

We will contrast the foregoing with four verses painting a lovely lady, riding forth to hawk.

"A golden comb with diamonds bright, Her seemly virgin crown, Shone like the new moon's lady light O'er cloud of amber brown.

The lightning that shot from her eyne, Flickered like elfin brand;
It was sharper nor the sharpest spear In all Northumberland.

The hawk that on her bridle-arm Outspread his pinions blue, To keep him steady on the perch As his loved mistress flew,

Although his een shone like the gleam, Upon ane sable sea, Yet to the twain that ower them beamed, Compared they could not be."

The disappearance of this fair dame in an enchanted vessel is also truly poetical.

" But ave the ship, the bonny ship, Outowre the green wave flew Swift as the solan on the wing, Or terrified sea-mew.

No billow breasted on her prow, Nor levelled on the lee: She seemed to sail upon the air, And never touch the sea."

We conclude with the only piece which it is possible to give entire, as a fair example of the author's general qualities. It is called "Ringan and Mav."

" I heard a laverock singing with glee, And, oh! but the bird sang cheerilye; Then I askit at my true-love Ringan, If he kend what the bonny bird was singing?

Now, my love Ringan is bilthe and young, But he has a fair and flattering tongue; And, oh! I'm feard I like ower weel His tales of love, though kind and leal! So I said to him, in scornful ways, 'You ken no word that wee bird says!

'You ken no word that wee bird says!'
Then my love he turn'd about to me,
And there was a smile in his pawky ee;
And he says, 'My May, my dawtied dow,
I ken that strain far better nor you;
For that little fairy that lilts so loud,
And hangs on the fringe of the sunny cloud,
Is telling the tale, in chants and chimes,
I have told to thee a thousand times.
I will let thee hear how our strains accord,
And the laverock's sweet sang, word for word:—
Interventation of the Lork's Says.

And the laverock's aweet sang, word for word:

*Interpretation of the Lark's Song.

*Oh, my love is bonny and mild to see,
As awecily she sits on her dewy lea,
And turns up her cheek and clear gray eye,
To list what's saying within the sky!
For she thinks my morning hymn so sweet,
Wi'the streamers of Heaven aneath my feet,
Where the proud goshawk could never won,
Between the gray cloud and the sun,
And she thinks her love a thing of the skies,
Sent down from the holy Paradise,
To sing to the world, at morn and even,
The sweet love-songs in the bowers of Heaven.
O, my love is bonny, and young, and chaste,

The sweet love-songs in the bowers of Heaven.

O, my love is bonny, and young, and chaste,
As sweetly she sits in her mossy nest!
And she deems the birds on bush and tree
As nothing but dust and drout to me.
Though the robin warble his wassome chirl,
And the merie gar all the greenwood dirt,
And the storm-cock touts on his towering pine,
She trows their songs a mock to mine;
The linty's cheip a ditty tame,
And the shillfa's everlasting rhame;
The plover's whew a solo drear,
And the whilly-whaup's ane shame to hear;
And whenever a lover comes in view,
She cowers beneath her screwn of dew.
O, my love is bonny! her virgin breast

O, my love is bonny! her virgin breast
Is sweeter to me nor the dawning east;
And well do I like, at the gloaming still,
To dreep from the lift or the lowering hill,
And press her nest as white as milk,
And her breast as soft as the downy slik.

Now when my love Ringan had warbled away To this base part of the laverock's lay, My heart was like to burst in twain, And the tears flowed from mine eyne like rain; At length he said, with a sigh full lang, 'What ails my love at the laverock's sang?'

'What alls my love at the laverock's sang?'
Says I, 'He's ane base and wicked bird
As ever rose from the dewy yird;
It's a shame to mount on his morning wing,
At the yetts of heaven sic sangs to sing;
And all to win, with his amorous din,
A sweet little virgin bird to sin,
And wreck, with flattery and song combined,
His dear little maiden's peace of mind!
Oh, were I her, I would let him see
His songs should all be lost on me!

Then my love took me in his arms, And 'gan to laud my leifou charms; But I would not so much as let him spes Nor stroke my chin, nor kiss my cheek: For I fear'd my heart was going wrang, It was so moved at the laverock's sang.

Yet still I lay with an upcast ee,
And still he was singing sae bonnilye,
That, though with my mind I had great strife,
I could not forbear it for my life;
But, as he hung on the heaven's brow,
I said, I ken not why nor how,
What's that little deevil saying now?

What's that little deevil asying now!"

Then my love Ringan he was so glad,
He leugh till his folly pat me mad;
And he said, 'My love, I will tell you true—
He seems to sing that strain to you;
For it says, 'I will range the yird and air
To feed my love with the finest fare;
And when she looks from her bed to me,
With the yearning love of a mother's ee,
Oh! then I will come, and draw her nearer,
And watch her closer, and love her dearer,
And we never shall part till our dying day,
But love and love on for ever and aye!"

But love and love on for ever and aye!'

Then my heart it bled with a thrilling pleasure When it learn'd the laverock's closing measure, And it rose, and rose, and would not rest, And would hardly bide within my breast. Then up I rose, and away I sprung, And said to my love, with acorn'ul tongue, That it was ane big and burning shame—
That he and the lark were both to blame—
For there were some lays so soft and bland, That breast of maiden could not stand; And if he lay in the wood his lane, Quhill I came back to list the strain Of an amorous bird amang the broom, Then he might lie quhill the day of doom I But for all the cturt and strife I made.

But for all the sturt and strife I made, For all I did, and all I said, Alas! I fear it will be lang Or I forget that wee burd's sang! And langer still or I can fice The lad that told that sang to me!"

From these extracts it will be seen that there is much to admire in Mr. Hogg's new produc-tion, the very quaintness and wildness of which are great recommendations. There are also some incongruities to censure, and such rhymes, occasionally, as never were seen before. A more grave objection may occur to some in the too frequent introduction of sacred names and allusions to holy things, which ill assort with the ludicrous ideas in juxts-position. It is evident, however, that nothing profane is intended: on the contrary, the whole spirit of the work is an intense love of nature, and, through nature, where nature, and not warlockry, is the theme, a fervent aspiration to God.

Courtes Explications sur les 12,000 francs offerts par Madame la Duchesse de Berri aux indigens attaqués de contagion.

SUCH is the title of the last pamphlet of M. de Chateaubriand, which the noble viscount has made the vehicle of some severe animadversions on the government of Louis Philip and the ministry of the 13th of March. The matter, however, with which he commences his brochure is more immediately connected with its title. He begins by reprinting his correspondence with M. de Bondy, the prefect of the Seine, which ended in the refusal of the Duchess de Berri's donation. He then tells us that 1000 francs had been sent to each of the twelve arrondissements into which Paris is divided. His secretary found only five of the mayors at home, of whom one refused the donation on the instant, and four accepted it; but he adds in a postscript, that one of the four had afterwards returned the money by order of the prefect

We seldom meddle with continental pamphleteering, having quite enough ado to keep up the record of our own progress in literature, science, and art; but the following will, we think, gratify our readers, as a specime of the writings of a remarkable individual—the Viscount de Chateaubriand, whose residence in England led to the personal esteem of many thousands, independently of his high-character as a literary man.

tary had not seen, he received answers explanatory of their motives for declining to accept; and as to the other five, he says, that not having received any answer, he is still in doubt as to what course they mean to pursue.

"Here I am, then," he proceeds, "with my 8000 francs; but I am far from being at a loss to dispose of them. Had the authorities thought fit to accept the money, the affair would have ended with my first note, and the receipt of the prefect. But they have preferred giving me a part to play. They have opened for me a wide field of political controversy. I shall not go over the whole of it yet, as it does not relate to me alone; there are some points which call for a reply. It shall not be said it was in vain that an august princess did me the honour to extend to me her confidence. I enter, then, the lists into which I am called.

"No one has the right to interdict the beneficence of a race to whom France owes her laws and liberties, her arts, her monuments, and her civilisation, her schools, her colleges, and hospitals. Until the tree is cut down, who shall hinder it from bearing its fruit? France, which could formerly admire the virtue even of an enemy, become so savage and so spiteful as to repel an act of humanity? What will Europe think of the firmness of a government which trembles at a woman's alms, and transforms an act of charity into a plot against

" And what has been done to this woman who thus thinks of our misfortunes? She has only been banished, proscribed, and despoiled, although innocent of the ordonnances; her son has been robbed of his crown, and at ten years of age, has been condemned to wander over the earth, a houseless orphan. This ungrateful widow, so well treated by the poniard of Louvel, and this quasi legitimacy, has the impudence to send 12,000 francs from her place of exile to Frenchmen attacked by a cruel malady! She dares to give a little food and clothing to those who have not wherewithal to cover their nakedness! Who does not feel himself filled with indignation at such a crime? Will not the whole population of Paris rise once more in anger, and barricade themselves against this bill of exchange payable at sight to the poor? And I, the responsible minister, who have signed this unconstitutional ordonnance, shall I not be sent to Vincennes, and impeached for my temerity?
"But should not this act of charity have been performed in secret? Does not the ostentation of the gift betray a concealed object?

" Had it been secret, it would instantly have been said, that the mother of the Duke de Bordeaux had been distributing money to organise an insurrection, and the 12,000 francs would have been metamorphosed into 12,000,000. What the Duchess de Berri has done is French; what I have done in her name is French: we have done it with head erect, and in open day. The name of the widow which has hitherto been honoured only by the calumnies of her enemies, has at length appeared publicly, in a manner worthy of her. The first time that the voice of the Duke de Bordeaux's mother has been heard since her banishment, has not been to claim a throne, but to offer succour to the unfortunate.

"Is it not evident, nevertheless, that some political object is concealed under this appearance of charity? No such an idea has ever entered the mind of the Duchess de Berri. It is not 12,000 francs taken from her own poverty to give to the poor of Paris which could add a craft of the poor of Paris which could add a craft Turk is but the confederate of King William."

invested.

"Gentlemen of the quasi legitimacy, employ the same arms against us; relieve the unfortunate in our ranks; overwhelm with your benefits the three oppositions arrayed against you, the Carlists, the Bonapartists, and the Republicans, or rather the universal opposition by which you are pursued; cover the country with prosperity, and so close our mouths; disburden the people of a few hundred millions of taxes; give good laws to our communes and departments; pen up no longer, like flocks of sheep, the valiant nation whom you first raised into rebellion, and then betrayed; maintain your wild and foolish occupation of Romagna: do not bundle up the tri-coloured flag for very fear lest it be seen on those shores where it has been so often displayed in victory; keep and colonise our African conquest : restore the kingdom to the rank from which you have made it fall; talk no more of independence while our citizens are slaughtered in the streets, and our public writers are crowded into jails; give us no more songs of triumph in evacuating Belgium or Ancona at the command of an English minister or an Austrian subaltern; pass your days no longer between the gates of St. Pelagie and the doors of foreign cabinets, as if crammed with liberty and covered with glory :- then, and not till then, will you embarrass your opponents.*

"There is nothing more common than to hear a young Frenchman making a public boast of his being a conspirator; he will recount all the details, without forgetting day, hour, or place, to some spy, whom he takes for a confederate; he will openly tell you, or rather he will exclaim to the passers by,—'We have forty thousand men, well drilled and well armed; and there are sixty thousand cartridges in such a street, at such a number, in the last Catiline goes to dance, play, or sing.

"What now exists in France is not a monarchy, but a bastard republic, of the basest alloy, which wears royalty in its bosom, like a concealed breastplate, to receive the blows which are directed against the government itself. This is a sham royalty,—a bank of forced earth, behind which M. Casimir Perier, the true president of the republic, takes shelter from the battery directed against him.

"The mother of the Duc de Bordeaux is too far off to hear the courageous mockeries which are lavished on her weakness and misfortunes. If she did, she would pardon them. The last words uttered by a generous prince-I heard them from his dying lips—were,—' Let the man's life be spared.' His widow has succeeded to a fallen crown, which possibly his orphan son may never wear, - a crown which was shaken by Charles X. from his whitened head, and from the weight of which two other brows already loaded with grief may well be permitted to escape.

"Amidst the general grief and desolation with which families and individuals have been visited, let this suffice for politics. The government gives no sign of the religion professed by thirtythree millions of Frenchmen; it prays not and weeps not at the altars of the people; it pronounces not the name of Providence either in seasons of prosperity or of adversity. In England, the land of freedom, the government appoints fast-days and prayers for the removal

From two of the seven mayors whom his secre- | new right to those with which she is already | of the calamity; in France, the theatres are opened on Easter Sunday, as if to brave contagion, and throw contempt on the greatest solemnity of the Christian religion.

"Here end we this task: it is time to hold our peace when death is every where imposing silence. The answer I address to an adversary may reach him as he rests on his threshold: if it be he, on the contrary, who is destined to live, where shall I be when his reply is brought to me? Perhaps in that place of rest at which no one need now be alarmed, especially those whose sad years, like my own, extend only from the period of terror to that of pestilence, the first and last horizon of our lives. Trève : laissons passer les cercueils!"

Contarini Fleming: a Psychological Autobio-4 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. graphy. Murray.

WE have seen so little of this work, that we can say little of it, except that the author traverses the most interesting regions of the earth, and writes in a very original style. We quote one example, which will speak for itself: the topics are innumerable, and of every species and character, and all recommended by brevity.

" Halil Pacha paid me a visit one day at my residence on the Bosphorus, and told me, that he had mentioned my name to the sultan, who had expressed a desire to see me. As it is not etiquette for the padisha to receive Franks, I was of course as sensible of the high honour, as I was anxious to become acquainted with the extraordinary man who was about to confer it. The sultan was at this moment at a palace on the Bosphorus, not far from Tophana; hither on the appointed day I repaired with Halil, and the Drogueman of the Porte. We were ushered into a chamber, where a principal officer of the household received us, and where I smoked out of a pipe tipped with diamonds, house of the street.' And then this modern and sipped coffee perfumed with roses in cups studded with precious stones. When we had remained here for about half an hour, Mustapha, the private secretary and favourite of the sultan, entered, and after saluting us, desired us to follow him. We proceeded along a corridor, at the end of which stood two or three eunuchs, richly dressed, and then the door opened, and I found myself in an apartment of moderate size, painted with indifferent arabesques in fresco, and surrounded with a divan of crimson velvet and gold. Seated upon this, with his feet on the ground, his arms folded, and in a hussar dress, was the grand signor. As we entered, he slightly touched his heart, according to the fashion of the Orientals, and Mustapha, setting us an example, desired us to seat ourselves. I fancied, and I was afterwards assured of the correctness of my observation, that the sultan was very much constrained, and very little at his ease. truth is, he is totally unused to interviews with strangers, and this was, for him, a more novel situation than for me. His constraint wore off, as conversation proceeded. He asked a great many questions, and often laughed, turning round to Mustapha with a familiar nod when my replies pleased him. He inquired much about the Albanian war. Without flattering my late commander, it was in my power to do him service. He asked me what service I had before seen, and was evidently surprised when I informed him I was only an amateur. He then made many inquiries as to the European forces, and, as I answered them, I introduced some opinions on politics, which interested him. He asked me who I was. I told him I was the son of the prime minister of a power always friendly to the Ottoman. His eyes sparkled, and he repeated several times, 'It is well, it is well;' meaning, I suppose, that he did not repent of the interview. He told me, that in two years' time he should have two hundred thousand regular infantry. That if the Russian war could have been postponed another year, he should have beat the Muscovites; that the object of the war was to crush his schemes of regeneration; that he was betrayed at Adrianople as well as at Varna. He added, that he had only done what Peter the Great had done before him, and that Peter was thwarted by unsuccessful wars, yet at last succeeded. I, of course, expressed my conviction that his highness would be as fortunate. The padisha then abruptly said that all his subjects should have equal rights, that there should be no difference between Moslemin and infidel, that all who contributed to the government had a right to the same protection. Here Mustapha nodded to Halil, and we rose, and bowing, quitted the presence of a really great man. I found at the portal a fine Arabian, two Cachemire shawls, a scarlet cloak of honour, with the collar embroidered with gold, and fastened with diamond clasps, a sabre, and two superb pipes. This was my reward for charging with the Turkish cavalry at Bitoglia."

Fiesko, or the Conspiracy of Genoa: on Historical Tragedy. Translated from the German of Schiller. 8vo. pp. 281. Dablin, 1832, Milliken and Son; London, Longman and

A FINE translation is a national benefit ;--to this we must regretfully add, that it is a benefit of rare occurrence. We wish there were more of a free trade established in literature, and that the genius of one country carried on a noble commerce with the genius of anotherthat the mind had its city of exchange, its Tyre, with " Its merchants poets, and each deck a throne."

But, alas! the task of translation is too often confided to incompetent hands, and a dictionary is deemed a sufficient qualification. This is a lamentable mistake; mind only can do justice to mind, and it asks a poet to render poetry. It would be but poetical justice to demand of every great writer a voyage to other lands, bringing home some golden fleece in triumph, making some far and foreign name familiar to his own tongue, in a generous confidence that the same good office would be rendered unto his own. Of what translation is capable, let Coleridge's Wallenstein be the proof—a work equally worthy of its father- and its foster-land. Look, too, at Lockhart's beautiful Spanish Ballads-where would their beauty and spirit have evaporated, had they been done into English by any "hack and common hand?"

The work before us is no exception to the routine rule; it is commendable, for it shews love of a noble art, and much industry: but the strength is unequal to the desire, and the fiery words of Schiller are cold and tame on the page before us. Among the many beautiful and valuable papers which have appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, were some peculiarly interesting, called Horæ Germanicæ. In Number XVII. appeared an excellent notice of Schiller's Fiesko: it was written, we believe, by Mr. Gillies, who brought to the task the knowledge of the scholar and the feeling of the poet. But how an author may be made or marred by a translator, let the following extracts serve as specimens. We give, first, the spirited version of a soliloquy of Fiesko's as it appeared in the Hora Germanica

"The scene is a hall in Fiesko's house, with a balcony and large glass door in the back-ground, through which is visible the red light of the dawning day.

lose). Lo, there! the moon already f the dawning cay.

"Fissio (at the window). Lo, there! the moon hath declined,
And from the sea mounts fierly the morning.
Wild fantasies have broke my nightly rest,
And now my soul, my whole existence, tolks
Beenesth one mighty and o'erpowering thought.
I must into the cool air!

"He occur he chass done to the balcome.

the open the gines door to the beloomy, through schick are visible the town, i.e. in the rollight of morning. Finale valle volumently up and down.

Am I not
The first, the greatest man in Genua?
And should not meaner spirits move around me,
And othe leaser planets round the sun,
Submissively, in meek obedience?
But virtue—(stands still)—conscience? Hew? for lofty minus

Are not temptations different far prepared,
From those that do mislead ignoble souls?
And wherefore should like virtue be from us Demanded? Armout that for pigmy frames Is fashioned—will it clothe a giant's limbs?

(The sun rises over Genes.
Ha, now! This town, so full of natural beauty,

Ha, now! This town, so full of natural beauty, its harbours, towers, and princely palacest. To hover o'er them like the royal eagle.

To call it mine! To beam out, over it, Even like th' imperial sun in the high heavens, All fervid passions, and unmated wishes, To merge at once into this vasty sea! To gain such prize even stratagem is virtue. Dishonourable 'twere to plunder gold, Even though the sum were millions; but a crown, That theft is nameless great! Applring crimes Soar above shame. To obey and to command! Oh, what a gulf betwixt these adverse points! Take all that life affords, most estimable; Ye conquerors, come with trophies, laured-crown'd; Ye artists, bring your never-fading works; Ye sensualists, add all your sweetest pleasures; And voyagers, your new-found seem and isles! Who'er shall pass the vold that separates Inferior spirits from th' eternal God, May measure out this vasty chasm!

To stand

Evalted on that fearful height,—to smile

From hence upon the tumults of mankind,
And mark how destiny doth lead them on;
To guide unseen that armourd Tran Justice,
And if he dares with impotent wrath to knock
Too loudly at th' imperial gate, t' inflict
Wounds that he dare not seek to compensate!
To check with playful rein, like harnes'd steeds,
The passions of the multitude; and if
The ruler's acaptre, with creative power,
Should in some vassal's heart wake regal dreams,
Even with one breath to crush into the dust
His insolent pretensions! Oh, these thoughts,
These fairy visions, bear the ravish'd mind
Far o'er each bound and limit. To be king
But for a moment,—this alone involves,
Concentrated, the quintessence of life.
Tis not the sphere wherein we live, but that
Which we therein possess, which makes us poor
Or wealthy. Lengthen out in tones diffuse
The thunder's voice, and therewith shalt thou lall
Children to sleep. But be those tones collected
Into one fearful burst, and at the sound,
So regal and imperative, the heavens
Will tremble. I am now resolved!"

Compare, though it will 'not bear compa

Compare, though it will not bear comparison, the tame and vague production of the author now before us.

"What's this? The moon is down, the morning rises
Flery from the sea, wild flights of fancy
Have disturbed my rest and robbed me of repose;
Still my mind clings convulsive to its object,
And doubts and fears but strengthen it the more.

"It are the morning sir." I'll try the morning air.
(He opens the glass door.

The city and on (He opens the gauss door. The city and observed oppose respurpled to the the morning down.)

(With hurried steps up and down the room.)

To think that I'm the greatest man in Genoa,

That all the lesser souls should crowd around me,

And seek a shelter in Fleako's power!

But then, I violate the cause of virtue!

Virtue! the noble mind Has different rules of action from the common-What's vice in one man, in another's greatness. The armount that confines a pigmy's frame, Say, is it fitted for the glant's carcass?

(The sun rises over Genoa.)

And this majestic city!

(Hastening with extended arms to the window.)

To think that it is mine!

That I should blaze resplendent as the sun,

And shed like him my damiting glories round it!
That all the foodest hopes that fancy forms,
And wild ambition weaves, would then be sualised!
That I should be a king!
Surely, though petty faults debase the soul,
A mighty crime annobles vice, and makes it
Pass for virtue. To steal a purse is shameful;
To embessle millions, bold; but great, yes,
Godlike great, to seize a crown! The splendid motive Justifies the deed, and glosses o'er its blackness.

(A pouse; then with emphasis;
Obey! command! subjection! a sovereignty!
Ay, there's the dreadful gap, not to be filled by nature.
Throw in it all that mighty man can boast of,
The joys of victory, the delights of conquest,
The charms of science, and the works of art,
The sweat of huxury and the wealth of nations,
Still yawns the opening cleft and longs for more.
Obey! command! To be, or not to be!"

We break off with an obvious plagiarism: And shed like him my damling glories round it! That all the fondest hopes that fancy forms,

We break off with an obvious plagiarism: and much as we desire to see translations from all the best German dramas, it is not to such as the present writer we could wish them confided.

Tales of the Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon. [Second notice.]

WE shall proceed, without farther criticism, to lay one more of these fanciful and beautiful tales (which can hardly yet have been seen by many eyes) before our readers.

Legend of the Rose of the Alhambra.

" Among those who attended in the train of the monarchs was a favourite page of the queen, named Ruyz de Alarcon. To say that he was a favourite page of the queen was at once to speak his eulogium; for every one in the suite of the stately Elizabetta was chosen for grace, and beauty, and accomplishments. He was just turned of eighteen, light and lithe of form, and graceful as a young Antinous. To the queen he was all deference and respect; yet he was at heart a roguish stripling, petted and spoiled by the ladies about the court, and experlenced in the ways of women far beyond his years. This loitering page was one morning rambling about the groves of the Generalife, which overlook the grounds of the Alhambra. He had taken with him for his amusement a favourite ger-falcon of the queen. In the course of his rambles, seeing a bird rising from a thicket, he unhooded the hawk and let him fly. The falcon towered high in the air, made a sweep at his quarry, but missing it, soared away, regardless of the calls of the page. The latter followed the truant bird with his eye in its capricious flight, until he saw it alight upon the battlements of a remote and lonely tower in the outer wall of the Alhambra, built on the edge of a ravine that separated the royal fortress from the grounds of the Generalife. It was, in fact, the 'Tower of the Princesess.' The page descended into the ravine and approached the tower, but it had no entrance from the glen, and its lofty height rendered any attempt to scale it fruitless. Seeking one of the gates of the fortress, therefore, he made a wide circuit to that side of the tower facing within the walls. A small garden, enclosed by a trellis-work of reeds overhung with myrde, lay before the tower. Opening a wicket, the page passed between beds of flowers and thickets of roses to the door. It was closed and bolted. A crevice in the door gave him a peep into the interior. There was a small Moorish hall with fretted walls, light marble columns, and an alabaster fountain surrounded with flowers. In the centre hung a gilt cage comtaining a singing bird; beneath it, on a chair, lay a tortoiseshell cat, among reels of silk and other articles of female labour; and a guitar, decorated with ribands, leaned against the fountain. Ruyz de Alarcon was struck with these traces of female taste and elegance in a lonely and, as he had supposed, deserted tower. They of expressing the most profound homage and ditties from the mosalit groves beneath the resmainded him of the tales of enchanted halls respect. Her anger, if anger she felt, was current in the Albambra; and the tortoiseshell cat might be some spell-bound princess. He knocked gently at the door; a beautiful face peoped out from a little window above, but was irratantly withdrawn. He waited, expecting that the door would be opened, but he waited in wain; no footstep was to be heard within—all was silent. Had his senses deceived him, or was this beautiful apparition the fairy of the tower? He knecked again, and more loudly. After a little while the beaming face once more peoped forth; it was that of a blooming damsel of fifteen. The page immediately doffed his plumed bounet, and entreated in the most courteous accents to be permitted to ascend the tower in pursuit of his falcon. 'I dare not open the door, senor,' replied the little damsel, blushing; 'my aunt has forbidden it.' 'I do beseech you, fair maid; it is the favourite falcon of the queen: I dare not return to the palace without it.' 'Are you, then, one of the cavaliers of the court?' 'I am, fair maid; but I shall lose the queen's favour and my place, if I lose this hawk.' Santa Maria! it is against you cavaliers of the court my aunt has charged me especially to bar the door.' 'Against wicked cavaliers, doubtless; but I am none of these but a simple harmless page, who will be ruined and undone if you deny me this small request." The heart of the little damsel was touthed by the distress of the page. It was a thousand pities he should be ruined for the want of so trifling a boon. Surely, too, he could not be one of those dangerous beings whom her aunt had described as a species of cannibal, ever on the prowl to make prey of thoughtless damsels

—he was gentle and modest, and stood so entreatingly with cap in hand, and looked so charming. The sly page saw that the garrison began to waver, and redoubled his entreaties in such moving terms, that it was not in the nature of mortal maiden to deny him; so the blushing little warden of the tower descended and opened the door with a trembling hand; and if the page had been charmed by a mere glimpse of her countenance from the window, he was ravished by the full-length portrait now revealed to him. Her Andalusian bodice and trim basquina set off the round but delicate symmetry of her form, which was as yet scarce verging into womanhood. Her glossy hair was parted on her forehead with scrupulous exactness, and decorated with a fresh plucked rose according to the universal custom of the country. It is true her complexion was tinged by the ardour of a southern san, but it served to give richness to the mantling bloom of her cheek, and to heighten the lustre of her melting eyes. Rays de Alarcon beheld all this with a single glance, for it became him not to tarry; he merely murmured his acknowledgements, and then bounded lightly up the spiral staircase in quest of his falcen. He soon returned with the truant bird upon his fist. The damsel, in the mean time, had seated herself by the fountain in the hall, and was winding silk; but in her agitation she let fall the reel upon the pavement. The page sprang and picked it up, then dropping gracefully on one knee, presented it to her; but, seizing the hand extended to receive it, imprinted on it a kiss more fervent and devout than he had ever imprinted on the fair hand of his sovereign.
'Ave Maria, señor!' exclaimed the damsel, blushing still deeper with confusion and surprise, for never before had she received such a salutation. The modest page made a thousand appligies, assuring her is was the way at court by the tinking of guitars and chanting of low til the Moorish female again rose to view. She easily pacified, but her agitation and embarrassment continued; and she sat blushing deeper and deeper, with her eyes cast down upon her work, entangling the silk which she attempted to wind. The cunning page asw the confusion in the opposite camp, and would fain have profited by it; but the fine speeches he would have uttered died upon his lips, his attempts at gallantry were awkward and ineffectual; and, to his surprise, the adroit page, who had figured with such grace and effrontery among the most knowing and experienced ladies of the court, found himself awed and abashed in the presence of a simple damsel of fifteen. In fact, the artless maiden, in her own modesty and innocence had guardians more effectual than the bolts and bars prescribed by her vigilant aunt. Still, where is the female bosom proof against the first whisperings of love? The little damsel, with all her artlessness, instinctively comprehended all that the faltering tongue of the page failed to express; and her heart was fluttered at beholding, for the first time, a lover at her feet-and such a lover! The diffidence of the page, though genuine, was short-lived, and he was recovering his usual ease and confidence, when a shrill voice was heard at a distance. 'My aunt is returning from mass!' cried the damsel in affright; 'I pray you, señor, depart.' 'Not until you grant me that rose from your hair as a rem brance.' She hastily untwisted the rose from her raven locks: ' Take it,' cried she, agitated and blushing; 'but pray begone.' The page took the rose, and at the same time covered with kisses the fair hand that gave it. Then, placing the flower in his bonnet, and taking the falcon upon his fist, he bounded off through the garden, bearing away with him the heart of the gentle Jacinta. When the vigilant aunt arrived at the tower, she remarked the agitation of her niece, and an air of confusion in the hall: but a word of explanation sufficed.... 'A ger-falcon had pursued his prey into the hall. Mercy on us! to think of a falcon flying into the tower! Did ever one hear of so saucy a hawk? Why, the very bird in the cage is not safe!' The vigilant Fredegonda was one of the most wary of ancient spinsters. She had a becoming terror and distrust of what she denominated ' the opposite sex,' which had gradually increased through a long life of celibacy. Not that the good lady had ever suffered from their wiles, nature having set up a safeguard in her face that forbade all trespass upon her premises; but ladies who have least cause to fear for themselves, are most ready to keep a watch over their more tempting neighbours. niece was the orphan of an officer who had fallen in the wars. She had been educated in a convent, and had recently been transferred from her sacred asylum to the immediate guardianship of her aunt, under whose overshadowing care she vegetated in obscurity, like an opening rose blooming beneath a briar. Nor indeed is this comparison entirely accidental; for, to tell the truth, her fresh and dawning beauty had caught the public eye, even in her seclusion, and, with that poetical turn common to the people of Andalusia, the peasantry of the neighbourhood had given her the appellation of the Rose of the Alhambra.' The wary aunt continued to keep a faithful watch over her tempting little niece as long as the court continued at Granada, and flattered herself that her vigilance had been successful. It is true, the good lady was now and then discomposed her ears against such idle minetrelsy, assuring her that it was one of the arts of the opposite sex, by which simple maids were often lured to their undoing. Alas! what chance with a simple maid has a dry lecture against a moonlight serenade? At length King Philip cut short his sojourn at Granada, and suddenly departed with all his train. The vigilant Fre-degands watched the royal pageant as it issued forth from the gate of Justice, and descended the great avenue leading to the city. the last banner disappeared from her sight, she returned exulting to her tower, for all her cares were over. To her surprise, a light Arabian steed pawed the ground at the wicketgate of the garden: __to her horror, she saw through the thickets of roses a youth, in gaily embroidered dress, at the feet of her niece. At the sound of her footsteps he gave a tender adieu, bounded lightly over the barrier of reeds and myrtles, sprang upon his horse, and was out of sight in an instant. The tender Jacinta. in the agony of her grief, lost all thought of her aunt's displeasure. Throwing herself into her arms, she broke forth into sobs and tears. 'Ay di mi!' cried she; 'he's gone! - he's gone! - he's gone! and I shall never see him more! 'Gone! - who is gone? - what youth is that I saw at your feet?' 'A queen's page, aunt, who came to bid me farewell.' 'A queen's page, child!' echoed the vigilant Fredeganda faintly; 'and when did you become acquainted with a queen's page?' 'The merning that the ger-falcon came into the tower. It was the queen's ger-falcon, and he came in pursuit of it.' 'Ah silly, silly girl! know that there are no ger-falcons half so dangerous as these young prankling pages, and it is precisely such simple birds as thee that they pounce upon.' The aunt was at first indignant at learning that, in despite of her boasted vigilance, a tender intercourse had been carried on by the youthful lovers, almost beneath her eye; but when she found that her simple-hearted niece, though thus exposed, without the protection of bolt or bar, to all the machinations of the opposite sex, had come forth unsinged from the fiery ordeal, she consoled herself with the persuasion that it was owing to the chaste and cautious maxims in which she had, as it were, steeped her to the very lips. While the aunt laid this soothing unction to her pride, the niece treasured up the oft-repeated vews of fidelity of the page. But what is the love of restless, roving man? A vagrant stream that dallies for a time with each flower upon its bank, then passes on, and leaves them all in tears. Days, weeks, months elapsed, and nothing more was heard of the page. The pomegranate ripened, the vine yielded up its fruit, the autumnal rains descended in torrents from the mountains; the Sierra Nevada became covered with a snowy mantle, and wintry blasts howled through the halls of the Alhambra—still he came not. The winter passed away. Again the genial spring burst forth with song and blossom and balmy zephyr; the snews melted from the mountains, until none remained but on the lofty summit of Nevada, glistening through the sultry summer air. Still nothing was heard of the forgetful page."

Poor Jacinta sits and weeps her time away beside a fountain in the hall.

"As the bell in the distant watch-tower of the Alhambra struck the midnight hour, the fountain was again agitated; and bubble -bubble-bubble-it tossed about the waters, unwas young and beautiful; her dress was rich ! with jewels, and in her hand she held a silver lute. Jacinta trembled and was faint, but was reassured by the soft and plaintive voice of the apparition, and the sweet expression of her pale, melancholy countenance. 'Daughter of mortality,' said she, 'what aileth thee? Why do thy tears trouble my fountain, and thy sighs and plaints disturb the quiet watches of the night?' ' I weep because of the faithlessness of man, and I bemoan my solitary and forsaken 'Take comfort; thy sorrows may yet state.' have an end. Thou beholdest a Moorish princess, who, like thee, was unhappy in her love. A Christian knight, thy ancestor, won my heart, and would have borne me to his native land and to the bosom of his church. I was a convert in my heart, but I lacked courage equal to my faith, and lingered till too late. For this the evil genii are permitted to have power over me, and I remain enchanted in this tower until some pure Christian will deign to break the magic spell. Wilt thou undertake the task?' 'I will,' replied the damsel trembling. 'Come hither then, and fear not; dip thy hand in the fountain, sprinkle the water over me, and baptise me after the manner of thy faith; so shall the enchantment be dispelled, and my troubled spirit have repose.' The damsel advanced with faltering steps, dipped her hand in the fountain, collected water in the palm, and sprinkled it over the pale face of the phantom. The latter smiled with ineffable benignity. She dropped her silver lute at the feet of Jacinta, crossed her white arms upon her bosom, and melted from sight, so that it seemed merely as if a shower of dew-drops had fallen into the fountain. Jacinta retired from the hall filled with awe and wonder. She scarcely closed her eyes that night; but when she awoke at daybreak out of a troubled slumber, the whole appeared to her like a distempered dream. On descending into the hall, however, the truth of the vision was established; for, beside the fountain, she beheld the silver lute glittering in the morning sunshine."

The music of this lute fairly enchants all the hearers, till at length its mistress is sent for to court, to try its influence over the hypochon-driac monarch.

"At the moment we treat of, however, a freak had come over the mind of this sapient and illustrious Bourbon that surpassed all former vagaries. After a long spell of imaginary illness, which set all the strains of Faranelli and the consultations of a whole orchestra of court fiddlers at defiance, the monarch fairly, in idea, gave up the ghost, and considered himself absolutely dead. This would have been harmless enough, and even convenient both to his queen and courtiers, had he been content to remain in the quietude befitting a dead man; but to their annoyance he insisted upon having the funeral ceremonies performed over him, and, their inexpressible perplexity, began to grow impatient and to revile bitterly at them for negligence and disrespect, in leaving him unburied. What was to be done? To disobey the king's positive commands was monstrous in the eyes of the obsequious courtiers of a punctilious court but to obey him, and bury him alive, would be downright regicide! In the midst of this fearful dilemma a rumour reached the court, of the female minstrel who was turning the brains of all Andalusia. The queen despatched missions in all haste to summon her to St. Ildefonso, where the court at that time resided. Within a few days, as the queen with and terraces, and fountains, to eclipse the glories of Versailles, the far-famed minstrel was conducted into her presence. The imperial Elizabetta gazed with surprise at the youthful and unpretending appearance of the little being that had set the world madding. She was in her picturesque Andalusian dress; her silver lute was in her hand, and she stood with modest and downcast eyes, but with a simplicity and freshness of beauty that still bespoke her the Rose of the Alhambra.' As usual she was accompanied by the ever-vigilant Fredeganda, who gave the whole history of her parentage and descent to the inquiring queen. the stately Elizabetta had been interested by the appearance of Jacinta, she was still more pleased when she learnt that she was of a meritorious though impoverished line, and that her father had bravely fallen in the service of the crown. ' If thy powers equal their renown, said she, 'and thou canst cast forth this evil spirit that possesses thy sovereign, thy fortunes shall henceforth be my care, and honours and wealth attend thee.' Impatient to make trial of her skill, she led the way at once to the apartment of the moody monarch. Jacinta followed, with downcast eyes, through files of guards and crowds of courtiers. They arrived at length at a great chamber hung in black. The windows were closed to exclude the light of day: a number of yellow wax tapers in silver sconces diffused a lugubrious light, and dimly revealed the figures of mutes in mourning dresses, and courtiers who glided about with noiseless step and wo-begone visage. On the midst of a funeral bed or bier, his hands folded on his breast, and the tip of his nose just visible. lay extended this would-be-buried monarch. The queen entered the chamber in silence, and pointing to a footstool in an obscure corner, beckoned to Jacinta to sit down and commence. At first she touched her lute with a faltering hand, but gathering confidence and animation as she proceeded, drew forth such soft aerial harmony, that all present could scarce believe it mortal. As to the monarch, who had already considered himself in the world of spirits, he set it down for some angelic melody, or the music of the spheres. By degrees the theme was varied, and the voice of the minstrel accompanied the instrument. She poured forth one of the legendary ballads, treating of the ancient glories of the Alhambra, and the achievements of the Moors. Her whole soul entered into the theme, for with the recollections of the Alhambra was associated the story of her love. The funeral chamber resounded with the animating strain. It entered into the gloomy heart of the monarch. He raised his head and gazed around: he sat up on his couch; his eye began to kindle; at length, leaping upon the floor, he called for sword and buckler. The triumph of music, or rather of the enchanted lute, was complete; the demon of melancholy was cast forth, and, as it were, a dead man brought to life. The windows of the apartment were thrown open; the glorious effulgence of Spanish sunshine burst into the late lugubrious chamber; all eyes sought the lovely enchantress; but the lute had fallen from her hand, she had sunk upon the earth, and the next moment was clasped to the bosom of Ruyz de Alarcon. The nuptials of the happy couple were shortly after celebrated with great splendour; but hold....I hear the reader ask, how did Ruyz de Alarcon account for his long neglect? Oh! that was all owing to the opposition of a proud, pragmatical, old father: besides, young people who really like one her maids of honour was walking in those another soon come to an amicable understandher maids of honour was walking in those another soon come to an amicable understand-stately gardens, intended, with their avenues, ing, and bury all past grievances when once doctrines and discipline of the established they meet. But how was the proud, pragma-tical old father reconciled to the match? Oh his scruples were easily overcome by a word or two from the queen, especially as dignities and rewards were showered upon the blooming favourite of royalty. Besides, the lute of Jacinta, you know, possessed a magic power, and could control the most stubborn head and hardest breast. And what came of the enchanted lute? Oh! that is the most curious matter of all, and plainly proves the truth of all this story. lute remained for some time in the family, but was purloined and carried off, as was supposed, by the great singer Faranelli, in pure jealousy. At his death it passed into other hands in Italy, who were ignorant of its mystic powers, and melting down the silver, transferred the strings to an old Cremona fiddle. The strings still retain something of their magic virtues. A word in the reader's ear, but let it go no furtherthat fiddle is now bewitching the whole world—it is the fiddle of Paganini!"

Again and again we say this is one of the most delightful works of the time.

The Wanderer's Romaunt. Canto I. London, 1832. J. Cochrane and Co.

Poetical Ephemeras. By James Pennycock Brown. pp. 208. London, 1832. Smith, Elder, and Co.

A Vision: a Poem, in Five Cantos. London, 1832. J. Booth.

THE age of talent is usually succeeded by that of taste. Our poets now-a-days are like young heirs, who rather live upon the wealth bequeathed to them than strike out new paths of discovering it for themselves. The Wanderer's Romaunt has, however, more than a common allotment of poetical feeling. In a note, a kimd of historical romance is appended to the name of the heroine Idonea, which has reminded us of its real occurrence. Fuller, speaking of the marriage of Robert de Veteripont to Idonea, says, that she was "the first and last I meet with of that Christian name, though proper enough for women who are to be 'meet helps' to their husbands."

The Rural Rector; or, a Sketch of Manners, &c. in a Country Parish. 3 vols. London, 1832. Nichols and Son; Longman and Co.; Simpkin and Marshall; Whittaker and Co. THE writer of these volumes has quite mistaken "his natural gifts;" and with a full belief in his good intentions, we cannot give him much encouragement to try again to carry them into execution.

Scripture Sketches, and other Poems and Hymns. By the Rev. Thomas Greenwood, B.A., &c. Pp. 223. London, 1832. Hatchard. The Pleasures of Keligion, and other Poems. By the Rev. H. Stowel, A.M. London, 1832. Rivingtons; and Hatchard and Son. Two very appropriate volumes to come from the pens of clergymen.

The New Testament: with a Commentary, consisting of short Lectures for the daily use of Families. By the Rev. C. Girdlestone, M.A. &c. Part I. Matthew and Mark. Oxford, 1832, for the Author; London, Rivingtons, THIS is the first Part of a "commentary on the Scriptures, explanatory, practical, and devotional," for perusal in families: it is therefore, as it ought to be, plain in language, and free from discussion of disputed points, though

There is, however, as far as we have church. examined it, nothing dogmatical, nor such as to hinder it from being generally used by the Christian community. Should this first por-tion be found to answer the end its author has in view, the Gospels of Luke and John, forming the second Part, are promised.

Conjectures concerning the Identity of the Patriarch Job, his Family, the Time in which he lived, and the Locality of the Land of Ux. By the Rev. S. Lysons, B.A. Oxford, 1832, Parker; London, Rivingtons.

THE writer of this pamphlet of some thirty pages states that he was "induced to investigate the subject by observing that Issachar had a son, who in our translation of the Pentateuch is called Job;" and "conjectures" that this Job was "the man in the land of Uz," of whose patience and afflictions the book under that title treats. Three, if not all four of his friends are, on this supposition, shewn to have been also his relatives. These are the only points on which we find any novelty of opinion: on the other topics, Mr. L. agrees with the majority of Biblical critics.

Sacred Poems. By M. F. T. London, 1832 Nisbet.

This is a very pretty little volume, bound in watered cloth, and got up with great neatness. It will be an acceptable present to many of our Mélange, in English and French. By Marin de la Voye, de L. R. Pp. 183. London, 1832. Parbury, Allen, and Co.

WE would not be uncourteous to a stranger but we really cannot give much hopes of the success of an attempt to engraft French taste upon English poetry: still, some of the little compliments are prettily turned.

Practical Remarks on the Inutility of the Hydrostatic Test in the Detection of Infanticide. To which is added, Observations on the Employment of a new Counter-Irritant in the Cure of Chest Diseases. By H. W. Dewhurst, Surgeon-Accoucheur, Professor of Midwifery and of Human and Comparative Anatomy, &c. London, 1831. For the Author. MR. DEWHURST's titles, writings, and objects, possess the same multifarious qualities; and it will be much if he succeed in them all. No one could think that the test alluded to in this brochure is sufficient to detect or entail punishment for the crime of infanticide; but it is a very powerful auxiliary in forming a correct diagnosis; nor do we see any thing in these Remarks which disproves the fact. The counter-irritant proposed by Mr. D. is the camphorated acetic acid, or the pyroligneous acid.

Byron's Life and Works. Murray. THE fifth volume of the new edition continues Moore's Life and Correspondence of Lord Byron, from 1820 to 1822. The embellishments are, Santa Maria della Spina, at Pisa, sweetly engraved by E. Finden, from a drawing by Turner; and the Hellespont, with Sestos and Abydos seen in the distance; drawn by Harding,-the original sketches by W. Page.

ARTS AND SCIENCES. ROYAL COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS.

SIR HENRY HALFORD, Bart. in the chair. The president at the first assembly this season invited communications on the class of diseases reckoned contagious. Consequent upon such invitation, a paper on that subject, more especially in connexion with the prevalent epidemic, from the pen of Dr. Heberden, was read by Dr. Hawkins at the last meeting. The author appeared to lean to the side of contagion; but in clear and unbiassed language he reviewed the arguments and facts urged by the supporters of contagion and non-contagion. The course of no disease, he observed, had been traced with more certainty than that of cholera for the last fifteen years. Was it to be supposed that its ravages were occasioned by a certain state of the atmosphere? If so, why had it travelled so slowly? Influenza, dependent on that cause, was marked by an opposite character, - it travelled swiftly. On the subject of predisposition, the author observed, it was not enough that the seed should be vigorous, the temperature of the atmosphere suitable; the soil also must be adapted to circumstances clearly implying, we think, that if the system be not made a fit receptacle for a certain class of diseases by intemperance, privation, or inattention to cleanly habits, attacks of this kind will be less frequent and virulent, although aided by peculiarity of sky or climate. On infection some curious remarks were made: es. gr. the inhabitants of a part of the Hebrides, on the authority of the clergyman, it was stated, always "caught a cold," as the phrase is, on the arrival of a stranger amongst them! Again, it was well known that individuals visiting certain parts of the globe, were more liable to peculiar diseases than the in-habitants. Was this owing to insects floating invisibly in the air, who, like epicures, pre-ferred exotics? It appeared, that amongst those who considered cholera as contagious was Sir Thomas Monro, who fell a victim to its malignant attacks: surrounded by his friends, while on his death-bed, he warned them of the consequences of their kind attention, and called upon them to leave him to himself. After some remarks on the analogy of contagion in small-pox and that in cholera, where some are susceptible and others non-susceptible -- a circumstance which might be adduced, by those who were so inclined, as a refutation of the doctrine of contagion - the paper concluded by a few hints on disinfection and prevention; the former, boiling in water, or exposing to a strong heat the suspected article; - the latter, natural good health and temperance. A paper on phlegmasia dolens was then read by Sir Henry Halford, by whom it was written, if we heard aright. The learned author shewed this was a disease not alone peculiar to females; a deceased nobleman suffered under it at the very time he was conducting the affairs of the state.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY.

A. B. LAMBERT, Esq. in the chair. Read a letter, addressed to the president, Lord Stanley, by Henry Saville Foljambe, Esq., giving an account of a specimen of the Falco rufipes of Bechstein, which was shot near Doncaster, in April, 1830. It is a singular fact, that this is the fourth example of this bird killed in that year, until which time the species had not been recorded as British. There was also read a communication by Mr. David Don, entitled, "Some remarks on the plant which yields the cascarilla bark." This bark is now ascertained to be the produce of a species of oroton, forming an evergreen tree of twenty-five or thirty feet in height, and growing wild in the province of Vera Cruz, Mexico, where it is known by the names of copalche and quina blanca. Mr. Don suggests the propriety of applying to this species L. G.

*We copy this all the way from Ceylon, as one of the latest and most favourable accounts of the colony.—Ed. names of copalche and quina blanca. Mr. Don the name of croton cascarilla; and leaving to the species so denominated by Linneus, and which is now ascertained to possess none of the sensible qualities of cascarilla bark, the more recent appellation of linearis, given to it by Jacquin. Most of the later pharmaceutical writers consider the cascarilla and elutheria barks as the produce of the same species, namely, croton eluteria.

ZOOLOGICAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

THE anniversary meetings of these Societies took place in the course of the week; the satisfactory report read at the former was a condensation of the monthly reports which have already been published in our columns. The grievous debt at the Horticultural Society, by the judicious management adopted, is likely to be got rid of. At both institutions officers were elected for the ensuing season.

NEW COLONY ON THE SWAN RIVER. By a distinguished Staff Officer in India-+ Perth, Swan River, Sept. 1831.

THIS place is possibly the most interesting and extraordinary spot an Indian ever visited. The approach to the coast is very forbidding, and the entrance to the harbour apparently very intricate; but this is more in appearance than reality, as the place has been well surveyed, and the dangers all correctly known. Garden Island, which forms the shelter to Cockburn's Sound, was lately visited by fire; the herbage and trees were as dry as tinder, and having been kindled by an accidental spark, the whole flew, I am told, with the most awful rapidity, and the inhabitants had barely time to rescue their property from the flames: fortunately, there were very few people, and the damage was in consequence not very considerable. The place at which we anchored was many miles distant from Freemantle, the first town established in Western Australia: we had therefore a voyage of some hours in an open boat before we landed, and I must say the approach was any thing but inspiring. The wrecks of several vessels stranded on the beach were the first objects that greeted our attention, and the rising banks of the shore concealed the town entirely from our sight; you may therefore suppose that our forebodings were rather gloomy. We had no sooner, how-ever, touched the shore, than all melancholy anticipations were banished. We were received by fifty ruddy smiling countenances, and the chubby cheeks of the young children, roaring (I may say) with health, gave us most convincing proofs of the salubrity of the cli-mate. As I had expected, the town was merely in progress; but considering its age, I found it much more forward than I could have anticipated: the houses were built principally of wood, but there are already several of stone nearly ready, and bricks will shortly be in abundance. The stone with which they are built partakes of the character of Scotch freestone; it cuts like cheese in the quarry, and hardens like flint when exposed to the air; limestone, of the very best quality, is also very plentiful: so that they have every material for building on the spot. The woods are also most excellent; the kind which they call mahogany, I think nearly equal to the American, and it fells enormous timber. We took up our abode at the Stirling Arms, no contemptible inn, I assure you; where our first dinner consisted of a leg of prime boiled matton, another of corned pork, a barn-door fowl, and a splendid dish of fish, which, with potatoes, turnips, and other vegetables, was, you will say, a very palpable proof that the colony was in any thing but a starving condition. I walked out seems miles on the bank of the river, and visited several locations, as they are called, where, I must say, I saw nothing but happiness and industry. Every thing appears to thrive in the way of animal life, - pige and poultry are amazingly prolific; goats seldom produce less than two kids at a birth, and they are frequently as numerous as four. This morning I saw a hen with a brood of twenty chickens. The following day we bent our course by water to this place, the capital, which is about twelve miles up the river, and the day being remarkably fine, we had a beautiful sail along its banks. The foliage of the country was in many parts very beautiful, but its character was all of the same description, a thick forest; and although the soil is sandy, in many parts pure sand, yet, strange to say, this apparently pure sand produces European vegetables of every description, and I saw potatoes literally as big as my fist, the produce of this soil, within fifty yards of the beach. My opinion is, that the sand is a more superstratum, the collection of ages which have passed without the country being disturbed by human visitation; and this is proved by the soil, which is found within a few feet of the surface at this place so exceedingly rich in its character, that it requires to be dried up and exposed to the air before it can be used for the purposes of tillage: and even then it must be reduced by a mixture with a poorer soil. Perth is not so much advanced as Freemantle, but being the residence of the governor and public departments of the service, it is, I may say, progressing most thrivingly. We were here received with the most unbounded hospitality by Captain and Mrs. Stirling, and indeed by the whole settlement; and as the governor gave a ball a few days after our arrival, we had an opportunity of seeing nearly the whole of the aristocratical population in the immediate vicinity. I dined the first night with the governor's family, at the surveyor-general's, Mr. Rown, and I sat down to as good a repast as I could have had in India. You may fancy the sensation I experienced when I saw ladies of fashion and high education inhabiting a wooden building, containing but four small rooms, and those divided by nothing but sawed unplained planks. This, thank Ged, is but a temporary habitatien, as stone and brick houses are both in progress, and one, the property of the commandant, is already completed, of two stories. I am told the summer season is exceedingly hot; they speak of the thermometer being as high as 110 and 115 in the shade, which is quite incredible; but they say the nights are always cool and refreshing; that though the heat is intense, yet it is not injurious to the constitution, as men work the whole day in the sun without experiencing any injury.

The cattle of the colony thrive surprisingly on the natural grasses of the country. I saw a cow and calf in the market yesterday that would have been creditable to any fair in England; they sold for 351., and in India they would have sold for at least 100%. Fresh butter was at 4s. 6d, a pound; and, indeed, I may say the place is now far beyond the reach of want; though meat is somewhat dear, yet by no means so for a new colony. The privations and misery which the poor women and children must have undergone on their first arrival, are greater than can well be conceived; they arrived in the midst of winter, with hardly any sort of shelter except what they could obtain from canvass, and this was so wretched, that one lady told me she was obliged frequently to move her children, dripping with the rain, to some hole or corner where they might be a little better protected. This sort of trial must have been dreadful to women who had quitted the bosom of an English family, where they had been accustomed to every sort of convenience and comfort.

The face of matters is now, however, completely changed, and nothing could have been more misrepresented than the character and resources of this colony, as you may imagine when I tell you, they have determined to oppose every effort that may be made to introduce convicts, although the price of labour is enormous, and the greatest inconvenience is experienced from the want of it; yet they one and all declare they will instantly quit the colony the moment they find a single one imported. They say they will submit to any hardship rather than be surrounded by rogues. There is a settlement in progress at King George's Sound, which is some degrees farther to the south-ward, and where, I am told, the climate is far superior; and there is a party on the eve of starting for Table Land, above the Darling range of mountains, about fifty miles distant from this place; so that Western Australia will soon become a place of very interesting character, if the British government gives it the support it so richly deserves.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.

ORFORD, Dec. 8th, 1831.—The following degrees were conferred:

Masters of Aria.—Rev. H. N. Goldney, St. John's College: Rev. W. J. Copeland, Scholar, Trinity College: J. A. Fulton, Michel Scholar, Queen's College; G. W. Mahon, Fellow, Pembroks College.

Bachelors of Aria.—C. P. Peters, Queen's College; W. M. Adey, Exeter College; R. V. Pryor, Balbiol College.

Dec. 17th.—The Rev. John Keble, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, was admitted to the office of Professor of Poetry.

Oriel College, was admitted to the office of Professor or Poetry.

The following degrees were conferred:—
Dostor in Divinity.—Rev. E. Cardwell, late Fellow, Brasennose College, and Camden's Professor of Ancient History, Grand Compounder.

Master of Artz.—Rev. C. O. Mayne, Student, Christ Church; Rev. R. Fawsett, Lincoln College; Rev. C. Holder, Trinity College.

Buchelve of Artz.—W. Reyer, St. Mary Hall; D. Breat, University College.

Jan. 14th, 1839—[being the first day of Hilary Term) the following degrees were conferred:—

Masters of Arts.—Rev. L. A. Sharpe, Fellow, St. John's College; Rev. G. Du Heaume, Fellow, Pembroke Col-

Masters of Aris.—Rev. L. A. Sharpe, Fellow, St. Johnne College; Rev. G. Du Heaume, Fellow, Pembroke College.

Bachelors of Arts.—T. C. Perry, Lincoln College; C. J. Crawford, Wadham Cellege.

Jan. 19th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—Rev. J. Swalnson, Brasennose Colege; W. W. Buller, Lincoln College; Rev. H. Birkett, Queen's College.

Bachelors of Arts.—F. B. Portman, Fellow, All Soul's College; H. Forster, New College.

Jan. 28th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—A. T. Corfe, All Souls' College; T. C. Whilmore, Christ Church; J. W. Merton, Rev. T. F. Laurenos, Rev. G. Adams, Fellows, All Souls' College; T. C. Whilmore, G. Parsona, H. A. Jeffreys, W. E. Gladstone, Students, R. Farquharson, M. F. Tupper, Christ Church; J. Bailey, Brasennose College; E. J. Wilcocks, Scholar, Lincoln College.

Peb. 1st.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—Rev. O. Ormered, Brasennose College; Rev. C. Wells, Fellow, New College.

Bachelors of Arts.—A. Isham, Christ Church; E. Husey, G. H. Franks, J. R. Nicholl, B. L. Cubitt, Exeter College; H. T. Wheler, Menton Colleges J. R. Whyte, D. Parsons, Oriel College.

Feb. 28th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—Rev. G. Chester, Taberdar, Queen's College; R. Croft, Fellow J. Bonson, Exeter College.

Bachelors of Arts.—C. Hickson, Magdalen Hall; E. T. Bigge, University College; W. S. Rchants, Jeuns College; Hon. G. F. R. Henths, Christ Church; E. T. Bigge, University College; W. S. Rchants, Jeuns College; Hon. G. F. R. Henths, Christ Church; J. Swale, Queen's College; J. R. Bloxam, Demy, Magdalen Colege.

Feb. 16.—The following degrees were conferred:

Feb. 16.—The following degrees were conferred:

Marker of Arte.—Rev. 8. H. Whittuck, 8t. Mary Hall;

W. B. Clark, University College; R. Pav. W. Monkhoue, l'aberdar, Queen's College; E. Davies, Jesus College.

Feb. 23d.—The following degrees were conferred:

Backelors in Civil Laso.—Rev. G. W. Henthcota, A.

Feb. 28d.—I he routering degrees were contented:— Rockelors in Chil Lanc.—Rev. G. W. Heathcota, A. Grant, Fellows, New College. Masters of Arts.—Rev. A. Moore, University College: Rev. W. Williams, Jesus College; Rev. S. J. Etty, New College.

Buchelors of Arts.—W. Fox, Wadham College; W. G.

Buchelors of Arts.—W. Fox, Wadham College; W. G.

Warch 1st.—The following degrees were conferred:—

Backelor in Civil Law.—F. J. Lace, University College.

Grand Compounder.

Masters of Arts. J. Dennis, Exeter College, Grand Compounder; Rev. H. Holdsworth, Brasenmose College;

Compounder; Rev. H. Holdsworth, Brasenmose College; Rev. E. Williams, Jesus College.

Bacheirer of Arts.—C. Duberly, Christ Church; J. H. Clayton, Worcester College.

March Stho—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—H. Gwyn, Grand Compounder: R. S. Flower, Trinity College; Rev. J. Hamilton, Brasenmose College; J. E. Robinson, Christ Church; J. W. Chambers, St. John's College.

Bacheir of Arts.—E. K. Stubbs, Scholar of Worcester.

March 16th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—E. A. Holden, Corpus Christi College.

Grand Compounder; Rev. A. Hadfield, St. Mary Hall;
W. T. Cox, Passabroka College (Incorporated from Dublin).

Bachelors of Arts.—J. Strickland, Wadham College; R. B. Todd, Pembroke College (incorporated from Dublin).

lin).
March 29d.—The following degrees were conferred:

Marter of Arta.—Rev. W. Hanly, Queen's College.

Backelors of Arta.—C. Escott, Exater College: T. Green, Worcester College: T. J. A. B. Fairbairn, Merton College.

March 29th.—The following degrees were conferred:

Masters of Arta.—Rev. E. Witts, Wahham College:
Rev. C. B. Tyre, Brassmose College; Rev. J. H. Haltesi, Oriel College.

Nev. C. B. 1 yes, Statement Councy; Rev. J. B. Ballow, Orle! College. The following degrees were conferred:— Masters of Aris.—T. Shann, University College: T. Dry, Merton College; Rev. J. Tanner, Queen's College.

Cambaing a.—Price Subjects for the present year:—
I. The Chancellor's third gold medal for the encouragement of English Peetry; subject—"The taking of Jerusalem in the first crassion."

II. By the Representatives in Parliament—two prices of fifteen guiness each, for the encouragement of Latin prose composition, to all Bachelors of Arts; and two other prims of fifteen guiness each, to Undergraduates. The subjects for the present year are—
(1.) For the Bachelors, "Qud practical parts debties it et manca veterum philosophorum to officies doctrins?"
(2.) For the Undergraduates, "Inter silvas academi quarage overna."

III. Sir William Browne's three gold medals, value five alineas each, for—

(1.) The best Greek ode in imitation of Sappho.

(2.) The best Latin ode in imitation of Horace.

(3.) The best Greek epigram after the model of the (4.) The best Letin epigram after the model of Martial-The subjects for the present year are— The subjects for the present year are—

(i.) For the Greek ode,

"Quid dedicatum poscit Apollinem Fater"

(2.) For the International Control of the International

(2.) For the Latin ode.

(3.) For the Latin ode,

"Occulum quatients animo tortore flagellum.

(3.) For the Greek epigram,

"Quis enim eslowerit ignom, Lamine qui eneme proditur ipse suo ?"

(4.) For the Latin epigram,

"Homo sum: humani nihil d me allemam paste."

IV. The Porson prize—the interest of 400. stock, in suc or more Greek books—for the best translation of a normoused measure in Shakestneare. Ben Jonson. Massiver. ene or more trees tooks—for the open transmitted it a proposed penage in Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Massinger, or Benumont and Fletcher, into Greek verse. The sub-ject for the present year is Shakespeare, Julius Cesser, act il. scene 2, beginning— "Cal. Cessar, I never stood on ceremonies," and ending—

"Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come."

The subject of the Seatonian prise poem for the present year is, "The plague stayed."—Numb. xvi. 46.
The premium for the Hulsean discretation is this year
adjudged to George Langshaw, B.A. Fellow of St. John's College: subject—"The evidences of the truth of the Christian revelation are not weakened by time." The Caristan reveation are not weakened by time." The Hulsan prize—a premium exceeding 1604.—will this year be given for the best dissertation on the following subject:—"The advantages which have resulted from the Christian religion being conveyed in a narrative rather than a dislattic form."

Lan 2014. The following decrease recommendations:

unan a disactic form.

Jan. 23d.—The following degrees were conferred:

Muster of Arts.—J. Hammill, Trinity College.

Bachelors of Arts.—F. Tennyson, C. Tennyson, Trinity College; J. H. Buxton, J. Grant, J. Hough, Queen's Col-

Feb. 3d.

Feb. 2d.—The late Dr. Smith's annual prizes of 23-each, to the two best proficients in mathematics and matural philosophy among the Commencing Bachelors of Arms ware on Friday last adjudged to D. D. Heesth, Trimity College, and S. Laing, St. John's College, the first and second Wranglers.

Feb. 8th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Dector is Divinity.—Rev. W. Hewson, St. John's College, Chancellor of St. David's, &c., Compounder.

Bachelor in Divinity.—Rev. J. B. Smith, Christ College, and Head Master of Horncastle Grammar School, Com-

Honorory Master of Arten-Sir. J. H. Preston, Trinkty

College. Masters of Arts.—E. P. Neale, Trinity College: W. H. Stringer, Christ's College: G. Dunnage, Downing Cellege, Compounder. Backstors of Arts.—G. W. Rush, R. Courtney, Trinity

Bockelors of Arts.—G. W. Rush, R. Courtney, Trinity College, Compounder.
Feb. 23d.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Honorary Masters of Arts.—Hon. J. Grey, Trinity College, son of Earl Grey; S. A. O'Brien, Trinity College.
Doctor in Physic.—J. Staunton, Calus College.
Masters of Arts.—Rev. S. N. Kingdon, Rev. J. T. Hinds, Rev. R. H. Wace, Trinity College; Rev. T. Griffith, St. John's College; Rev. B. E. Nicholis, Queen's College.
Bockelor of Arts.—W. Meyrick, Trinity College.
Masch 7th.—The following degrees were conferred:—

Bochelor of Arts.—W. Meyrick, Trinity College.
March 7th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Bachelor in Dioming.—Rev. T. Brigatock, Trinity College, Rector of Whitton Radnorsh, &c.
Masters of Arts.—Rev. H. Filmess, Queen's College,
Compounder: Rev. E. Neale, Emmanuel College,
Dachelors of Arts.—C. S. Grey, A. Vickers, Trinity College; F. Heberden, St. John's College; E. Thompson, Clare Hall; M. Roe, Sidney Sussex College. Bachelor of March 7th. Bachelor in

BOYAT SOCIETY

Dr. Bostock in the chair. A report on Mr. Labbock's paper on physical astronomy, by Professors Whewell and Pescock and the Rev. Henry Codrington, was read; also a communication on certain irregularities in the magnetic needle, produced by partial warmth, and the relations which appear to subsist between terrestrial magnetism and geological structure and thermo-electrical currents of the earth, by Robert Were Fox, Beq.: another paper by Mr. Perkins, on a new method of generating steam.

ROVAL ROCIETY OF LITTERATION.

MEETINGS of April 18th and May 2d. The Bishop of Bristol in the chair. An article entitled "Etruria," was read from a manuscript by Sir W. Gell, on Roman topography; in which the author enters at considerable length into a discussion upon the origin of the nations inhabiting that part of the Italian peninsula, their connexion with the Pelasgi and the Celts, the arrival of colonies of Tyrrhenians or Lydians, from Asia Minor, and the migration of Siculi or Tyrrhene Pelasgians to Athens, where, according to Pansanias, they were employed in constructing part of the wall of the Acropolis. The author endeavours to explain and to reconcile the various accounts given of the origin of the Etrurians by Herodotus, and the several writers that have followed his opinion (who derive them from the continent of Asia), on the one side, and of Dionysius of Halicarnassus on the other, who describes them as Greeks. Some similarities are traced in the memoir between the ancient language of Etruria and that of Thrace; and others between the Etrurian tongue and that of the ancient Gauls er Celts, are accounted for by the extension of the nation to the modern city of Turin, on the west, and to the river Adige, or the ancient Athesis, on the eastern portion of Cisalpine Gaul. An allusion is made to the opinion of Festus, that the name of Tusons came from the Operator, said to have been given to them from their frequent sacrifices. A connexion also seems to have existed between this denomination and that of the Osci, although it does not appear that this last-mentioned people bore any prominent part in the history of Etruria. Whatever may have been the importation of Greek colonies, or inhabitants into Etruria, in the earliest times, the first historical evide year 658 B. C., the date of his settlement at was originally fixed for Thursday last; but on Tarquinii, now Corneto. His son was called account of the Queen's drawing-room being

There is every reason to believe that many of the arts of Greece, and the refinements of civilisation, were introduced into Etruria on this occasion; amongst these arts were paramount that of working in brass, for which Corinth had been long celebrated; architecture, particularly sepulchral; and the manufacture of fictile vases, more than 3000 of which have been discovered in the tombs lately excavated.

Sir W. Gell then enters into a full and expressive description of the sculptures and paintings which were found upon the walls of the tembs at Cornete or Tarquinii, and which were chiefly illustrative of the religious ceremonies and games of the inhabitants, bearing a very strong analogy, almost amounting to an identity, with those which exist on the monuments, and are described in the writings, of ancient Greece.

Tarquinii was reduced to the condition of a Roman colony in the year u. c. 456; and as it cannot be imagined that the heroic tumuli of this city were erected after that peried, nor, indeed, during its decline, the last of these monuments could not have a later date than 300 PORTS R.C.

Many inscriptions exist in these tombe : but as yet the interpretation of this mysterious language, though its remains are so considerable, and though they are written in a character clearly identical, in almost every letter, with the Pelasgic, or very ancient Greek, has defied the efforts of the learned. Among the great variety of specimens of the language which exist, a few are bilinguar : of these the writer gives a sufficient number to shew in what way the Roman names most familiar to us were formed or corrupted from the Etruscan. His account of what is known of the language of Etruria is concluded with a notice of such words belonging to it as have been left by ancient writers; of which few, or none, can be traced with certainty in any of the numerous remaining writings of the country.

At the general meeting yesterday, the following elections took place:-

lowing elections took place:

President.—The Right Hon. Lord Dover.

Presidents.—The Bishop of Salisbury (late President), the Duke of Rutland, the Earl of Carlisle, the Earl of Munster, the Bhhop of Bath and Wells, the Earl of Minster, the Bhhop of Bath and Wells, the Earl of Minster, the Bhhop of Bath and Wells, the Earl of Minster, the Bhhop of Bath and Wells, the Earl of Minster, the Bhop of Bath and Wells, the Earl of Minster, the Raw. G. Lord Berdey, the Right Hon. Charles Yorks, the Rev. G. Rath. Sar., W. Banks, Eaq., the Rev. Baths, Eaq., the Rev. G. Chardler, D.D., the Rev. H. Chissold (Librarian), H. Hallam, Eaq., the Rev. H. Chissold (Librarian), H. Hallam, Eaq., F. Madden, Eaq., F. Madden, Eaq., F. Madden, Eaq., F. Madden, Eaq., The Rev. H. Chissold.

Rev. Gliberton.—The Rev. H. Clissold.

Revrige Secretary.—W. R. Hamilton, Eaq.

decenters.—The Rev. R. Catternole.

Fersige Secretary.—W. R. Hamilton, Eaq.

decenters and Collector.—Mr. T. Paull.

FINE ARTS.

ROYAL ACADEMY.

THE private view of this year's exhibition ocsurs to-day, and too late, of course, for us. We have, as usual, seen a number of the works previously to their being sent in; but as any notice of them must necessarily be partial, we decline saying more than that there are some very fine productions from our foremost men.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

to the throne of Rome, under the name of Tar-held on that day, the Society very judiciously quinus Priseus. peliteness of one of the members, however, induced him to afford us the opportunity, while the room was still in much disorder, of glancing round the walls: and that rapid survey enables us with confidence to say, that the exhibition of the present year will, in variety and talent, equal any of its predecessors. Among the most prominent of its features may be fairly placed a Scene from the Spectator, (Vol. i. No. 80), by Miss L. Sharpe. In a Lake Scene from a description by Sir Walter Scott, G. F. Robson has approached the sublime in both character and effect. Dewint and Pront have, in several of their admirable performances, appeared some-what to depart from their wonted style: the former having more local colour, the latter less than usual: but in neither case does the change operate disadvantageously. Copley Fielding, in several sea-views, and especially in one on the left of the fire-place, is admirable. The Banquet Scene in Henry the Eighth has been painted, by command of his Majesty, by J. Stephanoff, and has given that able artist an excellent opportunity of displaying his skill both in colour and in execution. There are some very clever drawings by F. Taylor, of which the Guardsman's Guard is perhaps the most striking. Hunt, among many admirable specimens of his talent, has the Head of a Negro, which is as beautiful in sentiment as it is wonderful in execution. The variety of character and costume in Highland Hospitality, by J. F. Lewis, renders it very attractive. An Interior, Composition, by G. Cattermole, is one of that highly-gifted artist's most extraordinary productions. The Widow, by Miss Sharpe, is exceedingly brilliant and alluring. Among the architectural drawings, those of Wild, Nash, and Mackenzie, are as distinguished as usual: and Barret, Hill. Austen, Dewint, Wright, &c. &c. &c. complete the charm of variety and interest. Miss Byrne's Fruit is exquisite.

Having thus given the word of promise to the ear, we trust it will not be found broken to the sight, when the gallery opens to the public. In our next number we shall enter into a more particular examination of its contents.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

National Portrait Gallery. With Memoirs by W. Jerdan, Esq. Part XXXVII. Fisher, Son, and Co.

HER MAJESTY QUEEN ADELAIDE, Her Royal Highness the Princess Victoria, and the present Lord Chancellor, are the subjects of the XXXVIIth Part of this national work-There is a fine head of Sir D. Brewster: but the memoir of that gentleman is deferred.

The following curious fact respecting her Majesty is perhaps known to only a few of our readers :-

"We cannot but here animadvert on the unjustifiable manner in which a portion of the press has connected her majesty's name with certain political opinions. What her majesty's feelings are, we know not; but whatever they may be, the very variety of report respecting them proves how little any of our pseudo-guides have been able to bring them in truth before the public. The dismissal of Earl Howe, her chamberlain, affords an instance of the discussion of matters in newspapers, while the writers are ignorant of the facts connected with them. After all the statements and counter-statements on this subject is the flight of Demaratus from THE private view of the approaching exhibi-the symmetry of Cypesius, at Corinth, in the size of the Society of Painters in Water-colours the reader to know, that the real cause of which the communication was made, and which sition. The countenances of the children are was purely accidental."

Of the Lord Chancellor it is said :-

"In the circle of society in which Lord is about the size of a page of letter-paper; and, Brougham has moved, and moves, his good being neatly framed, is altogether one of the humour, his playfulness, his many accomplishs weetest ornaments that can be imagined for ments, and his general acquaintance with all boudoir or study. subjects, from the mere topic of the hour to the most profound investigation, have ever made him an especial ornament and favourite. In THIS public memorial of a truly great and pathese periods of relaxation, the same versatility triotic individual was completed on Wednesday, practice, which shine so brightly on public affairs, embellish and delight the narrower scene; the same readiness and astuteness which have enabled him to surmount all the complica- from the Parliament House, and looks towards tions of the Court of Chancery, render him, in a modified form, the idol of the dinner-party, a modified form, the idol of the dinner-party, the noblest to be seen in London. The like-or drawing-room company. Like all truly great men, Lord Brougham's manner is most undignified; one hand holding a fold of the drawflext and and holding a fold of the drawflext. affected, and only marked by uncommon simplicity. In conversation he is jocular and witty; and many of his bons-mots are repeated witty; and many of his const-most are repeated work, so indicursors to the sain and tenter to enliven other meetings than those in which they first raised the laugh of mirth and pleasantry. In what our neighbours, the French, light verdigris green, has a good effect, pleasesteem so much—the saying of clever things, ing the eye, and not offending the taste; for in and the uttering of pointed expressions which remain upon the memory—Lord Brougham would bear away the palm of excellence even in Paris; and were it worthy of our theme, or consistent with our limits, we might entertain the reader through many a page with the jeuxd'esprit, repeated from mouth to mouth, as the sallies of the learned Lord Chancellor in his 'hours of ease,' or more playful contests for superiority. These, however, though agreeable and characteristic, are but the minor lights upon a grand portrait, whose massive and imposing forms stand out from the canvass in native force and breadth, asking no aid of adventitious relief."

We do not remember to have ever seen a sweeter little head, both in expression and in execution, than the portrait of the Princess

The Byron Gallery. Part I. Smith, Elder, & Co. Or all the poets of modern times, there is no one whose works offer so many admirable subjects for the pencil as those of Lord Byron; and yet, to adopt the words of the address prefixed to the beautiful little publication under our notice, " no series of pictorial illustrations has hitherto appeared which is worthy of the name and genius of Byron." This deficiency the Byron Gallery is designed to supply; and if we may judge from the part which lies before us, it will supply it in a highly satisfactory manner. The plates are five in number; they are engraved by W. Finden, J. Romney, E. J. Portbury, E. Finden, and J. Goodyear, from the pictures and drawings of H. Richter, H. Corbould, T. Stothard, R.A., and J. P. Davis; and are distinguished, some by tenderness and elegance, others by character and vigour. Our favourites are the "Group in a Venetian Balcony," from an allusion in Beppo, and "The Doge," from the Two Foscari. It may not be unnecessary to observe, that the size of the paper will allow of the plates being bound up with any edition of the noble bard's children and a dog. It is executed in wax by offence to her majesty arose out of the mode in expresses what is pure and tender in compocharming; and their animal companion is a true picture of affectionate fidelity. The work and strength of mind, disciplined by constant, the scaffolding removed, and the figure on its pedestal opened to view opposite Palace Yard. The situation is fine and appropriate; though pery on the right, the other a scroll. The left is the best point on which to contemplate this work, so honourable to the skill and talents such monuments, a part being given to the truth of nature, the rest need only be consistent with the rules of art. Altogether, this statue is worthy of the statesman whose loss, deeply as it was and is felt, has not yet been sufficiently deplored.

STATUE OF MR. CANNING.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. XI. Ben Jonson and Young Raleigh.

THE late Mr. Gifford, in his Memoirs of Ben Jonson, (p. ix. note,) laughs to scorn Aubrey, Anthony Wood, and Oldys, for repeating the story, that in 1593 the poet was tutor to the son of Sir Walter Raleigh, and that on one occasion his pupil sent him home in a basket drunk. Gifford founded his denial on the fact, that young Raleigh was not born until two years after the date assigned to this incident, and on this point he was undoubtedly correct. The truth is, that a great mistake as to the date has been made by all who have hitherto written upon the subject: what was unfounded in 1593 was well-founded in 1613, when young Raleigh was in his eighteenth year, and very capable of playing such a prank. In 1627 Drummond of Hawthornden left a number of MSS. to the college of Edinburgh, which Gifford termed (Memoirs of Ben Jonson, p. cxxviii.) "a collection of rubbish, not worth the hire of the cart that took it away." Hence Fidelity.—This is a study from Sir Thomas we may at least infer, that Gifford had in-Lawrence's beautiful design of two cherub spected the "rubbish;" but if he had examined it more carefully, he would have found a state-B. C. Furniss, and is a very levely performance ment by Jonson himself of the particulars of in this new medium. Mr. Furniss is, we believe, the disputed transaction. The conversations tail of rites and ceremonies. the inventor of the style, which so exquisitely between Ben Jonson and Drummond, in 1618, have never been fully and accurately printed, and many curious points are omitted: one d them is that now under consideration. Gifford mentions Ben Jonson's visit to Paris in 1613: and it appears from Drummond's notes of his interviews with Ben Jonson, that our old dramatist at that date went there as tutor to your Raleigh, and that on one occasion he was made dead drunk by his pupil, and sent home was Walter, who, as an enemy of intoxication, was displeased with Jonson for yielding to it, and with his son for the wantonness of the frolic-Extract of a Letter from a Correspondent s Edinburgh.

Dressing-rooms of Actresses.

EVERY body knows that there were no English actresses on our stage until subsequent w the Restoration; but very soon after that event their dressing-rooms at the theatre were so crowded with visitors, that it was found necesary to issue a general order to prevent the inconvenience. This order proceeded from the King himself, who was perhaps a little jealow Paper Office, in the following terms:

"Charles R.

"Whereas complaint hath been made unto us of great disorders in the attiring-house of the theatre of our dearest brother the Duke of York, under the government of our trusty and well-beloved Sir W. Davenant, by the recor of persons thither, to the hinderance of the actors, and interruption of the scenes: Out will and pleasure is, that no person of what quality soever, do presume to enter at the door of the attiring-house, but such only as do belong to the company and are employed by them. Requiring the guards attending there, and all whom it may concern, to see that obedience be given hereunto, and that the names of offender be sent to us .- Dated, 25th Feb. 1664."

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY

PICTURE OF CHINA.

[Selected from recent Nos. of that very intelligent mi-entertaining Journal, the Canton Register.]

Manners of the Tartars. - The Peking Gasette contains an appeal from the ninth daughter of one of the Tartar kings. About eight years ago, the emperor, who arranges these matters for the whole imperial clan, ordered that she should become the wife of Leen-che. the son of an officer of the yellow banner bodyguard. In about eleven months, before the marriage had taken place, her intended husband died. When Kih-kih, for that was the lady's name, heard of this event, she resolved to cut off her hair, join her husband's family. and remain a virgin for life. This chaste reslution reached the ears of the emperor, and he conferred on her an honorary tablet for the door of her apartment, and gave her a title descriptive of her virtue.

His majesty, a few days ago, when worshipping and offering sacrifice on the altar of Hwang Te, the yellow emperor, and drine originator of agriculture, drank "the cup of blies." bliss," and performed the grand ceremony of thrice kneeling and nine times putting his forehead to the ground. It seems he did not much like it, for he has censured the master of the ceremonies for giving the words "kneel, knock, kneel, knock," too slowly. complains, also, that the man who read the prayer had but a poor voice, and commands that another be chosen who has a strong clear voice, and is perfectly acquainted with the de-

In consequence of the singular appearance of he setting sun a short time since, the enemies of the dynasty thought his majesty ought to lave died; and they sent abroad a report that ne had died. Of such an event, however, there s no information from Peking, and the acting zovernor has sent out spies to endeavour to find out the brotherhood banditti who originated the report.

His majesty, this year, has declined, by an official notification, the sacrificial ceremonies of an altar, candles, &c. presented to a Chinese monarch on attaining the semi-century age. All grand dinners, imperial banquets, &c. are also disallowed. The cause assigned by conjecture is, the death, this year, of the heir-ap-parent, which event leaves the Emperor Taou-kwang without issue that can legally succeed to the throne. He has a son by a Chinese concubine, but the law of the Tartar founders of the reigning dynasty does not allow him to fill the throne. No Chinese lady can enter the imperial harem. Chinese concubines have separeshe attablisments.

Reform. - The deputy governor of the province of Keang-se having reported to his imperial majesty that he had been obliged to use a rigour beyond the law, in punishing the borderers on the south, the emperor, with his vermilion pencil appended to the report this remark: "Perspicacity and knowledge of governmental justice ought always to act thus! How can it do, always to cleave to clayey institutions!"

Chinese Statesman .- Under the reign of Shintsung, Wang-kwei continued to keep the place of premier sixteen years. He was esteemed a reat flatterer in his day, and, after his death, History handed him down to the laugh of posterity, by the appellation of "minister three wills." When going in to an audience of the emperor, he invariably said to his colleagues, "We'll take his majesty's will." When others were discussing the merits of a public measure, his one speech was, "We'll submit to his majesty's will." And after retiring from the imperial presence, he silenced all objections by saying, "We've gotten his majesty's will." A man, not very unlike the Chinese statesman Wang-kwei, we once knew in the western world. He had three opinions on every sub-ject. "This," said he, "is my private opi-nion, this my official opinion, and this my pub-lic opinion."

Superstition .- In this weakness of our nature we believe few people can surpass the Chinese. A considerable sensation has been excited by some atmospherical phenomena lately observed here. On the 4th instant two parhelia appeared, which are regarded as prophetic of the downfal of the present dynasty in the person of the reigning emperor. About a week previously, the sun, for several days, at rising and setting, appeared of a pale green colour; and from this it is assumed that much war or sickness is to take place in the course of the year.

From Sze-chuen we hear that thirty-three vagabond lawyers who stir up litigations have been taken into custody, and are forthwith to be punished.

Certain titular kings - Paou-pa-tour-tse, Chang-tsoo-poo-tour-tse, &c .- have been convicted of joining in the recital of magical incantations to affect somebody's life. They had, it appears, a "black book," in which the curses were written. One of the kings is punished by being rendered for ever unfit to serve the emperor; another eminent personage is to be pilloried for two months, and then receive a hundred lashes with the Tartar whip.

Emperor's Grave.-His majesty has been to ee the "felicitous ground which has to receive his sacred body for ten thousand years, expresses himself well satisfied with it: he has named it Lung-tseuen-yuh, i. e. the Dragon Spring Valley. He has directed that the ornamental buildings on the surface of the ground must be got up as unexpensively as possible, in order to comport with his love of simplicity. Several directions are given concerning a new building called the "Court of the Concubines."

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

On Saturday, in the Barber of Seville, Mad. Cinti Damoureau was added to the musical strength of the opera, with Lablache as the Figure. The house was crowded. Cinti has greatly improved since our former acquaintance with her; and not only throughout the part of Rosina, but especially in Rode's variations, introduced as the music-lesson, was little inferior to Sontag. The ballet is now the finest we have seen—perhaps, altogether, the most attractive ever witnessed on these boards.

On Wednesday Love in a Village introduced a debutante as Rosetta, who sang cleverly in the school of Mrs. Wood; and if she did not develop powers equal to a large theatre, nevertheless gave promise of a pleasing hereafter.

ADELPHI.

Mathews at Home, and in one of his most original and finest entertainments. We have never seen the extraordinary powers of this performer more successfully exerted. He impersonates many new characters :--- an old bachelor Winks-a Dutch Vrow with a family of daughters...Tom Pipes, an old sailor of Brighton another very old sailor—a Scotsman—a bumboat woman and her two lovers, &c. &c. &c.; and all in the most admirable manner. His Tom Pipes is equal to any thing he has before achieved; a perfect representation of a human being entirely different from himself, and consequently an effort of mimetic art of the highest order. The Dutch lady teaching her children to be artificially natural, is extremely comic; but there would be no end to our praise, unless we particularised every part of this laughable and (as executed by one man) very surprising exhibition. With regard to the production itself, it is full of point, wit, and humour; none of which are lost in the hands of Mr. Mathews. The songs — especially one descriptive of a hunt, and another, the life of a hackney coachman_are replete with drollery. The whole evening's amusement can only be appreciated by being seen; and it is enough for our report to say, that even this incomparable actor never shone to greater advantage as a master of all the attributes of the stage.

QUEEN'S THEATRE.

THIS week Miss Chambers, the daughter of Mr. Chambers the banker, has appeared as Lady Teasle, and, with the deportment of a lady, has displayed considerable dramatic ability. She possesses many qualities to adorn the stage, and has besides very strong claims upon the sympathy of the public. The rest of the cast of the School for Scandal was creditable to a minor theatre, some of the characters being excellently sustained.

MR. PEMBERTON'S LECTURES.

Saville House, Leicester Square.

This gentleman was quite right in saying "a correct impression of his designs could not be taken from his advertisement." In justice to ourselves and to him, and to public taste, we will sketch the impression which seeing and hearing him made on us; premising to our readers that it is only by seeing and hearing him that we can be made fully aware of the rare combination of intellectual powers which he possesses.

Mr. Pemberton's object seems to be, to make each of Shakespeare's popular characters the subject of analysis, and to accompany his observations with personations of its moral and metaphysical attributes, — not to recite the words merely, but to speak the language under its strict form of character and feeling. "Nor is it imitation," says Mr. Pemberton, "it is not reflection of impressions on the memory; it is imagination calling up ideal presences, and creating feelings which influence every organ of expression." This, from its novelty, is remarkably striking, as he abandons himself at volition; and his quick imagination acting on a "susceptibility of physical conformation," produces an effect so like, truth, that it is at times almost painful. In an instant the lecturer disappears, and we have the being, whose character was the subject of comment, presented to our eyes and ears, as it were by a dash of thought, without scenery or dress,voice, feature, and gesture, all in keeping, ___ and a reality fastens itself on the spectator; or from that state of intense excitement, pale or flushed face, tearful eyes, quivering lips, and trembling limbs, become, in an instant, composed and critical. Perhaps we should have smiled at this if we had only been told of it by a third person.

Previous to his analysis of Macbeth, he engages us with a series of forcible illustrations of eliciting the power of language by contrasted modes of pronouncing the same passages, each mode increasing in beauty or strength, as it more closely approximates original emotion; exhibiting also the remarkable (but in their occurrence little noticed) influences which the affections have on the voice. This may be called the philosophy of eloquence. Here Mr. Pemberton is quite at home; and, perhaps, no man has ever grappled with the subject with more spirit and enthusiasm than he has done. He "paints by the modulations and colours of voice;" and from the example he gave us, much excites our curiosity respecting his forthcoming "Oral Pictures," to which he alluded as in preparation for the public ear. Of their value as poetic literature, we can say nothing with decision till he prints them; but the extracts in exemplification of the sympathy of the voice with the imagination and affections, had a vigour, closeness, and stir of character, which was irresistible. The horse bounding with his delirious rider through a night-storm -

" Mantled in terror's foam, with terror's speed, An arrowy flash appalled the maddened steed."

(We may not give the precise words verbatim), "and threw him back, quivering on his haunches, at the extreme ledge of a precipice; they stared a hundred fathom down upon the bursting surge." There was a terrific appropriateness and exactness in Mr. Pemberton's words and manner, which produced a striking contrast to the tranquil moonlit scene on the Adriatic, which preceded it.

VADIETIES.

Cleopatra's Needle....One of these remark. able pillars is at length, we believe we may say, on its way for England; the other is destined for France. The Pasha of Egypt, some time ago, presented them to the two European governments, and vessels have been sent out for their transport hither. Parliament has voted a sum of money, 10,000%, to defray the expense on our part; but we think it probable that the cost will be greater.

Mordan and Co.'s Patent Oblique Steel Pens. -We are always well pleased to have to notice improvements in the useful arts; and where could we find one of greater value than in faci-litating the art of writing? In order to remove the objections to metal pens, viz. their liability to tear or gather fibres from the surface of the paper, and spurt the ink, the patentees, Mr. Brockedon, an artist, and Mr. Mordan, the pencil-manufacturer, have devised the present principle, by which the slit is made in the direction of the usual slope in writing, though the point remains in the same situation as that of common pens, by which means both nibs are brought equally down, the position of the writer is less constrained, and an elasticity hitherto unknown is given to the pen itself. The annexed type of it, however, will explain the point more clearly.

We have only to add, that we have tried the novelties for several days, at hard work, and have found them answer entirely to our satisfaction. Of course the patentees' metto will be ___

" Peri-ant qui ante nos nostra fecerunt."

St. Petersburgh, March 1. — M. Mabboux was commissioned by his Excellency the Minister of Finance, Count Cancrin, to visit the provinces in the interior of Russia, in order to inquire into the means of establishing new manufactories, and of improving those that already existed. To promote the latter purpose M. Mabboux opened a gratuitous course of lectures on technology; in which he succeeded in propagating information which was soon made use of with advantage in several manufactories. With the same object in view, he has now resolved to adopt the publication of manuals for artisans and manufacturers, in imitation of those which have been so successful in France. They are to be placed within the reach of all classes by the plainness of the style and the moderate price; and to be published first in the Russian language, and after-wards in French, Swedish, and German.

Natural History. - M. Audubon has (in January) returned to St. Augustine, E. Florida, after a tour of one hundred miles into the interior of that peninsula, having procured in Carolina and Florida several hundred specimens of birds, including some new species, and added twenty or thirty drawings to his portfolio. He writes, however, that the country is poor beyond any idea; though he had discovered, shot, and drawn a new iois, and named it Tantalus fuscus. "I have discovered," he also adds, "three different new species of heath, one bearing a yellow blossom, the two others a red and purple one; also, a beautiful new kalmia, and several extraordinary parasitical plants, bearing some resemblance to the pine-apple plant, growing on the eastern side of the cyprus tree, in swamps, about six or ten feet above the water. During my late excursion I almost became an amphibious beingspending the most of my days in the water, and by night pitching my tent on the barren sands. Whilst I remained at Spring Garden, the alligators were yet in full life; the white-headed eagles setting; the smaller resident birds pairing; and, strange to say, the warblers which migrate, moving easterly every warm day, and returning every cold day; a curious circumstance, tending to illustrate certain principles in natural economy, to which I shall again allude on a more appropriate occasion."

A later account notices the arrival at Charleston of six boxes containing prepared skins of birds, animals, &c., as well as a number of choice shells, seeds, roots, &c., the result of the inde-fatigable exertions of M. Audubon and his associates. In this collection there are between four and five hundred skins of birds, several of them rare in this part of the United States, some that are never found here, and a few that have not yet been described. Of the birds of rare occurrence are two of the species of polican (Policanus) not described by Wilson. The parrot (Paittaous Carolinensis), the palm-warbler of Buonaparte (Sylvia palmeres), and Florida jay, a beautiful bird without the crest so common in that genus. Among his new discoveries in Florida is a noble bird partaking of the appearance both of the falcon and vulture tribes, which would seem to be a connecting link between the two. His habits, too, it is said, partake of his appearance, he being alternately a bird of prey, and feeding on the same food with the vultures. This bird remains yet to be described, and will add not only a new species, but a new genus to the birds of the United States. We perceive also in M. Audubon's collection a new species of coot (Fulica) .- Philadelphia Papers.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Literary Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XVIII. May 5, 1888.] Mrs. Jameson, the popular authoress of "Memoirs of Fernale Soversigns," and the "Diary of an Emmyse," is preparing a work entitled (Characteristics of Women, Moral, Poetical, and Historical.

Europe in 1839, 31.

LIST OF WEW BOOKS.

Europe in 1839, 31.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Irving's New Skasch-Book, the Albambra, 2 vols. Sve. II. 4s. bds.—Joplin on the Currency, 8vo. 8s. 6d. bds.—Bull: 4s. bds.—Joplin on the Currency, 8vo. 8s. 6d. bds.—Bull: 4s. bds.—Joplin on the Currency, 8vo. 8s. 6d. bds.—Electures, 8vo. 6s. dt. bds.—Electures, 8vo. 6s. dt. bds.—Siesones, 18mo. 8s. bds.—Alds on Glanduler Diseases, 8vo. 8s. bds.—List bds.—Jistones's Life of Dr. Cullen, Vol. 1 8vo. 18s. bds.—Buds.—Thomson's Life of Dr. Cullen, Vol. 1 8vo. 18s. bds.—Electure's Shipwreck of the Juno, fcp. 3s. bds.—Gorton's Population Resures, 1831, 8vo. 6s. cloth.—Scripture Garden-Walk, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Bude and Blossoms, 18mo. 2s. hf.-bd.—Parmeter's Village Lectures, 18mo. 3s. 6d. bds.—My Station, and 1s. Duties, by the Author of "the Week," 18mo. 2s. 6d. bds.—The Byron Gallery, Part I. prints, 4s. 6d.; proofs, 4so. 6s.; India, 7s. 6d.; India, 1st. 1st. 6d. bds.—Hansard's Debates, 3d Series, Vol. VII. 4th vol. of Session 1831, royal 8vo. 10. 18s. bds.; Li 13s. 6d. hf.-bd.—Hogg's Queer Book, fcp. 8s. bds.—Klosterheim, by the English opjum—Eater, fcp. 7s. bds.—Skurray's Shepherd's Garland, 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—Surrays Shepherd's Garland, 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—An Offering of Sympathy to bersaved Parenta, 18mo. 8s. 6d. cloth.

		_	_	_
WETTODAL	OGT	4 A T		OTTE	MAT.	31	220
METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.
April.	Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday 26	From	36.	to	45.	29-73	to	29-79
Friday 27		35.	••	53.	29-84	••	29-79
Saturday - 28					29-73	••	29-63
Sunday 29		36.	••	57.	29-53	••	29.49
Monday - 39	• • • • •	39.	••	où.	29-30	••	29-44
May.					i
Tuesday · · 1		32.	• •	55.			29-29
Wednesday 2		40.		57.	1 29-32	••	29.38
Wind variable, N.E. prevailing.

Except the 28th and 29th, generally cloudy, with frequent heavy rain.
Rain fallen, 925 of an inch.
Edmontos.
CHARLES H. ADAMS.

ADVEDTICEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

ITERARY FUND.-The Forty-Third Anniversary Postival of this Society will be colob-recessors. Hall, on Wednesday, the 9th of May, wh Grace the Dube of Sumersot, the President of the Lust will take the Chair.

The Rest of Milgrose
The Levi Bishop of Chichester
Levi Bishop of Chichester
Levi Bishop of Chichester
Levi Bishop of Chichester
Levi Bishop of Chichester
Levi Bishop of Chichester
Bis John Malcolen, G.C.B.
Dr. Birtheck
Laman Hancherd, Esq.
Reandesth, jun. Esq. Laman Blancherd, Req Henry Brandreth, Jun. James Cochrane, Esq. C. W. Dilke, Req.

ride.

Beward Foss, Reg.

Edward Kaleswell, Esq. M.A.

Bobert Lemon, Beg.

Abexasder Legan, Reg.

Charles Macharlane, Esq.

Rev. Heavy H. Milusan,

Robert Montgomery, Esq.

Jom Googh Frichols, Esq.

Charles Terry, Esq.

Joseph Trocher, Esq.

Edinghem Wilson, Esq.

Stinghem Wilson, Esq.

Dinner at Skx e'Cleck prodesty. Techeta, Stc. each, to be be of the Stewards; also of Mr. Snew, at the Seciety's Chamber No. 4, Lincoln's Inn Fields; and at the Bar of the Promuse Taverm.

RTISTS' BENEVOLENT FUND. A BIISTO DENEY VULLII I FUNDADuder the Patronage of the KING. Essablished 1815; Incorporated by Repai Charter, August 3, 187. The Twenty-Third Anniversary Dinner will take place in Freemanner Hall, on Sasarday, May 18.

LORD FRANCIS LEVESON GOWER in the Chaix.

Stewards. The BARL GROSVENOR. The KARL of SURREY.

The Rd
Sammel Angel, Req.
Geo. Baseri, Jun. Eeq.
Whilten Bernall, Beq.
Robert Branston, Eeq.
M. F. Briggs, Eeq. E.A.
Charles Hrookbanks, Req.
Captain Chamler, E.N.
George Cruinshank, Req.
John Dickinson, Eeq.
John Dickinson, Eeq.
William Creft Fish, Eeq.
Thomas Griffith, Eeq.
Tickets may be had-ac-at-

Henry Jost, Esq. Charles Knight, Esq. John Lee, Esq. Richard Lloyd, Esq. Newtil Gilver, Esq. William Samat, Esq. Leigh Setheby, Esq. James Start., Esq. F. Tayler, Esq. F. Tayler, Esq. C. B. Wall, Esq. M.P.

Bemss vermus, see, Tickets may be had of the Stewards; at the Bar of the Tavan; ad of the Scentary, No. 112, Monat Street, Gresvenser Square, Inner on Table at Half-past Pive for Six precisely. JOHN MARTIN, Sec.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL MALL. The Gallory for the Exhibition and Sale of the Works of British Artist, inopen daily, from Ten in the Moring till Fire in the Evening.

Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.

MILLIAM BARNARD, Kopper.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY OF PAINTERS WATER COLOURS will open on Mooday next, May 7th, their Gallery, Pall Mail Rast. Open each day from Nine Dask.

Admittance, la-Catalogue, 6d. B. H1LLS, Secretary.

EXHIBITION.—CHEF-D'ŒUVRE of MUSTILLO, from Swille, comprising his highly osh-braned Galley-Sirve, Negro Boy, and Issae blessing Japoh. Also the Madema and Infani, by Vandyck. New arbithting on St., Old Brand. Admittance, One Shilling.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON. — German UNIVERSITY of LONDON. — German Menday, the 7th of May, at Six et Clock, y.a., an Elements; Course of Thirty Lectures on the German Language, to be consensed every Wednesday, Priday, and Menday, at the same hour. Fee, St. 10c. Dr. Hausman intends to read during the next Seine, with those Medical Gentlemen who are desires of becoming asquaissed with German Medical Literature, some Werks omnected with Medical Studyers who are desires of becoming to with Medical Studyers who are desired by attending the above Course.

Electricity, Magnetism, and Electro-Magnetism.—Dr. Bitchis will commence a popular Sevaing Course of Sixteen Lectures on the same Southeast, and The Study, at the same hour. The second of the second section of Lectures in the University, should be matriculated Students.

Council Room, April 16th, 1882.

Council Room, April 16th, 1832.

Philosophical Instruments.
Just published,

NEW and much enlarged CATA.

LOGUE, with the price of each Article affixed, containing a full Beartylers extra the price of each Article affixed, containing a full Beartylers extra the Optices), Machematical, Fallocophical, and Chemical and each dy watther and Hill, Change Cress, Leeden.

May be had of all Bookseilers, price in

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

In 1 vel. 18mo. neetly bound in cloth, price 4s. 4d.

RT in NATURE and SCIENCE ANTI-CIPATED. By CHARLES WILLIAMS.

----- Nature's art
Still unimpaired—still unimproved remains.

With Prentispiers, neatly bound in cloth, price 4s &s.

Sent Frederick Westley and A. H. Davis, Stationets' Hell

Court, and Arn Manis Lone.

'HE METROPOLITAN MAGAZINE,

HE METROPOLITAN MAGAZINE,
By THOMAS CAMPBELL, Esq.
For May, contains, among others, the following interesting Articles:—The Cherube, a Foem, by Thomas Campbell, Esq.—West India Quastion; late Orders in Ceurcil—Public Opinion; Newspapers—The Lords and the Referm Bill—Dennis Ready; a Tale of the Kingdom of Kerry. By Sisman O'Driscoil, Etq.—The Waggeoer—Cis vering's Autobiography, containing Opinions, Characters, &c. of his Consemporates—Landerre and Mavgan, in Cornwall. By John Lander, the African Traveller—The Funds and their Management—Popular Historical Errors; the Iron Mask—The Pacha of Many Tales, No. VIII. By the Anthor of the "King'a One"—Reverse and Recollections of a Self-taught Landscape Painter—Dalogues of the Deck, No. 3; Jack in Parliamess. By the Auther of Tales of a Tax—Sec. Se.

Banaders and Otley, Conduit Street.

In 2 vols. 8vo. with Twenty-six Illustrations by Landseer, from Sketches by the Author, principally of the Field Sports of India, EN and PENCII, SKETCHES of INDIA; being a Journal of a Tour in that Country.

By CAPTAIN MUNDY,
Late Aide-de-Camp to Lord Combernere.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

New Satire. ad edition, beards, price 4s. 6d.

IVING POETS and POETESSES.

By the Auther of "the Slege of Constantinople." Content.—Campbell, Bulver, Mr. Hemans, and Fifty living Authors, whose Lives are sketched, and genius considered. "He has included nearly all the taient of the country. We perceive nice disortiminations of character."—Imperiod Magazine. "There are elegance of diction and ansenses of criticism in Michell's remarks. In having been able to find frequent subjects for gratialation, he is more fortunate than Byran."—Liveryool Chronicks.

remicle.

This bitter entire has woven fresh laurels for his brow."— ymouth Reveld.

William Kidd, 232, Regent Street.

Portraits of a free of the Antiqueries.

RASER'S MAGAZINE for May,
wice 24.64.

RASER'S MAGAZINE for May, price 2s. 4d.

Contenies—Beavel's Life of Johnson—The Martyrs—The Great Plague in the Fourteenth Century—The Reports of the Commissioners on Common-Law Reform—Nies Francy Kemble's "Prancis the First;" and Mr. 8Bertdan Knowlee's "Hunchback"—On Parties, Na. I. By an Independent Pluttes—Vergages and Travels. Captain Beall Hail and the Landers—Gallery of Literary Characters, No. X.IV.; a few of the 4.88 cs. (With full-length Pertrains)—Shiel servess the Tithes—The Altrive Tales—Durf Juyestins—A Speech by way of Riders to the late Dehnte—Rejectes to the Literati, No. IV. Letter of Viscount Duncannes, M.P. to Archibald Jobbyn, Reg. cs. M.P.

James Fraser, 215, Regent Street, London; John Anderson, Jun. Edisburgh; W. R. M.Thun, Giasgow; and Grant and Bolton, Dublin.

To the Clergy, Landowners, Magistrates, &c.

THE BRITISH MAGAZINE of Religious

THE BRITISH MAGAZINE of Religious and Rocestactical Information, Parochial Hasery, Dooments respecting the Sists of the Foer, Progress of Education, &c. price &t. for May, contains—Original Papers: 1. On the present State of Dissent—S. On the Comparative Importance of the Sermen and the Prayers—S. Mathew Therndike. Concluded—4. Netices of the Olden Time—6. Reparation of St. Alban's Abbey, with an Engraving of the North Frent of the Abbey Church, from Hawkmoor the Architect's Piate, in 1721—6. Sacred Poetry—7. Correspondence: Observance of the Sabbeth-Revival of the Convection—On letting Land to the Poor—S. Reviews: Burton's Sermons—Montgomerry Onford—BiblicalOshiene—Gleig's Sermon—Girdlestone's New Testament—9. Reports of Societies—10. Important Occuments: New Yestry Act—National Society—Beer Shops—Messorial of the Church Missionary Society for more Shishops in Indis—Home Missionary Society. B. Events of the Month—13. University and Clerical Intelligence, &c. &c. &c.
John Terrill, 360, Report Streets, Londes; Farker, Oxford', Grant, Cambridge; Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh; M'Phun, Glesgow; Wakassan, Dablin. Orders received by all Booksellers and Newsmen.

Price 3c. 6d. No. 3f of the MAGAZINE of NATURAL HISTORY, and Journal of Zeelegy, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, and Meteorology.

Conducted by J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S. &c.
(Continued every Two Months, alternately with the Gardenar's Magazine.)
Printed for Longman, Hose, Orme, Brown, and Co.

Br. Lardner's Cabinel Cyclopedia.
In monthly volumes, small Svo. &. in cloth.
published, being Vel. XXX. of the above, Vol. II. of HISTORY of SPAIN and PORTUGAL,

(4 vels.)

(6 vels.)

On June 1, History of Spain and Pertugal, Vel. III.

On July 3, Machinesh's History of England, Vel. III.

Pablished April 5, History of Spain and Portugal, Vel. L.

London: Lesgman and Co., and John Taylor.

In 18me. price tr. 6d. bound,
SELECTION of PRAYERS, for the Use of Families, for every Merning and Evening of the Arranged and compiled oblefly from the Book of Com-son Prayer.

By ALLEN COOPER, M.A.

Minister of St. Mark's, North Audley Street, and Chaplain to the Meet Noble the Marques of Exeter.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Weiserloo Piece, Pail Mail.

In royal 8vo. Nos. I. II. III. price 2d. each, of COLLECTION of the PUBLIC GENE. A COLLECTION OF the RODAGE RAL STATUTES passed in the Second Year of Reign of King William IV.

Published by J. Richards, Law Booksaller and Publisher,
No. 184, Front Stoom, and sold by all Booksallers.

In post 8vo. price & boards,

THE TRAVELLER'S LAY, a Poem;

written during a Tour in France, Savey, Switzerland,
Germany, and the Netherlands.

By THOMAS MAUDE, Eq. A.M. Ozon.

(Dedicated, by permission, to Thomas Moore, Eq.)

Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co. London; and to be had, by order, of every Bookselier in Town and Country.

"We congratulate the author on his success: his is no common mind."—Weekly Dispatch.

"His passion for the picturesque is well displayed in his delineation of the wild scenery through which his route lay. The following glance at St. Martin, the Vale of Chamouni, and Mont
St. Bernard, is very fellotiousty given."—Atles.

"It exhibits many virid pictures of the soenes through which he author passed. The poem is worthy a place in the best library."—Ledy's Magazine.

"We hope that the deserved success of the Traveller's Lay,"

&c. C.—Intelligence.

"We hope that the deserved success of the Traveller's Lay,"

&c.—Intelligence.

"We hope that the deserved proper planer and desum deep postes ordinaires. M. Maude a l'orelle et l'imagination positiques, et de plus une diévation de pensée peu commune."—L'Indépradant.

Four vois foolson 8ve.

Four vols. foolsoap 8ve.
CONTARINI FLEMING; a Psychological Autobiography.
John Murray, Albemaric Street.

A COURSE of LECTURES on the COUNGE of the GREEKS and ROMANS. Delivered in the University of Oxford, ST. D.D. Principal of St. Alban's Hall, and Canden Professor of Ancient History.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

In 2 vols. 8vo. price 94s. boards,
N ILLUSTRATION of ST. PAUL'S AN ILLUSTRATION of ST. FAUL S
EPISTLES, inclusive of an entirely new and independent Translation; being an attempt to render them plain and says to every one, by combining the qualities of a Translation and Commentery with the Edelity of a Translation and the freedom of an Original.

By CHARLES EYER,

Driginal.

By CHARLES EYRE,
Cik., Trinity Coll. Camb. A.B. 1807.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.;
and J. Raw, Ipswich.

EXTRACTOR and POLAR STAR A AGOLUR AND FULAR STAR, asternded the trade, and whose rich and sold stores of mingled information, and recreative reading, will convey inchangible gratification and delight to every intelligent family and man of reading.

reading.

Published every Saturday morning, price 6d. containing near a hundred columns of closely printed matter, (with new type), stitched in a wrapper. It is also published in monthly Parts, with the Magazines, price 5c. Part I. will appear the lat of June.

June.
Office, 1, Newcastle Street, Strand; and sold by Simpkin and Marshall; and by all Booksellers and Newsmen throughout the Kingdom.

Post Svo. 5s. 6d.

HULSEAN LECTURES for the YEAR

1891.—The Versacity of the Historical Beobs of the Old Testament, from the Conclusions of the Peratateuch to the Opening of the Prophets; being a Continuation of the Argument for the Versacity of the Five Books of Moscost.

By the Rev. J. J. BLUNT,

Fellow of St. Jahn's College, Cambridge.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

DUBLIN JOURNAL of MEDICAL and CHEMICAL SCIENCE; to be en

CHEMICAL SCIENCE; to be continued every altermate month.

Contents of No. II.

Original Communications by the following Gentlemen :—
Art. I. Cases of Anseriam cured by Compression, by J. W.
Cuack, M.R.LA. Surgeon to Dr. Seevener Hespital. Reported by William Campbell, Reg. M.R.LA.

2. Chinola Observations on Opium, by William Seekes, M.D. one of the Physiciams to the Meath Hospital.

3. Observations on Sponteness Amputation of the Limbs of the Factus, by W. F. Montgomery, M.D. M.R.LA. Professor of Midwifery to the College of Physicians.

4. Observations on the Treatment of various Diseases, by Robert J. Graves, M.D. M.R.LA. Professor of the Institutes of Medicine, Str. &c.

5. A Case of Angina Pecturia, with Remarks on the Theraportic Use of Hydrosulphuret of Ammenia, by Andrew Newson, Beg. Licontiate of the Royal College of Surgeons.

6. Contributions to Pathological Anatomy, by Richard Townsond, M.D. M.R.LA. Medical Impector of the Hesse of Haudry, &c.

7. On the Use of Cold Aspersion in Collapse, by G. T. Hayden, Beg. Surgeon to the Angiesso Dispensary.

Bibliographic Notices.

1. Beobachtungen über den Stufferwahniam oder das Delirium Tremens, von Dr. Georg Barthausen. Bremen, 1605. 6vo. pp. 843.

Observations on the Mania of Drankards, er Delfrium Tre-

Incubation, by J. E. Purkinje. Wratislav, 1886.

Scientific Institiguess.

1. Chemistry—E. Physical Science—B. Botany and Natural History—A. Anatony and Physicaly—B. Pathology and Therapestic—S. Burgery—7. Materia Medica and Phanmacy.

Published by Hodges and Smith, 21, College Green, Dublin; Longman, Scien, and Co., Simphin and Marshall; S. Highley, J. Taylor; and Sanshav and Smith, London; Masischian and Saverart, Edizhburgh; and Smith and Ren, Glangow.

Byc. price 14s.

LEMENTS of BOTANY and VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY; lecluding the Characters of the Natural Families of Pharts, with Illustrative Figures.

By A. R.ICHARD, M.D.

Translated from the 4th edit. by W. MACGILLIVRAY, A.M.

"We perceive with satisfaction that the English reader is new presented with a luminous view of vegetable physiology, after the natural method of Justice, in Macgillivray's translation of Richard's Elements of Botany. This excellent work has been log known and valued in France, where it forms the text-book of the student. The translation appears to be very well-excuted, and have little doubt that it will soon supersede the elementary work of Str James Edward Smith, which has never appeared to us worthy of the fame of that emissent botanist."—Spectator.

Frinsed for W. Biackwood, Edinburgh; and T. Cedeli, Strand, London.

Price 11. 8s. boards, and 11. 10s. in silk, illustrated by 56 Vignettes, (96 of which are Landscapes, by Turner),

T A L Y. A Poem.
By SAMUEL ROSERS, Eq.
1. The Hunchback. By James Sheridan

2. The Population Returns of 1831. By J.

Rickman, Eq. 10s. cloth.

3. The Maid of Elvar, a Poem. By Allan gham. 6. boards. B. Mozon, 64, New Bond Street.

Popular Balf-Guines Books. v editions, revised, 10s. 6d. each. HUNDRED WONDERS of the Wonders of the Heavens. All the Voyages round the World. Modern Travels in all Countries.

All Religions and Religious Ceremonies. Universal Receipt-Book.

Anecdote Library. Vocal Library Laughing Philosopher. Scotsman's Library. Book of Trades.

Travels of Rolando. Mitchell's Dictionary of History. of Chemistry.

of Mathematics and Natural Phi-

London: Printed for Sir Riehard Phillips and Co-

In 8ve. price 4s. 6d.

NOTICES of the MOSAIC LAW; with some Account of the Opinions of recent French Writers concerning it; being the Christian Advocate's publication for the years 1881.

By HUGH JAMES ROSE, B.D.
Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge, and Dean of Bocking.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge.

Bound in waved sills, gift edges, price 2a.

PICORDANZA; or, Friendship's Memento.
Consisting of the mest exquisite Pices of Modern English Poctry, with some Extracts from the French and Italian, and a few criginal Picess.
Lenden, Hamilton and Adense; Birmingham, Wrighteen and Webb.

Dr. Robertson's Lectures.

Published by Baldwin and Cradock, and to be had of all Booksellers, price is. 66. with a stiffuned Cover,

WO LECTURES on the CIRCULA-TION, RESPIRATION, and MODE OF NUTRITION IN ANIMALS and PLANTS; with an Account of the Mode of Growth as the latter, and an Investigation into the mutual Relation which subsists between them: as lately delivered before the Chesterfield Literary and Philosophical Society.

By W. E. ROBERTSON, M.D.

REEK GRADUS; or, Greek, Latin, and I Esglish Protection; containing the Interpretation, in Latin and English, of all Words which occur in the Greek Poets, from the certicute period to the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, and also the Quantities of each Syllables; thus combining the advantages of a Lexicon of the Greek Poets and a Greek Gradus. For Schools and Cellegus. In 1 thick vol. 28 No. D.D.

It has been the object to Present, in a comprehensive form, a manual, containing the interpretation, in Latin and English, of all such Words as event in the principal Greek peets; the quantity of each syllables actually or virtually marked; an authenty quoted for the existence and quantity of each word in those writers, and those terms set down as syneayments which appear to bear a similitade in sense to the principal word. The works of the Greek peets have been diligently emanised, and each syllables actually or wireless of the Greek contention to each principal word as are of ingrituates usage, and seem best calculated to embellish Greek composition.

"The indentaingable application would not be compilation of the Greek Gradus is manifest and or recommend the work as antagency used to a very wide extent."—Life Cherosick.

"Dr. Brasse has certainly conferred a lasting benefit on all classical statesures, and escent betweets, and escent before the advantagementy used to a very wide extent."—Life Cherosick.

"The factionities and deserve the highest praise for teste, learning, and indefiningable industry."—Westly flexion.
Frincis and published by A. J. Valyy, M.A. Red Lion Court, Pleet Street; and sall other Steelessian in Team and Country.

Price One Shilling, with numerous Engravings by Seymour,

COMIC MAGAZINE. THE

(No. II.) for the present Month,

MAY

now be had, by order, of all Booksellers in Town and Country.

A New Edition of Number I. is also read-v. William Kidd, 238, Regent Street.

Stemondt's Italy.
Published by Treuttal and Co. 20, Sobo Square.

YHISTOIRE de la RENAISSANCE de la LIBERTE en ITALIE; de sa Frogrès, de sa Décadet de sa Chute.

2. Des Espérances et des Besoins de l'Italie, par J. C. L. Simonde de Sismondi. Svo. L.

Frinch Family Library.

Vols. XXIV. XXV. XXVI. or Becomd Series,

POETS, Vols. I. II. III., containing les

Guyers de Balian

Cuvres de Bolleau.

Price of each Volume, handsomely done up in famcy boards,
E. 6d.; or on fine paper, 4s. 6d.

The Dramatic Series is now completed, in Source of the Complete of the

In 2 vols. 8vo. with Plates, 20c.

In 2 vols. 8vo. with Plates, 20c.

IN MONTHS in AMERICA.

By G. T. VIGNE, Eq. Barrister-at-Law.

"This work is the production of an intelligent and a rational man—one who gives information rather than amusement. We have not seen a more fair and unprejudiced view taken of the present position of the United States."—Library Gazette, April 7.

"The chief merit of these volumes, next to their impartiality, is the clear pictures and national views which the author every where draw. The laws, the religion, the vineyards, the mines, the elections, the congress, and the Indians, are all matters examined and discussed by our traveller; nor does he leave untouched the more interesting topic of the Canadas."—Atherseum, April 7.

April 7. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London.

DISCOURSES and SACRAMENTAL
ADDRESSES to a VILLAGE CONGREGATION.
By the Rev. D. B. BARER, A.M.
O'RSL. John's College, Cambridge,
London: Princed for J., Jo. 200 Bloom of the Control of th

Also, by the same Author,
The Nature of the Proof of the Christian Religion; with a Statement of the particular Evidence of it. (Chiefly from Butler.) In 12mo. price St..

Svo. boards, with 18 Plates and 38 Cuts, price 18s.

MICROSCOPIC CABINET of SELECT ANIMATED OBJECTS; a Description of the Jewel and Doublet Microscope, Test Objects, &c. with 18 coloured Drawings of Animalcules, &c.
By A. PBITCHARD.

By A. PRITCHARD.

Original Memoirs on the Art of Proving Achromatic and other Microscopes, &c. &c. By G. R. Goring, M.D.

Pritchard, 18, Picket Street, Strand; Whittaker, Ave Maria Lane.

In 8vo. Vol. I. price 12s. of

A N ACCOUNT of the LIFE, LECTURES, and WRITINGS of WILLIAM CULLEN, M.D. Professor of the Practice of Physic in the University of Edinburgh,
JOHN THOMSON, M.D. F.R.S.L. and E.
Professor of Medicine and General Pathology in the University of Edinburgh.

Lately published, by the same Author,
The Works of William Cullen, M.D., containing his Physiology, Nosology, and First Lines of the Practice of Physic; with numerous Extracts from his Manuscript Papers, and from his Treatise on the Materia Medica. In 8 vols. 8vo.

T. Cadell, Strand, London.

In 8 vols. 18mo. embellished with numerous Plates and Maps, price 18s. boards,
I T A I; Y.

By JOSIAH CONDER,
Author of the "Modern Traveller."

"Conder's Italy' will in future be the travelling companion of every man bent upon a thorough investigation of that interesting land. He is the best compiler of the day, and this is no small praise. Mr. Conder is also the compiler of the "Modern Traveller," the best and completest geographical and descriptive work in any language."—Spectator, April 1831.

"We sincerely congratulate the public upon the appearance of a work, which really is an accurate and complete account of modern Italy."—Aristic Journal, May 1881.

New editions of the sweral Countries contained in the Modern Traveller may be had separates, price 5s. 6s. per vol. in cich will be accounted in the Modern Traveller."—Literary Gazette.

"Conder's 'Modern Traveller."—Literary Gazette.
"Conder's 'Modern Traveller: is well all the libraries taken together."—Fraser's Magesties, a aguet 1831.

Printed for James Duncan, Mr, Faternoster Row.

Standard Novels, Vol. XV.
Complete in 1 vol. mently bound and illustrated, price &c.

Complete in 1 vol. seatly bound and illustrated, price &c.

ELF-CONTROOL.

By Mrs. BRUNTON.

Porming the 15th Volume of the "Standard Novels."

Among others, the following have already appeared in the
The Pilot, the Syst. Bandard Novels:—
The Pilot of the Syst. Bandard Novels:

The Pilot of the Syst. Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Bandard Novels:

Ba

Washington Irving's New Sketch-Book, New Novels by the Earl of Mulgrave, the Author of "Grauby," &c. Just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street. In 2 role, 8vo. nufermly with the former Series, 84s.

New Builington Street.

In 8 vols. 8vo. uniformly with the former Series, 84s.

THE NEW SKETCH-BOOK; the ALHAMBRA.
By GEOFFREY CRAYON.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Ma-tilds," and "Yes and No." 3 vois-

Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"

Tales of the Early Ages. By the Author of "Brambletye House," &c. 3 vols.
"A deeply interesting and romantic work, in which 'the deeds of days of other years' are related in a style that cannot fail to captivate every reader."—Chellenham Caronicle.

Memoirs of Female Sovereigns. By Mrs.

meson. In 3 vols.

"Written by one of the most elegant of our female writers; il of feeling and fancy; a true enthusiast, with a glewing soul."

Blackweed.

Stanley Buxton; or, the Schoolfellows. By the Author of "Lawrie Todd," &c. 3 vols.
"A novel of very considerable power, and exhibiting a deep hnowledge of the human heart. It is well worthy of the author of 'Lawrie Todd." "—Morning Berald.

VII. Cavendish; or, the Patrician at Sea. 2d

Also, just ready, in 8 vols-

The Fair of May Fair.

Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier By the Author of "Darnley," "De L'Orme," &c. 2 vols.

New Novels.—Now ready,

New Novels.—Now ready,

"I has the style, manner, and power of Madame de Genlis,—the writer of beautiful sentiment pur excellence. It is a romantic tale; but our partiality to heart. The authoress is knowledge on the whole doctrine of emotice, more particularly formal sentences in the whole doctrine of emotice, more particularly formal sentences. There are in these volumes, passages of analytical examination into the heart and its agitations, worthy of our best and most elegant writers. "Spectator."

Country Houses. A Novel.

"The clever authoress of Country Houses' has given an admirable picture of the amusements and occupations of the aristocracy during a country residence."

The Jesuit. A Novel.

Saunders and Otley, Public Library, Conduit Street.

A At this extensive Establishment the perusal of all New Publications, English and Foreign, may be obtained in Town or Country. Terms on application.

Handsomely printed, with 17 Plates, engraved from Greek Gems &c. crown 8vo. 18s.

THE AGAMEMNON of ÆSCHYLUS.
Translated from the Greek. With a Dissertation on Greek Tragedy.
By JOHN S. HARFORD, Eq. D.C.L. and F.R.S.

By JOHN S. HARFORD, Eq. D.C.L. and F.R.S.

By John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Gorton's Population Returns, 1831.
In 1 vol. 8vo. price 6s.
THE POPULATION of EVERY VHE POPULATION OF EVERY PLACE in GREAT BRITAIN, according to the Rerus made to Parliament in 1831; together with the Annual lute of Real Property, as assessed in 1815. The whole stranged strict Alphabetical Order,
By JOHN GORTON,
Editor of the New Topographical Dictionary,
London: Chapman and Hall, 186, Strand; and Effingham
Wilson, Royal Exchange.

THE BOTANICAL MISCELLANY, No. VII.

By PROFESSOR HOOKER

John Murray, Albemaric Street.

In 8-chiller's Ficako.

In 8-c Milliken and Sen, Dublin; and Lengman and Ce. Londen.

In feelecap &ve. price ?e.

LOSTERHEIM; or, the Masque.
By the ENGLISH OPPUM-EATER.
Printed for W. Birchwood, Edinburgh; and T. Cadell, Birnad, Leaden.

In feelscap 8ve. price 8c. dedicated to Christopher North and Timothy Tickler, Esquires, Q U E E R B O O K.

By the ETTRICK SHEPHERD.
Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and
T. Cadell, Strand, Londen.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,

1. Songs, now first collected. Fcp. 8vo. 7s.

2. The Shepherd's Calendar. 2 vols. 12mo.

BIACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH
MAGAZINE, No. CXCIV. for May 1692.

I. Tennyaso's Poems—II. Homer's Hymns, No. 5; Cares—III.
Damont's Recollections of Mirabeau—IV. Tery Misrals—V.
The Bong of the Gifted. By Mrs. Hennans—VI. Impressions of Edinburg. By P. Rooney, Esq.—VII. The Castle of the Isle of Edinburg. By P. Rooney, Esq.—VII. The Castle of the Isle of edinburg. By P. Rooney, Esq.—VII. The Castle of the Isle of edinburg. By P. Rooney, Esq.—VII. The Castle of the Isle of ed the Cave; a Poem. In Four Point Machiners of the Americans—XI. The Reform Debate in the Lords.

Edinburgs: Printed for William Blackwood, Na. 45, George Btrest; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

In a thick vol. 18mo. with 108 Woodcuts, in cloth boards, 18s.

A GEOLOGICAL MANUAL.

By HENRY T. DE LA BECHE, P.R.S. P.G.S.

Member of the Geological Society of France, &c.

"A work of sellition, corrected and enlarged.

"A work of the sellition corrected and enlarged.

"A work of the sellition of the tits place in the lithral relates, and which must henceforth the tits place in the lithral of every student in geology."—Phil. Mag. and Annals of Philacophy.

"Excellently well adapted to win on the reader to become a student; it makes the acquisition of knowledge a pleasure."—

Printed for Treuttel and Co. 30, Scho Square

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE, corrected to the problem of the New Peers, will be published on Mooday the 7th of May.

Debrett's Baronetage will be ready at the same time, including the New Baresets, with their Arms.

Printed for Elvingtons, Longman and Co., Baldwin and Co., and the other Proprietors.

THE FOREIGN QUARTERLY REVIEW, No. XVIII. will be published on Wednesday, 9th insta 20, Soho Square, May 5/h, 1822.

A Literary Curiosity:

Being an elegant and important Work of Reference, containing also choice Extracts of upwards of 90,000 Volumes by the most eminent Writers of all Ages and Countries.

On Monday next, is a vols. 8vo. handsomely bound in merecce, with gilt edges,

THE ANNIVERSARY CALENDAR "THE ANNIVERSARY CALENDA"

"The Anniversary Calendar (the production of three plant disour) is a publication admirably calculated to be plant disour) is a publication admirably calculated to be plant disour to the production of the production of the plant disource of the publication and destinated and see various the would puzzle the greatest bibliopolist to know where to the when most wasted."—Alforerum.

"Detailed Prospectuses, containing copious netices of the Work may be had of the Publich."

wanted."—Athenoum.

Detailed Prospectuses, containing copious notices of the Work may be had of the Publisher.

William Kidd, 238, Regent Street.

Hebrew.

Shertly will be published,

N IMPROVED TRANSLATION of SIMONIS'S smaller HEBREW and CHALDEE LEXICON (dedicated, by permission, to the Rev. S. Lee, B.D. Professor of Hebrew at Cambridge, Probendary of Bristol, &c.)

By CHARLES SRAGER.

Printed and published for the Author, by A. J. Valpy, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street.

i vol. ismo. price to Subscribers, So.; to Non-Subscribers, Sr.
Upwards of $80 Copies have been subscribed for. A mong the Subscribers are two Bishops, a Dean, an Archdascon, as alghty-four Clergymen. Further names will be received by the Publisher; the Author (Teigamouth, Devon); or Wm. Stroaf, Bookseller, Bristol and Enster.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Stret, Waterion Bridge, Strend, and 13, Sonth Meuston Street, Oxfrostret: eold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange: F. Marlborough, Ave Maria Lane, Lungais Hill: A. Sich, Edinburgh: Smith and Son, D. Robertsen, and attions and Co. Glazeper: and J. Comming, Dublin — Agent N. America, O. Rich, 18, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Squar

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 799.

SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1832.

PRICE 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Contarini Fleming: a Psychological Autobiography. 4 vols. 12mo. Murray. [Second Notice.]

WE have now full means to notice this publication, which is a singular and original work, and one that is evidently the idealised history of its author; - by idealised, we mean a fiction in which real feelings and actual scenes are blended with imaginary adventure. We cannot for a moment doubt that the writer and part original of Contarini Fleming, is Mr. D'Israeli, junior—a young man who, with all his faults, it were a strange injustice to confound with "the common people" of our literary We remember somewhere seeing a " skv." comparison, which so exactly characterised his works, that we cannot do better than quote it. "They are like a town built on a romantic site; there is the regular street, the ornamental architecture, signs of man's labour and man's art: but ever and anon the eve is caught by some fantastic fragment of old grey rock, the gush of a silver spring, or the green shadow of some antique and stately tree." Mr. D'Israeli, like Lord Byron, has but one hero. and that hero is the imagination of himself: but here Byron shews the judgment D'Israeli wants; his egotism is that of feeling, not of action; and, as has been well observed in a recent work, "our feelings may come home to some one or other of our readers, as all feelings are general; which is not the case with action, as action is individual, not general." Lord Byron's hero indulges in no small affectations, he has no peculiarity of dress, all the women do not fall in love with him, neither is he at all impertinent; now D'Israeli's heroes have all these sins to answer for; and in a book, as in real life, his reader's self-love is set in array against him. For example: in Contarini Fleming the author and his creation are inevitably identified, and the stamp of reality gives its interest to the sad and dreaming childhood, to the impetuous and impassioned youth; his literary efforts, failures, and successes, all seem true, and all interest us: but when the boy of nineteen settles the affairs of a dynasty, brow-beats half the ambassadors of Europe, we are struck with the impossibility; and the generality of readers, who take every thing at the letter of the law, will say, "As if Mr. D'Israeli ever did these wonderful things!" Of all ages, ours is one in which the extravagant and the extraordinary are the least tolerated; and yet our present writer will outrage the taste of his time by glaring improbabilities - and herein consists his great error. The love-story is all but insanity, the lovers being brought together by mutual and mysterious dreams; and this he defends!

" If ever the science of metaphysics cease to be a frivolous assemblage of unmeaning phrases, and we attempt to acquire that knowledge of our nature, which is doubtless open to us, by the assistance of facts instead of words; if ever, in short, the philosophy of the human mind be based on demonstration instead of dogma, the strange incident just related will perhaps not be considered the wild delusion of a crackbrained visionary."

We doubt whether "the philosophy of the human mind" will ever arrive at any such demonstration. With his rich imagination, his sense of the beautiful, and his passion, D'Israeli should have been a poet; but he wants imagery and music—imagery, which gives such life to the object you describe; and music, that inexpressible charm, which words may impart, but never define. It would seem as if his destiny were incomplete. It is curious to observe his own consciousness of this, and how, in the following argument, he exemplifies the moral of the fox in the fable, who, aware of his own want, would fain persuade others of the advantages of deficiency. We shall give, however, but one or two of the fallacies:

"It appears to me, that the age of versifi-cation has past." "The art of poetry was to express natural feelings in unnatural language.

Now, we deny both these propositions. It seems strange to say of an age which has been so rich in melodious verse, that verse is past: and one would think, that a form of language belonging to an early period of society, generally considered as the most natural, would be natural also; and so it is. The melodies of language are echos of the melodies of thoughtas in hearing martial music, the step involuntarily takes a statelier tread, as to gayer airs s lighter or more buoyant one: so does the elevated idea take a more noble, or the feelings of tenderness a sweeter tone, than those of ordinary discourse. Turning from this desultory criticism, which, however, alone can give an idea of pages so desultory as the present, we turn to the story itself, in that spirit of appreciation which it so well merits. It may be divided into three parts: first, the history of the hero's childhood and youth; secondly, the love-story; thirdly, his travels. The travels are a kind of prose Childe Harold, animated and picturesque; the love-story begins in Mr. D'Israeli's worst style-forced, unnatural, and improbable; but the description of the young couple, and their quiet and concentrated happi ness, is conceived in the purest and most beautiful spirit of poetry. But it is the history of the hero's childhood and youth that gives the original and striking character to the work. The early passion, the want of sympathy, the vanity, as yet unknown and cloaking itself under the desire of being loved, the active imagination, were never more vividly or more truly portraved. In the commencement of Godwin's Falkland there is a most delightful sketch drawn of dreaming and secluded childhood; but the present is a thousand times more richly coloured and more forcibly depicted, for the affections are called into play, and the childhood is that of genius. That state of mind haunted by " Golden dreams.

All that our riper years account so vain, Yet what we would give worlds to dream again, But which we never may. Oh, years may bring
The mind to its perfection, but no more
Will the young spirit plume its rainbow wing,
And take the wild sweet flight it did of yore;
A fairy's lover, or a dream-raised king,
A dweller on some lonely island's shore.
Passions chase fancies; yet how sweet the time
When we could muse away a summer morning's prime."

This infancy of the imagination is here painted with an animation which answers for its truth; and we feel convinced the writer himself must have known both the craving for futurity and that visionary reverie so well described by Coleridge's beautiful line .-

" My eyes make pictures when they're shut."

But before we proceed to more general extract, we shall give the history of Vivian Grev (we presume, though a little mystified by the commencement rather suiting this work, still the end describes the former precisely).

"The most singular thing is, that, all this time, it never struck me that I was delineating my own character. But now comes the curious part. In depicting the scenes of society in which my hero was forced to move, I suddenly dashed, not only into the most slashing satire, but even into malignant personality. All the bitterness of my heart, occasioned by my wretched existence among their false circles, found its full vent. Never was any thing so imprudent. Every body figured, and all parties and opinions alike suffered. * For the work itself, it was altogether a most crude performance, teeming with innumerable faults. It was entirely deficient in art. The principal character, although forcibly conceived, for it was founded on truth, was not sufficiently developed. Of course the others were much less The incidents were unnatural, the serious characters exaggerations, the comic ones caricatures; the wit was too often flippant, the philosophy too often forced: yet the vigour was remarkable, the license of an uncurbed imagination not without charms, and, on the whole, there breathed a freshness which is rarely found, and which perhaps, with all my art and knowledge, I may never again afford: and indeed, when I recall the magnificent enthusiasm, the glorious heat, with which this little work was written, I am convinced that, with all its errors, the spark of true creation animated its fiery page. Such is the history of Manstein, a work which exercised a strange influence on my destiny."

To this we add the account which equally suits the second part.

"I prepared myself for composition in a very different mood to that in which I had poured forth my fervid crudities in the Garden House. Calm and collected, I constructed characters on philosophical principles, and mused over a chain of action which should develop the system of our existence. All was art. I studied contrasts and grouping, and metaphysical analysis was substituted for anatomical delineation. I was not satisfied that the conduct of my creations should be influenced merely by the general principles of their being. I resolved that they should be the very impersonations of the moods and passions of our mind. One was ill-regulated will; another offered the formation of a moral being; materialism sparkled in the wild gaiety and reckless caprice of one voluptuous girl, while spirit was vindicated in the deep devotion of a constant and enthusiastic heroine. Even the lighter temperaments were not forgotten. Frivolity smiled, and shrugged his shoulders before us, and there was even a deep personification of cynic humour. Had I executed my work in strict unison with my plan, it would doubtless have been a very dull affair; for I did not yet possess sufficient knowledge of human nature to support me in such a creation, nor was I then habituated to those metaphysical speculations, which might have in some degree compensated, by their profundity, for their want of entertainment. But Nature avenged herself, and extricated me from my dilemma. I began to write; my fancy fired. my brain enflamed; breathing forms rose up under my pen, and jostled aside the cold abstractions, whose creation had cost such long musing. In vain I endeavoured to compose without enthusiasm, in vain I endeavoured to delineate only what I had preconceived, in vain I struggled to restrain the flow of unbidden invention. All that I had seen, and pondered, passed before me from the proud moment that I stood upon Mount Jura to the present ravishing hour that I returned to my long-estranged art. Every tree, every cloud, every star and mountain, every fair lake and flowing river, that had fed my fancy with their sweet suggestions in my rambling hours, now returned and illumined my pages with their brightness and their beauty. My mind teemed with similes. Thought and passion came veiled in metaphoric garb. I was delighted, I was bewildered. The clustering of their beauty seemed an evidence of poetic power: the management of these bright guests was an art of which I was ignorant. I received them all. I found myself often writing only that they might be accommodated. I gave up to this work many long and unbroken hours. I was determined that it should not suffer from a hurried pen. I often stopped to meditate. It was in writing this book that I first learned my art. It was a series of experiments. They were at length finished, and my volumes consigned to their fate and northern publisher. The critics treated me with more courtesy. What seemed to me odd enough then, although no puzzle now, was, that they admired what had been written in haste, and without premeditation, and generally disapproved of what had cost me much forethought, and been executed with great care. It was universally declared a most unequal work, and they were right, although they could not detect the causes of the inequality. My perpetual efforts at being imaginative were highly reprobated. Now my efforts had been entirely the other way. In short, I puzzled them, and no one offered a prediction as to my future career. My book, as a whole, was rather unintelligible, but parts were favourites. It was pronounced a remarkable compound of originality and dulness."

We shall now endeavour to make our quotations as miscellaneous as possible; they will in their variety give a more accurate idea of the work; and, either their novelty, beauty, or worth, needs no preliminary praise.

A Picture...." It was a beautiful garden, full of terraces and arched walks of bowery A tall fountain sprang up from a marble basin, and its glittering column broke shewing feeling, my friend. Remember that when you do so, you apologise for truth."

So are the following :-

" I felt the ennobling pride of learning. It is a fine thing to know that which is unknown to others; it is still more dignified to remember that we have gained it by our own energies. The struggle after knowledge too is full of delight. The intellectual chase, not less than the material one, brings fresh vigour to our pulses, and infinite palpitations of strange and sweet suspense. The idea that is gained with effort affords far greater satisfaction, than that which is acquired with dangerous facility. We dwell with more fondness on the perfume of the flower that we have ourselves tended, than on the odour which we cull with carelessness, and cast away without remorse. The strength and sweetness of our knowledge depend upon the impression which it makes upon our own minds. It is the liveliness of the ideas that it affords which renders research so fascinating: so that a trifling fact or deduction, when discovered, or worked out, by our own brain, affords us infinitely greater pleasure than a more important truth obtained by the exertions of another."

"The high poetic talent,—as if to prove that a poet is only, at the best, a wild, although beautiful, error of nature,—the high poetic talent is the rarest in creation."

Evening Scene .- " It was one of those stern. sublime sunsets, which is almost the only appearance in the north in which nature enchanted me. I stood at the window gazing on the burnished masses that, for a moment, were suspended, in their fleeting and capricious beauty, on the fair horizon. I turned aside and looked at the rich trees suffused with the crimson light, and ever and anon irradiated by the dying shoots of a golden ray. The deer were stealing home to their bowers, and I watched them till their golden and glancing forms gradually lost their lustre in the declin-ing twilight. The glory had now departed, and all grew dim. A solitary star alone was shining in the grey sky, a bright and solitary star."

Speaking of the personality of Manstein, or

Vivian Grey:
"Every body was in a passion, or affected to be painfully sensitive of their neighbours' wrongs. The very personality was ludicrously exaggerated. Every body took a delight in detecting the originals of my portraits. Various keys were handed about, all different; and not content with recognising the very few decided sketches from life there really were, and which were sufficiently obvious and not very malignant, they mischievously insisted, that not a human shadow glided over my pages, which might not be traced to its substance."

Landscape.-" It was in Switzerland that I first felt how constantly to contemplate sublime creation developes the poetic power. It was here that I first began to study nature. Those forests of black gigantic pines rising out of the deep snows; those tall white cataracts leaping like headstrong youth into the world, and dashing from their precipices, as if allured by the beautiful delusion of their own rainbow mist; those mighty clouds sailing beneath my feet, or clinging to the bosoms of the dark green mountains, or boiling up like a spell from the invisible and unfathomable depths; the fell avalanche, fleet as a spirit of evil, terrific when its sound suddenly breaks upon the woke the gleamy fish that would have slept in gaze upon its crumbling and pallid frame, the dim water." varied only by the presence of one or two Admirable Remark.—" Never apologise for blasted firs; the head of a mountain loosening from its brother peak, rooting up, in the roar of its rapid rush, a whole forest of pines, and covering the earth for miles with elephantine masses; the supernatural extent of landscape that opens to us new worlds : the strong eagles, and the strange wild birds that suddenly cross you in your path, and stare, and shricking fly—and all the soft sights of joy and loveliness that mingle with these sublime and savage spectacles, the rich pastures, and the numerous flocks, and the golden bees, and the wild flowers, and the carved and painted cottages. and the simple manners and the primeval grace—wherever I moved, I was in turn appalled or enchanted; but whatever I beheld, new images ever sprang up in my mind, and new feelings ever crowded on my fancy.

Venice.-" If I were to assign the particular quality which conduces to that dreamy and voluptuous existence, which men of high imagination experience in Venice, I should describe it as the feeling of abstraction, which is re-markable in that city, and peculiar to it. Venice is the only city which can yield the magical de-lights of solitude. All is still and silent. No rude sound disturbs your reveries; fancy, therefore, is not put to flight. No rude sound distracts your self-consciousness. This renders existence intense. We feel every thing. And we feel thus keenly in a city not only eminently beautiful, not only abounding in wonderful creations of art, but each step of which is hallowed ground, quick with associations, that in their more various nature, their nearer relation to ourselves, and perhaps their more picturesque character, exercise a greater influence over the imagination than the more antique story of Greece and Rome. We feel all this in a city, too, which, although her lustre be indeed dimmed, can still count among her daughters maidens fairer than the orient pearls with which her warriors once loved to deck them. Poetry, Tradition, and Love, these are the Graces that have invested with an ever-charming cestus this Aphrodite of cities."

Beautiful Song...." I marked a rose bedewed with tears, a white and virgin rose; and I said, 'Oh, rose! why do you weep? you are too beautiful for sorrow!' And she answered, 'Lady, mourn not for me, for my grief comes from heaven.'"

Oriental Home. - "We looked round our chamber, with its strange furniture, and stared at the divans, and small, high windows, shadowed with painted glass, and smiled. Our room was darkened, but at the end opened an arch, bright in the sun. Beautiful strange plants quivered in the light. The perfume of orange-trees filled our chamber, and the bees were clustering in the scarlet flowers of the pomegranate. Amid the pleasing distraction of these sweet sounds and scents we distinguished the fall of a fountain. We stole forward to the arch, like a prince and princess just disenchanted in a fairy tale. We stepped into a court paved with marble, and full of rare shrubs: the fountain was in the centre. Around it were delicate mats of Barbary, and small bright Persian carpets; and crouching on a scarlet cushion was a white gazelle. I stepped out, and found our kind host, who spoke Italian. I sent his lovely daughter, Alexina, whose cheeks were like a cleft pomegranate, to my wife. As for myself, by Lausanne's advice, I took a Turkish bath, which is the most delightful thing in the world; and when I was rein its fall into a thousand coloured drops, and almighty silence, scarcely less terrible when we duced to a jelly, I repaired to our host's divan, where his wife, and three other daughters, all equally beautiful, and dressed in long flowing robes of different-coloured velvets, richly embroidered, and caps of the same material, with tassels of gold, and covered with pearls, came forward. One gave me a pipe seven feet long, another fed me with sweetmeats, a third pressed her hand to her heart, as she presented me coffee in a small cup of porcelain resting in a fillagree frame; and a child, who sparkled like a fairy, bent her knee as she proffered me a vase of sherbet. I felt like a pasha, and the good father translated my compliments."

Love.- " I know not the palling of passion, of which some write. I have loved only once, and the recollection of the being to whom I was devoted, fills me at this moment with as much rapture as when her virgin charms were first yielded to my embrace. I cannot comprehend the sneers of witty rakes, at what they call constancy. If beings are united by any other consideration but love, constancy is of course impossible, and, I think, unnecessary. To a man who is in love, the thought of another woman is uninteresting, if not repulsive. Constancy is human nature. Instead of love being the occasion of all the misery of this world, as is sung by fantastic bards, I believe that the misery of this world is occasioned by there not being love enough. This opinion, at any rate, appears more logical. Happiness is only to be found in a recurrence to the principles of human nature, and these will prompt very simple manners. For myself, I believe that permanent unions of the sexes should be early encouraged; nor do I conceive that general happiness can ever flourish but in societies where it is the custom for all males to marry at eighteen. This custom, I am informed, is not unusual in the United States of America: and its consequence is a simplicity of manners, and a purity of conduct, which Europeans cannot comprehend, but to which they must ultimately have recourse. Primeval barbarism and extreme civilisation must arrive at the same results. Men, under these circumstances, are actuated by their organisation; in the first instance, instinctively; in the second, philosophically. At present, we are all in the various gradations of the intermediate state of corruption."

We beg to state, that we consider the conclusion as just one of those startling paradoxes in which our author delights. To say new or startling things is, with him, a frequent desire and fault.

- "They come from a particular Gazelles. part of Arabia, and are rare; yet one was obtained, and two of its fawn-coloured brethren. I must confess that we found these elegant and poetical companions extremely troublesome and stupid. They are the least sentimental and domestic of all creatures. The most sedulous attention will not attach them to you, and I do not believe they are ever fairly tame. I dislike them, in spite of their liquid eyes and romantic reputation; and infinitely prefer what are now my constant and ever delightful company, some fine, faithful, honest, intelligent, thoroughbred English dogs."

We now conclude, with a very high admira-on of Mr. D'Israeli's talents. We dispute tion of Mr. D'Israeli's talents. many of his opinions, we often disapprove his dogmas; but we know no writer of the present day to whom the word "genius" may be more truly applied. His imagination is a glorious faculty, - the heaven whence genius draws its stars; and to all who like both to feel and think, we recommend Cantarini Fleming as a striking and delightful work.

Pen and Pencil Sketches; being the Journal of a Tour in India. By Captain Mundy, late Aide-de-Camp to Lord Combermere. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Murray.

WE are inclined to think two volumes rather too long for a work of this class, which, though amusing and pleasant enough to read, does not purport to convey much information to the reader. So far from this, Captain Mundy appears in a sporting character: his pages are of tiger-hunts, and shooting, and travelling, and visiting, and nautching; and he seems to intimate, that, compared with the accounts of these matters, any other kind of intelligence is of little value or consequence. "I think it right (he says), thus early in my mountain tour, to give my reader the probably welcome information, that I am totally unskilled in botany and geology; by which fortunate default in my education be will escape the usual inflictions of scientific travellers (a class, by the by, not included in Sterne's catalogue of touralising emigrants); such as being delayed half an hour to dissect a daisy, or being planted the best part of a forenoon before a block of stone, to decide whether it be granite or marble, primitive or secondary rock; till the bored peruser becomes almost petrified himself." There might be a few words added to this declaration; but we must take our authors for what they give themselves out to be; and Capt. Mundy is, in this light, an agreeable, tiger-hunting, sketchy (pen and pencil), and lively com-panion—with too many French phrases, and too much of his favourite chasse; but still toujours gai and amusing, from Calcutta to Benares, from Benares to Lucknow, from Lucknow to Delhi, and from Delhi to Simla and the Himalaya Mountains. Our first extract relates to the entrance of Lord Combermere into Luck-

"About two miles from the town we encountered his majesty of Oude, accompanied by a numerous and splendid retinue. The king and the commander-in-chief, after a fraternal embrace, continued their march in the same howdah. Our cavalcade was most formidably augmented by this last reinforcement, and it must have presented an imposing spectacle to the myriads of lookers-on as we entered the city. The king, Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder, is a plain, vulgar-looking man, of about twentysix years of age, his stature about five feet nine inches, and his complexion rather un-usually dark. His majesty's mental endow. ments, pursuits, and amusements, are by no means of an elevated or dignified order; though his deficiencies are in some measure supplied by the abilities and shrewdness of his minister, who is, however, an unexampled rogue, displaying it in his countenance with such perspicuity of development, as would satisfy the most sceptical unbeliever in Lavater. He is detested by all ranks, with the exception of his royal master, who reposes the most perfect confidence in him. I remarked, that the attendant who sat behind him in the howdah kept his finger twisted in the knot of his lord's sword, as though he feared the possibility of some wronged wretch anatching it out of the scabbard, from the roof or window of the overhanging houses, and making free with the wearer's head; — which act, per parenthèse, wearer's head; — which act, per parenthèse, enemy's dewlap, but was finally (as the fancy would be doing the state some service. The would describe it) bored to the ropes and streets of Lucknow are extremely narrow, -so much so, as in some places scarcely to admit conflict sedulously to avoid a breach of the more than one elephant to pass at a time. The peace. A rhinoceros was next let loose in the bouses, from the windows of which were displayed open court-yard, and the attendants attempted silks and draperies, were, as well as the streets, to induce him to pick a quarrel with a tiger completely covered with spectators; some of them employed in greeting their sovereign with profound salaams; the greater proportion, however, consisting of wretched-looking beggars, who followed the cavalcade, vociferating for charity, and greedily scrambling for the handsful of rupees which were from time to time thrown by the king, the commander-inchief, and the resident, among the crowd. It was curious to see with what care the elephants avoided treading upon or injuring some of these paupers, who, in eager pursuit of the scattered largesse, fearlessly threw themselves under the feet of these animals, the slightest touch of which would have shattered a limb. A few coins thrown on the roof of a house sometimes caused the most amusing scramble; and I more than once saw one of the gleaners roll into the street upon the heads of the gaping crowd below. In some of the narrow passes the crush was awful; the elephants trumpeting, jhools and ladders tearing and crashing; and now and then the projecting roof or veranda of a house carried away by the resistless progress of these powerful animals. The strongest elephants and most determined mahouts held the first places in the cavalcade, next to the king, the commander-in-chief, and the resident. princes royal were not unfrequently most unceremoniously jostled; and as for the minister, he was generally among the 'unplaced.' Among other entertainments

"His majesty, before he retired, informed the commander-in-chief that he had given orders for the wild-beast fights to be prepared for his edification on the morrow; and as these sports are celebrated for the grand scale on which they are conducted at Lucknow, we were all very anxious to witness them. Early in the morning, therefore, the whole party, including ladies, eager for the novel spectacle, mounted elephants, and repaired to the private gate of the royal palace, where the king met the commander-in-chief, and conducted him and his company to a palace in the park, in one of the courts of which the arena for the combats was prepared. In the centre was erected a gigantic cage of strong bamboos, about fifty feet high, and of like diameter, and roofed with rope network. Sundry smaller cells, communicating by sliding doors with the main theatre, were tenanted by every species of the savagest inhabitants of the forest. In the large cage, crowded together, and presenting a formidable front of broad, shaggy foreheads well armed with horns, stood a group of buffaloes sternly awaiting the conflict, with their rear scientifically appuye against the bamboos. The trap-doors being lifted, two tigers, and the same number of bears and leopards, rushed into the centre. The buffaloes instantly commenced hostilities, and made complete shuttlecocks of the bears, who, however, finally escaped by climbing up the hamboos beyond the reach of their horned antagonists. tigers, one of which was a beautiful animal, fared scarcely better; indeed, the odds were much against them, there being five buffaloes. They appeared, however, to be no match for these powerful creatures even single-handed, and shewed little disposition to be the assaulters. The larger tiger was much gored in the head, and in return took a mouthful of his floored.' The leopards seemed throughout the

The rhinoceros who was chained to a ring. appeared, however, to consider a fettered foe as walls and gateways of which have crumbled quite beneath his enmity; and having once but little beneath the weight of seven hundred approached the tiger, and quietly surveyed him, years-and proceeded, after sundry mishaps as he writhed and growled, expecting the from the fighting propensities of our horses, to attack, turned suddenly round and trotted the great tank, by plunging into which some awkwardly off to the yard-gate, where he cap- fellows, bred to the profession, gain a precarisixed a palankeen, which was carrying away a ous livelihood. By the by, these Indian horses lady fatigued with the sight of these unfemi- are great anti-tête-à-têteists: whilst their riders nine sports. A buffalo and a tiger were the are unsuspectingly engaged in conversation, next combatants: they attacked furiously, the they get their noses together, and suddenly tiger springing at the first onset on the other's warn you of their misunderstanding by a loud head, and tearing his neck severely; but he squeel and a most ill-timed rear; and if one was quickly dismounted, and thrown with such cavalier vacates his seat, the loose horse renviolence as nearly to break his back, and quite ders the situation of the still mounted man to disable him from renewing the combat. A small elephant was next impelled to attack a ing companion, by attacking him most viciously. leopard. The battle was short and decisive; the former falling on his knees, and thrusting native Indian horses from Kutch, Kattiawah, his blunted tusks nearly through his antagonist. On our return from the beast fight, a In the cavalry regiments there are always some breakfast awaited us at the royal palace; and noted 'haram zadehs,' or mauvais sujets, that the white tablecloth being removed, quails, trained for the purpose, were placed upon the green cloth, and fought most gamely, after the stances are known of these vicious brutes (in manner of the English cockpit. This is an humble emulation of Diomed's carnivorous amusement much in fashion among the natives mares) worrying their riders with their teeth, of rank, and they bet large sums on their birds, after having thrown them. When in the as they lounge luxuriously round, smoking ranks, however, they are, like pugnacious chatheir houkahs. Elephant fights were announced as the concluding scene of this day of strife. The spectators took their seats in a long veranda. The narrow stream of the river Goomty runs close under the palace walls, and illustration. on the opposite bank a large, open, sandy space presented a convenient theatre for the pons. I observed, among his escort, the musoperations of these gigantic athletes. The elephants educated for the arena are large, power- dagger, and battle-axe; but the arm that is ful males, wrought up to a state of fury by constant feeding with exciting spices. On the it is made of beautiful thin steel, sometimes spacious plain before us we counted several of inlaid with gold: in using it, the warrior these animals parading singly and sulkily to twirls it swiftly round the fore-finger, and and fro, their mahouts seated on their backs, launches it with such deadly aim as, according which were covered with a strong network for the driver to cling by in the conflict. In attendance upon every elephant were two or three men, armed with long spears, a weapon of which this animal has the greatest dread. his journal notes the following:—
We soon discovered two of the combatants "Before breakfast, went into the cattle-fair slowly advancing towards each other from with Colonel Stevenson, and bought a handopposite sides of the plain. As they approached, their speed gradually increased, and they at length met with a grand shock, entwining their trunks, and pushing, until one, finding We took a native bargainer with us, and I was himself over-matched, fairly turned tail, and much amused by the manner in which the received his adversary's charge in the rear / buyer and seller arranged their bargain. The This was so violent, that the mahout of the business of chaffering was carried on through flying elephant was dislodged from his seat/: he fortunately fell wide of the pursuer, and cloth, certain movements of the fingers having escaped with a few bruises. Five or six couple corresponding prices. It was a matter of some were fought, but shewed little sport; the saga- minutes; and much shaking of heads, though cious animals instantly discovering when they were over-matched. I had long been ambifious both sides before the bargain was concluded. of witnessing the far-famed wild-beast fights of We next inspected some elephants for sale; Lucknow, and having enjoyed an opportunity and the dealers descanted upon their good of seeing them, which few have had, it would hardly be fair to say that I was disappointed. Before the party left the palace, his majesty took a great fancy to a houkah belonging to one of the staff. It was formed on an entirely new principle; and the king was so sm/tten with the novel invention, that he signified his royal wish to purchase it, and immediately carried it off, to display its charms to the three hundred is also a great desideratum." and fifty fair inmates of his zenana. In the evening a Piedmontese conjuror, in the pay of the nawaub, entertained us much by his ingenious tricks. He must be a useful fellow to amuse the vacant mind of an Eastern despot."

At Delhi, Captain Mundy relates :-

" We rode by the ancient fortress-the lofty ; scarcely more enviable than that of his sprawl-Arabs are generally better tempered; but the and the Lacka jungles, are proverbially savage. shew fight' the moment a fellow-charger comes within twenty yards of them; and inracters in human society, tamed by education, discipline, and custom, into better behaviour.'

From the Indian horses we travel northward to the Seikhs and their weapons, for our next

"The Seikhs have a great variety of weaket, matchlock, sword, spears of sundry forms, exclusively peculiar to this sect, is the quoit; to their own account, to be sure of their man at eighty paces."

Among the most curious sights seen by our countryman was the fair at Hurdwar; where some, though small mule for the mountain journeys. The price was eighty rupees, for which sum a fine camel may be purchased. We took a native bargainer with us, and I was the medium of their hands, concealed under a no verbal altercation, was gone through on points as largely and as knowingly as Tattersall could do on those of a horse-though the perfections of the two animals differ considerably. An elephant is extolled for a large head, large ears, arched back, sloping quarters, deep flank, long trunk well mottled, short legs, and the forearm bowing out well in front. flat bunch of hair at the extremity of the tail

Of the natives of the Himalaya mountains we have also some novel particulars.

" Another equally peculiar trait of the customs of the Himalayan peasants I witnessed a few days afterwards; namely, the putting an successful issue of this experiment I had quietly made up my mind not to believe in, until convinced by actual ocular proof. The method was as follows :-- the child, whose age might be a year or two, was laid by its mother, who was employed in bruising grain, on a charpoy placed on a sloping green bank, along the top of which ran a small spring stream. A piece of bark introduced through the embankment, conducted a slender spout of water, which fell, at the height of about half a foot, on to the crown of the infant's head. It was fast asleep when I witnessed the process! The natives believe that it is a great fortifier of the constitution. It may be that it fortifies the pericranium, and addles the brains of its advocates; for the generality of the mountaineers are decided numskulls.

"We passed two or three very considerable villages on our way; one of which, Bourah, is very picturesque and romantic in its situation. The method of preserving hay about here is curious, and appears to answer very well. It is loosely twisted into long, thick ropes, which being fastened together at one end, are thrown over the fork of a tree, the extremities hanging down, and the apex being thatched with straw."

At a celebrated pass called the Shattoul pass, the ascent to which was accompanied by many dangers, the description of the scenery is picturesque.

" In the afternoon Colonel Dawkins mounted to the ridge of the pass, and looked into the valley beyond. He described the prospect as dreary and wild in the extreme; the Sutledge river was, from the height of its rocky banks, and its great distance below his station, scarcely visible; in the distance towered yet another grand range of snow-clad mountains, some of whose peaks claim the supremacy in altitude over all the mountains of the globe; the highest of the Dewalgiri range being above twentysix thousand feet. The Shattoul pass is above fifteen thousand five hundred and sixty feet; and the inaccessible peak which elevates itself above its right flank has been computed at seventeen thousand and thirty-five feet. Thus the pass of Shattoul is, as near as may be, co-lofty with Mount Blanc, which boasts an elevation of fifteen thousand six hundred and thirty feet."

Not far distant, a remarkable phenomenon is mentioned.

"I saw here the most extraordinary effect of mirage that I ever met with. That optical delusion, styled by the Arabs, suhrab, or 'water of the desert,' is common in the plains of India; but I did not suppose that mountain scenery was susceptible of it. A deep precipitous valley below us, at the bottom of which I had seen one or two miserable villages in the morning, bore in the evening a complete resemblance to a beautiful lake; the vapour, which played the part of water, ascending nearly half way up the sides of the vale, and on its bright surface trees and rocks being distinctly reflected. I had not been long contemplating the phenomenon, before a sudden storm came on, and dropped a curtain of clouds over the scene."

With this we conclude our notice of Captain Mundy's publication; though, should the second volume offer us aught very interesting, we may refer to it to augment the favourable impression which we trust our extracts from the first will excite.

The Democrat, and The Hugonot. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Bull; Hatchard and Son. BEFORE we proceed to do justice to these clever and interesting pages, we must protest against the flourish of trumpets with which they have been ushered before the public. From the manner in which The Democrat has been paraded through the papers, we really thought Colonel Jones was going to put the letters of " Radical" into a romance in three volumes. Now, in making this allusion, we refer quite as much to the general system as to the individual instance. Nothing can be more absurd than the style in which a new work is announced,absurd, because there can scarcely, now-a-days, be one single reader who is not perfectly aware that the paragraph is merely another form of advertisement, and that "the intense interest," "the vivid curiosity," expressed à priori, are felt by the publisher, not by the public. Another absurd practice is, the bookseller taking the christening into his own hands, and, provided there is a shewy title, caring little whether it be consonant to the nature of the work. It is quite impossible for the title and the puff preliminary to have given a falser impression of a production than they have done in the instance before us. The Democrat, to whose announcement the publisher did not venture to affix his name, consists of two stories, written in the very spirit of morality and religion, and which are chiefly addressed to the young, the serious, and the feminine body of readers. The author is evidently a female, who has been much abroad, and who herself classes her work under the head of religious fiction; and in a well-written introductory essay, asks, "Is it rational, safe, or politic, to banish from a class of works most eagerly perused by young readers, all that tends to ennoble and strengthen the pliant mind-all, in short, that is calculated to render that atmosphere of fancy into which they will soar harmless and even healthful; to say nothing of the

The tales are both of great interest; the dialogues are supported with much spirit; and there is some beautiful description. We like the first the best; for in both the interest depends on the heroine; and we infinitely prefer the high-principled, patient, yet meek spirit of Christianity which actuates Francesca, to that of martyrdom which is embodied in Marie Bellechasse. Martyrs have never been especial favourites of ours; for we firmly believe that obstinacy and pride have led more victims, of all persuasions and creeds, to the stake, and supported them when there, than ever did any religious belief. To this we must add, that the feeling which induced a young girl of sixteen to risk the lives of her father, lover, and little sister, was any thing but a divine inspiration. The fanaticism which leads to religious persecution, and its concomitant, martyrdom, was one of the most insane and terrible delusions with which human passions ever darkened the mild and beautiful spirit of true faith. It is to be hoped that the days of persecution are utterly passed away; but it is in fanaticism such persecution originates; and, strange as it may seem to say in a reasoning and reasonable age, there is still enough of fanaticism abroad to induce us to withhold any encouragement to its exciting and excitable temper. The spiritual vanity which would itself go to the stake, has rarely hesitated in sending another there.-But, to return to our cri-loss of one of the finest themes for his pen which the writer of fiction must himself sustain?"

By the by, this was done in the first advertisement of The Fair of May Fair, and with about as much reason.

tical task, we will first extract the ensuing dialogue, as an amusing specimen of national manners. It is between two Sicilian sisters, one of whom has, however, been educated in England.

"All the accounts Francesca had read or heard of Sicilian ignorance, and which she had hitherto regarded as exaggerated travellers' tales, now returned to her mind with overpowering force. Her father had, for wise reasons, never enlightened her mind on this subject. She endeavoured, however, to hide her surprise and disappointment, and good-naturedly tried to amuse her companion, by describing some of the wonders she had seen in her foreign travels; -Swiss glaciers, Dutch canals, London fogs, et cetera. On the latter Giuseppa observed,- 'Why, you might talk to your lover close to your father or your husband, and they never a whit the wiser, in such a mist as you describe. I should like to visit this same London. Were you ever in England?' 'My dear Giuseppa!' exclaimed poor Francesca, overpowered by the levity of the observation, and the ignorance of the query; 'as well Palermo,—whether I had ever visited the island of Sicily.' 'Well, well!' said Giuseppa in a deprecative tone; 'I recollect there was a discussion the other night at the Cafiero's conversions that her London was in England, or the control of the c England in London, and I cannot at this moment recollect which way the decision went. It is rather difficult to remember these nice distinctions.'

' I really am sorry this London is such hundreds of thousands of miles distant; I quite long to visit it.' 'That you might have a clandestine interview with your lover in the fog? said Francesca, with a smile of mixed pity and melancholy. I hope, dear girl, that neither in England nor in Sicily you would seek to hide your affections from him who has a parent's right to know them.' 'Mercy on me!' ejaculated Donna Giuseppa, 'I am sure I never dreamed of marrying any man save one of my father's choosing; and 'tis a little hard, methinks, if my hand and my heart are both to be at his bidding. And, let me tell you, it's no such pleasant thing to marry one's uncle. 'Your uncle?—how shocking!' 'Why, what is there so extraordinary in that? They Whv. don't marry their uncles, then, in England, I suppose? But do you know, dearest Cica, she continued, blushing consciously, 'I've taken a kind of a sort of a fancy to a young Englishman here-Signore Barringtoni, a-a-a merchant_that is, with a merchant, for he is still young. English merchants, you know, are great men, almost as great as Sicilian nobles. And I have had it whispered in my ear, that he does not dislike me: but he wishes-I don't like to tell you-he wishes I were more educated; that is, more after the fashion of his countrywomen. He is such a grave young man! and all made up of wisdom and learning, like yourself. Now I dare say you would not mind the trouble of teaching me to write; and I can read already.' 'My dear Giuseppa, I will teach you any thing you require, and to the best of my poor abilities, but—' Ay, now, I know you're going to say something more about duty to parents, and never concealing attachments, and so forth; for I see you are a very lady abbess in righteousness, and Barringtoni wants to persuade me that all the English ladies are the same. But have a care, my Cica, for there is a husband preparing for you.' 'Oh, God forbid!' said Donna Francasca, turning very pale. 'Now, I'll tell you penetrated its inmost recesses, and at length how it is,' continued the careless Giuseppa, in a confidential tone, and without observing her sister's emotion; 'our father is now in treaty with two very excellent, very illustrious, but not very juvenile, consorts for his two daughters. One is our venerable uncle before mentioned, and the other is the old Duca di Roccaromana-not old either, for he is only fiftyfive, and that, our father says, is no older for a man than nineteen is for a woman. The carriages will be soon on the Marina, and then I'll point him out to you. I shall not be able to shew you the Barringtoni, because he is spending an eternity in the country. Now, this same duca is, like our father, I believe, a great friend to political freedom (I shall get you, when I've done, to explain to me what this same political freedom means, but my father assures me it is a thing not to be talked about), and he rather wishes him to marry you; but he says, as you have been brought up with such different notions from the Sicilians, and are more likely to hesitate on the subject than your most humble servant, you are to have your choice, and the one you reject is to fall to the lot of poor me! I like the idea gentlemen, it cannot greatly matter to you which you take. How many a time, when I was a little girl, have I sat on his knee, while he has given me dolci till I was fairly sick! You saw him at dinner-Don Mariana di St. Elmo; he is a marchese, and very rich, and our mother's brother."

We contrast this with the following description of Etna: -

" The aged and extinct volcanoes of Paternò have generally a circumference of two miles, and a perpendicular height of seven hundred feet. They are venerable, however, not merely from their size, nor yet from their antiquity, but from the imposing appearance which they present to the eye, protected from their summit to their base by the sylvan giants to which they have themselves given birth. As in most forests of oak, the trees leave a sufficient space for each other, to admit the full spread of their lower branches; and so distinct are they in some places, that at a distance they seem rather to dot than to cover the slopes which they enrich. It is not, therefore, difficult to reconnoitre the surrounding country. No human hand has ever interfered with the growth of these verdant children of nature, whose trunks and branches are often twisted into every wild and picturesque contortion that the sinuosities of the ground could produce. Some, after rising erect to a height of a few feet, by a sudden and almost angular counter growth shoot aside into the strangest and most fanciful shapes. Others starting, with knotty trunk and spread branches. from the perpendicular flank of some abrupt elevation, present the curious anomaly of a fullsized forest tree running parallel with the earth, instead of rising from its surface to meet the face of heaven.

" Mount Tartaria appeared to recede, while the fiery torrent seemed to widen: the ground rendered flight impossible, and he now deemed that nothing short of a miraculous interposition could save him; to proceed appeared hopelessuseless, for the burning river had reached Mount burst from the opposite side. It was a strange and fearful spectacle to behold: a fiery cascade gushing from the peaceful bosom of an ancient volcano, long sunk into harmless quiescence, and all fair and verdant, even to its summit, with trees and herbage. This spectacle did not last long; the water collected in the hollows was soon expanded by the heat into steam, while the lava, unable to force a prompt passage through the mountain, acquired by condensation a tremendously increased power. Mount Tartaria now began to burst with fearful explosions; wide rents in its sides were first visible; a thick smoke and steam arose from the evaporation of the subterranean water; the trees began to burn and fall, and lastly, with one awful crash, the mountain opened in the centre from its summit to its base; the southern side retained its perpendicular posi-tion, while the northern, falling in one huge heap of ruin, presented such a new barrier to the lava, as to turn its course in a line almost at a right angle with its previous direction."

We think the present writer one of very great promise: to concentrate more should be her chief endeavour. Her comic sketches are mostly failures when they turn upon indi-vidual ridicule, — witness the merchant's dinper. Also, in her anxiety to act up to her preface, she forewarns her reader that her heroes are not like those of Byron or Scott, in a very unnecessary manner. In her next work-and we hope to see another-she will do well to write less on a system, and more from her own good feeling. The character of the Prince de Laon, always excepting its unnatural conclusion, is a very striking and original conception.

The Radical: an Autobiography. By the Author of "the Member," "the Ayrshire Legatees," &c. 12mo. pp. 200. London, 1832. Fraser.

MR. GALT is most lucky, or we might say, in his northern phraseology, most timeous, in this publication, which has hit a period of political excitement on the very nick. It is the ironical autobiography of a Radical, and written with all that sagacious observation of men and things, and all that quiet but caustic humour, which distinguish the productions of this author. But our readers are aware, that the more of politics there is in any book, the less likely is it to have a long review in the Literary Gazette, which we would fain make a green spot in the midst of the ravaged districts around, a sort of preserve for the sciences, the fine arts, and literature, into which neither controversy, faction, nor party, can intrude. There is, however, so much good humour and characteristic originality in Mr. Galt's performance, that we should ill do our duty, either with reference to his celebrity, or to the talent displayed in the present volume, were we to omit its illustration in our miscellaneous page. We shall, in executing this task, confine ourselves more to the early parts of Nathan Butt's life than to those of his later career, when public oratory, elections, and parliament, occupy his genius. The Radical is ludicrously dedicated as follows:

"To the right honourable Baron Brougham | us: and Vaux, late Lord High Chancellor of Eng-

"To you, my Lord, 'the head and front' of our party, I inscribe these sketches. No individual has, with equal vehemence, done so much to rescue first principles from prejudice, or to release property from that obsolete stability into no matter in how dear or venerable a form it to state, even in the British Parliament, ' that there are things which cannot be holden in property;' thus asserting the supremacy of nature over law, and also the right of man to determine for himself the extent of his social privileges. What dogma of greater importance to liberty had been before promulgated? What opinion, more intrepidly declared, has so well deserved the applause and admiration of

NATHAN BUTT!"

The work opens thus :--" The darkest hour is ever before the dawn. should bear in mind, and cherish their hearts, These reflections come with encouragement; hopes are about to be realised,-let no one despair when his fortunes seem most disastrous! Who, in this long-afflicted nation, could have indulged in the glorious anticipations that now brighten in our prospect? What man who has tasted the bitter of Tory exultation, and been forced to stoop to that abasement which, like iron, entered every Whig soul, when the arrogant official faction, in its high and palmy state, trampled on our sacred rights? But our pearls are about to be rescued from the hooves of the tramplers. The day begins to dawn, in which all honest men, with emancipated immunities, will, in the free natural exercise of their faculties, vindicate the perfectable greatness of the human character, and lift it above those circumstances of oppression, privation, and servitude, which it has from the beginning endured. But enough of this; I must repress the enthusiasm with which my feelings are excited by that which is at this moment the theme of all tongues, all heads, and all hearts. allude not to the Cholera, but to the Reform Bill. I speak not of laudanum, or rhubarb and brandy, or of any drug that has been found efficacious in the pestilence; but of that alone which the contemptuous Tories have denominated the 'Russell purge.' To return, however, to the subject of these pages - the history of my own life :- I am sure that I cannot adopt any better course to secure to me the sympathy of the reader, and his participation in my joy, than by simply relating my experience during that bondage and servility from which we are all on the point of being relieved. In my sufferings I have had many companions; and a naked recital of what we have undergone together, is sufficient to demonstrate the iniquity of that frame of society now ordained to be destroyed. Happy posterity! in vain shall ye, with all the invention of your future genius, attempt to conceive the calamities of that condition from which we, your ancestors, now intend to save you. It is reserved for you and yours to employ, with proper truth and effect, that precious expression, which the Torics of these days have so perversely used __ ' the wisdom of our ancestors !' '

Describing his innate character, Nathan tells

"There was an elastic principle of resistance within me even from my childhood; and I have never ceased, supported by it, to regard political shackles with unabashed antipathy. My spirit was nerved with irrepressible energy against every symptom of pretension, the singular glory of having had the courage a kitten, which in its gambols scratched my hands, how I seized it by the throat, and how my grandmother, then sitting by, took me up in the most tyrannical manner, and, before I would forego my grasp, shook me; but it was not with impunity. The spirit of independence I have ever largely shared, and it was roused by her injustice. One of her fingers, to the day of her death, bore witness to the indignation with which my four earliest teeth avenged her intervention in behalf of the feline aggressor. It would, however, be a tedious and vain task to recount the manifold instances This the disappointed and the unfortunate in which my childhood was molested by misrule, the lot of all under the old system. in despondency, with the consideration, that if ciprocal oppression was the very spirit of that a man can afford to wait, he never fails in the system; and it is no exaggeration to say, that a man can afford to wait, he never iaus in the system; and are now in existence can end to obtain much of the object of his wishes. verify this fact." " I might for now, thank Heaven, our long-deferred multiply domestic injuries of the same kind, of which I was the victim, especially as my mother was a person who never allowed any of her children to evince the slightest independence; on the contrary, she often irresponsibly ruled them with a rod of iron. Perhaps, however, her discipline was inseparable from her situation, for it must be conceded, that her offspring were not always of the most pliant and submissive humour: my brothers and sisters were brats of the most wilful kind, and were ever endeavouring to make a slave of me; but, with a firmness of fortitude singular for my age, I resisted all their attempts to domineer. not, therefore, animadvert with any particular rancour on the memory of 'all the ills I bore' during that juvenile persecution wherein I was the martyr.

At school he is the leader of every rebellion. and in the heart of every mischief - all which he defends on natural and first principles; and one of his accounts of the consequence of detection in robbing an orchard, is a fair example of the humorous tone of the work.

"I shall not bestow my tediousness on the reader with what happened that night; but on the Monday morning—(Sabbath passed inno-cently)—when Mr. Skelper came into the school-room, there was silence, and solemnity, and dread. All those who were engaged in the assertion of genuine principle, sat conning their lesson with downcast eyes and exemplary assiduity, - serious were their faces, and timid were their eyes; my heart rattled in my breast like a die in a dice-box: the other boys were under the malignant influence that was characteristic of the then state of the world - their laughter, though stifled and sinister, was provoking; and for the side-long looks which they now and then glanced at us, their malicious eyes ought to have been quenched. The master advanced with sounding footsteps to his deak; his countenance was eclipsed: never shall I forget his frown. Having said prayers with particular emphasis, he then stepped forward, and summoned all who had been engaged in the nocturnal exploit, by name. With trembling knees we obeyed; and I chanced to be the first whom he addressed. 'Nathan Butt,' said he, with a hoarse, austere voice (for he was a corpulent man,) 'Nathan Butt, what have you been engaged in? This was a puzzler: but I replied, 'that I had just been reading my lesson.' 'You varlet!' cried he, 'don't tell me of lessons: what lessons could you learn in robbing Dr. Drowser's garden?' 'I could not help it, sir,' was my diffident answer; 'we were tempted, and could not resist: the Doctor should not put such temptations in our way; which it has long been the object of society to menaced me. Well do I recollect, that while he is more to blame than we are; and waxing constrain its natural freedom. To you belongs yet a mere baby, playing on the hearth-rug with holder, I at last ventured to say, we only tried to get our share.' Mr. Skelper was astonished, and exclaimed, 'What can the boy mean? You audacious rascal! these are the sentiments of a highwayman!' and with that he hit me over the shoulders with his cane, as if he had been a public lictor, and I a malefactor. In a word, no more questions were asked, nor the truth of our opinions attempted to be ascertained; but each and all of us were compelled, after receiving a cruel caning, to sit on a form by ourselves, ruminating indignantly on our wrongs, a spectacle to the whole school."

Grown up to manhood, other mischances attend the independent course of Master Butt. He tells us:

He tells us: "About the time of which I have been speaking, an amiable young woman and I were brought into a very awkward position by the parish officers. Perhaps, as the affair was altogether private, I ought not to have mentioned it in these pages; but as my chief object is to exhibit the perverted world as I found it. I can do no less than narrate some of the circumstances; especially as they serve to shew how widely that artificial system, which has so long been predominant, is different from the beauty, the simplicity, and the integrity of nature. For some weeks there had been a shy and diffident acquaintanceship between Alice Hardy and me, insomuch that, before we exchanged words, we had looked ourselves into familiarity with one another. She was not, however, in that rank of life which my father, in his subserviency to the prejudices of society, would approve of as a fit match for me; and therefore I resolved to seek no closer communion with her. Nevertheless, it came to pass, I cannot well tell how, that one day we happened to fall into speaking terms, and, from less to more, grew into a pleasant reciprocity. Nothing could be more pure and natural than our mutual regard; it was the promptings of an affection simple, darling, and congenial. While in this crisis of enjoyment, malignant Fortune influenced the parish, and we were undone. One morning the beadle, wearing his cocked hat, big blue coat with red capes, trimmed with broad gold lace, appeared at the door of Alice's mother, and calling her forth by name, impertinently inquired respecting some alteration that he had been told was visible in her appearance. To this she gave a spirited answer; at which the intrusive old man struck the floor with his silver-headed staff in a magisterial manner, and said, with a gruff voice, which alarmed the poor girl, that if she refused to answer his question, he would have her pulled up before her betters. This threat she related to me in the evening, when we met, as our custom was, to walk in my lord's park; and next morning I went to the saucy beadle myself, and demanded why he had presumed to molest her with his impertinence. But instead of replying as he ought to have done, he said, with a look which I shall never forget, that he was coming for me to give security that the parish should not be burdened, as he called it, with a job. This was strange tidings; and I was so confounded, that I did not know what answer to make. I assured him, however, that it had all come of an unaccountable accident, and should be so treated; for that neither Alice nor I had the least idea of the consequence—indeed, we never thought of it at all. But I spoke to a poet; and, by what ensued, it was plain to me how much parochial beadles are opposed to the fondest blandishments of nature. In some respects, the affair, in the highly exasperated that I could not discern, or would not confess, a fault, resolved that I should no longer remain in that country side. Accordingly, I was sent off very soon to my uncle, in one of the principal manufacturing towns of the kingdom, to be placed in his counting-house; it being deemed of no use to think I could ever make any figure in the law. My mind, as the old man asserted, was doggedly set against the most valued institutions of the country, and altogether of an odd and strange revolutionary way of thinking. 'Nethan Butt,' said he, on the evening previous to my departure, 'you go from your father's house - what he says with sorrow and apprehension - an incorrigible young man; you have, from your youth upward, been contumacious to reproof, and in your nature opposed, as with an instinctive antipathy, to every thing that has been endeared by experience. This address a little disconcerted me; but in the end my independence gave me fortitude to say, 'Sir, that I have not been submissive to the opinions of the world and to yours, is certain; but it is not in my character to be other than I am. Fate has ordained me to discern the manifold forms which oppression takes in the present organisation of society-' 'Oppression!' cried the old gentleman, with vehemence,—' do you call it oppression, to have been from your childhood, the cause of no common grief to your parents; to have been kicked out of one school, and the rebel ringleader in another?-Nathan Butt! Nathan Butt! unless you change your conduct, society will soon let you know, with a pin in your nose, what it is to set her laws and establishments at defiance.' 'Alas! sir, pardon me for the observation-but you have lived too long; the world now is far ahead of the age which respected your prejudices. I am but one of the present time; all its influences act strongly on me, and, like my contemporaries, I feel the shackles and resent the thraldom to which we have been born.' 'You stiff-necked boy!' exclaimed my father, starting up in a passion; 'but I ought not to be surprised at such pestiferous jargon. And so you are one of those, I suppose, destined to be a regenerator of the world! Come, come, Mahomet Butt, as I should call you, no doubt this expulsion to your uncle's will be renowned hereafter as your Hegira. I have seen young men, it is true, in my time—that which you say is now past—who, with a due reverence for antiquity, and a hallowed respect for whatever age and use had proved beneficial-but the lesson is lost on you: however, let me tell you, my young Mahomet, that we had in those days mettlesome lads, that did no worse than your pranks; but——, 'Well then, sir, what was the difference between them and me?' 'Just this, you graceless vagabond !- what they did, was in fun and frolic, and careless juvenility; but you, ye reprobate! do your mischief from instinct; and evil, the devil's motive, is, to your eyes and feelings, good! You—ye ingrained heretic to law, gospel, and morality, as I may justly say you are—have the same satisfaction in committing mischief that those to whom I allude had, in after-life, in acts of virtue and benevolence.' It was of no use to answer a man who could express such doctrine; so I just said to him, that I claimed no more from him than the privilege of nature. 'The beasts and birds,' said I, 'when they have come to maturity, leave their lairs and nests, and take their places in the world.' The old hand, and seizing a candle with the other, pored in my face, at first sternly, and then softening a little, he flung me, as it were, from him, and said,—' Go, get out of my sight, thou beast or bird of prey!' I shall make no animadversions on such a domestic life; the reader will clearly see that it belonged to that state of society which soon, thanks be and praise, is about to be crushed. It will no longer be in the power of one, dressed in a little brief authority, to play such fantastic tricks with those in whom the impulses of nature are justly acknowledged as superior to all artificial maxims and regulations."

With his uncle his principles yield a little of their sternness; he enters into trade, marries, and has a family. On the christening of his first child, Mr. Galt has drawn a scene of Christian piety, in which Mrs. Butt and other relatives are opposed to the infidelity of Nathan, with great interest and effect. The death of his aged mother is also a very touching picture. But we have done enough to enable readers to judge of the dry remark, the astuteness, and the toryism, which distinguish the Radical; and we leave it to the favour it is at least sure to command from a numerous body on account of its politics, and should generally obtain (no matter on what side the reader may be, if not very hot), on account of the ability with which it is written.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Matilda," &c. 3 vols.
[Second Notice.]

WE return to these interesting volumes, because we wish to place before our readers a remark or two with which we have been infinitely pleased. Few writers indulge less in digressions than Lord Mulgrave; the characters are developed, the narrative proceeds most dramatically: but circumstances themselves call forth observations; and we extract the following passages both for their own value, and for the wholly opposite talent they display to those of our previous notice—the rational and useful, as accompanying the touching and brilliant.

The County Magistrates. - " But here -let not the reader be alarmed: I am not going to start off with one of the sweeping invectives, with some so popular, against the 'great unpaid;' such a digression would be out of place here, if I thought it in reason any where. But my own opinion is, that it is a system which rather requires to be regulated than superseded. I by no means think that all is obtained that is required, because the magistrate is unpaid; but neither do I think that all would be remedied if he was paid. I do not think it by any means certain that this change alone would at once insure oracles of wiedom, and miracles of wit, all over the country. If, too, their appointments are all to emanate from the crown, I am much surprised that any who entertain a con-stitutional jealousy of the executive should tolerate a plan, which either must be made the means of increased patronage to the dependents of government and their supporters among the local aristocracy, or if there ever should be a minister who should be disposed to drill all under him into a sert of military subordination, would enable him to organise a system, if not of police espionage, at least of ministerial surveillance. 'Surveillance!' The word is not English; because the thing itself has never been naturalised amongst us. And next to the consideration of how the stipendiary magistrates are to be appointed, comes that of from end, as far as the parish and the beadle were man, in something like a frenzy, caught me by what class are they to be selected. Probably concerned, was amicably settled; but my father, the tuft of hair on my forehead by the one from amongst these educated for the profession of the law. But you could never expect that the infinite number of appointments necessary would be such as to tempt men of eminence or ambition to accept them; so that every where you must be content with mediocrity of talent and attainments. Added to this, is the name of lawyer, whether deservedly or not, so popuhir among the lower orders as to make such a change desired by those for whose advantage it is supposed to be proposed? Whatever the defects of the present system may be, I am sure much good is frequently effected by the attention willingly paid to the amicable recommendations of him who is looked up to in his immediate neighbourhood, as uniting the character of magistrate with that of kind protector or benevolent landlord. Far, however, am I from thinking that the present system is perfect. Many, I am aware, are the instances both of injustice and ignorance which it has fostered under the head of injustice. The game-laws, administered by the very persons most interested against the accused party, have led to much capricious tyranny. But abolish the game-laws (as you have begun to do), destroy the unjust law, and you remove the temptation to injustice in the administration. As to ignorance, too, I am afraid that there are but too many lamentable instances; but why then is the most complicated and important business of administering the laws supposed to be the only one for which no previous practice or pre-paration is required? A diploma is expected for medicine; a degree or examination for taking orders as a priest. Why, as most of our magistrates are of the class usually educated at one of the universities, why should not a course of English law be engrafted upon the many less useful things exacted as necessary to a degree? or why should not a certificate from a separate college established for that purpose. be required from every one wishing to act as a magistrate? Would it be very unreasonable to expect that some little fitness should be ascertained, before duties were undertaken in which the interests of so many, and amongst them those the least able to defend themselves, are involved?"

Unnecessary Imprisonment as involved in Delay of Trial.—" It has often struck me, that though it is said in answer to the question, ' whom does time gallop withal ?-with a thief to the gallows, for, though he goes as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there; yet if there is a course which time has to run which should, if possible, be shortened, it is that elongated period which, in the greater part of this kingdom, has often to be passed between the commitment of a prisoner and his trial. In many cases nine months may elapsenine weary months elapse before those whose trials ultimately end in acquittal, can be restored to their family; and of those who are committed, how large a proportion are afterwards proved to have been innocent? or rather, if you please, not proved to be guilty? With the numberless law reforms, previously deemed visionary and impossible, which the last few years have seen actually put in practice, it is not likely that this evil should long be allowed to continue. How the alteration is to be effected, or by what separation of the civil and criminal functions of the judges the courts of law at Westminster Hall could still continue open during the terms, as they are now required to be, and yet commissions for the despatch of criminal justice be issued to the country, - must be left to more experienced heads than mine to determine. But the evil of the innocent man chancing to be detained whilst those seasons have almost revolved during which he should have supported his family by his labour; but it is also not rare that the tendency to crime, which might be epidemic before, is rendered so much more virulent by contagion, that he who went in a petty offender, whether acquitted that time or not, comes out a confirmed criminal; and even on the guilty, on whom certain punishment must be done, how much of the benefit of that example, which is the sole object of punishment, is destroyed by its not being speedy as well as certain! In this age, celebrated above all its other peculiarities for the rapid succession of fresh sensations, what crime, however atrocious, can fix the attention of the public for nine long months? A rural Burke, or a provincial Bishop, is examined upon a charge, which the infamous notoriety of the first has identified with his name, both as a noun and a verb. The London journals teem with the fullest accounts, headed with the most inviting particulars of the most revolting details. Nine months, perhaps, elapse, and he dies, without confession, is hanged and dissected, and all in three lines of the smallest type in an obscure corner of the fourth page of the same newspaper. Here the benefit of the example is lost, and nobody can tell exactly why. The interval that has elapsed is rarely blamed for it. Nobody out of prison holds the stop-watch for him that is within. I remember, some years back, a fashionable offender, whose name was in every body's mouth at the time, being sentenced to five years' confinement in — gaol; his liberation was, at length, announced in the papers. It became the subject of conversation. No one could believe that any how he could have stayed his whole time, and bets were made and lost upon the utter impossibility of the fact. And yet, though to those who had thus 'doft the world aside, and bid it pass,' and had kept no count of time, the fact seemed impossible—to the individual himself, how endless had seemed the early snail-like creeping days, how tedious the last lingering hours!"

We had marked, as a contrast to the serious tone both of thought and feeling in the above quotations, a most amusing " scene in court:" but our limits forbid its admission. This, however, matters less, as The Contrast is not a novel to be confounded with its trifling and trashy compeers, and must consequently be generally read and esteemed from its own

New Children's Friend; consisting of Tales and Conversations. By Mrs. Markham, author of the "Histories of England and France." 2 vols. 12mo. Longman and Co. It is well, if we may judge from the books published for their edification and guidance, that children have so many friends. they grow up to be men and women, they will find that they have few enow; and we beg to inculcate this important moral lesson and truth upon their minds, in addition to the many with which they have been favoured, from the days of Mrs. Trimmer and Madame de Genlis to those of Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Markham. The present work is very various, and contains much good advice, in all the usual forms of dialogue, tale, and essay. Of some parts of it, however, we should doubt the expediency for the youthful: for instance, the sailor's story of the murder of a pert village flirt (vol. ii.), though no doubt unquestionable in its applicaalone to that one, in itself sufficient, of an its details. Yet we would recommend Mrs. Markham to our juvenile readers, as likely to interest and improve them, and we do so conscientiously; for wherever our report may be acted upon, if we should err in opinion in higher literature, we trust it will be felt that the Literary Gazette never misled a teacher, s parent, or a child.

> Cabinet Cyclopædia, No. XXX. History-Spain and Portugal, Vol. II. This work has not improved as it has proceeded, for we certainly never met a drier itinerary of dates and facts than constitutes the second volume of the history of Spain and Portugal.

Officer Pug. Pp. 16. S. Low. Some nice little wood-cuts of the gambols of one of those monkeys which we see in the streets on dog-back; with a poetical narrative of indifferent composition.

Illustrations of Smollett, Fielding, and Gold-smith. By George Cruikshank. London,

FORTY-ONE plates, which have contributed to illustrate ten volumes of Roscoe's Novelists Library, are here concentred into one volume, with so much of letter-press as is needful to explain the subjects. As we have spoken with much praise of these efforts of the characteristic and ludicrous pencil of Cruikshank as they sucressively appeared, we shall only say that, in their collected and condensed form, the talent they display strikes us still more forcibly.

The Minstrelsy of the Woods; or, Sketches and Songs connected with the Natural History of some of the most interesting British and Foreign Birds. By the Author of the "Wild Garland." 12mo. pp. 227. London, Harvey and Darton.

A NICE medley of natural history for the vouthful inquirer; in which anecdotes of birds. interspersed with sketches of their habits, and poetical descriptions, are well calculated to excite attention, and leave a useful record on the memory. There are also engravings, to add the recollections of the eye to the other senses.

A New Description of the Earth. By Jeffereys Taylor. Pp. 164. Same publishers. ANOTHER publication for the young, and viewing our globe chiefly as intended as a residence for man. It is written in a familiar style, and well adapted to convey information.

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE are going to say very little more about these volumes, for all they contain has been reviewed some half dozen times. The Fair of May Pair is an ad captandum title given to tales constructed on the principle of being nearly a repetition of "Mothers and Daughters," "Pin-money," "The Opera," &c. Mrs. Gore has now devoted about twenty volumes to fashionable life, and never was soil more utterly exhausted. We are tired of intriguing mothers, and daughters to be married; and highly as we admire Mrs. Gore's talents, we must observe, they might be put to a better use than merely giving their own piquancy to the leavings of great ones' She has too much mind to waste it in thus pickling and preserving for the circulating medium. But perhaps she might reply to us in the words of a painter who was asked the common question, "Why he did not atwant of some such arrangement is not confined tion, can hardly convey useful instruction by tempt some great work, instead of being daily transmitter of some foolish face?" take me for the Marquess of Stafford, and think I want to keep my own pictures? Really I have no gallery for them."

Authors are, after all, like painters; they have no gallery for their own works.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

THE Friday evening assemblies were resumed after the Easter recess by an admirable lecture on the strength and deflexion of cast-iron beams, delivered by Mr. Cottam. After some preliminary observations, the lecturer shewed that a bar one inch square and fifty-four inches between the supports, bore 189lbs. in the middle of its length, with a deflexion of 0.47 of an inch. When unloaded, it was found to restore itself; indicating that its elastic force was still entire. He then took the opportunity of shewing the necessity of attending to the limit of the elastic power. He observed, if the material be strained beyond that point, and the straining force be suffered to remain, or frequently repeated, the deflexion continues to increase, and fracture ultimately takes place; but if the load be restrained within the limit of the elastic power, it may be suffered to remain for any length of time with perfect safety, and without increasing the deflexion in the smallest degree. The bar was again loaded with 236lbs. suspended at equal distances over the length, and the same deflexion was produced as with 189lbs. in the centre. Mr. Cottam stated this to be a new property, accidentally discovered by placing the weights in a wrong position on a former The distance between the supports was reduced to one half, and the bar bore twice the load, or 378lbs., proving that the strength is inversely as the length. The original length was again adopted, and when the bar was uniformly loaded, it bore 378lbs., and resumed its former state on the load being removed. The bar was then loaded to fracture, and broke with 556lbs.: now the load to produce fracture by calculation is 567lbs.; a satisfactory evidence. On this, however, Mr. Cottam laid no stress; but stated, that it was the elastic force only from which rules ought to be drawn, and not from the breaking weight. From these experiments the following rule was drawn : - Multiply 850 times the breadth in inches by the square of the depth in inches, and divide the product by the length of bearing in feet for the weight to be supported in pounds. This weight any beam of cast-iron will carry with safety in the middle of its length; and twice that weight if uniformly distributed over the length. Beams of various forms, the strength of which was calculated by this rule, were placed in a hydro-mechanical press, and proved to carry the load stated, and the deflexion was denoted by an index, which had a range of ten inches for every inch, rendering the deflexion visible to the one hundredth part of an inch.

TRANSIT OF MERCURY.

5d (see L. G. No. 797) - the state of the weather for several days preceding the transit prevented any sanguine expectations of an uninterrupted view of this phenomenon: a glance or two was the utmost limit of reasonable anticipation. At 5h of the morning of Saturday cipation. At 5h of the morning of Saturday the sky was clear and tranquil; by 7h it was entirely concealed, and, excepting a gleam of sunshine at 7h 15m, which for an instant inspired hope, the celestial canopy, till within a few minutes of the expected ingress, presented only the dreary aspect of driving clouds. 8h 45m partial warmth, and the relations which appear less dense. 8h 58m—the Sun sufficiently visible through pale clouds to be satisfied that Mercury had not commenced its entry on the solar disc: owing to the thin misty veil, which was momentarily varying, the Sun was examined without the aid of a dark glass applied to the telescope. 9h 1m - Mercury distinctly seen, advanced about half his diameter on the solar disc. 9h 3m—the planet completely within the disc, apparently in contact with the Sun's inner limb. The planet was afterwards seen at the following intervals: 9h 25m, 9h 40m, and 9h 55m; also several times between 10h and 11h: during the ensuing three hours the sky was uniformly overcast. At 2h 5m, 2h 25m, and 3h 5m, a transitory glimpse was again afforded; after this latter period the Sun did not re-appear during the transit. In each of the above observations the Sun was never free from clouds, and only visible at each interval for two or three seconds: not one steady continual view of the Sun was afforded from the commencement to the termination. The spectacle, though not satisfactory, was gratifying.

The transit of Mercury preceding the recent one occurred on the 4th of November, 1822 (invisible in Europe). This was observed at Calcutta, and under circumstances scarcely more favourable: the Sun was frequently obscured by flying clouds, so as to render the time of the first internal contact uncertain. During its continuance, the light was so faint that the Sun could be seen without the aid of coloured glasses.

The transit of the same planet, Nov. 2, 1740, being invisible in Europe, induced a distinguished astronomer and geographer, I. N. de l'Isle, to undertake a journey to the distant regions of Asia to witness it; but, after travelling through the inhospitable wilds of Siberia. the cloudiness of the atmosphere prevented him from observing the transit - a mortification which he endeavoured to support by his geographical and physical remarks, and in drawing up a description of the country.

The transit of Venus, in 1761, was also attended with considerable disappointment. The scientific world had directed their attention to this very rare occurrence for 130 years. On the morning of the transit, the clouds intercepted a view of its commencement in some places, and totally obscured it in others, to the great vexation of those who had undertaken expensive voyages to observe this interesting phenomenon in distant countries.

The next transit of Mercury visible in England will occur in the afternoon of the 8th of May, 1845. The Sun will set with the planet on its disc.

Occultation of Saturn.—8d (see L. G. No. 797) immersion of the ring of Saturn, 9h 6m 50s; disappearance of the eastern edge of the globe of the planet, 9^h 7^m 45^s; emersion of the ring, 10^h 7^m 10^s; total emersion, 10^h 7^m 45^s. The passage of the dark limb of the Moon over the disc of the planet was a beautiful phenomenon - both were well defined : fleecy clouds dimmed the eastern ansa before complete immersion. This was the most satisfactory occultation of Saturn that has been observed since that of October 30, 1825.

J. T. BARKER. · Deptford.

the clouds in the direction of the Sun became to subsist between terrestrial magnetism and geological structure and thermo-electrical currents of the earth, was read. This communication contains much information that is interesting. The author detailed a number of experiments on rocks: the thermo-electricity of granite became considerable on vitrification; porphyry, negative; green-stone, positive; and so on, in a very anomalous manner, which is attributed to the structure of the rocks. Ores. too, like rocks, differ in their thermo-electrical quality: by inquiry, however, that cause and effect by which the universe is bound together, might be clearly traced through apparent irregularity in nature. The results of experiments of a different kind were then detailed. Granite, when heated to red-heat, increased in bulk from to to to ; porphyry, 15; green-stone, 16, &c.; but they decreased to their original limits when cold.

Mr. Lubbock informed the meeting, that continued indisposition was the cause of his Royal Highness the President's absence.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

H. GURNEY, Esq. in the chair. - The council of the Society exhibited drawings of the ground-plan and elevations of the N.W. tower of Canterbury Cathedral. Mr. Barling exhibited an Anglo-Saxon seal of brass, with the legend "Sigillum Ælfrici." It was found near Winchester, and is supposed to have belonged to Alfric, earl of Mercia, who, about the year 991, was entrusted by Ethelred II. with a considerable fleet against the Danes, to whom, however, he betrayed the fleet. Mr. Crofton Croker exhibited four bronze weapons found in the Thames near Kingston, described by him as Roman; but we should be rather inclined to consider them British, from their form and appearance; and an antique smoking-pipe, very small in its dimensions, also found near Kingston. Mr. Kempe communicated drawings, with a description, of the monument of John de Sheppey, bishop of Rochester, discovered concealed behind some loads of plaster and rubbish in Rochester Cathedral, during the repairs of that edifice in the year 1805. The costume of the edifice in the year 1805. The costume of the bishop's effigy is exceedingly rich; in illustra-tion of which Mr. Kempe detailed the ancient ceremonial of the investiture of bishops. John de Sheppey was elected bishop of Rochester in 1352, and died in 1360. Mr. Rudge exhibited a ground-plan of the Abbey of Evesham, in Worcestershire, with drawings of architectural ornaments, painted tiles, &c. accompanied by a description of the discoveries made by the excavations and researches of Mr. R. and his father between the years 1811 and 1830.

THE LITERARY FUND ANNIVERSARY.

THE annual meeting of this "thrice blessed charity" took place at the Freemasons! Hall, on Wednesday; his grace the Duke of Somerset, the president, in the chair. Owing to the political events of the moment, his grace, who by his own presence shewed how sincerely he was attached to the Fund, was deprived of the support of many eminent characters, who had promised their attendance on the occasion. The company, nevertheless, amounted to between one and two hundred persons; and the stewards had also honourably exerted themselves to procure a good list of subscriptions,* which included a hundred guineas from the King, the first his majesty has graciously bestowed on an association so worthy of royal protection-fifty pounds from the Earl of Mulgrave, after several previous donations—and liberal sums from Sir John Swinburne, Sir John Malcolm, and other friends who were present—repetitions of oft-repeated acts of benevolence—as well as from absent patrons and officers, whom circumstances kept from the meeting.

After the usual loyal toasts, on which some recent members, not well acquainted with the nature and spirit of the charity, which knows neither party nor politics in the conduct of its affairs, were rather more noisy than has been seen at former anniversaries, or than is befitting where mercy, not discord, is the object which all should have in view-after these toasts and their musical accompaniments, under the able direction of Mr. Hawes, the chairman drank success to the Literary Fund, which was received with warm applause. Dr. Croly, one of the registrars, then addressed the assembly in a very eloquent strain, stating the progress the Institution had made, expatiating on the misfortunes to which literary genius and pursuits were ever peculiarly liable, mentioning in general terms (for a right feeling forbids particulars) the beneficent application of the Fund, and enforcing its high claims to national sympathy and national co-operation. Several splendid passages in this speech elicited the plaudits of the hearers, and its fine conclusion was loudly cheered. Sir John Malcolm, in a neat address, proposed the health of the noble president, which was given with every testimony of grateful acknowledgment; and his grace hav-ing returned thanks, briefly expressing his attachment to the Institution, and his anxiety to promote every effort for the consolation of suffering literary merit-Mr. Burn, one of the treasurers, read a report of the donations and subscriptions during the preceding year. Other toasts called up Sir John Malcolm, in connexion with the Royal Asiatic Society-Sir John Swinburne, as a great benefactor, with the stewards—Mr. Milman, as one of the eminent poets of England...Mr. Sheridan Knowles, as a distinguished dramatic author...Mr. Mayerbeer, the famous German composer, and other individuals of note in various walks of life. These gentlemen severally declared the sense they entertained of the compliment paid to them, and the deep interest they felt in the success of the Fund, in graceful and appropriate terms; and Mr. Knowles spoke with great energy and splendid poetical illustration, not only in painting his own vivid emotions, but in praying for an abundance of blessings on the hands which directed so noble a design. Some of his imagery was of the highest and most touching order; especially where he compared the literary adventurer to the sailor who trusted all to a plank and bit of canvass, and put to sea, not knowing whither the tides might drive him, or when the storm might come on. Then, in the hour of peril, when wrecked and sinking, how god-like was the act to pluck them from the overwhelming waves!

design by the absolute difficulty of readily knowing how to carry it into effect. Last year, Lord Brougham pre-sided over a splendid meeting, and performed his office with all the tact and talent which could impart brilliancy with all the tact and talent which could impart brilliancy to such an occasion: yet many strangers went away absolutely ignorant that their subscriptions in the room would be acceptable. The same remark applies to Wednesday, and ought not to apply another year; for though the Institution is flourishing, and it may be said rich, yet, if it had thrice as much to bestow, there is thrice as much of penury and misery among those for whose solace it exists, to whom its salutary and often saving assistance might happilly be extended.—Rd. L. G.

M. Mayerbeer delivered his thanks in French, trance of the Schelds; by the same, when he at speaks English very tolerably in private chooses to be so, inimitable artist. but speaks English very tolerably in private conversation. He seemed much gratified by the attention paid to him, and the praise bestowed on his father-land.

One of the visitors interrupted the arranged routine of the toasts, by volunteering the health of the late Lord Chancellor, which was received with great approbation. Mr. Pemberton also recited a poem; but, from being unacquainted with the room, pitched his voice so as to be very indistinctly heard, which brought on symptoms of impatience; and he finally sat down without, we believe, finishing his theme.

The evening concluded, as we have been told, pleasantly enough: and some efficient stewards have been secured for next May.

PINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Ir, while looking round the walls of the great room at Somerset House, with a view to estimate the merits of the Exhibition of the present year, as compared with those of its immediate predecessors, any doubt had come across us on the subject, the question would have been immediately decided on seeing Mr. Wilkie's extraordinary performance. Of course we

No. 134. The Preaching of Knox before the Lords of the Congregation, 10th June, 1559. D. Wilkie, R.A. — Has the science, as it is termed, of physiognomy any foundation in truth? Placing "in our mind's eye" the artist, with his placid features and quiet demeanour, by the side of his admirable and energetic picture, we should say — no. All the fire of Knox's eloquence; all the malignant but subdued feeling of the alarmed ecclesiastics; all the anxiety and apprehension of the principal females in the centre group -these, and a thousand other emotions must, for a time, have been present to the painter's imagination, and have formed a part of himself; and yet they have left no impress upon his countenance. It is impossible to contemplate this pictorial record of an historical fact, without being awfully sensible of the powerful effects which have, in former times, resulted from the oratory of the pulpit. It is a work from which our thoughts cannot readily withdraw themselves; and we do not envy those who can resist being carried away by its expression, and by its other excellencies, and can sit quietly down to the cold task of criticism. In colour it appears to us to unite the splendour of the Venetian with the deep and harmonising tone of the Spanish school. It not infrequently happens that our artists, in their visits to the celebrated galleries of the continent, have contrived to weaken the powers which they carried with them: Mr. Wilkie has not only strengthened his, but appears to have awakened talents hitherto dormant, of a higher character even than the public supposed him to possess.

No. 70. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, Italy. J. M. W. Turner, R.A. - We look upon this beautiful, but exceedingly artificial picture, as a vision; and cannot for a single instant believe in its reality.* We have perfect faith, however, in the strict adherence to nature of No. 153, The Prince of Orange, William III., embarked from Holland, and landed at Torbay, November 4th, 1688, after a stormy passage; and No. 206, Van Tromp's shallop, at the en-

Our late kind-hearted friend of gastronomic celebrity, Dr. Kitchiner, invented a pill, which he called a "peristaltic persuader." Why does not some skilful optician produce a glass which might have a similar effect in persuading the eye?

No. 196. W. Etty, R. A. - The subject must be looked for in the quotation in the catalogue, which speaks of Youth on the prow, and pleasure at the helm; Unmindful of the sweeping whirlwind's sway, That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening prey."

This is all moral enough; the picture is voluptuously beautiful, and certainly is not cal-culated "through the eye to correct the heart," as was said of the works of Hogarth. Some of the ladies seem to be prepared for the coming storm. They are no doubt excellent swimmers, and well acquainted with the element with which they are about to contend.

No. 140. A Scene from the Taming of the Shrew. C. R. Leslie, R.A.—The eye of the spectator is at first attracted, and perhaps too strongly, by the rich and splendid drapery which Petruchio holds up in mock anger; but it is not long detained there. The character of Catherine and her suppressed rage are exquisitely depicted. No one but a perfect vixen could have exhibited such emotion, and no one but a perfect artist could have so accurately observed, and so skilfully represented it. In all respects, whether in composition, colouring, or effect, the subject is admirably treated.

No. 121. A Family Picture; containing portraits of the Marquess and Marchioness of Westminster, the Earl and Countess Grosvenor, the Earl and Counters of Wilton, Lord and Lady Robert Grosvenor, Viscount Belgrave, the Ladies Grosvesnor, and Lady Mary Egerton. C. R. Leslie, R.A.—When we consider the great difficulty of arranging and managing a group of portraits, so as to give interest to the subject, we cannot sufficiently admire the ta-lents of the artist who succeeds as Mr. Leslie has succeeded in this fine performance. All appear in their proper places; naturally, tastefully, and elegantly brought together; and, as well as the accessories of the picture, carefully and beautifully painted.

No. 9. A Hindoo Temple at Rotas Gur, a hill fort in the Province of Behar, East Indies: and No. 20. An Imaun-Barrah, or Mausoleum of a Mahometan High Priest, at Sasseram, in the Province of Bahar, East Indies. W. Daniel, R.A.—It is scarcely necessary to say that these pictures are invested with the highest qualities of the picturesque, and are executed with a skill corresponding with their character. Indeed, we are so accustomed to the annual appearance of beautiful representations of oriental architecture, scenery, and figures, from the pencil of Mr. Daniell, that we cannot imagine, and hope we may never see, an exhibition without them.

No. 165. Portrait of Sir Walter Scott in his Study at Abbotsford, reading the Proclamation of Mary Queen of Scots previous to her Marriage with Henry Darnley. W. Allan, A.... An invaluable portrait of this celebrated writer and excellent man, whose present situation must excite the deepest sympathy in every generous breast. Mr. Allan has represented him surrounded by a great variety of curious objects of historical interest, and has painted his fa-vourite staghound lying at his feet.

No. 77. Una seeking shelter in the Cottage of Coreeca. W. Hilton, R.A.—Full of deep pathos and powerful contrast; with a fine chiaro-scuro, and mellow tone of colouring.

No. 86. A Scene suggested by an effect seen after heavy rain in the Ligurian Mountains, near Surxana. A. W. Callcett, R.A.—It is rare in the highest walks of modern landscape to see an attempt at the sublime, unaccomCalleott has happily kept clear of the latter. The mind is filled with the awful; and yet there is no exaggeration. But, in truth, from the works of what artist do we receive more unmixed pleasure; whether in his scenes of classic elegance, such as No. 61, The ruined Tomb, or of the purely pastoral, such as No. 187, An English Water-mill?

[To be continued.]

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

[Second notice.]

WHETHER second-sight be in any other way advantageous we know not; but we are sure that it is so in art. It is very gratifying to us to be enabled to say, that our second view of this admirable exhibition confirms our first statement of its character.

No. 224. — Miss L. Sharpe Miss Sharpe has taken her subject from the first volume of the Spectator, No. lxxx. As the passage is quoted, none can be at a loss with respect to its object,-that of exhibiting female rivalry in the most striking colours. It is in truth an exquisite performance; and in our opinion displays the talents of the fair artist beyond any of her former works. The occurrence is treated with all the grandeur of an historical event. It is only to fancy that the fainting female has taken poison, administered by the triumphant one, and you have all the interest of deep tragedy, instead of merely the exposure of vanity. The execution is in perfect accordance with the excellence of the conception.

No. 56. The Banquet Scene. J. Stephanoff. This picture was painted by command of his Majesty. The subject is taken from that scene of the play of Henry the Eighth in which the amorous monarch first sees Anne Bullen. We have already observed, that it has afforded Mr. Stephanoff a fair opportunity of displaying his skill in that garland-like colouring by which his works are so often distinguished. and never more so than in the present instance. The figure and attitude of Henry are well imagined,—at once dignified and gallant.

Those of the cardinal are a little too theatrical. The splendid costume, and the effect of light from the window at the back part of the hall, add greatly to the beauty of the performance. The sketch, No. 293, of a picture to be executed by command of her Majesty, bids fair to afford an opportunity for the exhibition of this able artist's talents in a different though not less advantageous point of view.

No. 215. -- G. Robson,-"A deed without a name!" We infer from the quotation in the catalogue that it represents the Lake Coriskin; and it is certainly one of those awful scenes of solitary desolation which Mr. Robson's pencil so powerfully depicts. Grandour and sublimity can be carried no farther.

No. 233. View from Westminster Bridge. G. Robson.—We funcied that we were tolerably acquainted with the nature and extent of Mr. Robson's powers, when, lo! this new wonder claims our admiration. It was a fortunate hour when the artist saw this venerable and well-known pile under so pure and striking an

No. 247. Interior; Composition. G. Cattermole. Mr. Cattermole's works always display the stores of a fertile and extraordinary imagination. They command and rivet attention. We scarcely know whether to admire more the gloomy grandeur of this performance in its architectural character, or the wonderful skill with which the massive but mouldering perfectly illustrative of the quotation, appears to us to be placed too much in the centre of the nicture.

No. 192. Highland Hospitality. J. F. Lewis. A subject well suited to the mantel, which ought always to be enlivened by works of a gladsome and cheering nature. There is a rich variety, both of colour and of character, in this interior; an assemblage such as a painter, a sportsman, or a traveller, would delight to meet with, and would not easily forget. No. 107, Scotch Fisherman's Cottage door, and No. 117, Fish-wives, Newhaven, Edinburgh; by the same artist, also exhibit his talents and his feeling for the picturesque to great advantage.

No. 164. View in Cowes Harbour, Isle of Wight. Copley Fielding.-If the power of the elements be not in the hands of the artist, that of representing them is. No man has been more successful in the attempt than Mr. Fielding. As examples, we quote the performence under our notice, and No. 112, Vessels in a stiff breeze, off Calshot Castle, Hampshire. In the first, the sullen gloom of vapour, with occasional breaks of light; in the second, the undulating motion of water and its translucent character, are depicted in a manner which we have never seen surpassed.

No. 369. The Widow. Miss Sharpe_Is it game the fair artist would be making when she represents so beautiful a creature turning away from the gauds and toys of life, to dwell only upon the semblance of the dear departed? No, no; she cannot believe in the probability of the thing herself; but it does exceedingly well as the subject of a picture, which is cer-tainly one of the most splendid and brilliant in point of effect and execution that we ever looked upon.

No. 63. A Gipsy Comp. P. Dewint.— The character and habits of this erratic tribe may certainly be contemplated with more safety in the fine production under our notice than by a visit to their camp. Mr. Dewint's taste and skill have invested the immediate subject with all the charms of the picturesque; while the wild and desolate heath, and the panoramic extent of the country beyond it, impart the highest interest to the scene.

No. 251. Windermers, during the Regatta. D. Cox.-A perfect fairy-scene, with rainbow colours scattered over it; in which animation and sociability appear in their holyday attire and best aspect.

No. 229. Rich Relations. T. Tayler. A little more display of aristocratic pride would have added to the character of this picture, which is nevertheless very ably executed: and, with others by the same artist, shews great improvement.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A Series of Views, illustrating the most interesting and beautiful Spots on the Loire, and its Environe. By Louis Parez. Part I. Ackermann.

THERE are few rivers in Europe the banks of which furnish finer or more frequent subjects for the pencil than the Loire. In the words of M. Parez, " hills, cities, rocks, castles, abbeys, ruins, and châteaux, present different outlines at every winding of the river, and each scene forms but a prelude to new beauties, that offer themselves at every step." We hope that the present effort to introduce this grand and beautiful seenery to the English amateur will meet with the success which it deserves. The Part we must say, considering its size, novelty, and panied by some touch of the ridiculous. Mr. | columns are represented. The figure of the | contains views of the picturesque Castle of Châisolated and mysterious ecclesiastic, although teaudun, the prison of Charles the Seventh; the romantic Angers, which Shakespeare has rendered so familiar to his countrymen; the magnificent Chambord, erected by the chival-rous, accomplished, and munificent Francis I.; and the ancient Château de Blois, the scene of the murder of the celebrated Duke de Guise. They are drawn with much firmness and precision, and the lithographic execution also does M. Parez great credit. The views are accompanied by topographical and historical notices of the most eventful periods of French and English history.

> Studies from Nature. Drawn by G. Barnard. Dickinson.

> UNDER the above title the tyro in landscapepainting will find a number of admirable characters of trees, calculated materially to assist in teaching him to mark those varieties in trunk, ramification, and foliage, by which nature distinguishes one species from another.

Lord Cosmo George Russell, and his Pony Fingall. Painted by Edwin Landseer, R.A.; drawn on stone by R. J. Lane, A.R.A. Dickinson.

THIS is at least the third time that this beautiful little composition has come under our notice, viz. when the original picture was exhibited at Somerset House, when a slight sketch was published of it, and now on the appearance of the charming lithographic print before us: but we care not how frequently it presents itself to us, as we can never sufficiently admire the spirit and elegance which pervade it, and which render it one of the most fascinating productions even of Mr. Landseer's masterly pencil.

Portraits of Miss Shirreff, Mr. Moschelles, Mr. Newkomm, &c. from Drawings by A.

THE public have frequently had occasion to admire the unaffected fidelity of Mr. Wivell's We have portraits of individuals of celebrity. We have recently seen a large collection of them, engraved by Mesers. Holl, Thomson, Hicks, &c. and were particularly struck by those, the titles of which are prefixed to this notice. They confirm us in the conviction, that resemblance is better preserved in the comparatively slight but still effective style adopted by Mr. Wivell, than when the head is overpowered, as it too frequently is, by an elaborate background, and other adjuncts.

Finden's Landscaps Illustrations to the Works of Lord Byron. Part III. Murray. If we could find higher terms of praise than those which we have already used with reference to this beautiful publication, we would resort to them in speaking of the present number. The designs do the painters, Messrs. Harding and Gastineau, the highest credit; and the engravings out-finden Finden.

Nature.-We last week noticed, in terms of warm admiration, a very sweet model, entitled Simplicity, by Mr. Furniss. We have now before us its companion, Nature, which is in style and execution even superior to the first. The group consists of two children, with all the roundness and beauty of infancy fully developed; and notwithstanding their loveliness, there is a boldness in the lineaments and general design which speaks loudly for the talent of the artist. Mr. Furniss writes to us, that this small production has not been able to find room in the Royal Academy exhibition; which, merits, we think a mistake on the part of that distinguished body.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

OUR PRESENT MAY.

" May is full of flowers."-Southwell.

"Born in yon blaze of orient sky,
Sweet May, thy radiant form unfold,
Unclose thy blue voluptuous eye,
And wave thy shadowy lock of gold."

" THE month of flowers," May, Were they not wont to say

That, of the Year's twelve lovely daughters, thou Didst wear most perfect sweetness on thy brow?

They said the crimson rose Was eager to unclose For thee the fragrant mysteries which lie Hidden in leasless boughs beneath the winter sky.

The poets told thy birth Was welcomed upon earth By the sweet multitude of shining flowers, By bursting buds, green leaves, and sunny

And thou art come, sweet May; A week beneath thy sway The world has been; yet is it dull and cold:

Doth it not own thy reign, as in the days of old?

To-day all life is strange With great and utter change; The power is past away from many a shrine And many a throne - must it, too, pass from thine?

Still o'er the darkened sky The heavy clouds sail by, Till the bleak shower comes down unpityingly, Beating the few faint blossoms from the tree.

Where is the yellow ore Which the laburnum bore, As if transformed, the Theban princess there, Amid the golden shower, loosed her more golden hair?

The lilac with its stars, Small, shining like the spars With which some sea-nymph decks her oceanbowers-

Lilac, that seems the jewellry of flowers?

Where is the gelder-rose, Wreathed as from Alpine snows? Where is the lime-tree's bud of faint perfume? Where is the hawthorn wealth, thine own peculiar bloom?

They do not meet thee now! I see the barren bough; The earth is melancholy as a grave—
I see the driving rain, I hear the bleak winds

Is this the pilgrimage Of Earth in her old age? And is the shadow all things present wear Cast on the circling beauty of the year?

Or is it but delay? Are south winds on their way, And songs and blossoms bringing May once more The sunshine which rejoiced all hearts of yore?

Hope whispers of their birth— Hope which upon our earth Doth wander like an angel, at whose feet Fresh flowers spring up to gladden and to greet.

How many now may see Their likeness, May, in thee! Mournful and spiritless, their spring is known But by its measured time, and time alone;

Else would they never dream that May was here.

L. E. L. May 9, 1832.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. XII. The Garrick Club.

AT a general meeting of the subscribers, on Saturday, which was numerously attended, it was agreed to elect Mr. Sheridan Knowles an honorary member of the Club, as a testimony to the high rank he had attained by his exertions as an original dramatic writer. This, the first compliment of the Club paid to the interests of our national theatre, will, we trust, stimulate other authors to emulate Mr. Knowles: for though the tribute may be slight in itself, when it is considered that it comes with the weight of very many of the most distinguished noble and literary patrons of the stage, it must be viewed as one of no mean character and

The dinner, by private subscription of members of the Club, is given to the Earl of Mulgrave, vice-president, this day; the noble lord having justly merited every distinction which could here be offered to him, by his indefatigable services in establishing the Society.

At the meeting we have noticed, after the specific business of the summons was over, Mr. Macready called attention to the approaching retirement of Mr. Young from the profession he had through his whole career so greatly adorned; and proposed that he should be invited to dine with the Club when he had taken his leave of public life. This proposition was cordially received, and unanimously adopted, after some conversation as to the arrangements which might be necessary in accordance with the rules of the Garrick. No doubt there will be a distinguished assemblage of rank and talent to do honour to a performer who has done so much honour to his class, both by his talents on the stage, and by his conduct as a private gentleman.

Gray's Inn, 7th May, 1832. Sir,-Your correspondent at Edinburgh has not substantiated the story of Ben Jonson and Sir Walter Raleigh's son. It is not the truth, that what was unfounded in 1593 was well founded in 1613; for though in the latter year young Raleigh might have made his tutor "dead drunk" at Paris (a feat, by the by, of some difficulty, if, as Drummond also states, drink was one of the elements in which Ben lived), he could not have sent him in that state "home to Sir Walter," who was then, and long after, a prisoner in the Tower,-as is stated, indeed, in the very note on the subject to which your correspondent has referred.

Your correspondent is also unjust to Gifford:

They know there must be May within the year, | Drummond's donation to the college from the catalogue, and not from an inspection of the books and manuscripts themselves; nor is his opinion quite so strongly expressed as your correspondent would have us believe. words are :- " About the year 1627, Drummond gave 'a noble present of books and manuscripts to the College of Edinburgh.' say the editors of his works (folio, 1711), or i should have termed it, generally speaking, a collection of rubbish, not worth the hire of the cart which took it away. Of this rare present a catalogue was published, in which," &cc.

If the conversations between Jonson and Drummond have really never been fully and accurately printed, and many curious points are omitted (in the published accounts of them, I presume), your correspondent would confer a great favour on many readers by furnishing a complete transcript of them. Is it possible that the passage not contained in Drummond's works, but published in Cibber's Lives of the Poets, is genuine, instead of being a fabrication of Shiel's, the compiler of those lives, as has been supposed ?-I am, sir, &c. H. L. C.

MUSIC.

SOCIETA ARMONICA.

THE fourth concert, postponed from Passion Week, took place on Monday. The chief sttraction of the evening was the cavatina "Ah! come rapido," from Il Crociato, and Rodes variations, by Mdlle. Cinti Damoreau, in which this accomplished songstress displayed all her fine talent and taste. The beauty of her singing is, that she never attempts what she cannot execute; and there is consequently an eleganor and finish in all she does, which is very fascinating. A concerto, by Mori, was also much applauded.

Messrs. Dressler and Pclzer's Concert wi very well attended, and very well deserving of that attendance. The opening piece of Le Sentinel produced a great effect; and when, in imitation of the voice dying away in the distance, Mr. Fisher sang from one of the upper boxes, we never saw a more complete exemplification of the assertion, that the English hear with their eyes; for every head, or rather every bonnet, was most intently turned in that direction. Among the performances we must particularly mention the style in which Mr. Flaxman sang The Sea, and we never heard Miss Bellchambers to greater advantage than in Una voce poco fa.

DRAMA.

GERMAN OPERA.

On Wednesday the long-expected German opera was brought forward, -and in such a manner, that no one will begrudge the time that has been so well employed in preparing it for the public enjoyment. The Freischuts was the piece selected for the opening; and, favourite as it has long been with every class of the community in the mutilated state in which it was played on our stage, and familiar as every one is with most of the music, it promises, from the manner in which it was executed on this occasion, both by the vocal and instrumental performers, to become more and more admired. Of Madam Meric (Agathe, the heroine,) we have already spoken in terms of praise in other places; but we are bound to confess that we had not thought so highly of her as is richly deserved by her execution of the inference from the note on that subject the music of the Freischutz. Her singing clearly is, that Gifford formed his opinion of throughout was marked with great taste, and specially the manner in which she gave the rand scena, and a prayer at the commence-nent of the third act. Annchen, the attendearly all new, having been left out in the English versions,—was played by Demoiselle Schneider, who both in her singing and acting displayed great spirit; and though her voice is hardly powerful enough to fill the King's theatre, yet the cultivation it has undergone, and the science she displayed, made up for all natural deficiencies, and established her in the foremost rank of popular favour. Max, the hero, was performed by Herr Haitzenger, a very sweet tenor, of great power, whose execution of the music was almost faultless: his acting seemed rather formal; but this will probably disappear on a better acquaintance with our stage and audience. Pellegrini was Caspar; and if he would throw a little more spirit into his performance, both musical and histrionic, with his fine voice he must speedily earn a higher fame. The rest of the characters were well supported throughout. The choruses were admirably sung, and the orchestra never in better condition. The house was extremely well filled; which we should attribute not only to the treat afforded, but also to the judicious reduction made in the prices of admission. On the whole, so novel a musical enjoyment-one where all engaged in it are so finely disciplined, where the effects produced are so decisive of what the genius of Weber could achieve, and where there is nothing but what must contribute to delight the sense -has never been heard by us in an English theatre. Much may we learn from this exhibition; and, at all events, we shall derive great pleasure from it, and most heartily wish it the success it deserves.

DRURY LANE.

On Tuesday a new two-act opera was per-formed for the first time, called The Tyrolese Peasant. To unravel the plot of this little drama would be a task of some difficulty; for although the incidents are "few and far between," yet there is, upon the whole, so much improbability, so much masquerading, and so much unnecessary scheming, that our readers would be as little edified with the details, and possibly as little pleased, as we ourselves were when we witnessed the performance. The first act was sufficiently dull; but between that and the second there is a lapse of two years, and this circumstance afforded the audience some little consolation; for many were disposed to hope, that in the course of that time some of the serious characters might have learnt a decent sentiment, or some of the comic gentry have picked up a tolerable joke: but no. We found our friends, at the end of the two years, as dull and as tiresome as ever; and the curtain fell amidst disapprobation. The music is by Bishop—pretty, but not particularly new; well executed by Messrs. Templeton and Seguin, who are improving a great deal, and by Miss Pearson, who, we must acknowledge, was rather less cold and indifferent than usual. Harlev, Mrs. Humby, and Russell, had parts which were intended to be droll; but they were un-worthy of being so well represented. The scenery and dresses were those belonging to Hofer, the Tell of the Tyrol, and were, of course, splendid and appropriate.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

King's Theatre, May 3d .- I am glad to find that repeated failure has at last induced Heberle to give up as hopeless the attempt of balancing herself on Albert's calf; as of this that it will bring crowds to the King's Cross manœuvre it may be said, that the next un-graceful thing to its failure is its accomplish-

Astley's, May 4th .- It were endless to recount the droll effects in this really delightful spectacle; but I assure you positively and literally, that there was not one of the principal characters who did not reappear in full force after being either drowned or killed in battlemany after both. There are countries where stones, beads, shells, &c. are money; but the following discovery, it strikes me, will be an interesting novelty to antiquaries. A large bag of "gold," being thrown from one of the performers to another, came undone in its passage; and its whole contents showering on the stage, proved that the current gold coin in the days of Richard the Second was broken tobaccopipe!

Drury Lane, May 7th .- Dowton, in that part of the Belle's Stratagem in which he is made to vaunt his own foresight, thought proper to introduce the following words, which, it is needless to say, soon raised mob applause— "And I foresee also, that unless ministers gain over more opposition votes, the Reform Bill will never be carried." We should hardly excuse such gag in a country theatre, from an actor who had no other means of raising applause.

Drury Lane, May 8th.—The Tyroless Pea-sant. Mrs. Humby had a very long straw appended to her skirt. The inference is as plain as it is terrible-she must be more wary while her carriage (she hath one) is under renair.

VARIETIES.

Printers' Pension Society .- Instituted for and applied to the relief of aged and infirm printers and their widows, this Society is about to hold its usual anniversary, with an excellent list of patrons and stewards, and Lord Mahon in the chair. Wishing well to a charity so deserving of support, we beg to recommend its claim to the attention of all who love that great palladium of our liberties, the St. Alban's Abbey.-We rejoice to see, that at a public meeting at St. Alban's, the Earl of Verulam in the chair, steps were taken towards preserving the venerable abbey of that place, which has lately become so greatly dilapidated as almost to totter to its fall. .

Hydrography. — A survey of the coast of Brazil has been completed by the corvette Emulation, pursuing the hydrographic labours commenced by Vice-admiral Roussein, under the administration of M. de Martignac; and a chart of the Rio de la Plate, by Lieut. Baral, the commander of the Emulation, who has just returned to Toulon, is among the fruits of this expedition. The coasts of the Rio Grande and the San Pedro, too, unknown to navigators, and supposed to be inaccessible on account of the numerous banks of moving sand, were approached within three or four miles. and, with the exception of a single bank, which does extend above seven or eight leagues from land, surveyed with the greatest accuracy; so that this part of South America may now be visited with perfect security, according to the new charts constructed on the spot.

The Royal Clarence.-This being a theatre of variety, we are sorry we can only mention it among our varieties; but the truth is, we received no notice of its opening till too late for a visit this week. We trust, however, for the sake of its meritorious lessee, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, rical Litterature msy advance a great step forwards.

every evening, especially as the bills hold out good show of entertainment.

Sir Walter Scott .- A private letter from Rome, of the 21st ult., states that Sir Walter Scott (accompanied by Sir William Gell as far as Albano) had arrived in that city, and hired the Palazzo Bernini as his temporary residence.

Royal Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear.— On Wednesday the anniversary dinner of this useful Institution took place at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's Street; Major Macnamara, M.P., in the chair, in the absence of Lord Dover, V.P. After the usual loyal toasts were drank, "Prosperity to the Royal Dispension." sary for Diseases of the Ear" was proposed, and received with enthusiasm. The health of Mr. Curtis, the King's Aurist, and founder of the Dispensary, was given, and met with much applause. In returning thanks that gentle-man remarked, the more he saw of diseases of the ear, the more he was convinced of the possibility of relief being afforded; and in cases of deafness and dumbness, by an early and continued application of the curative means in infancy, he had been fortunate enough to restore both hearing and speech in various instances. Several deaf and dumb children who have obtained these faculties under Mr. Curtis's professional care, were afterwards introduced to the company, and excited much interest and attention. The treasurer read a liberal list of contributions, which repeatedly called forth the plaudits of the assembly.

Crosby Hall.—Though we could not attend the meeting, we shall be very happy to do all in our power to contribute to the preservation and restoration of Crosby Hall. The Vandal want of feeling which would allow our ancient monuments to perish, has been a good deal checked of late by better sentiments; and it is the duty of an intelligent press to strengthen this truly enlightened and national conservative principle.

Beautiful Image in the Maid of Elvar :-"She looked up ruddy as the rose in June, And thanked him with her eyes."

A Bull.—A morning paper of Tuesday states, that there are not less [fewer] than eight noble branches of the noble family of Howard, which it proceeds to enumerate, and includes "Howard of Escrieck, extinct," and "Howard of Marnhill, also extinct." This is very like a tree having eight branches, only two of them fallen off.

Our known liberality towards all foreigners of genius induces us to print the following communication verbatim et literatim.

To the Editor, &c.

London, George et Volture, Cornhill, the 25 April, 1832-

DEAR SIR,—You would do me a great favour, if you would insert in your wide-circulating Paper the following little notice, which will perhaps be interesting for many of your numerous readers. I am, with the greatest veneration, yours most obient humble servant,

Prinz Metternich and Count Wackerbarth

Prins Metternich and Count Wackerbarth:

BOTH had seen them often at Paris, and afterwards greeted them by letters. As the Count Wackerbarth had published his Wathatla—comprising the greatest Heros of all Nations—and every body rejoiced upon that, he thought proper to send a copy to the Prince at Wienna: but instead to answer him, the Prince Metternich did let prohibit directly the book in all the austrishien estates, and the copies, which the author had sent to some other friends; came back from the post-offices with this word written upon the title—"Verboten!" (prohibited!) 'Tis german liberty of the press and liberality of Prinz Metternich!

on the contrary, the noble King Ludwig of Bavaria took out of Count Wackerbarth's work the first Idea to his great Walhalla in the neighbourhood of Regensburg to establish an everlasting monument to all the celebrated

Digitized by Google

Having indulged a foreign correspondent with a niche for a ourious letter, can we do less for a countryman?

May 16, 1800th of the Rose To Dr. Richie.

SIR,—Your experiments on the rotation of glass and of water-spheres, as elucidating the science of electrogal-vanism, &c., which this Journal has lately described, may justify me in supposing that a communication of an analogous nature, however strange—and stupendous, probably, to adepts in science-will be regarded with attention, and if found no illusion, with a delight not Look then, sir, upon the clear concavity of the sky, and knowing that it always is outspread, whatever clouds may hide it for a while from terrene-view, admit that it circumscribes the atmosphere, and is the generator of many effects which pass for the phenomena of light and aerial modifications, without respect to a distinct body. This, then, by its constricture, is the air-s-prings bond; could the containing orb-of-sky disperse, the flaccid atmosphere would dilate, to an extent and deprivation of all firmamental quality that must induce a general epilepsy of animal and vegetative life. The Voltaire-infidels will be astonished at the hardihood with which I further assert, that when the *ky poured through the riven air its never-returned floods contributory to the also *devoderived deluge, then was the longevity of man reduced unto the tithe of the prediluvian average; and the oceans required to drown the world by boastful pseudo-athelists are part and parcel of the very seas which (after subsidence within and around the mundane exercity now lave the upper lands of the erst genial continents. Not to Look then, sir, upon the clear concavity of the sky, dence within and around the mundane cavern) now lave the upper lands of the erst genial continents. Not to thrink from the many consequences that by objectors might be urged against the fact of this planet's atmosphere being enclosed within a revolving case of waters, I will just state, that an answer is thus given to the anomaly of one diurnal tide in air, and two in ocean; for when the aerial circumfuse is at neap, the therefore approximated sky produces an ocean tide, proportionate (sometimes less, sometimes of excess) to the external attraction of the outward forces.

Requesting, sit, that you will pardon the very unmathematical statement of the great relic of the superior moiety of the waters, separatrix-sir upbore, on her formation mediate, after light's full reflex from the bottom of integral waters,—I beg to remain, most respectfully, Observer.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Literary Gasette Weekly Advertisement, No. XIX. May 18th, 1832.]
We are glad to see a work under the title of Traditions of the County of Vork announced by Mr. Roby, whose Traditions of Lancashire, with their beautiful embellishments, have obtained so high a rank in popular favour; and we take this opportunity of saying our mea cuipa (pretty grammar!) for having so long neglected to fulfil our promise of taking a further notice of the Second Series, which was certainly due to the merits of that work. Among the subjects now announced as Traditions of the County of York, we observe—the Crystal Goblet, a Tale of the Emperor Severus, with a View of the Multangular Tower, York; the Lamp of All-Hallows, or the Forest of Galtres, with a View of All-Hallows church, from the Forest of Galtres, Vork; the Loyal Traitor, or the Fatal Curse, with a View of Hull: Skipses Ghost, with a View of Skipses Brough; St. Hilda, with a View of Whitby Abbey; the Jew of York;—and many others of great legendary, historical, and pictorial interest.

Henry Masterton, or the Young Cavaller, by the Author of "Darnley."

Mr. Fraer, the populae suphor of mithe Kussilbash." Literary Gazette Weckly Advertisement, No. XIX. May 19th, 1838.

of "Darnley."

Mr. Fraser, the popular author of "the Kussilbash,"

'the Persian Adventurer," &c. has also a new novel in the press, to be called the Highland Smuggler.
Legends of the Rhine and Low Countries, by the Author of "High-ways and By-ways."
The Token of the Covenant, designed and engraved in messociant by Mr. George Sanders.
The Return of the Victors, a Poem, by W. Dalley.
The Translator of the "Tour of a German Prince" is,
we hear, now translating the Correspondence of Schiller and Goethe, which forms six volumes in the German.
A work of Popular Zoology, containing the Natural History of the Quadrupeds and Birds in the Zoological Gardens, &c.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS. Darnley.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Seaward's Narrative, 2d edition, 3 vols. 12mo. 21s. cloth.

—Markham's New Children's Friend, 2 vols. 12mo. 10s. 6d.

cloth.—Rogers' Family Prayers, 18mo. 2s. 6d. sewed.—

Crulkshank's Illustrations of Smollett, &c. 12mo. 12s.

bds.—The Anniversary Calendar, 2 vols. 8vo. 2s. 2s.

hf.-bd.—Calabria, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Mundy's Pen and Pencil Sketches, 2 vols. 8vo. 11. 10s. bds.—Bransby's

Portfolio of Anecdotes, 12mo. 2s. 6d. bds.—Reid's Out lines of Medical Botany, 12mo. 2s. bds.—Cox's Lectures on the Evidence from Miracles, 12mo. 4s. 6d. bds.—Cal met's Dictionary of the Bible, with Taylor's Fragments for 1831, 18mo. 4s. cloth.—Cobbin's Annual Historian, for 1831, 18mo. 4s. cloth.—Bebecca, by Rev. A. G. H.

Hollingsworth, 8vo. 10s. cloth.—Poynder's History of Francis Spira, 18mo. 1s. 6d. hf.-bd.—Harford's Agamem non of Æschylus, 8vo. 18s.; large paper, 2s. bds.—Tay lor's New Description of the Earth, 18mo. 4s. 6d. hf.-bd.—

The Fair of May Fair, 3 vols. 8vo. 18. 11s. 6d. bds.—

Newton's Introduction to Astronomy, 18mo. 3s. 6d. bds.

—Noble's Rudiments of the Hebrew Language, 12mo, 5s. bd.—Dr. Clanny's Hyperanthraxis, or the Cholera at Sunderland, 8vo, 7s. 6d. cloth.—Rev. D. B. Baker's Discounses, &c. 12mo, 4s. bds.—Statham's Indian Recollections, 12mo, 7s. 6d. cloth.—Manh on the Decalogue, 8vo. 6s. bds.—Dictionnaire de Verbes et Phrases Idiomatiques Français, par Lea, 12mo. Se. cloth.

METROPOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1882.

May.		Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday	3	From	41.	to	55.	29-32	to	29-29
Friday		• • • •	41.		52.	29-64
Saturday			30.	••	57.	30-02 Stationary		lonary
Sunday	6	• • • • •	46.	••	6¥.	29-99	to	29-96
Monday	7		50,	••	77.	29-76
Tuesday						29-86	• •	29 -98
Wednesday		1	43.	••	53.	30-02	• •	3 0-18
Danson Hann		4. N 10		40	w

Prevailing winds, N.W. and S.W.

Except the 8th and 9th, generally cloudy; rain on the 3d and 5th. The sudden change in the temperature on the afternoon of the 6th, the storm of thunder and lightning on the morning of the 7th, and the extreme warmth of that day, are worthy of particular remark.

Rain fallen, 225 of an inch.

CHARLES H. ADAMS. Edmonton.
Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N.
Longitude 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

Lowest 22-25 ... 10th. Mean 38:18145

Number of days of rain and snow, 14.
Quantity of rain and melted snow, in inches and decimals, 3-00025.
Winds.—3 East.—7 West.—3 North.—4 South.—5 Northeast.—3 South-east.—1 South-east.—1 South-east.—6 North-west.
General Observations.—The mean temperature of the month below those of the last two years, and the extremes were also lower than those in March 1830 and 1831; and, although the mean of the barometer was higher than last year, the maximum did not reach so high as in the two praceding years—consequently the range was less. So large a quantity of rain has not fallen in March since 1827; hall, sleet, and snow, fell on the 7th and on the 14th; on the latter day the quantity of rain and melted snow measured nearly one inch and a quarter. Strong gales of wind from the westward blew between the 17th and 23d: on some nights they were very heavy. The latter part of the month was fine.

April.
Thermometer—Highest 68-50°....4th & 5th. termometer—Highest 68:50 448 6 Lowest 27:50 1st. Mean. 44:5625 Barometer—Highest 30:28 44th. Lowest 29:06 30th. Mean. 29:74966

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Among the multitude of privileges showered upon us as Editors, we have this week specially to acknowledge one calculated to make us go on swimmingly for some time; a matter not to be despised in these days of political excitement and, consequently, literary duiness. Nor can the compliment be called a cold one; though it does appear, by an erasure, somewhat circumscribed: — in short, it is a free ticket for May and June to the Albany "Tepid Swimming Bath, for "self" and "friend"—only "friend" is struck out. Now, really, company in swimming is so comfortable, particularly in tepid water; and the risk, if solitary, of being drowned in a bath 50 feet long and 30 feet wide, and, what is worse, containing 56,000 gallons of water (enough to drown the Editors of the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and Westminster, to boot), is so great, that we are at a loss whether to blow hox or cold on this invite.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

iturday, May 18. LORD PRANCIS LEVESON GOWER in the Chair

Stenerds. The EARL GROSVENOR. The EARL of SURREY.

Samuel Angel, Esq. Geo. Basevi, jun. Esq. William Boxall, Esq. Robert Branston, Esq. Rebert Branston, Req.
H. P. Briggs, Etq. R.A.
Charles Brookbanks, Esq.
Captain Chamler, R.N.
George Cruixhank, Esq.
Henry Davidsen, Req.
John Dickinson, Esq.
William Craft Pish, Esq.
Thomas Griffith, Esq.
Tickess may be had of the SURREY.

Henry Josi, Esq.
Charles Knight, Esq.
John Lee, Esq.
Richard Lieoyd, Beq.
Nevill Oliver, Esq.
William Sama, Esq.
Leigh botheby, Esq.
James Stark, Esq.
F. Tayler, Esq.
C. B. Wall, Esq. M.P.

Tickets may be had of the Stewards; at the Bar of the Taven; and of the Secretary, No. 112, Mount Street, Groavemor Square. Dinner on Table at Half-past Pive for Stx precisely. JOHN MARTIN, Sec.

RTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION, for the Relief of Decaped Art cir Widows, and Orphans.

HIS BOYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF SUSSEX, E.S.

min MOTAL MICHINESS THE DURE OF SUBSEX, K.S.
Vice-Pairson.
The Duke of Devenable, K.G.
Sir Thomas Baring, Burt.
Sir Abraham Hume, Bart.
Sir Abraham Hume, Bart.
Sir George Philips, Bart.
Sir Heary Rassell, Bart.
Sir John Swinburne, Bart.
William Josh. Denism, Es.
Lord Lyndhurst

Bastletter

Bastletter

Bastletter

Lord Expectage

M.P.
Jesse Watts Russell, Esq.

President.
SIR MARTIN ARCHER SHED, P.R.A The Nobility, Friends, and Subscribers, are respectfully informed, that the Seventeenth Anniversary Featival will be ceibrated in Freemasons' Hall, on Saturday, the 26th instant, or which occasion, HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF SUSSEX, E.G. has graciously signified his intention to preside

Bir Henry Richardson
Joseph Hume, Eeq. M.P.
William Ord, Eeq. M.P.
William Ord, Eeq. M.F.
Dr. Joseph Moore
George Bebb, Esq.
Bernaconi, Eeq.
George Bebb, Esq.
Becimus Burton, Eeq.
George Bebb, Esq.
Jehn Constable, Esq. R.A.
William Curling, jun. Eeq.
R. B. Davis, Esq.
J. Doyle, Esq.
J. Doyle, Esq.
James Hall, Eeq.
Edward S. Hardsty, Esq.

Dinaer on table at Half-past Five o'Cleok. The Vocal Depar-tent under the direction of Mr. Broadhurst. Tickets, il. is sch, may be had of the Stewards, at the Freemanens Hell: at fabe Audiane-Secretary, 14, Duke Street, Portland Piace. WILLIAM JOHN ROPER, Assistant-Secretary.

BRITISH INSTITUTION, PALL MALL. The Gallery for the Exhibition and Suze the Works of British Artista, isopen daily, from Ten in the Mening dill Five in the Evening.

Admission, i.e. Catalogue, i.e. WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS is now open, at their Gallery, Pail Mill
East. Open each day from Nisot III Druk.
Admittance, its—Catalegue, et.
Hills, Secretary.

To Booksellers, &c.

WANTED, Books and Tracts on the Gencalogies of Christ, as contained in the lit Chapter of St. Matthew and the M of St. Luite; and also on the Genselegies of the 10d Testament generally, but especially on these of the 1st Book of Chronicles. Wanted, also, Wilson's Apocryphia and Lawrence's Book of Brook.

Apply by letter, free of postage, to L. M., 2, New Milmas Street, Foundling Hospital, Lendon, stating particulars and the lowest Cash Prices. To Booksellers, &c.

Price is, 6d, allowed to Purchasers CATALOGUE of an extensive Collection A CATALOGUE of an extensive conscious of Books, English and Foreign, on Sale by John Bauen.
Bookseller, Leeds.
To be had of the Publisher, and of Messra. Skupphin and Mainhall, Stationers' Hall Gourt, London; also of overy respectable Bookseller in Town and Country.

ON SALE, 1600 to 3000 Volumes of Popular French Works, in 8ve. and 18me. Duplicate from a Circulating Library, neatly half-bound, and nearly as good at new, would be delivered in London at 2s. 6d. per Vol. If more convenient to the Parshanes, Rosels, as endered, well be take in exchange. Would be a valuable acquisition to a Reading Establishment.

Apply to G. G. Bennie, at the Library and News Rooms, 35, Rue News 8t. Augustin, Paris; or to Masser. Longman and Calendon.

Totor weasted.

WANTED, in July next, in a highly respectable and very select Gentleman's Seminary in the North of England, a Tator of experience and ability, duly qualified to teach the ordinary branches of an English Education, together with the Rudiments of the Classics. He must be a Gentleman who has been accustomed to the cave and tuition Gentleman who has been accustomed to the cave and tuition Church of England—and whose moral and religious character will bear the strictest investigation. One answering this description would meet with the most liberal encouragement. Application, by post-pald Letters, to be made to Mr. Ramssy, Editor of the Caritisle Fatriot, Carilaic.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

ON the OFFICE of DEACON; a Second Letter, addressed to the Right Rev. Father in God, Edward, Lord Rishop of Liandam.

By a CLERGYMAN. Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
A Letter on Clerical Education, addressed to the Lord Bishop of Llandsif. 1s.

In 8vo. price 7a 6d.

YPERANTHRAXIS; or, the Cholera of Sunderland.

Sunderland.

By W. REID CLANNY, M.D. F.R.S. E.

Senior Physician to the Sunderland Infirmary, &c.

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

In 18mo. price &s.

RUDIMENTS of the HEBREW LANGUAGE, with and without Points.
By JAMES NOBLE, M.A.
Author of an "Arabic Vocabulary," "Letters of a Rabbi," &c.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London; and
M. Lockhead, Glasgow.

A new edition, 2 vois. 2vo. 24s. with Portraits, &c. dedicated to the King, by His Majesty's gracious permission, MEMORIALS of HAMPDEN, his PARTY, and his TIMES.
By LORD NUGENT.
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

In 1 thick vol. 5th edition, revised throughout, and considerably enlarged, price 15s.

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; or, ODERN DUBESTIC MEDICINE; OT,

Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of all Diseases, embracing all the modern Improvements in Medicine. Containing also a copious Collection of approved Prescriptions, Medical Management of Children, Raise of Diet, Virtues and Doses of all Medicines, &c. The whole forming a clear and comprehensive Medical Guide for the Use of the Ciergy, Families, and Invalids. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D. &c

By T. J. GRAHAM, M. D. &c.

"We conscientiously recommend it. We shall preserve the volume as the advice of an invaluable friend, to which we can refer in the hour of need, without any doubt of being benefited by its witdom."—Literary Chronicle.

"In the opinion of a respectable physician, well known in our connexion, it is enriched with much of all that modern practice has ascertained to be valuable, and is not only incomparably superior to Bachan's, but also to severy similar work in our language."

"It is altogether deserving of permanent popularity."—London
"It is one of the very best and most useful books published in modern times."—Monthly Olio.

Fullished by Simplis and Marshall, London; sold by all Booksellers.

Also, by the same Author, Sie delision, revised and enlarged,

Also, by the same Author, 2d edition, revised and enlarged, price 8s. 6d.

2. A Treatise on Indigestion; illustrating the Symptoms, Varieties, Causes, and correct Trestment of the prevailing Disorders of the Stonach and Liver; with Practical Observations on some Painful Complaints originating in these disorders, as Tie Doulsuceau, Gone, Fulness of Blood in the Head, &c.

"We sincerely recommend it."—London Medical Journal.
"It is very evidently the result of close attention to, and deep experience in the subject. Mr. Abstractly speaks of it in term of high praise."—British Magazin, Jan. 1830.

No. II. of the New Series of the XTRACTOR and POLAR STAR, enlarged and improved; a work whose cheapness has astounded the trade, and whose rich and solid stores of minged information, and recreative reading, will convey inexhaustible gratification and delight to every intelligent family and man of reading.

reading.

Published every Saturday morning, price 6d. containing near a hundred columns of closely printed matter, (with new type), stitched in a wrapper. It is also published in monthly Parts, with the Magazines, price 2s. Part I. will appear the 1st of with the Magazines, price 2s. Part I. will appear the 1st of June. Office, 1, Newcastle Street, Strand; and sold by Simpkin and Marshall; and by all Booksellers and Newsmen throughout the Kingdom.

In 18mo. price 9s. boards, dedicated, by permission, to His Grace the Lord Primate of Ireland, the 3d edition, improved, of

DASTORALIA; a Manual of Helps for the Parochial Clergy of the United Church of England and Ireland, containing a Scriptural View of the Clerical Daties—Prayers for the Use of the Clergy—Scheme of Pastoral View of the Clerg Ciergy.

By the Rev. HENRY THOMPSON, M.A.

Of St. John's College, Cambridge, Curate of Wrington, Somerse and formerly Assistant. Minister of St. George's, Camberwell.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterlee Place, Pail Mall.

THE TRAVELLER'S LAY, a Poem;

THE TRAVELLER'S LAY, a Poem; written during a Tour in France, Savoy, Switzerland, Germany, and the Netherlands.

By THOMAS MAUDE, Esq. A.M. Oxon.
(Cleased, by permission, to Thomas Moore, Esq.)

Printed far Longman, Rees, Orme, and Co. London; and to be had, by order, of svery Bookseller in Town and Country.

"We congratulate the author on his success: his is no common mind."—Weekly Dispatch.

"His passion for the picturesque is well displayed in his defineation of the wild scenery through which his route lay. The following glance at 6t. Martin, the sale of Chahouth, and Mont. If exchibits many virid pictures of the soenes through which the author passed. The poem is worthy a place in the best library,"—Lady's Magarias.

"We hope that the deserved success of the Traveller's Lay," &c. &c.—Intelligence.

"Ceux qui se donnerent le plaisit de parcourir cet currage, ye verront partout un derivain fait pour planer au dessus des poècy verront partout un derivain fait pour planer au dessus des poècy verront partout un derivain fait pour planer au dessus des poècy sordinaires. M. Maude a l'oreille et l'imagination poétiques, et de plus une diévation de pensée peu commune."—L'Indépendant.

THREE NIGHTS in a LIFE-TIME, and Inishairiach Domestic Tales.

Printed for Maclachian and Stewart, Edinburgh; and Baldwin and Cradock, London.

Mrs. Markham's New Work.
In 2 vols. 13mo. price 10s. 6d. in cloth,
EW CHILDREN'S FRIEND;

consisting of Tales and Convernations.

By Mrs. MARKHAM,
Author of "The Histories of England and France."
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and CoPrice 10c. (with Twelve Plates, above 100 Wood Engravings, and 35 Sheets of Letter-press similar to that of the "Encyclopedia of Gardening") Part I. of an

NCYCLOP ÆDIA of COTTAGE,
FARM, and VILLA ARCHITECTURE; coestaining the Geographical and Leterary History of this Department of the Art, and the Grammar and Principles of Civil Architecture generally. Illustrated by an extensive Series of Lithographic Designs for Dwellings in the Country, from the Labourer's Cottage to the Gentleman Villa: a coompanied by Estimates and Specifications: with Critical Remarks on each Design, and on Landscape Gardening, with reference to its accompaniments.

By J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S. &c.

The main object of this Work is to improve the dwellings of the great mass of society in the temperate regions of both hemispheres.
A secondary object is to raise the standard of tasts and criticism in architectural objects generally, by readering popelar a subject which has been hitherts treated in a manner calculated rather to repet than to invite the general research.

The Work will be continued in Quarterly Parts, at 5r. each ;
and it is granted to Twenty, forming one handsome 8vo. volume, price 50. bs.

Part II. will appear July 2.

Part II. will appear July 2.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

SERMONS preached in St. James's Chapel,

Cispham.

By the Rev. C. BRADLEY,
Vicar of Gisabury.

Printed for Hamilton, Adams, and Co. Pateraester Row.

By the same Author,
Adams, Wwoombe,

Sermons preached at High Wycombe. 8th edition, 2 vois. price 21s.

Parochial Sermons preached at Glasbury.

4th edition, price 10s. 6d.

A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for Public Worship. Price 20. 6d.

Society for the Diffusion of Useful Encounter.
Published this day, price is, plain, or 1s. 6d. coloured, No. 25 of a Series of Raps, Modern and Ancient, published under the Superinsuadeance of this Society, containing.

1. THE ENVIRONS of LONDON.

2. THE ENVIRONS of PARIS.

2. THE ENVIRONS OF PARIS.

These two very useful Maps are nearly 15 inches by 16 in size, and extend to from 9 to 18 Miles from the contre of each Metropolia. The twenty-two Numbers already published centain 11 Ancient and 11 Madern Maps, the Ancient Series being nearly completed. They are compiled from the very best authorities, both efficial and private. The scale varies according to the acknowledged importance of the respective Countries and Dustrict. The Ancient Maps agree exactly in scale with the corresponding Modern, and are compiled under the most rigorous scrutiny. The whole are engraved in the best manner on Steel; and their cheapness is unexampled in any country.

Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

Seaward's Neurative: Second Edition.

In 8 vois small 8vo. 2d edition, 8ie in cloth,

IR EDWARD SEAWARD'S NARRA
TIVE of his fill FIPWRECK, and consequent Discovery of certain Islands in the Caribbean 8ea. With a Detail of many extraordinary Events in his Life, from 1788 to 1749, as written in his own Diary.

"The most instructive work that has appeared since the first dawn of discovery."—Speciator.

"A more astractive personal narrative never issued from the press."—Inve Monthly Magazine.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

In 1 vol. 8vo. 2d edition, enriched with much original matter, price 1ds. boards,

PROFESSOR LEE'S GRAMMAR of the HEBREW LANGUAGE, comprised in a Beries of Lectures; compiled from the best Authorities, and drawn principally from Cremtal Sources. Designed for the Use of Stadeau the Universities. Designed for the Use of Stadeau the Universities. Let us preparing for publication, a Hebrew and English Dictionary, is 1 large vol. 200. English Dictionary, is 1 large vol. 200.

THE FAIR of MAY FAIR.

In 8 vols. post 8vo. Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

VILLA RUSTICA, selected from Buildings and Scenes in the Vicinity of Rome and Florence, and arranged for Ledges and Demestic Dwellings, with Plans and Details.

By CHARLES PARKER, Architect.
Pablished by James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond Street.

In 8vo. price 7s. 6d. boards,
ELEMENTS of GREEK GRAMMAR.
By the Rev. SAMUEL CONNOR,
Author of "Epitome of Latin Procedy."
London: Printed for Longman, Reso, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Bishop Mant's Sermons, New edition.

In 2 vols. 8vc. price 1l. 1s. in boards, the 6th edition of ERMIONS for Parochial and Domestic Use, designed to illustrate and enferce, in a connected View, the most important Articles of Christian Faith and Practice.

Bracking to the late Archbishop of Canterbary, mow Lord Bishop of Down and Conner.

London: Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Panl's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall; and J. H. Parker, Oxford.

In 18mo. price 6s. the 2d edition of

PLAIN PAROCHIAL SERMONS, preached in the Parish Church of Bolton-le-Moors.
By the Rev. JAMES SLADE, M.A.
Vicar of Bolton, and Prebendary of Chester.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Pael's Churchyard,
and Waterloo Place, Pail Mall.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
Twenty-One Prayers, composed from the Psalms, for the Hick and Afflicted; to which are added, various other Forms of Prayer for the same purpose, with a few Hints and Directions for the Visitation of the Sick, chiefly intended for the Use of the Younger Ciergy. Sd edition, 18mo. 2s. 6d.

Washington Irving's New Sketch-Book, New Novels by the Earl of Mulgrave, the Author of "Granby," Ac. Just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street. In 2 vols. 8vo. uniformly with the former Series, 24s.

THE NEW SKETCH-BOOK; the ALHAMBRA. By GEOFFREY CRAYON.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Matitida," and "Yes and No." 3 vols.

III. Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"

Tales of the Early Ages. By the Author of "Exambletye House," &c. 3 vols.
"A deeply interesting and romantic work, in which 'the deeds of days of other years' are related in a style that cannot fail to captivate every reader."—Collettenkom Chromicis.

Memoirs of Female Sovereigns. By Mrs. Jameson. In 2 vols.

"Written by one of the most elegant of our female writers; full of feeling and faner; a true enthusiant, with a glowing soul."

-Bleckroot VĮ.

Stanley Buxton. By the Author of " Lawof Lawrie Todd." So. Stroke "A novel of the hundred stroke and exhibiting a deep inewinder of the human heart. It is well worthy of the author of Lawrie Todd." "Morning Heroid.

VII. Cavendish; or, the Patrician at Sea. 2d edition, 8 vols.

Complete in 1 vol. neetly beand and illustrated, price
Self-Control. By Mrs. Brunton.
Forming the 18th Volume of the "Standard Novels."

Also, just ready,
Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier.
By the Author of "Darnley," " De L'Orme," &c. 8 vols.

Elegant Literary Presents.

FLOWERS of FABLE, culled from the best English and other Writers. The whole expressly selected for the instruction of Youth, and carefully pruned of all objectionable Matter. Embellished with 150 Engravings on Wood. Price Five Shillings.

Vizetelly, Branston, and Co. Fivet Street:

Vinetelly, Brassion, and Co. Fleet Street:

Who have just published new editions of
The Young Lady's Book; which possesses the hitherto unsatempted novelty of concentrating, in one votume, all that is interesting, either as an exercise, a recreation, or a pursuit; and forms a complete repertorium of all those accomplishments which grace the sex, and constitute the perfection of the female character.
"Twenty years ago," says the Literary Genetic, "all the talents in England could not have produced such a work."
Price One Guinea, richly bound in embreddered Crimson Silk, and embellished with upwards of 700 Engravings.

[The Parks Own Rooks the most accounts blo

The Boy's Own Book; the most acceptable present ever deviced for Youth, embracing the sports and exercises of out-door enjoyment—the pastimes of a winter's fire-side—and the recreations of science; copiously detailed in nearly 500 closely printed pages, embellished with spwards of 200 Engravings. Price 28.6d. in ornamental beards, and les, 6d. handsomely bound in arabeque embossed mercacoe, with gilt edges.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY, PRICE 2s. 6d.

Continued success for two years has emboldened the Proprietor of PRASER'S M (AZINE to make fresh exertions, and invest a larger capital, in rendering his Journal the most complete of the Monthly Publications of the kingdom. He has obtained the saststance of the first writers of the day in every depirtment of literature; among whom are individuals high in political office, and competent to write, with the best possible information on the movements of parties, the sternal and domestic policy of the country, and the measures of the late and present administrations. The Publisher proudly appeals to the contents of his volumes for the truth of this assertion. The Magazine will be found every way worthy of the perusual of every true lover of his country—of every man who feels interested for the preservation and welfare of the Church, the King, and the Constitution.

With regard to literary merit, also, the Publisher courts examination. He viewes of all New Works have been undertaken in the most fearless spirit of independence. This characteristic of his Manzarine has raised him many enemies among dishonest critics, literary adventurers, and booksellers who make an impure livelihood by dealing out trash and garbage to the public. Of all such, and in spite of their pany hostility,

FRASER'S MAGAZINE

FRASER'S MAGAZINE

FRASERS MAGAZINE

always has been, and will always continue, the avered and mortal enemy. The Journal is not connected with any large publishing house, and the public have therefore a guarantee that its opinions will naither be sold for lucre nor biassed by self-interest. Amid the numerous assaults of its sementer—assaults which to the Jungh sat—this Magazine has ned a successful stand for sound, honest, and wholesome criticisms of the substitution of the Publisher and the improvement of his participation of the public increases, the zeal of the Publisher and the improvement of his participation of the public increases, the zeal of the Publisher and the improvement of his participation of the public increases, the zeal of the Publisher and the improvement of his participation of the publisher and the improvement of his participation of the publisher and the improvement of his participation of the publisher and the improvement of his material strictures, Criticisms, Poetry, and Humorous and Satirical Compositions, make up the remainder of each Number. In addition to these, are given of the most prominent of our Literary Characters, with short Blographical and Descriptive Notices.

FILLIENGTHER OF THER TOURS

FULL-LENGTH SKETCHES

Of some of the Numbers, second, and of others third editions have been required; and the Work from the commencement, either in Numbers, or bound in cioth and lettered, may now be had of James Fraser, 215, Regent Street, London; Grant and Bolton, Dublin; Anderson, Edinburgh, M'Phun, Glasgow; Collings, Bath; Grapel, Liverpool; Stevenson, Cambridge; Talboys, Oxford; Madden, Bristol; Jackson, New York; Gailgnani, Paris; or, by order, of any Bookseller or Newsman in the Kingdom: by whom, also, Subscribers' names are received, and the Numbers supplied Monthly.

THE MEMBER. An Autobiography.

Dedicated to William Holmes, Esq. M.P. By the Author of "The Ayrabire Legatees." In 1 vol. price 8s. boards.

"We have here another specimen of Mr. Gait's dry humour and shrewd observation, in the doings and remarks of a Scots nabob during several sessions of Parliament, in which he was 'the Member' for the borough of Frailtown."—Literary Guzette, Jan. 28.

"We rejoice to see the pen of Mr. Gait dipped once more in the lively ink of imaginary biography. Who surpasses him in communicating to an ideal story the attractions of real and positive truth? We wish Mr. Gait would do nothing but write imaginary autobiographies."—Alkensum, Jan. 20.

FRASER'S PANORAMIC PLAN OF LONDON.

Consisting of a Plan of the Cities of London and Westminster, and the Borough of Southwark, with Eighteen Marginal Views of the principal Buildings in the Metropolis. Beautifully engraved on Steel by Josiah Neele.

This splendid Map, which will be found to combine utility with elegance, may justly be termed a gem of art; the Plan presenting a correct delineation of all the Stress in this immense City, whilst the Views afford a pleasing idea of the magnificence of the largest and most important Metropolis in the World.

Literary Gazette.—" A complete bljou of a Map, and not less useful than elegant."

Athensem.—" A very neat, clear, and useful map of London."

Christian Remembrancer." This is one of the most splendid little maps we ever had the good fortune to meet with."

Spectator.—" This is a most complete and compact plan of London, and very elegant in its appearance."

Atlas..." Unquestionably the best map of London we have seen."

Essex Standard.—" Without any exception, this is the most beautiful map we ever beheld."

Speedily will be published, in 1 vol. 18mo- uniform with "The Member," and by the same Author,

THE RADICAL. An Autobiography. Dedicated to the Right Hon. Lord Brougham and Vaux.

"A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend."

JAMES FRASER, 215, Regent Street.

In 2 vols. 8vo. new edition, 14s. boards,

ACON; or, Many Things in Few Words.

By the Rev. C. C. COLTON,

Late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

Of whom may be had,
The Book of Nature. By John Mason
Good, M.D. &c. 3 vols. 8vo. 2d edition, 35s. boards.

ORY'S ANCIENT FRAGMENTS of the

ORY'S ANCIENT FRAGMENTS of the PHENICIAN, CHALDÆAN, EGYPTIAN, and other Writers, in Greek and English, with an Introductry Dissertation, and a comparative Inquiry into Ancient and Modern Philosophy, and the Trinity of the Gentlies.

Fellow of Caisa College, Cambridge.

Follow of Caisa College, Cambridge.

We strenuously advise every reader who feels interested in this most cartious literary inquiry of the age, to peruse this volume. It contains all that remains of the earliest writers who have treated of the histories of the first nations among mankind. Thus we have Sanchoniathon, Berossus, Abydenus, Megasthenes, &c.; and Manesho, the oldest and best suthority on the Egyptian dynasties. There are other very valuable relics in this volume, as well as the general reader, are under deep obligations for the work.—Literary Gustelle.

William Pickering, Chancery Lane, London.

EDINBURGH REVIEW, No. CIX. IN BURGH REVILW, AVG.

Is just published.
Contenta:—I. Somerville's Mechanism of the Heavens—II.
Bowler's Life of Bishop Ken—III. Jacob on the Precious Metals—IV. Waverley Novals—V. Government of British India; Revenue Systems—VI. Life and Writings of Dr. Currie—VII. Jeremie on Colonial Slavery—VIII. Greek Authoresse—IX. Burwer's Novels: Eugene Aram—X. History, Wrongs, and Claim of Poland—XI. Nares's Memoirs of Lord Tressurer Burleigh; Political and Religious Aspects of his Age.

Longman and Co. London; and A. Black, Edinburgh.

In 1 vol. 12mo. with Woodcuts and Plates, price 9c.

UTLINES of MEDICAL BOTANY; comprising Vegetable Anatomy and Physiology—The An Explanation of the Linnean System of Classification, and Tables of Medicinal Plants, arranged in their Linnean and Natural Orders.

By HUGO REID,

Member of the Royal Physical Society, and of the Society of Arts, &c. &c. &c.

Printed for Mecianian and Stewart, Edinburgh; and Baldwin and Cradock, London.

THE ALDINE EDITION of the POETS

Vol. XIX.: completing the Poems of Milton. With Notes and Memoir.

Vol. XX. containing the Poems of Shake-speare, with Memoir by the Rev. Alexander Dyce. II.

Hume and Smollett's History of England, Vol. III. demy 8vo. with Portraits, price only 6s. in cloth boards lettered. This is the cheapest and best edition extant. III.

Lowndes' Bibliographer's Manual, Part XV.

a The Sixteenth Part, completing the Work, will appear in a few days. IV.

Walton and Cotton's Complete Angler, Parts
I. II. III. will appear in the course of the Month, beautifully printed, and highly embelliahed, with original Memoirs by Sir Harris Nicolas. Imperial svo, price 92. 6d. each; or with Proof Impressions of the Plates, 16c. each Part. To be completed in Twelve Parts.

a A few Proof Impressions of the Engravings may be had separately, price 16c. each Part.
William Pickering, Chancery Lane, London.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 10s. 6d. with a View of the Gorge of Orsomarzo,
RESIDENCE of THREE YEARS. In a Series of Letters.

Letters.

By a GENERAL OFFICER of the FRENCH ARMY.

By a GENERAL OFFICER of the FRENCH ARMY.

"Calabria has sources of high interest, unconnected with her present inhabitants, or the grandeur and beauty of the scenery: our limits will not permit us to extract more largely from a work of which the contents are at once so novel and so interesting."—

Morning Herald, 5th May.

"See, Stop, Literary Gazetle, same date.

London: Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange.

Moore's Fitzgerald, third edition.
In 2 vols. post 8vo. with a Portrait, 3d edition, 21s. boards, LIFE and DEATH of LORD EDWARD FITZGERALD.

FITZGERALD.
By THOMAS MOORE, Esq.
"The best of all Mr. Moore's biographical publications." Mankly Reportiory.

"The letters of Lord Edward are the most simply beautiful we have ever read."—Mctropolitiss.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Emigration.

In 18mo. price 2s. 6d. with a Map,

A N ACCOUNT of the PROVINCE of

NEW BRUNSWICK; including a Description of the
Settlements, Institutions, Soil, and Climate of that important
Province: with Advice to Emigrants.

Province: with Advice to Emigrants.

Commissioner and Surveyor-General of Crown Lands in New Brunswick.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard,
and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

AN EXAMINATION of the EVIDENCE and ARGUMENTS address to The EVIDENCE Iriah Tithes. and ARGUMENTS adduced by Dr. DOYLE before the Committee of the Heuse of Commons, on TITHES in IRE-LAND, in defence of the supposed Quadripartite and Triparties division. ivision. By the Rev. HENRY NEWLAND, D.D. Vicar of Ban

Also, by the same Author Also, by the same Author,

2. An Apology for the Established Church in Ireland; being an attempt to prove that its present state is more pure than in any period since the Reformation. 13mb. 5c.

Dublin: Printed for W. Curry, Jun. and Co.; and Simpkin and Marshall, London.

In small 18mo. price 4s. cloth boards,
THE PHENOMENA of DREAMS and

THE PHENOMENA of DREAMS and other TRANSIENT LLUSIONS.

By WALTER C. DENDY, M.R.C.S.

Pellow and Honorary Secretary of the Medical Society of London, &c. &c.

"We are sure that our readers will join with us in admiring the spirit of true philosophy, the extensive information, the acute discrimination, and faculty of lucid expression, which Mr. Dendy has brought to the investigation of one of the most important inquiries which can engage the human mind."—Monthly Kentim.

"This is one of the most amusing and scientific investigation of the subject we have yet seen."—Johnson's Med. Chir. Rec.

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London.

In 1 vol. 8ve.

THREE MONTHS' TOUR in SWITZERLAND and FRANCE, illustrated by a Map of the outer to Chamouni, the Bernese Alps, sic. sc. and with Plans, outes to diamoun, the Berness Alps, Sc. Sc. and with Pis scriptive of Mountain Sciency.

By the Rev. WILLIAM LIDDIARD,
Author of the "Legend of Einstdin, a Metrical Tale of Switzerland," and other Foema.

Smith, Eider, and Co. 65, Cornhill.

THE APOSTOLICITY of TRINITA. RIANISM; or, the Testimony of History to the positive Antiquity and Apostolical inculcation of the Doctrine of the Hely Trinity.

Antiquity and apacentas instantants of the Arithmeter of Sherburn Hospital, Durham, and Prebendary In the First Book the Author traces up the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity to the Apostolic Age, in various distinct, though perfectly harmonising, lines of evidence.

In the Second Book are noticed the Objections which affect the Historical Part of the Question.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

In 2 vols. 8vo. price 28s. boards,

In 8 vols. 8vo. price 82s. boards,

A N ESSAY upon NATIONAL

CHARACTER; being an Inquiry Into some of the principal Causes which contribute to form and modify the Character of Nations in the State of Civilisation.

By the late RICHARD CHENEVIX, Esq. F.R.S.L.

"We have not spoken of the author's style, which constitutes no small part of the strong and charm of the work. Uniformly perspicuous, corrections and charm of the work. Uniformly perspicuous, corrections and charm of the work. Uniformly perspicuous, corrections and the strong strong the strong of the strong strong the strong of the strong strong the strong strong the strong strong the strong strong strong the strong
THE FIRST VOLUME of the NEW EDITION of Miss EDGEWORTH'S TALES and NOVELS, in Monthly Volumes, price Five Shillings each, with apper Engravings, corresponding in size and appearance with the Waverley November of Myon's Life and Works,—was published on the ist of May.
Bailwin and Cradeck, London.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In a few days will be published, in foolscap &vo.

IVES of VASCO NUNEZ DE BALBOA and FRANCISCO PIZARRO. From the Spanish of Don Manuel Josef Quintains.
By Mrs. HODSON,
Author of "Wailanes," "The Past," &c.
Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and Thomas Cadeli, Strand, London.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, of the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 12, South Moulton Street, Order Street: sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange: E. Marthorough, Ave Maria Low, Ludgate Bill: A. Bill, Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Alkinan and Co. Glasgow; and J. Cumming, Dublim.—Agent for America, O. Rich, 19, Red Lion Square, London. MOVER. OR Caulta Senses. Lainmeter Sunare.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 800.

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Remarks on the Statistics and Political Institutions of the United States, with some Observations on the Ecclesiastical System of America, her Sources of Revenue, &c. By W. G. Ouseley, Esq., Attaché to his Majesty's Legation at Washington. 8vo. pp. 208. London, 1832. Rodwell.

BELONGING to a family in which talents and a love of literature are inherent, we were inclined to anticipate a clever production from the pen of Mr. Ouseley; and our expectation has been fulfilled. The work before us is able and candid, and takes a liberal view of the United States and of the people. The author has enjoyed the best opportunities of forming a fair and impartial judgment of both, having visited all parts of the country, and seen society from its top to its level, during a residence of several years. His mind had also been prepared for comparison and contrast by an acquaintance with the principal European nations; and when we add, that with all the right feelings of an Englishman, he seems to have possessed an unprejudiced spirit which did not blind him to the merits of another people, we have said enough to shew that he was endowed with excellent qualifications for the task he has undertaken.

An Introduction leads us to the inquiry into American Statistics, and to the mass of condensed information which the author lays before us concerning them. Here he tells us: "Those impressions of the practical inapplicability of the institutions of the United States to European nations have not been removed by a residence in that country; at least, the total unfitness of a republican government for adoption in England still appears to me incontrovertible. But the results produced in America, by her political system, are very different from those which one is led to expect by the representations of many, and some distinguished, writers; and it has been my endeavour to point out a few of the reasons and facts which, in my mind, produced a conviction that the probabilities of success to the 'great experiment' now in progress in the Transatlantic Republic were not to be measured by a scale formed from the circumstances of our own country.' In the same preliminary paper, Mr. Ouseley touches on another matter of much interestemigration to Canada—on which he states: "Although not immediately connected with the subject of this publication, I cannot forbear saying a few words on a topic deserving of the deepest consideration in this country, and of which the importance has only of late years been duly appreciated. The North American colonies furnish England with similar, and almost equivalent, advantages to those which the Americans possess in the superabundance of fertile territory, and consequent provision for the poorer and lower classes of society. From my own observations in Canada and Nova Scotia, I have no hesitation in affirming, that to a moral certainty, -as well ascertained as any circumstance can be by human experience, -the moderately industrious and sober. however poor, are sure of obtaining not only a plentiful subsistence, but many comforts to which, in the present state of the commercial. manufacturing, and agricultural interests, they must in all probability long be strangers in the mother country. There is but one circumstance that might prevent the emigrant from realising these fair prospects,—the loss of health. But in a climate so very salubrious as that of British North America, the probability of this evil is more remote, than that to which, under circumstances of privation, he would be exposed in England. He will also find, I think, that the physical and positive advantages are more encouraging to the settler in Upper Canada, &c. than in the United States; independently of the reluctance that every right-minded Englishman must feel to abandon the colours of his country. He may be said to be nearly at home in the North American colonies:

"Cœlum non animum mutant, qui trans mare currunt." By facilitating the means of emigration to the poorer classes of Englishmen, the British government would, perhaps, contribute as efficaciously to their welfare as by the extension of their political rights; and would probably find, in the vast resources of the North American colonies, a means of practically awarding 'the greatest share of happiness to the greatest number of our countrymen."

Proceeding to his main points, Mr. O. goes on to argue that the government of America is well adapted to the circumstances of its inhabitants; that its institutions neither generate corruption nor commotion; that its domestic manners are often misrepresented; that its financial system is most satisfactory; and that with millions of acres of fine land yet to occupy, its prosperity is certain. In discussing these topics he controverts some of the statements of Captain Hall, the Quarterly Review, the Revue Britannique, and Mrs. Trollope; relying on his own observations and (a good deal) on the authority of General La Fayette, General Bernard, and Mr. Fennimore Cooper, who, it must be confessed, are strong partisans on the other side. The following general remarks are, however, better suited to our custom and tone of reviewing, than particular contro-

"Unfortunately, those who have published descriptions of America have not generally remained there long enough to be enabled to use their judgment uninfluenced by prepossessions against or in favour of the theory or practice of the American system; they consequently apply a scale of their own, adapted to a country widely different in circumstances, manners, for its population generally, but particularly | foreign country should unreservedly commit to paper his impressions and opinions of its usages or political institutions, and endeavour to explain and account for its peculiar customs, from his own observations and knowledge, and then lay aside his notes during a year's residence in the same place, would probably be surprised, on a reperusal of them, at the mistaken views that he had in many instances taken;—at least, I have found it so. And if this be true of European countries, having generally many features of resemblance, it is particularly so in the judgments passed by Europeans on the United States. I am speaking now more especially of the political institutions of America; but the same remarks are even more strikingly applicable to the social system of that country. t should be recollected that many provisions of the constitution of the United States, which to an Englishman appear at first sight fraught with danger, will perhaps on a nearer examination be found well adapted to the American Union; for we are prone unconsciously to apply the arguments that would be good in England to a country extremely dissimilar; and thus contemplating, with views and ideas suited to a very different state of things, par-ticular measures or modes of government, it is not surprising that our judgments and predictions of their consequences should be erroneous. Americans say that we look at their republican institutions through our 'monarchical spectacles,' and that it requires some apprenticeship to so different a state of things to see them in their true light. Let us look at the converse of this proposition. When an American arrives in England for the first time, he is apt to jump at conclusions equally unfounded respecting our country. I know what were the impressions of some individuals from the United States, and men of sagacity and experience, on first witnessing the practical workings of our constitutional monarchy, and the results of our social system. And if most Americans were honestly to confess their real opinions (formed after only a short residence in England) at any period during the last thirty years, I am convinced that there are few who would not avow a conviction of their astonishment at the possibility of our government having continued to work with any success for five years together : but after a residence of greater duration, they perceive the existence of counteracting causes preventing many of the bad effects which they anticipated, and even begin to think that the transition to a form of government like their own would neither be so easy nor so advantageous as they previously believed. Americans are eminently practical men; all their undertakings, and generally all the measures, whether of governments or individuals in that country, are stamped with utility as their object, and dictated by sound practical good sense and prudence. They consequently quickly detect the wildness and absurdity of many of the repuband institutions, in forming opinions of the lican theories of those Europeans who would government and people of the United States. seek to adopt forms of government totally unthe traveller who on first arriving in any litted for the circumstances of their country,

^{*} The son of Sir William, though we see the Brussels papers, translated into our own of Wednesday, call him the son of Sir Gore Ouseley, in noticing his joining the embasy in that city.—Ed. L. G.

and soon adapt their views to the peculiarities of the political atmosphere in which they find themselves. Englishmen do not, I think, so readily divest themselves of their preconceived ideas when reflecting on the situation of America, and are apt to continue bigoted in their own hypotheses, notwithstanding the frequent contradictions from facts and practical results to which they are continually subjected. It would be difficult otherwise to account for the erroneous views that are so often taken of the American republic; and for the condemnation of a system pursued with such remarkable success in one country, because it is not adapted to the circumstances of another."

The following also contains so much of generalisation, that we may quote it as a fair example of the whole volume. " If there are not in America, generally. whether colonial or independent, many of the advantages which hereditary rank and privileged wealth indisputably bring in their train. neither are there their countervailing evilspolitical corruption, for instance, is nearly impracticable. If the conventional forms and increasing artificial wants of the highly artificial system of England are wanting, neither is there to be discovered that much more disgusting and contemptible real vulgarity resulting from the abject worship of rank and wealth that debases the lower orders, and some members of almost every class of society in our country. If the roughness of manner and extreme independence of the lower classes* in the remote parts of the Union be occasionally disagreeable to Europeans accustomed to, and perhaps exacting, the interested homage paid to opulence in other countries, the bassesses with which exclusive divinities are propitiated in England (and verily often by those who have little excuse for not knowing better), are unknown. There may be much want of external polish found combined with much practical good sense; although there are few of the miserable coxe "There are many parts of Europe where the freedom of manner of the lower classes would much startle a cockney traveller, particularly in nations where Englishmen are inclined to think that a great degree of personal degradation must necessarily be found among the bourgeots and pessantry. In Spain, Austria, Denmark, or Sweden, a traveller is frequently struck by this independence of deportment. I have witnessed it in all these countries, but particularly in Spain. In the mountains of Andalusia, in a hovel of a senie, the host, or his brother pessants, will receive you with perfect good-nature and rough hospitality; but with a cool, tacit assertion of perfect equality in demessiour, as widely different from the habits of England as are those of America. It is true, that while eating garlic with a pocket-knife, and with a lack of the means and appliances of civilised life that would be the death of a dandy, the lowest Spaniard has a culet dignity of manner that, however rustic, must exclude rulgarity, which never can exist where there is a true and natural independence of feeling and absence of affectation. This freedom, or perhaps coarsenses, of manner is not offensive (at least I never found it so), because of affectation are resident absence of all intentional incivility; yet it was, perhaps, more near being disagreeable comedines in the cafér and larger founds or inns, where the ner is not offensive (at least I never found it so), because you perceive in it an evident absence of all intentional incivility; yet it was, perhaps, more near being disagreeable sometimes in the eafe's and larger fonds or inns, where the waiters when unemployed would quietly take their seats, after, perhaps, asking you to light their cigar with your own. I remember particularly on board one of the steamboats that run between Cadia and Seville (for steam-boats now are constructed on the banks of the Guadalquivir, and somewhat disenchant the reveries of the traveller in the waiter, with his cap on his head and stump of a cigarillo in his mouth, quietly seated himself by me, and took one of my pistols from holsters lying near, and began coulty to descant on the merits of its English workmanship. I have been on board many American steamboats, and never saw the theory of equality and independence so strongly exemplified by the practices of any of their attendants. There is a want of keeping in this sort of familiarity when in a crowded city or on board one of these floating hotels, at least our associations make us think so, that is infinitely more likely to give a slight feeling of what the French call chair de poule, than when we meet the active peasant on the mountain paths of the Contrabandistas, or the athletic, well-armed, and well-mounted, caballero, who say be no better (or so torse) than a peasant, in the wild fastnesses of a Moorish village en the sterres of Andahosia."

cessful individuals of humble origin (not form- ling, mentioned in the foregoing statement, ing exceptions to a rule, but) in numbers suf- there came from ficient to prove amply that talent and welldirected industry and energy are certain, as human institutions can make them, of being rewarded by the highest stations in society: yet it will not be easy to find among the numerous and efficient employés of the American government a single specimen of the genus vulgarly, but expressively, classified as the 'Jack-in-office,' whose absurd or stupid impertinence often clogs the operations of the European bureaux that they infest. There are to be found men of large hereditary or acquired possessions, whose feelings, education, and manners, would ornament any society, divested of the puerile vanities of an exclusive circle, or the putid puppyisms of the silver-fork school. Americans may well be excused if their patience is somewhat taxed by the short-sighted and captious criticisms that are sometimes uttered by foreigners upon their country, their government, or their manners. I look at that immense tract of country west of the Alleghanies, that a very few years ago was comparatively a wild forest, where many millions of acres were thinly occupied by a few thousand inhabitants, and see a population, already greater than that of several independent kingdoms, daily increasing in numbers and adding to their comforts where cities and towns spring up, as if by magic, from among the woods-its plains traversed by rail-roads, and its gigantic rivers covered with steam-boats ;- I see all this going on without tumult, bloodshed, or disorder; and when I exclaim, 'This is a noble, an extraordinary country!' I am answered, in Abigail phrase, 'But, shocking! the people eat with their knives!'

We observe that Mr. Ouseley speaks of Mrs. Trollope's book and Mr. Vigne's precisely as was done in the Literary Gazette; and we are well pleased to have our opinions confirmed by so competent a party. Having said so much, however, we shall only subjoin a few pieces of intelligence, which we trust will be acceptable to readers.

Gold mines have only been discovered and wrought, in the United States, within the last eighteen or twenty years; and "the following statement, taken from the report of the director of the mint, January 1, 1831, will shew the amount of gold received from the different states, as well as that from other countries, in the course of the year The coinage, during the year 1830, 1830. amounted to

Dollars. Gold coins 643,105 Silver ditto 2,495,400 Copper 17,115 Total 3,155,620

The description of coins was as follows:-

Half-eagles	196,351	making	Dollars. 631,755
Quarter-eagles · ·	4,540	••••	11,350
Hulf-dollars · · · · 4	.764,800	9	382,400
Dimes · · · · · ·		••••	51,000
Half-dimes ···· 1		• • • •	62,000
Cents ·······		••••	17,115

Total number of pieces 8,367,191 Total 3,155,690 Of the gold coined in 1830, there was imported from Dollars.

Mexico······ South America about ·······	125,000
Africa	19,000 466,000
Sources not ascertained	33,000

combries of dandyism, there will be found suc- amounting in value to about 100,000%. ster-

	Dollars
Georgia, about	212.00
North Carolina	204,000
South Carolina	26,000
Virginia	94,000
Total produce in the United States .	466,000

" Newspaper Postage. For each newspaper not carried out of the state in which it is published, or if carried out of the state, but not carried over 100 miles, 1 cent; over 100 miles, and out of the state in which it was published, 11 cent.

Magazines and Pemphlets.

If published periodically, Cents.
distance not exceeding... 100 miles, 1½ per sheet.
If published periodically, distance over 100 2½
If not published periodically,
distance not exceeding... 100 4
If not published periodically,
distance over 100 6

Every printed pamphlet or magazine which contains more than twenty-four pages, on a royal sheet, or any sheet of less dimensions, shall be charged by the sheet; and small pampblets, printed on "a half or quarter sheet, of royal or less size, shall be charged with half the amount of postage charged on a full sheet."

" Newspapers in New York. Number of newspapers published in this state, according to Williams's New York Annual Register, in 1831, was 237; 54 in city of New York, and 185 in other parts of the state; 16 daily, and 48 avowedly entimasonic.*

Number of Sheets issued from the Fifty-four Present in the City of New York.

Eleven daily papers (average 1,456 each in one day) one day) Ten semi-weekly ditto (average 1,880 each in

Total 14,536,(00)

" Copyright. Copyright is secured in the United States for fourteen years, by depositing and recording the title of any work, map, chart, &c. at the office of the clerk of the district; and can be renewed by the author, his executors or assigns, at the end of that term, for a further period of fourteen years. Vide Act for the Encouragement of Learning. __ J. Story's Statutes of the United States.

"Number of Bishops in the United States, and their Residences or Diocesses.

Sisteen Protestant Bishops, viz.

Diocesses. Diocesses. Eastern Diocess, or N. England. Virginia. South Carolina. Georgia. Connecticut. New York. New Jersey Louisians. Mississippi. Pennsylvania. Delaware. Maryland. Kentucky.
North Carolina. Ohio.
Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church

Residence.

Residence.

Ratchbishops.

Residence.

Baltimore. Archbishop.

New York Ditto.

Philadelphia. Ditto.

Ditto. Coadjutor.

Charleston Bishop.

St. Louis Bishop.

Charleston Bishop.

St. Louis Bishop.

St. Louis Ditto.

Ditto Cadjutor.

Charleston Bishop.

St. Louis Ditto. New York . Ditto. Barustown . Ditto.
Philadelphia. Ditto. Ditto Candjuto
Ditto..... Coadjutor. Cincinnati . Bishop.
Charleston . Bishop. St. Louis ... Ditto.
One Archbishop, nine Bishops, and two Coadjutors."

Notes upon Notes; with Cuts upon Copper and Music. By Henry Warren. 12mo pp. 47. London, 1832. Ackermann. THIS is a jew d'esprit full of puns, and so thickly illustrated with humorous cuts, that it

Total.... 643,000

Total.... 643,000

This has now become a party watchword, but originated in a just feeling of detestation at a murderous outgrayed to the gold found in the United States, rage committed by some feemasons a few years ago.

Music furnishes our laughter-loving author with song to conclude. his theme; and it must be acknowledged that he plays away famously, though now and then straining hard after point. We need only give an example. The first subject is "Thorough Base," and the print represents a real Newgatelooking fellow.

"Thorough Base (we are told) is a figured base (see the rough cut, the head-piece to the present Chap.) To play thorough base properly, it is essentially necessary to make yourself acquainted with all sorts of keys, as well minor as major; for the transitions are so sudden, that an indifferent performer might be very easily betrayed into a neck-straineous cord, and then the sensation is truly disagreeable. It particularly affects the wind instruments, as in that case they often sustain the subject. This is said to be knot dependent on the ear. All discords, particularly those of suspension, require decided resolutions, and these resolutions, or closes, are taught by a deep knowledge of thorough base. Were it not for certain laws for the sake of general harmony, Mercury's art would run into gross excesses; but thorough base causes subjects to be confined within certain bounds or rules. For this purpose, bars, staves, and clefs, were introduced. In almost all cases where we find a rigid adherence to the principles of thorough base, we find that they come to a certain close, and end almost always in a full swing of the common cord. Immediately preceding this close, we find, in pieces of the old school, what is called the plague-all cadence : some of these effects are truly transporting. The common cord, however, is always used now for morendo effects. It may be observed that, if a young person begin by thorough base, he is the more likely to arrive at a rapid execution."

The next paper is entitled a " Double Bar," and of this we select the poetical portion; for the writer uses verse as well as prose. The cut is a sportsman leaping over a double bar, and the song says:

"There's jolly young Colly, of Hollywood Hall, Has gallopped, and whallopped, and trollopped through all The estate of his pater, till great is his fall— Poor Colly!

For gemmen, and leman, and women beside, And lookins in buckskins who horse-skins could stride, Were welcome, if they'd come and help him to ride a neap nam to ride Through his fortune.

And he called 'em his friends, and he lent 'em his pounds, While they plucked him, and sucked him, so out of all bounds, bounds,

That the neighbours all said he fed two packs of hounds.
Hark forward!

And hence his expenses, and thence is the cause, As you'll guess, that distress and that pest of the laws, A bum-balliff, one day left the mark of his claws

Now, though hunter himself, he was hunted full sore, Being sued and pursued the whole county quite o'er, Till his creditors said it was hunting a bore, A hard run.

It was hark away, hark away, mark the way—go— But the game was soon ended, so Friendship cried Wo! Though tapsters and milksoomen cried tally owe! Tally ho!

Oh! he'd oft cleared a bank with his high metile roan, And he'd cleared his bank now, for his metal had flown; But one bank he could not clear, that he must own—

Erst he swept over, leaped over, many a bor, But, alas! here the bars were, he found higher far; So, though bootless, he gave to his spirits the spier With the bridle.

Poor Colly! your ross is no longer your own, Nor your bay, nor your gray, nor your brown, nor your dun; Their bright hues, like yours, have now sunk into one— Dun Brown."

"Old Swig had a real drinking mug, A bottle nose and a glass eye; Folks called him a jolly old dog, A wet soul that always was dry. From his father his thirst he inherited, For each has his failing, you know: If you aak, 'Was he ever low spirited?' Yes! when his spirits were low.

Yet still he was sparkling and bright,
Thus singing when others were yawning;
If wine make us drunk over night,
Why, the wine shall be drunk in the morning.

Beer is the legitimate daughter Of England, says he, without doubt; Stout made him as strong as a porter, And porter, he said, made him stout.

Good double X, dark, red, or pale, He would tipple to make him live long; For drinking it strong made him hale, And drinking of ale made him strong.

So drink, my brave boys! it's all right— All thoughts of old Care nobly scorning; For, if we get fresh over-night, We shall be fresh again in the morning.

But, alsa! sad infirmities come Old and crusty on bee's wing to plague you;
And he soon, like his crony, old Tom,
Was accustomed to dull quartern ague-

Full proof he was given to drinking, At least so 'twas thought 'neath his roof; And what most his life's chain was unlinking, He was given to drinking full proof.

'And what if I'm given to tipple,
'Tis just as it should be,' says he;
'For 'will make us but quits, my good people,
If the tipple be given to me.'

Well, they sent for the doctor by stealth: Ardent spirits, he said, had caused fever, Ruos and brandy were had for his health, So advised him to go to Geneva.

Oh! Geneva's blue water was bright, But, alas! it was not eau de vie; For, in reeling along one dark night, He was drowned, as historians agree.

O ye drinkers! I deem it but right
To give you this song as a warning;
If you soak your clay over-night,
Why your clay may be soaked in the morning."

Sketch of the History of Van Diemen's Land; illustrated by a Map of the Island, and an Account of the Van Diemen's Land Company. By J. Bischoff, Esq. 8vo. pp. 260. London, 1832. Richardson.

The Van Diemen's Land Almanac for 1831. 12mo. pp. 263. Hobart Town. Melville. THE first of these publications is a compilation, but a clear and clever one, affording a good view of an island of considerable interest, in whatever way it is considered - whether as a receptacle for emigration, a penal settlement, a political experiment, or a fruitful source of inquiry in the various branches of natural history. On the latter point the following notices are curious.

" Myrtle is the principal timber throughout this district. Its appearance, as to a rough bark and thick foliage, very much resembles the elm; but there are no elms equal to those gigantic trees, being in general from 150 to 200 feet in height, and from thirty to forty feet in circumference. The wood is very like

"When the heath was set on fire, I caught one of those curious insects, the native straw: it is, I apprehend, a nondescript. The only creatures inhabiting these large forests, appeared to be opossums and bandicoot rats, and, I suppose, tigers, or native dogs, as they are called; as we often heard the cracking of sticks by some heavy creature after dark, as we lay, like mummies, rolled up in blankets to keep off the musquitoes, by our fire-side, upon our bed of fern-leaves. This, and owl's and doleful cry of 'more pork,' and the screaming would be a pity to bestow another cut upon it. | content ourselves, for a finale, with a drinking- | when they made an unusually loud noise, it was occasioned by the eagle-hawk pouncing upon them for his prey. We also occasionally heard the trumpeter, or black-magpie, and black cockatoos in large mobs; but they kept so much aloft, we only were able to shoot one of them and one parrot during the whole journey; and one of the men shot a 'more pork.'"

"Van Diemen's Land (we now quote from the Almanac) has been already said to be thickly timbered. It may indeed be styled a land of forests, the woodlands being out of all proportion to ground that is even tolerably clear of timber; yet in many places there is no underwood, the ground being covered with tall, ungainly trees, standing at some distance from each other, and running up to a great height before they shoot out any branches. Much of the timber of the colony is extremely serviceable for every building purpose, particularly stringy bark, which has been termed the oak of Van Diemen's Land, both on account of the appearance and durability of the wood, and of the uses to which it is applied. Gum, of several sorts; almost equal to stringy bark. Peppermint - another wood of the same description, but particularly used where facility of splitting is required. Among the ornamental woods come-light wood, the oak or beef-tree, honeysuckle, myrtle, and the cherry-tree. Woods that are much esteemed for the fitting up of houses, cabinet-makers, and others, are Huon pine, black and silver mimosas, pencil oedar, and sassafras. All the trees are ever-greens, and some of them, particularly the mimosas, put forth very rich blossoms in the spring; but the prevailing colour of nearly all of this description has been remarked to partake more or less of yellow. The foliage is generally of a dark or sombre green, and the eye wanders over the wide expanse of dense forest every where presented, searching in vain for the relief that is afforded by the many varying hues of the deciduous family. The varieties of shrubs are many, and extremely beautiful; and several of them have very elegant flowers. It is extremely difficult to transplant them; indeed, the only way of doing this with a chance of their living, is to be careful that there is a solid ball of earth, not less than a foot square, around the root; and provided this be well attended to, the season or period of the year is of less consequence than some imagine. The winter months are, however, generally thought preferable to any others. In a work of this kind, it would be impossible even to give a list of the names of the numerous shrubs and valuable plants which are to be found in many parts of the island; Mount Wellington alone would be an extensive field for the study of botanical inquiry. Among the most valuable yet discovered, might be enumerated the pepper-tree, the bark of which has proved to contain many valuable medicinal qualities. The tea-tree should not pass unnoticed, whose leaves serve as a substitute for those of the Chinese plant; and although the beverage cannot be said to be equally as good, there is no question but that it is much more wholesome. The fern-tree may perhaps be ranked as the most elegant production of nature in the island; but, as before stated, merely to continue enumerating the many varied sorts of shrubs, would occupy more room than could be well spared, without prejudice to other heads of which this work is treating. The botanical fever, now raging in England, has not yet Dun Brown." of the oposeums, were the only disturbances fever, now raging in England, has not yet if it were not allowing too much space to we experienced during the night. Parrots, trifling pleasantry, we would quote more; but far above our reach, were chattering all day; questionably the most profitable; indeed, so little has botany been studied, that we believe it can be safely said, that there is only one person on the island who makes it a business, that person is a Mr. Scott, who is well known, having discovered the method by which he is enabled to guarantee plants and seeds that may be required in the northern hemisphere."

From the country we naturally turn to its inhabitants.

"The aboriginal savages of Van Diemen's Land were early distinguished for their extreme timidity and extreme cunning and treachery. Soon after the colony was settled. in the year 1805, a scarcity of provisions was felt, amounting almost to a famine. In this extremity the convicts were permitted to go into the bush in order to find food, and as the country abounded with game, they readily discovered it, and were subsequently indisposed to return and submit to the authority of the government. This state of things continued until the year 1809 or 1810, and laid the foundation for that system of plunder which was denominated bush-ranging. The convicts leading this predatory course of life, continually associated with the aboriginal natives, whom, it is unquestionable, they treated with the most unnatural cruelty, taking away their women, and often murdering the men. The sea-faring people employed in the sealing-trade also united in the commission of these acts of cruelty; and although the miserable savages were too timid to resent the atrocities committed upon their tribes openly, they nevertheless secretly speared their oppressors whenever favourable opportunities placed them within their power. Unable to distinguish between the class of persons whom I have described and the stock-keepers, they no doubt frequently vented their enmity upon the latter, and hence the enmity between the natives and the Europeans was extended. The savages having become more expert, became also more bold and sanguinary, and undoubtedly they would, without distinction, murder every white inhabitant, if they could do so with safety to themselves. In the year 1824, great encouragement was held out to the natives to seek the protection of the go-vernment; and three tribes especially, the Big River, the Oyster Bay, and the Abyssinia tribes, were treated with peculiar kindness. Huts were erected for them and food provided, and they were sure of protection from all the respectable part of the community, as well as from the government. I had frequent interviews with them myself, and held out to their chiefs the strongest assurances of protection. Still, their enmity was evidently unabated; and I have no doubt they were continually ill-used by the dissolute and abandoned convicts who had absconded either from the government or from the service of the settlers. From this or other exciting causes, the character of the savages has evidently become more and more hostile; and although their natural timidity still prevents them from openly attacking only two armed persons, however great their number, yet they will, with a patience quite inexhaustible, watch a cottage or a field for days together, until the unsuspecting inhabitants af-ford some opening, of which the savages instantly avail themselves, and suddenly spear to death the defenceless victims of their indiscriminate vengeance; and success in various instances seems now to have made them as eager in this mode of warfare (their object being to plunder as well as to destroy the white inha-

fifty savages before them; but still they return | tings; in obedience to this command, the comand watch, until their unerring spears can victim to the ground. This, bring some which is a faithful statement of our situation, must, I am persuaded, convince you that the hope of conciliation cannot at this time be reasonably entertained, nor can measures to attain it be any longer prudently acted upon."

by the Almanac) is not much known, but they have been noticed to sound the letter R with a rough deep emphasis, particularly when excited by anger or otherwise; and that upon these occasions, also, they use the word werr, werr, very vehemently. Their usual food is kangaroo, opossums, or any other native animal they can catch. They broil the flesh, or rather just warm it on the coals, and then devour it with greediness. They likewise eat a root which they sometimes find in the earth, and which is not altogether unlike a yam in taste. They never kindle large fires, lest their haunts might be tracked, but choose retired situations, and generally where provisions are easily attainable. They are extremely dexterous in the use of the spear, which they can throw at a mark, at a considerable distance, with so much nicety as seldom to miss it. In managing the waddies, also, they display great skill and prowess. When they fight among themselves, the chief weapon is the waddy, which they flourish in the air for some time, with boisterous threats and gestures, and then fall to in good earnest. It has been said that their sculls are much thicker than those of Europeans. They had need be so, to receive some of the blows that are inflicted on these occasions, as they sometimes appear heavy enough to fell an ox. They are said to be extremely fond of their children, and that they treat their women kindly; the latter, however, are compelled to do all the drudgery of the party, as is usual with savages. In their natural disposition, they have the character of being fierce, treacherous, and revengeful."

"So far as means have been presented of judging of their numbers, they are very inconsiderable; probably not exceeding a couple of to the different islands in Bass's Straits; and, thousand in the whole island, and of these the after mature deliberation, they are unanimous greatest proportion by far are males. What can in the opinion, that Gun Carriage Island, sibe the cause of this departure from the usual tuated between Great Island and Cape Barren, rule of nature, does not seem explained. Some have supposed, that many of the female children main, possesses more advantages than any are suffered to perish in infancy, not being thought by their mothers worth the trouble of tablishment. There is excellent anchorage rearing. Whatever it may be, the fact is, that there are at least six times as many males as females-some say, even more. They are perpetually engaged in conflicts between rival tribes, and we are told that they are frequently attended by fatal issues. The settlers know, by experience, that some of these tribes are infinitely more savage and mischievous than others, more skilled in the arts of war, more treacherous, and more difficult to be wrought upon by any thing save unrelenting severity. Such, in few words, collected from the best and most authentic sources of information, are the aboriginal natives of Van Diemen's Land."

Among the best efforts to effect so desirable an end, however, we see that a spirited individual undertook a mission among these danger-ous savages. Of its result the annexed is the account.

" In consequence of the return of Mr. G. A. Robinson from his conciliatory mission to the aborigines of this island, and his excellency the lieutenant-governor having expressed his desire mittee did meet from time to time, and have the honour now to submit the following report on those points to which their attention was directed by his excellency, and also on the subject of your two letters of the 1st and 3d instant, which they have the honour to acknowledge, and upon which they are required to give "What their language is (we are told their opinion, for the information of the government. The first subject of their inquiry was, to ascertain how far Mr. Robinson had succeeded in the main and principal objects of his mission, viz. the opening an amicable intercourse and friendly communication with the whole of the black population of this island. The committee feel great pleasure in testifying their opinion, that Mr. Robinson has, in a great measure, accomplished this subject, and that in so doing, he has manifested the most daring intrepidity, persevering zeal, and strenuous exertion. He appears to have acquired a competent knowledge of their language, enabling him to converse with them, and to explain the kind and pacific intentions of the government and the settlers generally towards them. Robinson appears also to have gained the confidence of the natives to such an extent that several of the most hostile class have put themselves under his protection, and he feels confident of the possibility of effecting the volun-tary removal of the entire black population, which he is of opinion is not more than 700 in number, in the course of two or three years, holding out to them inducements of food and clothing, and a country where, under the protection of the government, they will be secure from the aggressions of the sealers and bush-rangers, and no restraint imposed on their amusements and sports of the chase. This circumstance leads to the second subject for the consideration of the committee, viz. the selection of the most eligible place for the immediate formation of an establishment to receive those that have been taken, and for the future reception of the whole of the aborigines. The committee have anxiously endeavoured to procure the best possible information with regard and about eleven leagues distant from the for vessels, and it is well supplied with wood and water: it is about two miles long, and a mile and a half wide, and is surrounded by several islands of the same extent. The natives will be enabled to pass over to Cape Barren for the purposes of hunting; but as it does not abound with game, they will return to the establishment, where they will always find food and clothing, &c. The island also abounds with mutton-birds, and also the surrounding coast with shell-fish, their favourite foods."

Of the Company, the author of the volume speaks in the most sanguine terms: not so the Almanac, which says:

"The company itself is not, nor is it likely to become of a popular character. The merchants view it with distrust and jealousy, although it is strictly prohibited from trading, and cannot, therefore, it may be presumed, interfere with them. The settlers like it not, regarding it as an overgrown monster, who is trenching upon what should wholly belong to themselves. It stands, therefore, in a manner, hitants), as they were in pursuing the kangaroo. that the committee appointed for this especial alone in the colony; and if all its capital, or Two Europeans, who will face them, will drive purpose should re-assemble and resume its sit.

vested in agricultural pursuits, in the manner arranged, the feather, the straw, the moss, and that private settlers are compelled to do, in return for the land that is given them, the policy of introducing such a large establishment in a young colony might be less questionable than it is. As things now stand, the company has succeeded in becoming possessed of upwards of three hundred thousand acres of land, upon terms that afford a most unfair comparison towards the private settler. The company's capital is nearly all on paper-that of the settler must be all bond fide, or tangible; and yet, with this manifest advantage on the side of the former, Lord Bathurst sanctioned its receiving land, in a greater proportion of acres per nominal pound sterling, than what is awarded to the other, in return for his real and available capital. That the colony may have derived some advantages from the importation of the men, money, stock, &c., which the company has immediately caused, is not pretended to be denied; but so she would, and to a much greater extent, had the princely domain that has been given to it been parcelled out amongst private settlers. Whatever these advantages may be, they have most assuredly been purchased at a dear rate. Even gold itself may be too highly prized, and, so far as opportunities of judging have been hitherto afforded, the honour of having the Van Diemen's Land Company in possession of the fine portion of the island that now belongs to it, has cost its very extreme value."

These extracts throw a light upon the condition and prospects of Van Diemen's Land: to those interested in farther information, we would commend the works whence they are taken.

Letters to the Young. By Maria Jane Jewsbury. 12mo. pp. 254. 3d edition, revised and enlarged. London, 1832. Hatchard and Son.

WE spoke highly in praise of this little volume on its first appearance, and we now most cor-dially repeat that praise. We remember, in some tale, read " long years ago," there was a king who had sentences from the philosopher and the poet inscribed in all parts of his palace in letters of gold. Did that monarch still exist, how many passages are here which might be most profitably added to his collection! Witness the truth and beauty of expression in the following remarks:

" Minds of a reflective, and somewhat timid cast, are most liable to the influence of morbid sensibility; they soon begin to look through, rather than upon, society, and consequently become disgusted with the construction of it. They serve their pleasures as children do their toys—pull them to pieces in order to ascertain their internal mechanism; and their emotions, as the same children serve rose-buds—open them to accelerate their time of bloom. * * *

" Melancholy consists quite as much in pride as refinement; in the pride of despising trivial sources of enjoyment, as in the refinement which is keenly susceptible of trivial annoyances. A person striving to construct happiness out of daily life, strongly resembles one of the smaller tribe of birds constructing its nest. The materials for this nest are in themselves mean and worthless-here a feather, there a straw, yonder a spray of moss, and on that thorn a tuft of wool: we despise or overlook them; but the bird, wise and patient in the providential instinct of its nature, sees differently, and confounds by its actions both man and his reasoning. It collects the small, con-the wool, having lost their separate insignificance, form part of a beautiful whole, of a tiny but perfect fabric. Just so let us not despise trifles-any trifle, at least, by means of which an innocent gratification may either be impart-ed or received—and we shall find an aggregate of pleasure. The kind look or word that occupies but a moment, may, by its influence on the spirits, gladden a whole day; five minutes' conversation with a stranger accidentally met, may embody some information that we were previously ignorant of, or suggest some valuable train of thought that might not otherwise have arisen."

There is one very interesting letter, tracing the influence of the Inspired Writings on our greatest poets. To select one or two instances:

"Lord Byron's descriptive apostrophe to Rome, as 'the Niobe of nations,'-'childless and crownless in her voiceless woe,'-'a marble wilderness,' and 'lone mother of dead empires, is in its primary idea of a decayed kingdom personified as a 'woman forsaken and grieved in spirit,' but an eloquent paraphrase of the opening of Lamentations—' How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary! she weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks: among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her - they are become her enemies. Again: I know you greatly admire the same poet's 'Ode to Napoleon.' Do so; but admire also Isaiah's ode on the fall of Sennacherib, the Napoleon of Babylon; and observe too, that, independent of a general resemblance throughout in point of structure, Lord Byron's first and finest stanza is altogether derived from the

'Tis past—but yesterday a king,
And armed with kings to strive,
And now thou art a nameless thing;
So abject, yet alive!
Is this the man of thousand thrones,
Who strewed our earth with hostile bones?
And can be thus survive?
Since he miscalled the morning star,
No man nor fiend hath fallen so far.'

'He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke is persecuted, and none hin-dereth. How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken nations! They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremblethat did shake kingdoms—that made the world as a wilderness?'

" Campbell's expression-

Her march is on the mountain wave, Her home is on the deep,' will remind you of the Psalmist's- Thy path is in the sea, and thy footsteps in the great deep.' When a poet said that the Apollo Belvidere appears to have shot the arrow ' less by an effort than a command,' he expressed a noble idea, worthy the transcendent statue; but when Habakkuk says of the Holy One, 'He stood, and measured the earth; he beheld, and drave asunder the nations,' the sublime conception of power exercised by the mere movement of will, s carried to a height worthy the true and living God-the God of Heaven! Young well expresses the same style of sentiment

Whose word was nature's birth,
The shadow of whose hand is Nature's shield,
Her discolution his suspended smile."

The similarity between Jezebel and Lady temned materials, arranges them, and, when Macbeth is also put in a most striking light. visit to the army, who seized upon this oppor-

We give this volume its highest and its true praise, when we say we would place it in the hands of every young person. We know none among the female writers of our day for whose talents we have a higher respect than for those of Miss Jewsbury. The natural powers of her mind have received that best of cultivation, Christian philosophy; and a beautiful purityan earnest thoughtfulness-hope, " which, like the lark, flies heavenward,"-have been the result. Her style is rich and peculiar, where the thoughts are like "apples of gold in pictures of silver." Few writers of the age have so completely made a temple of the mind, and a high place of the heart: there is not a page in the present work but is imbued with the strongest feeling of that religion which saith, "Be not faithless, but believing:" "weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

CAPT. MUNDY'S SKETCHES IN INDIA. Second Volume.

WE intimated that if we found sufficient inducement in Capt. Mundy's second volume, we would enter, pen in hand, into it, just as the gallant captain himself would with his gun into a second jungle where there was game to tempt him. Pursuing his interesting route with Lord Combermere, and head quarters in Rohilcund, we are told :-

"An experienced eye may readily distinguish individuals of the two sects Mussulman and Hindoo, by a certain rakish, 'devil may care' air in the former, strongly contrasting with the placid and orderly demeanour of the latter tribe. In some instances, however, where the dress and manners may have gradually assimilated, there is still preserved one characteristic mark-the vest of the Islamite is uniformly open on the left breast, and that of the Hindoo on the right."

But the remarks which have struck us as most worthy of attention, are those which relate to the present state of the Mahratta sovereign and people; and from these we shall make a few extracts.

" On the western bank of the Chumbul (says the author), we encountered Major Fielding, assistant resident at the court of Scindia, who was accompanied by several chiefs of note amongst others the commander-in-chief of the cavalry, and the minister for foreign affairs. They brought with them an escort of a thousand horse; and a more ragamuffin crew, dignified with the name of soldiers, I never beheld. That their equipments are mean and ill kept, and their doublets 'not over-new,' is, however, not a matter of astonishment; since it is well known that the troops frequently go for years without receiving a fraction of pay. Every second or third year they mutiny; and Scindia pays them up, after deducting about two-thirds of their allowance, for the expense of keeping their accounts, paper, ink, scribes, &c .- a strong exemplification of Mahratta discipline and Mahratta good faith. At first sight it appears strange that soldiers should continue in a service in which they do not get their dues; they, nevertheless, prefer it infinitely to ours, and for obvious reasons-English discipline is severe, theirs is lax in the extreme; our sepoys, though they receive handsome and regularly paid wages, get nothing beyond the fixed stipend; whereas the Mahratta troops, in default of pay, may seize by force whatever they covet from the defenceless ryot, without fear of retribution. Major Fielding informs us, that our visit to the country has proved an angel's tunity to make one of their periodical exactions of their dues, and positively refused in a body to turn out on the important occasion of the British commander-in-chief's arrival at the court, until their arrears were paid up. The Maha Rajah was thus constrained to draw from his unwilling treasury no less than five lacs of rupees for this purpose. The personal appearance of the Mahrattas is mean and unprepossessing. They have neither the fair stature and noble bearing of the Mussulman, nor the delicacy of feature and elegance of figure of the southern Hindoo; and they appear to greater disadvantage in our eyes, that we have just left the territories of two of the finest races of people in India—the Seikhs and the Rohillas. Their acknowledged character as brave and skilful soldiers, however, amply makes amends for their personal deficiencies.

"In the afternoon, the two ministers of Scindia visited his excellency, and presented to him about forty chiefs of the country-a rough, uncourtly crew, 'wearing a swashing and a martial outside,' and armed to the teeth with divers-shaped daggers, shields, and immeasurable swords. As they severally approached to present their nuzzar, they swaggered up with a rakehelly nonchalance of manner, most of which was perhaps assumed for the occasion. One fellow, when asked by an officer of the staff, if he understood Persian, surlily answered, 'We are soldiers, like yourselves, and understand little else but fighting.'

Our countrymen halted about five miles from Gwalior, at the hamlet of Jenaira, where Scindia's court was held.

"In the evening the commander-in-chief held a durbar for the reception of the Prince Hindoo Rao, the nearest male relative of the Bye Sahib, or queen regent of the empire, during the minority of the Maha Rajah. His approach was first announced by breathless hurkaras armed with spears, and soon confirmed by the distant jingling of bells, and the dissonant strains of trumpets and shawms; and finally by the glittering of the long lances of his escort, consisting of a thousand cavaliers, and thirty chieftains of rank. His highness's mode of travelling was quite new to us, and smacked more of the hardy warrior than the luxurious eastern magnate. In place of the usual silver-plated houdah, half-filled with soft cushions, his monstrous and beautiful elephant was provided with a kind of double saddle elevated high above his back, and ornamented with costly housings. The prince rode astride on the front part of the saddle, with his feet in silver stirrups, and guided the animal with a long silver ancoos, whilst the rearmost seat was occupied in like manner by a favourite attendant, clad in complete armour.

"Hindoo Rao is a short stout man, with a countenance indicative of courage and even ferocity; his manner towards the British chief was cool, haughty, and provokingly indifferent. Among his own people I was not surprised to hear that he bears the character of a vain, overbearing prince, and to his immediate dependants, a cruel, tyrannical master. His attire presented an affected mixture of magnificence and slovenliness. He wore a red muslin turban, put on puppyishly over one ear, and fastened, after the usual Mahratta fashion, under the chin with a silk scarf of green and silver; round his waist was a sash of yellow silk, through which was thrust a long straight sword, with a yellow velvet scabbard, and an were clasped round his arms, and a necklace of about forty strings of yellow beads adorned his thick muscular throat. Yet, under all these shewy paraphernalia, instead of the glittering keemcab dress worn by the rest of the chiefs, appeared a plain, coarse white cotton tunic, which, with an evidently affected contempt for the cold, was left unfastened at the neck, exposing the whole of his broad brown breast to the sight. After the customary circulation of attar and paun, Hindoo Rao took his departure, without much abatement of his sulkiness. His spleen had been, perhaps, a good deal stirred up by his lordship's refusal to accede to the wishes expressed by the regent, that he and his suite should appear bare-footed in the august presence of the schoolboy rajah. This point of etiquette was waved after some altercation, and we are to go to court, like soldiers, booted and spurred."

On returning the royal visit—
"The scene," says Captain M., "was, even to us, who had seen so much of eastern courts, novel and interesting; the ceremony striking, and the locale very favourable for display. The interview between the two chiefs took place on a pretty extensive plain, half surrounded by a crescent of heights, the view being suddenly terminated by the craggy and sombre fortress This plain was completely covered of Gwalior. by the cavalcade of the Mahratta sovereign, whose glittering spears and floating pennons we could distinguish even as far as the foot of the rock; and each elevation of ground was thickly thronged with spectators. Every invention of barbaric pomp was lavished on the elephants and equipages of the Rajah's immediate suite. The elephant of the Hindoo Rao. in particular, was the most beautiful animal I ever saw, and caparisoned in the most costly style; the whole of his head and trunk was painted in the richest colours; he wore a deep frontlet of solid silver net-work, and each of his huge tusks was fitted into a sheath of silver richly embossed; massive silver chains encircled his legs (which were about circumferent with a forty-years' oak-tree); large and sonorous bells of the same metal depended from his sides; his ears were decorated with silver earrings about six feet long; and his housings, the fringe of which reached nearly to the ground, were of velvet, embroidered in gold and silver. And here I should remark, that the Mahratta elephants-at least those who are merely used for the Suwarree-have a style of gait and maintien peculiar to themselves, and are as superior in appearance to ours, as the English thorough-bred racer is to the earth-stopper's hack. The Company's elephants, probably from having been rode too young, and oppressed with burdens, shuffle along with short steps, their necks bent, and their heads hanging with the melancholy air of an Oxford Street hackney-coach-horse. The Mahratta elephant strides majestically along, his head elevated far above his shoulder, and his tusks standing out horizontally. The chiefs pride themselves greatly upon these animals, and take pleasure in teaching them a variety of tricks. As the procession passed one of the courtiers, who was riding or driving his own beautiful little elephant, he made it kneel down and salaam with its trunk, and then follow the cavalcade, still on its knees, for about one hundred yards. As soon as Scindia had arrived within one hundred paces of our party, he drew up his elephant; and after the master of the ceremonies had passed and repassed—(and trespassed upon our patience)

Mahratta mobility, who seem to be endowed with the same propensity for staring and gaping as other mobs. The two parties descended simultaneously from their houdahs, and confronted each other, more like bitter enemies preparing to come to blows, than as friends meeting in amity and concord. The old com-mandant—with his triangular, knave-of-spades face—then came forward, and, with the resident, led the officers of the staff up by twos, to be presented to the Maha Rajah, who-no doubt well schooled beforehand—coolly and in-differently returned our salaams. Maha Rajah Mookub Rao Scindia, the descendant of the peishwa's slipper-bearer, is about twelve years old, and, for a Mahratta, a well-grown, goodlooking boy, though of unusually dark com-plexion. He wore a dress of quilted crimson silk, with pyjamas of gold keemcab, and a plain crimson turban, ornamented with a diamond aigrette; pearls, emeralds, and diamonds, being profusely disposed over his whole person. As soon as the English staff had undergone presentation, the Mahratta courtiers were, to the number of forty, introduced in like manner to the British chief: some of them were very richly accoutred; and others, on the contrary.
most shabbily and even squalidly attired. The accolade fraternelle between his lordship and the boy-king next took place; after which ceremony we all remounted our elephants, and having given his majesty a quarter of an hour's start, in order to allow of his reaching the palace before us, we followed him to the 'Mahratta camp.' The amphitheaue of hills around us was crowded with movine masses of spectators, whose persons all bowed to the ground as the little despot passed. A body of about thirty camel-artillery separated the two cavalcades, and kept up a tremendous fire à discrétion. On passing a narrow defile in the chain of hills, we suddenly came in view of the Mahratta camp, stretched below us in a tolerably fertile and well-wooded valley, and bearing about as much the appearance of a camp as do the Pavilion and Steyne of Brighton. In place of tents, handsome snow-white minarets, temples, and palaces, peep from among the neem-trees in every direction; and we very soon found ourselves in a street as long, and nearly as well provided with shops, as the Chandee Chowk of Delhi."

They afterwards witnessed some sort of Oriental tournament, and dined with the Mahratta monarch.

"Quitting the scene of the jousts, we proceeded to our dinner engagement at the royal palace, and after undergoing another durbar, which appeared even longer and more tedious than that heaviest of half hours which usually precedes a dinner-party in England, we were ushered in grand state into the banquetinghall, a lofty vaulted apartment, bearing more the appearance of a chapel than a dining-room. A long table was laid down the centre of the hall, and a line of chairs ranged for the guests along one side of it, whilst the other was left open for the operations of the ministers to our appetites, and to expose us more satisfactorily to the curiosity of the spectators. The former were chiefly Hindoos of respectability; and it was the first time that any of us had been waited upon at table by members of that sect The latter were composed of the Maha Rajah, his relatives, and courtiers, who sat apart from the table, but in such a position as enabled them to entilade its whole length with their curious eyes. The partial upraising, too, of a equally long sword-knot of green silk fringed —about twenty times between the two great silken purdar, above the door at the top of the with silver; massive gold bracelets and amulets powers, a space was cleared from the curious hall, betrayed to us, that eyes invisible from below-those of the pretty pensioners of the zenana-were employed in criticising the Feringees' feast. The Hindoos are mere tyros in gastronomy, as compared with their more courtly and fastidious neighbours the Mussulmans: some of their pillaus and cawabs were. however, sufficiently savoury. The dishes were not placed on the board; but were carried by troops of zealous attendants down the untenanted side of the table; each in rapid succession presenting his smoking burden, describing its exquisite qualities with the eloquence of an auctioneer, and exhorting the guests in the most moving terms to partake of it. Refusal was out of the question, and in a few minutes my plate became a perfect mountain of confused sweets and savouries - a rudis indigestaque moles !- a complete culinary chaos! Our entertainers must have thought us a right merry set of fellows, for we were all nearly convulsed and I was quite choked with laughter, excited by the very eager and enthusiastic manner in which some of the table-attendants displayed the good points of their respective viands. One fellow exalted a large fried fish in mid air, holding it up by the tail in his fingers; and wound up his declamatory eulogium by plumping it down on my plate, which was already swimming with a kind of crême fouettée, ad-ministered by his precursor. A second uplifted by the leg, and twirled between his finger and thumb, a huge cawabbed capon, which, from its gigantic proportions, and the sprawling, untrussed state of its limbs, exceedingly resembled a young grilled Hindoo. No dish appeared a second time, each being carried off as it reached the foot of the table; series after series came in, and we might have been dining until this moment, had not his lordship requested their forbearance just as they were ushering in the fiftieth course. I omitted to say, that the table appurtenances were furnished by the resident. Thus ended the first and only feast that I was ever bidden to by the disciples of Brahmah; and if in culinary qualities it fell short of the Mussulman tables which had been spread for us during our tour, it was at least infinitely more productive of food for merriment. We rose from this amusing though fatiguing banquet, with heads aching from the savoury vapours of the smoking hecatombe heaped by our profuse hosts upon the altar of our appetites, and with sides aching from the cachinnatory convulsions we had undergone, the semi-suppression of which was even more arduous than its unrestrained indulgence would have been.

" In taking leave," says the author, in conclusion, "of this eccentric people, however, it is but justice to pay them the passing compliment of confessing that my personal acquaintance with them, slight as it was, tended to raise them a hundredfold above the standard of my preconceived opinion. The wandering horde of lawless freebooters, who, like a flight of locusts, spread for so many years their desolating influence over the fertile provinces of India, have at length, emulative of the more respectable bee, quietly alighted in one swarm, and gradually settled down into a regular government; contenting themselves with the revenues drawn from their own states, instead of playing the highwayman in the dominions of their neighbours: an amelioration in civil government, as well as in moral policy, for which they are indebted more perhaps to the overawing influence of the British power than to be scarcely distinguishable one from the other : property is respected, as the rich Munny Ram's unviolated coffers attest; hospitality and good faith towards strangers are in pretty good practice; and heads rest with a tolerably secure tenure on their own native shoulders.

The rest of the volume is dedicated to sport. ing intelligence, a voyage down the Ganges to Calcutta, a visit to Porce the locale of Jugger. nauth, and an account of the voyage home via the Cape, St. Helena, &c., in the Pallas, commanded by Captain Fitzclarence. Of these we have left ourselves little room to say any thing, but will try to add a variety or two in our next.

A Geological Manual. By Henry T. de La Beche, F.R.S. F.G.S. Second edition, corrected and enlarged. 8vo. pp. 564; with 108 Wood-cuts. London, 1832. Treuttel and Würtz.

MR. DE LA BECHE has accomplished his task with industry and ability, and his Geological Manual is a valuable compendium for the use of the student, or the reference of the practical observer. In works of this description there are many difficulties to overcome; some connected with the author, others with the subject itself: among the first we may more particularly notice the difficulty of even stating those results which force themselves upon the mind, without entering into the details which sanction them, and from which they spring; and in the latter we most certainly have to consider with caution that repetition of organic species which has resulted from two very different causes, - the extent of the collateral branches of natural history, which are made to give their assistance to this laborious subject; and lastly, the knowledge of physics, which is necessary when we begin to investigate the history and causes of any species of change to which the earth may be subject, whether past or future. The progress of geology has been acknowledged on all hands to have been precisely the reverse of that which has obtained in the exact sciences. Men began with the transcendental, and advanced to the rudimentary. The first geologists elaborated their systems in their closets; the next race combined the facts of nature in the most philosophical manner that their abilities or opportunities permitted, and deduced theories, legitimately so called; the last do little more than collate their notebooks, - give a natural-historical account of what they see, - identify their shells or plants with Sowerby or Brogniart,—and deposit their insulated facts in archives, which are to be the mines out of which a future and happier race of philosophers are to draw conclusions and build hypotheses. From this state of modern geology, prosecuted in this country by men of independent means with zeal and enthusiasm, such a multiplicity of sciences, many of them burdened with enormous technical labour, have become necessary to form a complete geologist, that it is in vain to look for such a ' perfect monster." Few works, pretending to represent the science as it at present stands, have made their appearance these many years. One of recent date and unbounded pretensions has been extinguished by the anathema of one of the first authorities in Europe; a second, calling itself a System of Geology, never shook off the weight of the few columns which we devoted to the analysis of its contents. Prof.

are no longer so confounded and blended, as to the field almost without a rival, and certainly without any thing that approximates to it in simplicity of detail and correctness of execu-tion, and which withdraws itself from the pale of criticism by not attempting to enter upon those speculations or those deductions which the author knew full well were to be drawn from the immensity of facts presented by this noble science.

Mr. de la Beche's work has been called the dynamics of geology; and we are certainly in-clined to think this not only the most interesting part of the science, but that which will ultimately lead to the most correct and definite views of the theory of the formation or degradation of the earth's crust. Who would assert that a person unacquainted with the technical part of those branches of natural history which are necessary to the successful knowledge of the different formations, could not appreciate the constancy of the laws of superposition? The doctrines of the parallelism of chains of synchronous elevation are purely dynamical considerations, and yet they will lead to an entire reform in the deductions as to the relative ages of basins and uplands as well as of mountain chains. As an afterconsideration, geology is a science which ought to be, and will eventually be, treated analytically, and the general principles deduced from previously collected data or accumulated facts. The superficial distribution of land and water should be studied after the principles laid down by De Humboldt; and we might say the same thing of those general features of the globe which give to it its irregularity, and whence originate its contrasted configurations. The chapters on the natural history of the sea, on active volcanoes, on coral islands, do not attain that perfection which we should have desired, more especially where, however, confined by the wish for brevity.

Analysis is expected in the author of a Manual, which must be considered the most valuable and the most important which we possess in the science of which it treats.

England and France; or, a Cure for the Ministerial Gallomania. Pp. 268. London, 1832. Murray.

A POLITICAL volume of very considerable talent, hot on the Tory side, and severely censuring every part of the administration of Lord Grey. Non nostrum, &c.

School and College Classics. The first five Books of Livy, with English explanatory Notes and Examination Questions. By D. B. Hickie, LL.D., Head Master of Hawkshead Grammar School. Pp. 444. London, Longman and Co.; Whittaker and Co.; Baldwin and Co.

WE rather suspect, for our memory cannot be expected to be so fresh over eight hundred Nos. as over those of a year or two, that we have not particularly and individually noticed the volumes of this series of school-books as they have appeared. Dr. Bloomfield's Thucy-dides (No. 738) and Stocker's Herodotus we are sure we spoke of with the high encomium their excellence deserved; and we now take the opportunity to recommend, with this useful edition of Livy, the Rev. J. R. Major's Orestes of Euripides, with a translation of Porson's Notes; the Prometheus, with English notes and examination questions; Sophocles' Œdipus Coloneus and Œdipus Rex, after the the march of honesty in themselves. Be the cause, however, what it may, the effect is bene-ficial. In Mahratta ethics, meum and tunn be redeemed; and the present work occupies Barker; and Twelve Select Orations of Cicero, from the Text of Orellius. All these are capital school copies, and contain much critical and general information of great value to the more advanced student.

To such we would further mention in terms of high praise "Introductions to the Study of the Greek Classic Poets," by H. N. Coleridge, in which will be found a mass of judicious remark and elegant literature, though adapted principally for young persons.

Art in Nature, and Science anticipated. By Charles Williams. 18mo. pp. 324. London, 1832. Westley and Davis.

don, 1832. Westley and Davis.

An engaging work, by which the young may be led, not only into the elementary knowledge, but into a pleasing acquaintance with many interesting objects of natural history. Some of the technical terms are perhaps rather tough; but there is a most useful mass of information communicated in an entertaining way.

Waterloo: a Poem. By Thomas Jackson, Esq.
Pp. 84. Longman and Co.
A sour of rhyming review of this famous battle: the details of a despatch versified.

Village Lectures. By the Rev. J. D. Parmeter, B.A. 12mo. pp. 200. Hatchard and Son.

THE creation and fall of man are simply but emphatically illustrated in these addresses. Copious and good use is made of the most learned and pious commentators; and altogether the volume is one of practical and Christian merit.

Analogies of Organised Beings. 8vo. pp. 157. Oxford, 1831. Collingwood.

SUGGESTIONS on the analogies of organised beings, which imply the theory of their relations, and the conditions of their existence, must always be of considerable interest to science; but we doubt very much if the circle of application adopted by the author of the work now before us can do much towards advancing those interests. The doctrines of analogy, as assumed by the school which, from the days of Aristotle, has considered them as a series of resemblances which convey no idea of unity of composition; the doctrines of the philosophers who suppose the necessity of conditions, as a basis for the analogies of structure and function. implying a uniform type in the animal creation; and the analogy opposed to affinity in the obscure, yet ingenious, theory of a revolution in circles of smaller diameters into others of greater, either of a binary or a quinary system, each circle being composed of a typical and of aberrant members,-present us with very distinct and opposite conceptions of the importance of that analogy which has always been known to exist in the animal kingdom and to the relations which the individuals of that kingdom bear to one another. On the discussion now pending between two celebrated naturalists. we decidedly lean to the opinion that the doctrine of affinities, in other words, that the system of Mr. MacLeay, is a natural one; but the doctrine which regards vultures, for example, as having an affinity among members of their own group, but only an analogy to dogs and to insects which feed on carrion (Necrophaga Latreille), is only a step towards that system which can trace a theory of analogies throughout the whole animal kingdom, and which must also be natural as long as organisation and function lend their aid in establishing those remote analogies. It is not whether analogy means the similarity of two things, or the similarity of sameness of two relations-"a resemblance of ratios" (λόγων ὁμωότης), that can guide us in these researches; it must be considerations on the unity of composition evinced in the analogy in the organisation and condition of existence of creatures which have no immediate affinity to one another, which also demonstrates that the doctrine of analogies can afford us the same insight into a natural system as the doctrine of affinities, only that its views will be more extended, and its prosecution will demand a more laborious inquiry into comparative anatomy. It is on this account that we point out the incapability of Mr. Duncan's work to forward the interests of science; for, though crowded with interesting facts of analogous structure and analogous functions or habits of animals, it wants a philosophical basis to render them at all available to the purposes of science. The introduction of the vegetable kingdom in these analogical comparisons for they cannot take a higher title-is, farther, a mere object of curiosity, portraying ingenuity in the author, but little novelty of research.

The Aldine Poets, XIX. Milton, Vol. III. London, Pickering.

ANOTHER worthy accession to this justly popular work, and in itself a charming volume, with the more miscellaneous poems of our immortal bard.

Population Returns of Great Britain, according to the Returns made to Parliament in 1831: together with the Annual Value of Real Property, as assessed in 1825. Arranged in Alphabetical Order by John Gorton, Editor of the "Topographical Dictionary." 8vo. pp. 112. London, 1832. Chapman and Hall. WE recently noticed a publication of the same class: and, when we look at the importance of these returns to future politics and statistics, we must bestow our hearty approbation on Mr. Gorton for the pains he has taken in going into the most minute details, and giving them the convenient arrangement of alphabetical order. Reference is thus made easy and immediate; and the work, at the same time cheap and useful, is well adapted to the public wants. We miss, however, the specification of males and females, as in the original returns: we hope the difference of sex still exists, or we might conclude, as Mr. Gorton's book does-" End of Population."

Roman History for Youth; with 76 Engravings from Drawings by Brooke, &c. &c. By Thos. Rose. London, 1832. H. Fisher and Co. This is a very concise and clever little epitome of Roman history, and excellently suited to the capacity of readers from six to ten or twelve years of age. The pictures are quite the thing; and the separation of the notices of other objects at different periods, from the historical narrative, is very judicious.

Twenty Parochial Sermons. By the Rev. C. Girdlestone. pp. 360. Oxford, H. Parker. Practical, useful, cheap, and excellent in every respect: exemplary to the clergy as a clerical work, and one of the fruits of a Christian pastor's duty conscientiously performed, this volume deserves to be widely circulated among all classes of the community.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

R. LANDER'S NEW EXPEDITION TO AFRICA. THE preparations for this interesting expedition are proceeding with activity; and it will probably very soon leave the shores of England. It is not easy to prophesy what the results may be; but it is surely an enterprise every way worthy of the British character, and one likely to be productive of future consequences, the importance of which it would be difficult to overrate either in a commercial or in a moral and political view. Sir John Tobin is, we are informed, one of its great promoters; and the immediate objects contemplated are, to ascend the Niger, to establish a trade with the natives, and to enlarge our geographical knowledge of the country. When we look at the dense population described in the brothers Landers' journal, it is obvious that in them may be found a mighty market for the manufactured goods and wares of England; for the cottons of Manchester, Glasgow, &c. and for many other products of our skill and industry. In return for these, the rich commodities of gold, ivory, hippopotamus' teeth, and the more common articles of wood, peltry, gums, &c. &c. may be imported; and, if encouragement be given, indigo and other valuable things would be largely cultivated to barter with Europe. And yet nobler aims are before us, -the ending of the traffic in human beings, and the gradual enlightenment and civilisation of Africa!!

To commence this auspicious work, Richard Lander sets out on his third voyage to that country, accompanied by his younger brother: John, we believe, remaining as his locum tenens in the place bestowed upon him by government. The sum of 300l. has, we are told, been already presented by Sir J. Tobin and the individuals concerned in the mercantile speculation; and it is hoped that the Admiralty will lend all the aid it can, even if it does not send out some competent person to make scientific observations and surveys, which we should think very desirable. The steam-vessel, in which the travellers embark, will be attended by a sailing craft, with fuel, stores, and supplies, so as not to exhaust the former on her progress to her destination. She will ascend the river as high as is expedient, and become a depôt, while a smaller steam-boat, of shallow draught, will adventure farther up the stream. This is of cast-iron, and is capable of going where there is four feet of water; and as Mr. Lander's experience will carry him forward at the time when the Niger is swollen by the rains, there is great reason to hope that he will surmount every difficulty of falls, and currents, and flats, and reach the famous Timbuctoo in his iron shallop! What will the natives say when they see such a vessel, and impelled by such a power as fire-generated steam? Forth, our gallant countrymen; and may it prove that Audaces Fortuna juvat!

EGYPTIAN AND GREEK ANTIQUITIES, &c. WE have lately been indulged and gratified with the inspection of a rich collection of the most interesting memorials of antiquity, made by a private individual during an extensive eastern tour, and brought to this country in the highest state of preservation. Of the value of these treasures we can convey but a very inadequate idea to our readers; for they must be seen and examined in order to be duly appreciated. Mr. J. Sams, the gentleman who has so zealously and successfully devoted himself to this pursuit, not only visited Egypt, Syria, and Greece, but remained long enough in these countries to enable him to explore their hidden resources, and bring to light a multitude of objects which had lain in darkness for ages. From the tombs of Thebes, from the mountains of Sinai and Horeb, from the valley of the Jordan as well as from the Cataracts of the Nile, from the classic depositories of Greece, from the city and from the desert, he has with equal diligence and ability increased his store, and now possesses a mass of curious and instructive remains entirely worthy of a national museum.

^{* 12}mo. pp. 239. Part I. containing General Introduction and Homer. J. Murray.

Though we have spent hours in examining this multitude of vases, sarcophagi, papyri, inscriptions, bronzes, monuments, relievos, mummy-cases, hieroglyphics, articles indicative of the trades and professions of the dead buried two thousand years ago, manufactures, religious emblems, paintings, sculptures, coins, medals, clay-figures, and natural and artificial productions of every kind; we have found that to do justice to them our hours must have been extended to days and weeks. Separately, many of the specimens are calculated to excite much admiration and wonder; but it is as a whole that we are most tempted to extol the information they impress upon the mind. They teach us the progress of arts and sciences from the cradle of the human race, till we see them perfected in the immortal works of Greece. In numerous instances this transition is remark. ably illustrated not only by the finished, but perhaps still more by the unfinished examples of various kinds of production which Mr. Sams has been fortunate enough to secure. The painters' palettes, with their colours half pre-pared, shew us more of the art of painting than any picture could do; the imperfect inscription gives us more insight into the manner and method of perpetuating these prevailing memorials than the most polished marble or lasting brass, on which the task has been completed. It is a striking circumstance, that all the monuments of ancient Egypt are covered with symbols and inscriptions, as if that people were determined that nothing respecting them. their rulers, their rites, and their institutions, should ever perish: yet all are lost, or at least involved in such doubt and mystery, that it is only now in our day, after the lapse of ages, that some approach has been made towards developing these unintelligible records! The collection of which we are writing is pre-eminently fitted to promote this research, not more by its splendid contents than by its novel and minute articles, which, as it were, open the private doors of the Coptic or Ethiopic artisan, and make us as well acquainted with his internal economy as the costly sepulchre and magnificent temple tell of the Pharach and his historical deeds. The children's balls and ninepins are fully as instructive as the pyramid and obelisks; and will serve us better in regaining a knowledge of the early habits of our species than the sphynx, so hard to be unriddled.

What may be the destination of Mr. Sams's collection we cannot tell; but sure we are that it ought to belong to the English nation. Such, we learn, is also the opinion of all who have been favoured with a sight of it, including several of our most enlightened antiquaries; and we do trust, in spite of the too common feeling which depreciates what is so truly wealth, when compared with the merely economic, useful, and necessary, that ere long these relics of the old world will be safely arranged in the British Museum. We have attempted no description of the Greek vases, &c. but there are some of the most beautiful we ever saw, and singularly interesting from their mythological representations.

which we ever enjoyed.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MR. COWPER on improvements in the loom for weaving figured silk. The principle of figure-weaving consists in keeping up the pro-per threads of the warp while the weaving is going on, and then dropping these figure-threads into their places again. This was illustrated on a large scale by weaving a figure with slips of paper an inch wide. The ordinary mode of raising the figure-threads was explained, and the beautiful invention of the Jacquard loom was illustrated by drawings and models: by a series of threads attached to a board, a sort of working diagram was formed. In the old mode the changes in the arrangements of the figurethread were produced by certain groups of strings being knitted together, and were limited to 80 or 100; in the Jacquard loom they are produced by perforated cards. A specimen of silk was exhibited, containing 400 changes, produced by 400 cards; together with another specimen produced by 2000.

After Mr. Cowper's illustration, Professor

Ritchie exhibited the arrangement he had made for obtaining the spark from the magnet, and exploding gases by its means. The experiment was very successfully performed several times. Mr. Faraday shewed the arrangement he had adopted for obtaining the spark, which he rendered beautifully visible. The magnet he used was the natural loadstone belonging to Professor Daniell.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

On Monday last this Society held its first anniversary meeting, when a very satisfactory report was made of its affairs. From this it appeared that 450 members had now joined the Society, and paid their contributions to its bankers :that of the sum thus accumulated, 36571. 10s. was invested in the purchase of 4000l. 31 reduced stock, leaving, on the 31st March last, a balance in the bankers' hands of 6111, 14s. 7d.: and that the annual income of the Society was about 700L, exclusive of his Majesty's gracious donation to it of fifty guineas yearly, to constitute a premium for the encouragement of geographical science and discovery. Par-ticulars were also given of the expenditure, which for the first eighteen months did not much exceed a year's income. The report was ordered to be printed for the use of the members; and the election of council and officers for the ensuing year was proceeded in.

for the ensuing year was proceeded in.

The following were re-elected:—
President.—Right Hon. Lord Goderich.
Vice-President..—G. B. Greenough, W. R. Hamilton,
Eagra, Col. Leake.
Treasure.—John Biddulph, Esq.
Secretary.—Capt. M'Konochie.
Foreign Secretary.—Rev. G. C. Renouard.
Counsellors.—Francis Baily, Esq., Capt. Beaufort, John
Britton, W. Brockedon, Robert Brown, Esqra, Sir A. de
Capell Brooke, Hon. M. Elphinstone, Col. Sir A. Fraser,
Sir J. C. Hobhouse, Col. Sir J. T. Jones, George Long,
R. I. Murchison, Thomas Murdoch, Esqua, Capt. Smyth.
In the room of John Barrow, Esq. who retired from the vice-presidency, R. W. Hay, Esq. was chosen; and in the places of Lord Althorp, Capt. Basil Hall, Mr. Hay, Major the Hon. G. Keppel, Col. Montettla, Sir G. Murray, and Lord Frudhoe,—Mr. Barrow, Mr. A. Bach, Gen. Sir A.
Bryce, Mr. W. P. Craufurd, Capt. Owen, Dr. Richardson, and Mr. John Ward, were elected into the Council.

In the evening an ordinary meeting was also

In the evening an ordinary meeting was also held, when a paper was commenced, contri-buted by Captain Owen, R.N., giving the particulars of an expedition up the river Zamberi to Senna, performed, under his directions, by some of the officers of H.M.S. Leven, when some of the officers of H.M.S. Leven, when engaged in surveying the east coast of Africa; full account of the transit will be found.

Altogether, the view of the collection has but of this we shall not offer any analysis till been one of the greatest treats of its nature it is concluded. A short communication was also made, and received with great satisfaction, that Dr. Richardson, the able and intrepid companion of Sir John Franklin in his polar expeditions, had volunteered his services to his Majesty's government to conduct an expedition from the Hudson's Bay Company's settlements to the Northern Ocean, in search of Captain Ross;—and that sanguine hopes were entertained that this offer would be accepted, and a small expedition fitted out accordingly.

ROYAL ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY.

F. BAILY, Esq. in the chair. - The following communications were read: On the transit of Mercury of May 5th, from the Astronomer Royal, Mr. Riddle, Mr. Simms, and Professor Hamilton. On the occultation of Saturn, on May 8th, from Capt. Smyth, Mr. Simms, and the Rev. M. Ward. New method of clearing the moon's distance, by Baron Zach. Method of ascertaining the rate of the moon's variations in right ascension, by Lieut. Raper. Determination of the solar parallax from various observations of the transit of Venus in 1769, a posthumous paper by Don J. J. de Ferrer; and two other papers. Five gentlemen were elected fellows, and M. Legendre, of the French Institute, was chosen an associate.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

MAY 2d. - Mr. Murchison, president, in the chair. Several fellows were elected. A paper was read, on the geological structure of the north-eastern part of the county of Antrim, by James Bryce, jun. Esq. M.A., member of the Belfast Natural History Society, &c., and communicated by Mr. Murchison.

May 16. - The President in the chair. A paper was read by Rev. Adam Sedgwick, Woodwardian Professor in the University of Cambridge, on the primary stratified schistone group of Cumberland.

LITERARY AND LEARNED. ROYAL SOCIETY.

DR. BOSTOCK in the chair. A paper was partly read entitled, on Herriot's Astronomical Observations contained in his unpublished MSS., belonging to the Earl of Egremont, by S. P. Rigaud, Civilian Professor in the University of Oxford. To the interesting contents of this communication we shall hereafter refer. Lord Oxmanton, M.P. and Woodbine Parish, H.B.M. Consul at Buenos Ayres, were admitted fellows.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

MR. HALLAM in the chair. - Mr. Rogers exhibited one of two stone cannon balls recently found at Woolwich, about fourteen feet below the surface of the ground. Mr. Blake exhibited a Roman urn, found at Cisbury Hill, near Findon, in Sussex. Mr. Woolcomb, of Plymouth, communicated a description of a recent discovery of gold and silver coins near that place, supposed to be Celtic or British, although it had been the opinion of some that the Britons had no gold or silver coins before the invasion of the Romans. They were concave on one side, and consequently convex on the other, and hore representations of horses; and some with only the fore parts of horses, accompanied by dots in particular places. [The description agrees much with some British coins found near High Wycombe, in Bucks, in 1827, and described by Mr. Norris in the 22d vol. of the Archeologia, p. 297.] Mr. Watton exhibited an instrument of brass found on the estate of Mr. Chadwick, at Rochdale, under an ancient oak, and from its situation must have lain there when the acorn was deposited from which the tree sprung; it was composed of two semi-circular pieces united, forming a ring of about six inches diameter,—one part carved in a massive knotted pattern, the other smaller, and richly engraved. It is supposed to have been either a bracelet, a collar of a serf or slave, or to be worn on the breast as a badge of distinction; probably the latter, as it appeared too large for a bracelet, and too small, as well as heavy, for the neck. Mr. Watton also communicated five letters from Edward, the third, and Henry, the fourth, Earls of Derby, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, for raising men, arms, and provisions.

May 17 .- Mr. Hudson Gurney in the chair. Mr. Rogers exhibited an exquisitely carved portrait of Charles the Second, by G. Gibbons. Part of a communication was read from the Rev. H. J. Todd on the Ocellum Promontorium of Ptolemy, on the Yorkshire coast, considered by Mr. Todd to have been at Flamborough Head, in opposition to Camden, and other authors, who have variously fixed it at Kiln-

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

May 16th. - The President, Lord Dover, in the chair. A further portion of Sir William Gell's learned work, in manuscript, was read by the foreign secretary: the part selected relates to the History and Antiquities of Campagna. Earl Gower was elected a member; and presents of books, &c. were announced from several members.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

RIGHT HON. C. W. W. WYNN in the chair. Donations: from Viscount Goderich, Clough's Singhalese and English Dictionary ;-from the President, the Parliamentary Papers on East India Affairs, published in 1830—1831, 14 vols.;—from Von Hammer, his edition of Marcus Antoninus in Greek, with a translation into Persian by himself; also the 8th vol. of his History of the Ottoman Empire, &c.; from Charles Coleman, Esq., his work on the Mythology of the Hindus, and a very curious representation of a series of temples, composed entirely of manuscript, on paper upwards of fifteen feet in length. The writing is merely a repetition of the name of the goddess Durga. The following papers were read, An account of the Mookwas in the district of Putlam in Ceylon, by Simon Casi Chitty Monegar. They are a very industrious and peaceable tribe, whose customs bear a great resemblance to those of the Nairs on the Malabar coast. There were two or three other papers on agriculture and antiquities, by natives of Ceylon, communicated to the Society by Colonel Colebrooke, to whom they were given for that purpose by the authors, while he was in that island. A paper by Professor Rask on the Zend language and the Zendavesta, was also read. M. Anquetil du Perron was persuaded that the Zend was the old language of Media, and that the books preserved in that tongue were the authentic works of Zoroaster, and, of course, written five or six centuries before Christ. Mr. Erskine, in an ingenious and learned memoir on the sacred books and religion of the Parsees, printed in vol. ii. of the Bombay Lite-hand, that the Zend is a dialect of Sanscrit, introduced from India for religious purposes and never spoken in any part of Persia, and that the Zend writings were restored and brought into their present form in the reign of Ardashir Babigan, or about A.D. 230. Professor Rask prefers the first hypothesis, as the most easy and natural, though far from being proved by Anquetil; and applies himself in the remainder of his paper to an exposition of the reasons which induce him to think that of Mr. Erskine the least tenable; in doing which he enters into some details on the grammatical structure of the Zend language.

PIME ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY. [Second Notice.]

No. 215. The Destroying Angels and Demons of Evil interrupting the Orgies of the Vicious and Intemperate. A finished Sketch of that class of compositions called by the Romans " Visions. not having their origin in history or poetry. W. Etty, R.A.—"A house divided against itself cannot stand." Satan is here destroying his own work; an operation in which we heartily wish him success. Incongruous, however, as the design is, it reminds us in many parts of sea, Ravensburn, and even as including the the grandeur and energy of Michael Angelo; whole district of Holderness. luxuriance of pencil which we should in vain look for in any modern artist but Mr. Etty.

No. 222. Dinner-time. W. F. Witherington, A .- A delightful contrast to the lastmentioned subject. Here all is cheerful innocence, with which no fiend of darkness has any right to interfere. This pleasing picture is painted with Mr. Witherington's usual care and attention to detail.

No. 29. Rustic Civility. W. Collins, R.A. - Mr. Collins might, with reference to this picturesque and Gainsborough-like performance, have aptly quoted Campbell's well-known " And coming events cast their shadows before." We rejoice to recognise the full energies of his pencil in this, and again in No. 112. Skittle-Players, where he has entered into the gume with the spirit of an amateur. The scenery in both these charming works is beautifully picturesque.

No. 133. The Forgotten Word. W. Mulready, R.A. - One of this admirable artist's happy thoughts, clothed in his truly natural and graphic language. The puzzle in the boy's look and posture is inimitable.

No. 28. The Fair Maid of Perth; St. Valentine's Morn. W. Allan, A .- Much as we admire the picture by this able artist, noticed in our last number, this certainly carries away the palm. We consider it one of Mr. Allan's most successful productions; and if, as we understand, he has for some time past been labouring under indisposition, we sincerely congratulate him on such a proof of the return of his powers.

No. 239. The Saint-manufactory. T. Uwins. Mr. Uwins has here produced a whimsical and entertaining display of superstitious mummery: a pictorial satire well applied. Such a manufacture was carried on in the days of Isaiah, and is described by the prophet in his powerful, and, we may add, graphic style.
No. 30. Portrait of Rajah Rammohun Roy.

H. T. Briggs, R.A. Elect .- The character of this illustrious and extraordinary foreigner, and the probable effect of his opinions and writings upon his countrymen and the world at large, added to the expression of his countenance, the costume, prevent us from viewing the present performance in any other light than as an historical work; and that impression is confirmed by the elevated and admirable manner in which Mr. Briggs has treated his subject.

No. 24. The Juvenile Architects. more, jun....All that we have seen of this junior artist's recent works, including that under our notice, justifies us in saying, that in subjects of a familiar description he has, by the clearness and beauty of his colouring, as well as by the skilful management of his chiaroscuro, placed himself above the greater number of his contemporaries.

No. 194. Here: Much ado about nothing. R. T. Bone. - An attractive and faccinating female; painted with the clearness and in the style of Rubens's celebrated Chapean de Paille.

No. 225. Sketching from Nature: a View in Kensington Gardens. H. P. Bone. This is one of the latent besuties of Kensington Gardens, and is so entirely apart from their general character, that few but a painter in search of the picturesque would have discovered and brought it to light.

We will now saunter into the School of Painting. No. 279. Whitehall Stairs, June 18, 1817. J. Constable, R.A.—Every body knows the anecdote of poor Fuseli, who, when he was keeper of the Royal Academy, on one day leaving his apartment, upon the first floor of Somerset House, for the purpose of ascending to the great room, then open with the exhibition of the year, roared down the geometrical staircase to one of the servants of the institution, "John! pring me my emprella; I'm going to see Mr. Constable's picture!" St. Swithin has again been inspiring Mr. Constable in his present work, which is watery and threatening; although there is not quite so much of the deluge in it as in some of his former showers. Yet, with all his eccentricity of style, there are redeeming excellencies in Mr. Constable's productions, far beyond the reach of ordinary talents. The picture under our notice, for instance, possesses qualities of art sufficient to set up a score of mediocre painters. No. 355. The Fiery Furnace. Turner, R.A. - Judiciously placed by the hanging committee opposite the last-mentioned work, in order to prevent the room from becoming damp. Certainly, since the introduc-tion of chrome, more fires have broken out in art than formerly; and this is one of them-Another is, No. 256. ____, G. Jones, R.A. But these are not the only mischiefs of which the varieties of this ultra-brilliant colour have been productive in modern art. They frequently lead, in other subjects, to a forced and unnatural splendour, painful to the eye, and which reminds us of Wolcot's couplet:

"Go on, my lads; leave Nature's dusky bue, And, by and by, she'll come and copy you!"

No. 313. The Opening of New London Bridge. C. Stanfield. - Several very clever views of this event have already appeared; but Mr. Stanfield's, like the rod of Meses, swallows them all. It is one of the most magnificent spectacles ever presented by the hand of art. We are absolutely transported to the spot, and partake of the excitement of the crowd we gaze upon. There is that also which might "point a moral," in the dilapidated remains of the old bridge, seen through one of the arches of its proud successor.

No. 333. The Wounded Knight. E. T. Parris. - Mr. Parris's merits cannot be hid even in a corner; but still this beautiful work rary Transactions, considers, on the other dignity of his person, and the splendour of his was entitled to a more conspicuous situation.

It is of a very elevated character, partaking of the historical and the romantic. The figures are full of elegance and expression, and are exquisitely finished; the accessories are well imagined, tastefully arranged, and skilfully handled; and a rich, deep, and harmonious tone of colour pervades the whole picture.

[To be continued.]

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

(Third and concluding Notice.)

No. 359. King James the First and his Jeweller George Heriot. A. Chisholm.—This is decidedly the best work that we have seen from Mr. Chisholm's hands, and places him in the first rank of the Painters in Water-colours. It is brilliant both in colouring and in effect, and tells the story very dramatically. In art it is no joke to represent laughter, and especially "royal cachinnation." Some sacrifice of dignity must always take place; and this to a certain degree is visible in the picture under our notice, which, however, is in all other respects an admirable composition.

No. 126. Jenny Jones before Mrs. Deborah Wilkins. J. M. Wright. — Why where the deuce did Mr. Wright obtain his model for the vixenish fury of Mrs. Wilkins? We are unwilling to credit so foul an aspersion on the features of the beau sexe; and rather imagine that the idea has been generated in the mind of the artist, as that of the Olympic Jupiter was in the mind of Phidias.

No. 341. The Page. W. Hunt.—In our first and general view of the exhibition we mentioned this performance with just commendation, under the title of "A Negro." In addition to its excellence in character and execution, it is better proportioned to the field of the picture than most other heads by the same powerful and fertile artist.

No. 360. The Seametress. W. Hunt.—In our opinion, the most beautiful of Mr. Hunt's single figures. The charm of simplicity and sentiment was never more successfully represented.

No. 4. Dort,—Evening. S. Austin.—To this animated scene Mr. Austin has imparted a character of light, with a transparency of colouring, which it would be difficult to surpass; and in No. 201, Landscape on the Severn, he has invested a simple and ordinary group of trees, a flat country, and a little stream, with an interest which no ordinary powers could have conferred on them.

No. 31. Isaac of York, Rebecca, and Gurth.

J. W. Wright.—This artist is, we believe, a junior of that name; but he promises soon to rank with his seniors. His figures, however, are rather too large for the space of his picture; and the character of Gurth is a little too elevated: that of Rebecca is beautifully interesting. No. 409, The Confidential Communication, by the same artist, is replete with taste and elegance, and is sweetly executed.

No. 98. The Charlton Woods, near Greenwich (a study from nature), with Fallow Deer. Robson and Hills. No. 179. Cattle—Scene on the Banks of Loch Lomond. Hills and Robson.—Never did any two artists unite their powers with more complete success. It is impossible to conceive any thing more clear, brilliant, and natural, than these charming works.

No. 156. The Lump of Pudding; No. 170, Hot Bread and Milk. W. Hunt. — Truly comic. When Mr. Hunt condescends to make sport, he does it, like Samson, with a strong hand: we allude to his vigorous execution.

No. 84. Pastorella discovered by the Shepherd—Evening. G. Barret.—A composition of classic elegance and taste, with a due portion of the natural and the picturesque. The figures are so much in the style of Cristall, that on the first glance we imagined the performance was from the pencil of that veteran artist; the absence of whose fine works from the exhibition of this year we the more regret, as we understand that it proceeds from ill health. No. 102, Sunset, also by Mr. Barret, is a most brilliant display of tone and colour.

No. 111. Arethusa, pursued by Alpheus, is transformed by Diana into a Fountain. T. Fielding. — A beautiful representation of the cov nymb in her "melting mood" coy nymph, in her "melting mood."

No. 118. The Flight into Egypt. F. O. Finch.
—The figures entirely subordinate to the effect of light seen through the trunks and branches of a forest: the whole very original, both in character and in treatment.

No. 272. Two Sisters contemplating the Portrait of their deceased Mother. Miss L. Sharpe.—Interesting from the beauty of the character, the pathos of the sentiment, and the style of the execution.

No. 3. King Cophueta and the Beggar Maid. H. Richter.—So little has the fair lady the appearance of poverty, that on our first glance at the picture, we imagined the subject to be the interview of Solomon with the Queen of Sheba. It is, however, in Mr.

Richter's purest and best style.

No. 257. Interior of the Abbey of St. Owen, showing the Jubé which formerly stood at the entrance of the Choir. The Figures represent the Obsequies of the Cardinal d'Amboise, in 1510. F. Mackenzie.—We understand that the elegant and tasteful piece of architecture principally alluded to in the above title was destroyed during the French revolution; and that it has been represented in its original state from such documents as Mr. Mackenzie, who has executed his difficult task with great skill, could procure.

Having thus noticed in detail some of the prominent features of this truly interesting exhibition, our limits compel us to content ourselves with indicating by number and name a few of the most attractive among the remainder, viz.:—

No. 16, At Mousehole, Mount's Bay, Cornwall, H. Gastineau; No. 21, The Head of Corra Lin, Clyde, W. Nepfield; No. 23, At Venice, No. 24, At Ulm, S. Prout; No. 30, A Fort on the Genoese Coast, with native Fishermen, W. Walker; No. 55, Hôtel des Velociferes at Rouen, being a part of the remains of an ancient Convent, with the Paris Diligence preparing to depart, F. Nash; No. 57, A Cornfield, Lincoln in the distance, P. Dewint; No. 127, Fruit, Miss Byrne; No. 133, Fishinghut, at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, W. Evans; No. 140, On the Tees, near Athelstone Abbey, Yorkshire, H. Gastineau; No. 143, Cottage Scene, in the Grove, Droxford, Hants, W. Evans; No. 150, Entrance to Gunton Park, Norfolk, J. S. Cottman; No. 189, West Front of St. Paul's, from Ludgate Street, R. H. Essex; No. 193, Fruit, Miss Byrne; No. 204, Interior of the ancient Church of St. Valentine, at Juniages, on the Scine, F. Nash; No. 241, Entrance to Haddon Hall, D. Cox; No. 246, Candebec, W. Scott; No. 287, A Bittern, W. Hunt; No. 295, Chedder Cliffs, Somersetshire, S. Jackson; No. 309, Interior at Haddon Hall, Derbyshire, G. Cattermole; No. 312, At Maidstone, G. Pyne; No. 319, Suresen.

No. 84. Pastorella discovered by the Shep- J. Byrne, No. 365, Naples—Santa Lucia, herd—Evening. G. Barret.—A composition of J. D. Harding; No. 377, Retirement, G. Barclassic elegance and taste, with a due portion of ret; No. 383, Fruit, Miss Scott; No. 385, the natural and the picturesque. The figures Desdemona and Emilia, J. W. Wright, &c. &c.

ARTISTS' BENEVOLENT FUND.

On Saturday this benevolent institution held their usual anniversary dinner; Lord F. L. Gower in the chair; but in consequence of the excitement that prevailed, there was but a thin sprinkling either of artists or amateurs. We are sorry to see politics carried to such an extent, that people met together for the purposes of charity and social enjoyment, should almost the first thing try to mar both, and excite angry feelings:—we allude to those sapient gentry who chose to hiss the health of our good King and Queen. The dinner was capital, and, with this exception, went off very well;—especially as the subscription list was good, and munificently headed by the sovereign whose name was so ungratefully insulted.

SALES OF PICTURES.

MR. PHILLIPS'S room was crowded with amateurs yesterday, to attend the commencement of the sale of Mr. Morant's pictures. That worthy gentleman, and constant friend of the arts and artists, has, we learned with regret from Mr. Phillips's opening address, been obliged to leave London, in consequence of ill health, and submit his fine collection, of some forty years, to distribution. We have rarely seen an auction-room hung round with so many attractions, principally small cabinet pieces, and all of them of unquestioned originality. It was stated that they cost Mr. Morant above 22,000%, and we have no doubt of the fact, even allowing for the taste and judgment with which he purchased; for there are a hundred and twenty capital old masters in the first two days' sale, and seventy of our most emi-nent living artists in the third. The great variety and the character of these works made the exhibition for the last few days quite a gay resort; and above seven thousand persons visited the spectacle.

From Bond Street we travelled to Pall Mall, to look at a collection of pictures, some of them of very high quality, and for sale next week by Mr. Foster. Among these, passing by some genume Morlands, Gainsborough, Westall, Loutherbourg, &c. &c., we ought to notice a few chef-d'œuvres. A Holy Family, by Titian; a head, by Correggio; a Proccacini; a Giorgione; a monk, by Velasquez; an early Claude; and a perfect specimen of Jan Steen, particularly struck us; the Titian, Velasquez, and Correggio, especially, as worthy of the best attention of the lovers of excellence in the art.

MURILLO

WE have seen an Exhibition in Old Bond Street of three pictures by Murillo, which is well worth visiting. There are two single figures—the one a Galley-Slave, the other a Negro Boy—and a composition, "Isaac blessing Jacob." The last, especially, is one of the finest specimens of this celebrated master that we have ever met with.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Entrance to Haddon Hall, D. Cox; No. 246, Candebeo, W. Scott; No. 286, The Deserted Garden, G. Barret; No. 287, A Bittern, W. a beautiful head of an English setter, engraved Hunt; No. 295, Chedder Cliffs, Somersetshire, S. Jackson; No. 309, Interior at Haddon Hall, Derbyshire, G. Cattermole; No. 312, At Maidstone, G. Pyne; No. 319, Sundries, died suddenly last month, leaving a widow and W. Hunt; No. 361, The Mountain Stream, family in a state bordering on destitution. We trust that the hand of liberality will be ex- | He carried me 'ome, safe and sound, to my tended to their relief.

Lord F. Leveson Gower. Drawn from Life on Stone by F. W. Wilkin.

Force and sweetness are the characteristics of this fine drawing. Having been executed at once from nature, it has a remarkable air of truth and originality.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

THE EPPING HUNT.

To the Editor of the Literary Gazette. Sir,—I vould be hobliged by your hacceptance of the hinclosed heffusion. Respectfully yours,

E. SIMPKINS.

THE first time I 'unted I ne'er shall forget, 'Twas to Hepping I vent, and I got werry vet:

The rain rattled down so unkimmonly fast, That I thought I should surely be drownded at last.

My new leather breeches, though not werry In less than a jiffey stuck tight to my skin; And my beautiful coat, of a beautiful green, The most beautiful bottle vot ever vas seen, In the same little time vas all vet through and through, new.

Which griewously wexed me, because it vas But seeing as 'ow I vas fairly let in For a sousing, I made up my mind for to grin; And grin then I did, first at this and then that-

At Jinkins's coat and his shocking bad hat, At Higgins's 'oss, and at Higgins's boots, At the warious coats and the divers surtouts. But, O! 'ow delighted I vas at the start! Ven the stag vas turned hout on the 'ill from the cart, [begun, And the 'ounds followed a'ter—the 'unt vas And, in spite of the veather, 'tvas capital fun; Avay ve all scampered, men, 'osses, and all, Till ve came to a leap, ven I came for to fall Slap into a ditch: though I vas'nt much 'urt, I did'nt much like being kivered vi' dirt; But I thought it a trifle, for looking around, I saw lots of 'untamen stretched out on the ground. Amongst them vas Higgins and Higgins's son, In short, more vere hunder their 'osses than on. I mounted again, clapped my spurs in, but, zounds! The never a bit would my 'oss reach the 'ounds; Thinks I, is he hinjured? I'll get off and see-And, sure as a gun, he had broken his knee! I thought that my 'unting vas now at an end, Ven a man who vas thrown came and hoffered to lend

His 'unter, prowided I'd let him 'ave mine, To go to a surgeon's - for he'd hinjured his spine.

The swap was heffected, and hoff at full speed His hanimal started-no spurring he need; He fairly ran off, but so little I cared,

That stag, 'ounds, and 'untsmen, amazingly stared,

As I distanced them all, like a shot from a gun, Or a cloud in a tempest wot passes the sun; Thinks I, he'll be tired afore the next mile, So I gave him his 'ead till he came to a stile, Ven I pulled him up sharp-but 'tvas pulling in vain,

For hover he lept, and I fell hoff again. This fall vas a sickner-I came on my nose, And thought that my days had now come to a [in need,

Ven a friend picked me up-and a friend ven As the proverb remarks, is a friend, sir, invife.

Who svears to this day that John Brown saved my life-[Brown Vich he sartainly did; so my blessings on For bringing me hup in his buggy to town.

BIOGRAPHY.

JOHN TAYLOR, ESQ. THE author of Monsieur Tonson, &c., " bade the world good night" last week, and was on Monday buried at the parish church of Blooms-For more than forty years connected with the public press of London, and much with the theatrical world, few men were more generally known to the wide circles of society than Mr. Taylor. He was the son of the celebrated Chevalier Taylor, whose travels over the Continent as the curer of all diseases, boasted an éclat unrivalled in more modern times. Early introduced by him to life, Mr. Taylor himself practised with considerable reputation as an oculist; but his vocation was for the drama, journalism, and light literature; and he almost entirely gave up his profession to follow these. Mr. Taylor, we presume, wrote a greater number of prologues and epilogues than any man that ever existed; and he also produced an immense multitude of compositions on almost every subject, - friendly tributes on happy, and consolatory verses on sad occasions, lines on pictures, (for he was attached to, and no mean connoisseur in the fine arts,) songs, epigrams, and in short every species of poetical production. Some of his humorous pieces are pos-sessed of great merit: his Monsieur Tonson, for instance, is not surpassed by any thing of the kind in the English language. The small volume in which it appeared had several similar stories of hardly inferior point and merriment, including a story of Hayman and the Lion. In his later years Mr. Taylor published a larger collection of his miscellanies; but they were not deserving of being remembered beyond the period and circumstances which had elicited them. Mr. Taylor also wrote, we believe, a pamphlet on the dispute at the Haymarket Theatre (1791), and the brief biographical sketches which accompanied Cadell's British Gallery of Portraits. He was a clever and well-informed dramatic critic, and lived on terms of intimacy with all the principal performers of his day, being farther connected with the Kemble family by marriage,-his first wife and, we believe, Mrs. Stephen Kemble were sisters. In private Mr. Taylor was known to thousands as a most facetious companion. He was a punster of invincible perseverance, but often said very witty things; and in his better days was, perhaps, as entertaining in conversation, with anecdote, playfulness, and satire, as any man within the bills of mortality. He was for a long period a proprietor of the Sun newspaper, to which he contributed every sort of authorship to which the columns of a periodical is open. Mr. Taylor was acquainted with many of the most distinguished individuals of the age. By his second marriage, to a Scottish lady of highly respectable family, he has left a son, whose amateur musical talents are of a delightful order. Infirmities and age had of late years withdrawn him much from his wonted places; so that his loss will not be so obvious as if he had fallen in his gayer era, when, indeed, few men could have been more missed, even from the wide society of the metropolis, than John Taylor. It is believed that he has left MSS. of his Reminiscences; and if they embody what used to be his conversation, they must be very amusing.

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. XIII.

Garrick Club.

Ox Saturday, a number of members of the Garrick Club gave a farewell dinner to their president, the Earl of Mulgrave, on the eve of his departure for the government of Jamaica. About fifty sat down to dinner; but as this is to be considered rather a private mark of esteem and respect than a public meeting, we forbear going into details. Suffice it to say, that the Earl of Glengall filled the chair, and that the convivial enjoyment of the evening was upheld with unabated good humour and pleasantry to the midnight hour. On his health being drank, Lord Mulgrave addressed the company in an elegant and feeling manner; as did, at subsequent periods of the entertainment. Lord Glengall, the Marquess of Clanricarde, Mr. Frank Mills, Mr. Frank Sheridan (who being toasted as the grandson of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, returned thanks in a neat and appropriate speech), Mr. Mathews, Mr. Sheridan Knowles, and others. The agreeable alternation of song and humorous ballad was happily kept by Duruset, Power, Mathews, and Mathews junior, who chanted one piece as full of pun and point as it could well be stuck. We are inclined to suspect that this smart and amusing composition also owed its authorship to the singer. The party broke up highly delighted with their treat, and only desirous of repeating it on more auspicious occasions than such as the loss of their valued president.

Sir,-Your correspondent in the last Literary Gazette (answering the extract of a letter from Edinburgh, inserted in the preceding publication) seems to mistake the whole point. The question is not, whether Ben Jonson was sent home drunk by young Raleigh to his father, Sir Walter, who, in 1613, was then in the Tower; but whether there is any truth in the statement of Aubrey, Antony Wood, and others, that Ben Jonson was at any time tutor to young Raleigh? His biographers fix upon 1593, when young Raleigh was not born; but unquestionably the fact is, that Ben Jonson was his tutor in 1613; and we have the poet's own evidence for asserting that young Raleigh did make him drunk, and sent him home in that state. The last is only important as confirmatory of the first, regarding the tutorship; for nobody will hesitate long in believing, that it not unfrequently happened to old Ben to be sent home drunk. For my part I like him the better for it; and his company at the Mitre and Mermaid, whether drunk or sober, mus have been delicious, though, perhaps, a little dogmatical.

I can vouch for it, that if your correspondent will examine the original MSS. at Edinburgh (I think in the Advocates' Library), he will find that Drummond, of Hawthornden, gives the story as it was related to him by Ben Jonson, with a great deal of other curious matter, and of a scientific but not very pleasing character, not a little "scandal about Queen Elizabeth," and in many parts strongly reminds us of the of a nature not to be noticed more particularly. It is many years since I was in Edinburgh, but still I can bear out the general accuracy of your extract of a letter from thence.

I dare-say that Mr. Gifford never thought of looking at the papers; but I earnestly wish that somebody would undertake to publish all that is new and curious in them, especially the additions to the conversations between Ben Jonson and Drummond. The MSS. include a number of unprinted poems by Drummond; to the excellence of some of which, especially sonnets, I beg you to accept my testimony, until better evidence is produced in their favour.

I am, &c.

D. A.

MUSIC.

MRS. ANDERSON'S CONCERT.

OF the numerous concerts which it is our yearly pleasure to attend, we know of none more invariably distinguished than those of Mrs. Anderson; nor has the one for the present season. which took place on Friday, the 11th, proved any exception to our general remark. We always observe a happy peculiarity in this lady's arrangements, that they are so tastefully made as to afford no fatiguing preponderance of either the vocal or instrumental parts, but meet exactly what our neighbours the French would term the juste milieu. Mrs. Anderson, although suffering from illness (for which an appeal was made, but of which, in the brilliancy of her execution, not the slightest traces were discoverable), performed several pieces on the piano-forte, selected from Mozart, Czerney, and Hummel, which were listened to with the deepest attention and delight. Mori, who seems to have caught fresh inspiration from Paganini, Harper on the trumpet, and Miss Windsor, who executed a concerto on the harp with much skill and admired effect, afforded their unequalled aid. Madame Mariani, who has been since so well received at the King's Theatre, made her first appearance on this occasion before an English audience. The fine deep tones of her contralto voice have much in them to impress, but are certainly better adapted for the large area of the Opera House than the confined space of a concert-room. Madame Cinti Damoreau, Donzelli, and De Begnis, in the merry terzetto of Vada si via di quà, elicited a laughing and unanimous encore. The whole performance was of the most effective kind, and gave the greatest possible satisfaction.

Mr. Wigley's Concert, at Mr. Penn's, on Friday week. A great variety of musical talent contributed to the amusement of the evening. Mr. Wigley's duet with his daughter was warmly applauded; and Mr. Parry's perform-ance on the harp (one of our delicious old Welsh airs) drew forth a hearty encore. Miss Bellchambers, again, struck us as being much improved; but, perhaps, of all the entertainment, our favourite was Mori's exquisite performance on the violin.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

On Saturday was produced Pacini's serious opera of Gli Arabi nella Gallia, which might have been called any thing else with as good and in many parts strongly reminds us of the former works of the same composer. The choruses are the best, but even they are noisy. The great attraction or attractions of the evening were Madame Mariani and Signora Grisi, two new, and nearly the last of Mr. Mason's promised novelties; and with them he has faithfully and amply redeemed his promise to the public on opening his season. Mariani's voice is one of the finest and most powerful contraltos we have heard for a long time: of her looks we will say little, except just a hint to those who recollect Pesaroni, that Mariani might draw lots with her for loveliness; but there is withal something very intelligent in her face when lit up with expression, and when she sings, one no longer thinks of the defects of one portion of the system, which are completely thrown in the back-ground by the beauties of the other. Her first aria stamped her a favourite with the audience at once, and she improved upon them till the close. is a lady-like and pleasant actress and singer; her voice is rather thin, especially in its upper tones, but this is in a great measure carried off by her science, and by her execution of the music. We are glad to see that V. Galli does not object to take so insignificant a part as that of the old priest; his fine voice is a great addition to the choruses at the beginning of the opera; and by having some one of acknowledged talent to look up to as a leader, the choristers follow in good order, instead of being all leaders, which has been very often the case. Grisi and Mariani were both called for at the conclusion, and much applauded by a very full house. The opera is altogether well got up.

FRENCH PLAYS.

MADAME ALBERT still continues to delight us by her natural and unaffected acting in melodramatic pieces, and her piquant vivacity in vaudevilles. The admirers of Miss Kelly's style would do well to see Madame Albert, both in Deux Jours, ou la Nouvelle Mariée, and Valentine; pieces which bear a great similarity to each other, except in the finale. The simple and unaffected pathos with which she sustains the character of a woman deceived by her lover, we have not seen equalled on the French stage; and the melancholy sweetness which distinguish the slight-songs they can hardly be called, they are more-musical recitations, was quite affecting. In comedy, too, her naïve gaiety is quite irresistible.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

King's Theatre, May 9. Der Freischutz. The powers of the German magic balls are vet more wonderful than from the English version we were aware of; for the eagle almost out of sight) came bang down upon the stage with such force that it broke in three pieces, though the gun—flashed in the pan!! In the ballet there is a figure danced by four ladies in pink, and eight in white dresses; and the various combinations of the said dresses form the effect, the idea of the dance. On this occasion, one of the pink and two of the white were absent; so that the figure went off like a firework in the rain -it was necessarily a ceaseless succession of most distressing odd-ities and eye-sores, and was consequently danced from first to last to the inharmonious music of general hisses. reason; for, from beginning to end, one could never make out the point at which it was to finish; and, to tell the truth, we were just as triste. I never saw so many dandies on the wise at the end of the chapter. The music is stage.

O I remember Pasta once, in Il Crociato, hurrying to her dressing-room after the trio Ma il doer, un sacro onor and, on the audience not suffering the piece to proceed till the trio was sung again, hurrying on the wise at the end of the chapter. The music is stage.

The scene represented an archway, stage half-Crusader, half-Mameluke!

across which the things sauntered with a nonchalance truly amazing.

Clarence Theatre, May 10.—The new establishment, under the management of the accomplished Mrs. Fitzwilliam, where she acts and gags away delightfully, ad lib. On entering, dressed as a modern exquisite, her hat tumbled off her head; whereon she promptly addressed a person on the stage with, "Might I—a—beg the favar?—stays rather toight!" As the bottom of the curtain does not reach the stage by some half-dozen inches, we are amused between the pieces by an incessant flitting to and fro of feet in every imaginable variety of shoe, from the white satin of the proprietress to the clod-hopper of the sceneshifter.

Cobourg, May 11. - Owing, I presume, to the defalcation of some more appropriatelygarbed vocalist, the Ode of Triumph on the meeting of Kings Henry and Francis on the Field of the Cloth of Gold, was sung by a chambermaid! If this was not an "unrehearsed," the Wolsey who arranged the fete certainly lacked the taste and aristocratic punctilio of his prototype. King's Theatre, May 12. - In Gli Arabi nella Gallia, there was a procession of Arabs with stocks and shirt-collars; but such mixed costume was but a type of what followed. Rosa Mariani, who had been enacting a helmed and armoured hero, was called for at the fall of the curtain; but her part ending before the end of the play, it must have been plain to the reasonable portion of the audience that she must be at her toilet. The said portion must have amounted to nearly as many as three or four individuals; for all the rest of the house continued vociferating and clapping, till, though I did neither, my own lungs and hands felt quite tired and aching. last, she — no, he — no, it appeared; - but how describe what appeared? So wonderfully changed! Let those who saw it not, imagine a form-its mid person enveloped in a darkcoloured cloak, its legs encased in gleamy mail, and its head surmounted by a Regent-Street blue bonnet-bowing, and ducking, and laughing outright with real de bon cour, in participation of the joke of which itself was the object.

Strand Theatre, May 15. - Political gag whereof I spake my opinion in our last) was the order of the night. It mostly turned on being in and out of place, petticoat govern-ment, &c.; but none of the hits were of sufficient wit to warrant my recording them. A chamber-scene was lowered with such violence that it separated about one-half from its woodwork above, and hung down in the semblance of a gigantic dog-ear, the space revealing a corresponding portion of landscape behind. As it was out of the question proceeding with the play under this state of affairs, another chamber-scene kindly consented to sustain the part of the indisposed one at a very short notice. In a piece entitled How to die for Love, the whole point and joke turns upon the firing of a pistol, which (need I go on?) would not fire, and Mr. Gallot fell flat on the stage without being shot. Here, as in the Freischutz bungle, the effect was rendered more ludicrous by somebody else firing a pistol behind the scenes. Till people can master the impracticable manœuvre of firing a gun or pistol, I would strongly recommend the use of air-guns; and by specifying in the dialogue that they were such, the monstrous and insurmountable difficulty of producing flash and report might be altogether superseded.

VARIETIES.

A meeting of the Philosophical Cambridae... Society was held on Monday evening, Professor Sedgwick, the president, being in the chair. A paper by Sir John F. W. Herschel was read, containing a description of a machine for solving equations. A notice was also read of a visit by W. H. Yates, Esq., of St. John's College, to the magnetic mountain of Sipylus, near Magnesia, in Asia Minor; the mountain from which the magnet is said by Pliny to have derived its name. After the meeting, Professor Sedgwick gave an account, illustrated by maps, of the physical geography and the history of the Bedford Level.

London University.—The distribution of the prizes to the medical school took place on Wednesday, and afforded sufficient proof of the great advantages which have been derived from the pursuit of this important branch of education on a liberal and efficient scale. Already does the medical school of the University occupy a conspicuous place in the public estimation. and every year must add to its high character and usefulness.

Printers' Pension Society. - The Anniversary Meeting took place on Thursday, and we regret that we were unable to attend it. We have been more sorry to see a controversy in the newspapers, likely to injure this benevolent institution. It has been said, that every printer might, by economy and prudence, lay up, himself, a sufficient provision for old age, infirmity, or ill health; but surely this is assuming more than can be borne out by facts in any mechanical employment whatever. Even a single man, with constant health, unencumbered by perhaps a mother, sisters, wife, children, or dependent relation, could hardly do more than decently support himself, and lay by a modicum for the contingencies of life. Should he haveand how few are without having?-an extra burthen upon his exertions; where, in Heaven's name, is he to discover the means of funding a reserve, against the accidents of his laborious occupation, or the certainties of coming years?
Again, it is imputed to those concerned with the press, that they are of improvident and dissolute habits: we can only deny this from all we know of the class of men alluded to. In the office where this sheet is printed, as respectable a body of individuals as ever wrought at a trade, earn no bread of idleness; but yet, with all their intelligence and industry, we do not believe that the most liberally paid of them all could, by twenty years of saving, place themselves above every chance of misfortune and want. And it is for such cases only that a society like the present is intended; that society being largely, almost entirely, supported by the contributions of the parties themselves. Why then, when they seek the collateral aid of the humane and wealthy, should they be more condemned than the literary man, the actor, and the artist?—have not they also helpless widows and orphans to leave? do not they also grow aged, and feeble, and suffering? Surely it is not well to divert the stream of bounty from so just and reasonable a claim: far better were it that some undeserving should benefit, than that the deserving should perish. But we have every reason (as subscribers) to believe that the charity is wisely administered. Traveller,

L. E. L. - Some of our over-informed contemporaries have (as they often do) been amusing their readers with opinions upon a tragedy written by Miss Landon, and not only their own opinions, but the opinions of "the select to whom this play had been read. From these statements we were sorry to find that, though the tragedy had very great poetical merit, it wanted several requisites of a successful drama; was a little too diffuse, &c. &c. Now all this is extremely agreeable as literary intelligence; but, like a good deal of political news, it has one slight defect -- Miss Landon has not written a single line of the tragedy aforesaid!!

Sub-aquatics.—An individual was to be seen the other day in the river, near Battersea; and literally in the river, for he was trying an experiment of submerging himself by means of an apparatus and walking about at the bottom of the water. We were not near enough to ascertain the exact nature of his means, but they appeared to be simple and efficacious. A helmet covered his head, with a zone of glass round the eyes, so that every thing below is distinctly visible. Connected with this was a garb which enveloped his body down to the waist, where it was fastened, and all above is kept dry. A pipe rises to the surface for the air, - how managed, we cannot say; but we were told that the design had been found to answer both in the river (of which we had evidence) and 91 E09

Baron Cuvier. - The Paris Journals state that this celebrated naturalist was struck by paralysis on Friday: on Sunday night he died. His great work, the Animal Kingdom, maintains the highest place in the literature of every country; and we may observe that Mr. Griffiths' English edition has just reached Part XXXII. Insecta, Part V.—a very well-executed fasciculus.

The Halt in the Descri. The hot sun shrinks from the land of the Kurd. The hot sun shrinks from the land of the Kurd, As the welcome cry of the halt is heard; Weary and faint were they who had striven Through the sultry hours when that cry was given! From his courser's neck each has loosed the rein, And he feeds at will on the verdant plain—
The oasis he patiently toiled to gain—
Or drinks of the fount that is gushing by,
Whilst the sunset breeze wakes rejoicingly,
And Arab and Frank in brotherhood share
A hysprings rest 'mid the perfumed air. And any Faik in the perfumed air.
But the pearly light of the crescent moon.
From the blue arch gleams o'er that wide saloon,
And each Moslenz kneels as he views on high And each Moslem kneels as he views on high The auspicious sign in the starry sky. And the hum of the murmured rite is there, And the heave of the voiceless heart in prayer, And that balmy sense of entire repose That the trammelled spirit too seldom knows.

Mrs. Bray's White Hoods has just been translated into French: a well-deserved tribute to the talents of that accomplished lady.

Ops and Hiron. - A worthy alderman of Bradford, in Yorkshire, is so great a purist that he will never pay a bill that has got a fault of orthography in it. One day he received a bill for a pocket of ops (hops); the learned Prisoian sent for the witless wight, and giving him a good lecturing, asked if he was not ashamed to spell hops in that manner. "Why, sir, if you must know the truth, we have been obliged to do it ever since your brother-in-law took all the h's to spell iron."

Actual Conversation between an Irish Lady and an Irish Servant out of place .- " Ah! then I'm proud to see yer ladyship; and God reward ye and be good to ye, for the favour ye've shewn a poor lone ould craythur like myself! Sure, "Why what would I do but die only for ye?"

• Versified from a scene in the Journal of an Oriental don't you try to get a place ?" " A place is it? Och, it's my feet that's wore off looking after them for places; and the worst o' them wont take up wid me, 'cause I'm ould and Irish, which is a shame—and you, ma'am, and many like ye, from the sod, God bless ye!" "Well you must only keep up your spirits." "Troth ma'am, it's all I have to keep. And now there's two o' my front teeth gone; though to be sure they took the best time to be off, when I'd nothing for 'em to do."

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Litrrary Gasette Weekty Advertisement, No. XX. May 1868, 1882.]
Mrs. S. C. Hall, to whose less ambitious but valuable productions we have so frequently given the meed of our admiration, is, we understand, preparing for publication, a three-volume tale, under the title of the Bucation, as the some of which is laid along the coast of Kest and in the vicinity of London, during the latter years of the Protectorate.

A Manual of Grecian Antiquities, being a Compendion:
Account of the Manners and Customs of the Anciest Gresks, for the use of Schools, &c., by George H. Smith.
La Coquetterle, a Tale; Sketches of Society in France and Belgium.

A new edition of the first volume of Col. Napier's History of the War in the Peninsula, with a Reply to various Opponents, &c.

A History of the King's German Legion, from its organization in 1803, by Major Ludlow Heemish.

The Fourth Volume of the Cornwall Geological Transactions. [Literary Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XX. May 19th, 188.]

actions.

Mr. Thackrah, of Leeds, of whose first work en de-eases incident to the clothing districts we took made notice, is, we hear, preparing an enlarged edition of his work on Employments as affecting Health and Longevity work on Employment in general.

Introduction to Botany, by John Lindley, Esq.

An Introduction to the Knowledge of British Birds, for Young Persons, by R. A. Slaney, Esq. M.P.

LIST OF YEW ROOMS.

Rowe on the Ruins of Empires, 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—Astley Cooper on the Thymus Gland, 4to. 14s. bds.—Schiller's Flesko, a Tragedy, 8vo. 7s. 6d. bds.—Blackmere on Consumptions, 8vo. 9s. bds.—The Tollette of Health, Beauty, and Fashion, fcp. 5s. bds.—The Radical, a Autobiography, by the Author of the "Member," fcp. 3s. bds.—Short's History of the Church of England, 9vo. 8s. 8vo. 3ls. bds.—England, 9vo. 8s. 8vo. 8ls. bds.—Fifty Games on the Game of Chess, 8vo. 2vs. bds.; Fifty Games of Chess actually played, 8vo. 5s. bds.—Scott's Stourbridge and in Vicinity, 8vo. 3ls. bds.—The Church of God, in a Series of Sermons by the Rev. R. W. Evans, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Contarini Fleming, 4 vols. fcp. 1l. 4s. bds.—Fry's Scripture Principles of Education, 18mo. 2s. 6d. hf.-bd.—well's Parochial Sermons, 12mo. 5s. bds.—Tate's Horstin Restitutus, 8vo. 6s. 6d. bds.—Notes upon Notes, &c., with Seven coloured Plates, 18mo. 3s. sewed.—Paternal Advice to Young Men, 33mo. 1s. 6d. bds.; 2s. silk.—The Easter Offering, or Catholic Annual for 1832, 8vo. 10s. 6s. silk.

(3) It is worthy of note, that not a single volume of interest has issued from the press during this Reform-stern week.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1969.

May.	Thermometer.				Barometer.
Thursday	10	From	33.	to	53.	30-94
Friday	11	• • • • •	33.	••	57.	30-30	• •	30-22
Saturday · ·			33.	• •	53.	30-04
Sunday			35.	••	53.	29-68
Monday			31.	• •	5 3.	29-75
Tuesday	15	• • • • •	3 L	••		29-78
Wednesday	16	1	29.	••	57.	29-79

Prevailing winds, N.W. and N.E. Alternately clear and cloudy; rain at times on the 11th, 13th, and 15th.

Afternately clear and cloudy; rain at times on the lith, 13th, and 15th.

Rain fallen, 5 of an inch.
On the afternoon of the 15th, from three till four, this neighbourhood was visited by thunder and lightning, accompanied by a shower of hail. All who describe the peal of thunder heard at 20' after 3, give it as their opinion, that it was by far the loudest ever heard; several have felt slightly the effects of the electric fauls which preceded the thunder about half a second; an oak tree, about a quarter of a mile eastward of this place, was shattered to pieces, and the ground theown up at a little distance from its foot. At three o'clock the hail-stone fell so thickly, that in less than three minutes the ground was completely covered; the hail-stones were remarkably soft, resembling rather lumps of snow, of an irregular form, and measuring in the broadest part half an inch. During the storm the thermometer fell from 57 to 43.

Edmonton.

Charles H. Apage.

Edmonton.

Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N.

Longitude ... 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich. CHARLES H. ADAMS

TO CORRESPONDENTS. Δ will find an enclosure at our office.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

RTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT ARTISTS' GENERAL DELLEV CALLS, INSTITUTION, for the Relief of Decayed Artists, their Widows, and Orphans.

Patron.
HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF SUSSEX, K.G.

Vice-Patrone. The Duke of Bedford
The Duke of Devoushire, K.O.
Sir Thomas Baring, Barr.
The Marquess of Landowne
The Marquess of Westminster
The Earl of Shrewhury
The Earl of Dartmouth
Lord Grantham
Lord Grantham
Lord Panborough, G.C.B.
M.F.
William Josh. Denison, Eq. Lord Grantham
Lord Parnborough, G.C.B.
Lord Lyndhurst

Jesse Watts Russell, Esq.

President.
SIR MARTIN ARCHER SHRE, P.R.A.

The Nobility, Friends, and Subscribers, are respectfully informed, that the Seventeenth Anniversary Festival will be celebrated in Freemasons' Hall, on Saturday, the 26th instant, on

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF SUSSEX, K.G. has graciously signified his intention to preside. Stemande

Sir Henry Richardson
Joseph Hume, Esq. M.P.
William Off, Esq. M.P.
William Off, Esq. M.P.
Dr. Joseph Jones
George Baseri, Jun. Esq.
Prancis Bernasceni, Esq.
George Bubb, Esq.
Decimus Burton, Esq.
John Constable, Esq. R.A.
William Curling, Jun. Esq.
B. B. Davis, Esq.
J. Doyle, Esq.
James Hall, Esq.
Edward S, Hardisty, Esq.

rard.

(T. Harrison, Esq.
Henry Hawkins, Esq.
Jahn V. Hawkins, Esq.
Jun V. Hawkins, Esq.
William King, Esq.
Richard J. Lene, Esq. A.R.A.
Edward D. Leshy, Esq.
Arthur Mee, Esq.
James Robertson, Esq.
James Robertson, Esq.
W. C. Rose, Esq.
Charles Turner, Esq. A.R.A.
Edward Wystt, Esq.
T. H. Wystt, Esq

Dinner on table at Half-past Five o'Clock. The Vocal Department under the direction of Mr. Broadburst. Tickets, il. is. each, may be had of the Stewards; at the Freemasons' Hall; and of the Assistant-Secretary, 14, Duke Street, Fortland Place.

WILLIAM JOHN ROPER, Assistant-Secretary.

LOSE of the PRESENT EXHIBITION. British Institution, Pail Mall.—The Callery for the Ex-hibition and Sale of the Werks of British Artists, is open daily, from Ten in the Morning till Five in the Evening, and will be closed on Saturday next, the 56th instant.

Admission, 1s, Catalogue, 1s, The Gallery will be re-opened early in June, with a Selection of Pictures by Ancient Masters. WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

PRASER'S MAGAZINE.—An impression having got abroad that many of the early Numbers of this Periodical are not to be procured, the Publisher begs leave to state, that Reprints have been always made when required; and though it has occurred that the Stock on hand has often run very low, yet there never has been any difficulty in obtaining from him a complete Set, either in Numbers or in Vols. In all there are Twenty-eight Numbers, which may be had sewed, 2s. 6d. each, or in Volumes, (Six Numbers to a Volume), neatly bound in green cloth and lettered, 16s. 6d. each.

James Fraser, S15, Regant Street, Lendon; or by order, of any Bookseller or Newsman, in England, Ireland, or Soptiand,

THE PASSES of the ALPS, illustrated by WILLIAM BROOKEDON, complete in Two Volumes, containing above One Hundred Plates.

The price of this splendid Work, in S vals. boarded in clath and lettered, imperial Svo. 104; royal 440. Proofs, 184; ditto, India paper, 304; Proofs before the letters, imperial 4to. 204; ditto, with stchings, 404; colembler folio, with etchings, 604.

TO BE HAD OF THE AUTHOR, 39, Devoushire Street, Queen Square. Queen equate.

By an early application, Copies of the few Proofs that remain may be obtained.

"This beautiful and, we may add, magnificent work, has been completed in a style which makes us anxious to recommend so interesting a performance to our readers. A hundred and nine plates, charmingly engraved, will shew them what English are and on in representing the wildest and the most lovely scenes of nature; while the narrative is at once historically important and highly motrationing."—Literary Gasette.

This day is published,

SERIES of DESIGNS for GATE. LODGES and PARK ENTRANCES,

LODGES and PARK ENTRANCES,

By P. P. ROBINSON, Architect, P.S.A. and F.G.S.

Author of a Work on Rural Architecture, Designs for Villas, Designs for Farm Buildings, Village Architecture, and the Vitruvius Britannicus.

Sold by James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond Street.

MINIATURE PAINTERS, VI ARISTS generally, are solicited to inspect his very extensive and elegant Stock of Or-Main Ministure Frames, Main, Morocco Cases, &c., by W. Miers (Maker, by appointment, to Her Majesty), at Ne. 111, Strand, where, each Branch of the Trade being now conducted under his own immediate inspection, he is enabled to execute Orders in the shortest possible time, as well as to regulate his Prices lower than any other Maker.

A Hiberal Allovance is made to Arisin and to the Trade, and on Country and Foreign Orders.

W. Miers, No. 111, Strand, near Waterlee Bridge.

CERMAN SPA, BRIGHTON._The ERMAN SPA, BRIGHTON....The efficacy of the Mineral Waters of this Establishment, in Obetinate Disorders of the Dispetion...In Diseases of the Liver and Urinary Organs...In Derangements of the Female Constitution...In Nervous Complaints and many other inveterate Discases,...has been fully established, ander the observation of several eminent Physicians. Estaffactory Testimonials will be found in the Prospectus. The Pump-rom will open for the Season May 19st. Hot Mineral Waters, Carlabad, Ems. Cold ditto, Spa, Pyrmont, Marienabed, Eger, Fullna, Seitzer, &c. &c.
The beneficial influence of these waters in divesting also the Cholera of its fatal consequences, was amply proved at Moscow, during the late epidemic raging of that disease.
London Agents for the sale of the Cold Waters...Mesars. J. and
G. Wangh, Chemists to the King, 177, Regent Street; Mr. Lucas, Chemist, 69, Chempside, where the Prospectus may be obtained, gratis.

MUSIC.

NEW VOCAL MUSIC by MRS. ROBT.

A Set of Songs, composed and dedicated to homas Moore, Eq. The Words selected (by permission) from e Peems of Mrs. Hemans, Lord Byron, Thomas Campbell, Esq. d the Ber. Mr. Pierreport.

Price 18s, containing

Rweetest Bard
The Last Flowers
Drinking Song of Munich
The Pilgrim Fathers Also the following Comp

Battle of the Baltic One Struggle more Gentie River, gentle River.

sitions of Mrs. Arkwright, viz. A First Set of Songs, dedicated to the Hon. Mrs. George Lamb, price 10s. 6d.

A Second Set, (Ancient Spanish Ballads), dedicated to the Right Hon. Lady Wharnciles, price 18c.

A Third Set, dedicated to the Right Hon.
Viscountess Granville, price 10s. 6d.
Published by J. Power, 34, Strand.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

A new edition, 2 vols. 8vo. 34s. with Portraits, &c. dedicated to the King, by His Majesty's gracious permission, MEMORIALS of HAMPDEN, his PARTY, and his TIMES.

By LORD NUCENT.

John Marray, Albemarle Street.

MARY and HER MOTHER; a Sequel to Scriptural Stories for very Young Children, • Author. 3d edition, price 3s. half-bound. London: N. Halles, 168, Piccadilly, Handsomely printed, with 17 Plates, engraved from Greek Gems, &c. crown 8vo. 18s.

THE AGAMEMNON of ESCHYLUS.
Translated from the Greek. With a Diasertation on Greek Tragedy.
By John S. HARFORD, Esq. D.C.L. and F.R.S.
By John S. HARFORD, Esq. D.C.L. and F.R.S.
Co. A few Copies on India paper, with Proof Impressions of the Plates, S.
John Murray, Albemaric Street.

TWENTY PAROCHIAL SERMONS, WENTI FARULALERA DESERTAR with an Appendix, containing Parechial Papers.
By the Rev. CHARLES GIRDLESTONE, M.A.
Vicar of Sedgley, Staffordshire,
Oxford i J. H. Farker; H. C. Laspfridge, Etrmingham; and Mesars. Rivington, London,

Of whom also may be had, by the same Anther,
The New Testament, with a Commentary,
Part I. containing St. Matthew and St. Mark. Svo. Se.

History and Blography

Mistory and Biography.

MEMOIRS of the ADMINISTRATION of the Right Hea. HENRY PELHAM, collected from the Family Papers, and other Authentic Documents.

By the Rev. W. COXE, M.A. F.E.S. F.S.A. Archdeacon of Wilts.

In 3 vols. 4to. with Portraits, 61. 5c.

A few Copies are printed on large paper, uniform with the Author's preceding Works, price 101. 10s. boards.

Memoirs of John Duke of Marliorough. In ols. 8vo. with an Atlas, 51. 54. Memoirs of Horatio Lord Walpole.

Memoirs of the Kings of Spain of the House of Bourbon, from the Accession of Philip the Fifth to the Death of Charles the Third, 1700-1788. Sd edition, in 5 vols. 8vo. 8/

History of the House of Austria, from the Foundation of the Monarely, by Redolph of Hapsburgh, to the Death of Leopold II.; 1818 to 1722. 5 vols. 8vo. price M. 12s. 6d. boards.

er's History of Engla The History of England, from the earliest Period to the Death of Elizabeth. By Sharon Turser, F.A.S. R.A.S.L. In 12 vols. 8vo. price St. 2s. boards.

Also may be had, by the same Author, separately,
The History of the Anglo-Saxons, comprising the History of Bugiand, from the earliest Period to the Norman Conquest. Sth edition, 2 vols. Sep. 22. Sep. board.

The Reigns of Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth. 8d edition, 2 vols. 8vo. 1/. 12s. boards.

The History of England during the Middle Ages: comprising the Reigns from William the Conqueror to the Accession of Henry VIII. 3d edition, 5 vols, 8vc. price 2f. boards.

The History of the Reign of Henry the Righth. 2d edition, 2 vols. 8vo. 11. 6c. boards.

The Sacred History of the World, from the Creation to the Deluge, attempted to be philosophically considered, in a Series of Letters to his Son. By Sharon Turner, F.A.S. Svo. Ed edition, 14s. beards.

The Life and Death of Lord Edward Fitz. gerald. By T. Moore, Esq. 2 vols. post 8vo. with a Portrait, 3d edition, 31s. boards.

The History of the Rise of the Mahomedan Power in India, till the Year 1613. Translated from the Persian of Mahomed Kasim Ferishta. By John Briggs, Lieut.-Col. in the Madras Army. 4 vols. 8vo. 4l. 4s.

History of Thucydides, translated into English, with Annotations, &c. 2 vols. 8vo. with Maps, &c. 21, 5s. By the Rev. S. T. Bloomfield, D.D. Vicar of Bisbrooke; Author of "Recommis Syneptica Annotationis Sacre," and Editor of Thucydides, in the Original.

"A version as literal and as perspicuous as erudition and indus-y combined can render it."—Ecleotic Review.

Annual Biography and Obituary for 1832; seing the 16th Volu e. Price las boards Aiso Vols. 1 to 15, 5s, each.

Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Ralegh; with some Account of the Period in which he lived. By M. A. T. Thomson, Author of "Memoirs of Henry VIII." I vol. 8ve. with Pertrait, 14s. boards.

Memoirs of the Court of Queen Elizabeth. By Lucy Aikin. In 2 vols. 8vo. with a Portrait from the rare Print by Crispin de Passe, 6th edit. 11. 8s. boards.

By the same Author,
Memoirs of the Court of James the First. In 2 vols. 8vo. 3d edition, 11. 4s.

Annals of the Reign of George the Third. By John Aikin, M.D. In 2 vois. 8vo. a new edition, brought down to the Period of his Majesty's Decease, 25s. boards.

The History of the Crusades for the Recovery and Possession of the Holy Land. By Charles Mills, Esq. In 3 vols. 8vo. 4th edition, with a Portrait and Memoir of the Author, price 11. 5s.

The History of Chivalry, or Knighthood and its Times. 3d edition, in 8 vols. 8ve. price 17. 4s. boards. "Executed with equal learning, fidelity, and eleganoe."....

The Political Life of the Right Hon. George Canning, with a short Review of Foreign Affairs. By A. C. Stapleton, Bet. 3 vols. 8vo. 3d edition, with the Part omitted in the lst, 88: hoards.

*, * The Additions separate, to complete the 1st edition, 5s.

A Memoir of the Life, Writings, and Correspondence of James Currie, M.D. F.R.S. of Liverpool. Edited by his Son, William Wallace Currie. 8 vols. Sec. with Fortrait, Sky, hearies.

The History of the Reign of George III.
By Rebert Bissett, LL.D. Author of "The Life of Burte," &c.
A new edition, completed to the Death of the King, 6 vols. 8vo.
price 88.8s. beards.

The History of Roman Literature, from its Earliest Period to the Bod of the Augustan Age. By John Dun-lop, Esq. 3 vois. St. 7s. 6d. boards.

The History of Fiction, 3 vols. post 8vo. 2l. 2s.
Sketches of the Character, Manners, and Present State of the Highlanders of Sociland; with Details of the Military Service of the Highland Regiments. By Major General
D. Stewart. 2 vols. Sve. 3d edit. 1l. 3s. boards, with a Map.

Travels, Voyages, Topography, 4c.
Sir Edward Seaward's Narrative of his Shiporir Edward Scaward B Nairratuve of Bill Shilly wreck, and consequent Discovery of certain Islands in the Caribbean Sea; with a Detail of many extraordinary and highly interesting Sevents in his Life, from the Year 1738 to 1746, as writer in his own Diary. Edited by Miss Jane Forter. 2d edit 8 vols. small 8vo. 8is. boards.

"The most curious and instructive work that has appeared since the first dawn of discovery, and in the history of navigation."

Narrative of a Nine Months' Residence in New Zesland, in 1877; together with a Journal of Residence in Tristan d'Acunha, an Island centrically situated between South America and the Cape of Good Hepe. By Augustus Earle, Draughtsman to His Majesty's Discovery Ship the Beagle. 1 vol. 870. with Emprayings.

A Tour in Italy and Sicily. By L. Simond, Author of "A Tour in Switzerland," "A Tour in Great Bri-tain," &c. 8vo. 16c. beards.

Journal of a Residence in Germany, written during a Fredesional Attendance upon their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Clarence (their present most gracious Rajesties), during their Visits to the Courts of that Country in 1883, and 1885. By William Beautie, M.D. &c. 2 vols. post 8vc. 81t. beards.

"We do not remember to have ever perused a traveller's jour-nal more replote with novel and amusing topics."—New Monthly Magazine.
Printed for Longman, Ross, Orme, Rossyn, Green, and Longman.

In foolscap Svo. price Se. 6d.

QUESTIONS concerning PARLIAMEN-TARY JURISDICTION; or, a Legal Examination of the impeachment and Sentence against the last Ministers of the Impead By MONSIEUR DE PEYRONET.

Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

Loudon's Publications on Agriculture, Gardening, Bolany, &c. In 1 large vol. 8vo. price 21. 10s. extra boards, with upwards of Eleven Hundred Engravings on Wood, a new edition of

N ENCYCLOPÆDIA of AGRICUL-N ENCYCLOPADIA of AUTOLICAL TURB: comprising the Theory and Practice of the Valuation, Transfer, Laying out, Improvement, and Management of Landed Property; and the Cultivation and Economy of the Animal and Vegetable Productions of Agriculture, including the latest Improvements; a General History of Agriculture in all Countries; and a Statistical View of its present State, with Suggestions for its future Progress in the British lates.

By J. C. LOUDON, F.L.H.G.Z.S. &c. &c.

By J. C. LOUDON, F.L.H.G.Z.S. &c. &c.

No pains have been spared on the part of either the author or the publishers to rander this second edition of the Encyclopedia of Agriculture as perfect as possible. The author undertook a journey into France and Germany in 1883, on purpose to procure information respecting the present state of agriculture on the Continent; and the publishers have gone to the expense of nearly 600 new engravings, nearly half of which are new subjects. The co-operation of upwards of forty individuals (a list of whom appended) has also been procured, or voluntarily given; and their suggestions or additions have embraced almost every department of the work. On the whole, the author thinks himself warranted in asserting, that the work is now as perfect as its will admit.

Ap. Engraphenedia of Germanical actions and practice

An Encyclopædia of Gardening; comprising An Elloy colopectia of Odatectular, Colopectia, the Theory and Fractice of Horticulture, Floriculture, Arboriculture, and Landscape Gardening; including all the latest Improvements, a General History of Cardening in all Countries, and a Statistical View of its present State, with buggestions for facture Progress in the Bod of Seven Hundred Engravings on Huntrated with upwards of Seven Hundred Engravings on Wood, complete in large vol. 8vo. price M. extra boards.

Hortus Britannicus; a Catalogue of all the Hortus Britannicus; a Catalogue of all the Plants Indigenous, cultivated in, or introduced to, Britain. In Sto. price I. I. c. cloth board.

For I.—The Lineaun Transgement, in which nearly Thirty. Thousand Special mersted; preceded by an Introduction of the Catalogue of the Cat tions; and Dr. Greville amisted in arranging the Cryptogamia.

An Encyclopedia of Plants; comprising the Decription, Specific Character, Colure, History, Application in the Arts, and every other desirable particular respecting all the Plants in tiggers; cultivated in, or introduced to, Britain. Compared Wood, price 4d. 14s. dd. extra beards.

The Specific Characters, &c. by John Lindley, F.R.S. L.S. and G.S. &c.; the Drawings by J. D. C. Sowerby, F.L.S.; and the Engravings by R. Branston.

The Gardener's Magazine and Register of Rural and Domestic Improvement. Conducted by J. C. Loudon, F.L.S. H.S. &c.

In 8v. Nos. I. to XXXVII. (published every Two Months, alternately with the Magazine of Natural History), price 8s. 6d.

Also.

Vols. I. to VII. price 6l. 2s. 6d. boards.

The Magazine of Natural History, and Jour-nal of Zoology, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, and Meteorology. Conducted by J. C. Loudon, F.L.S. G.S. Z.S. &c. In 8vo. Nos. I. to XXVI. (published every Two Months, alter-nately with the Gardener's Magazine), price 3s. &d.

Vols. I. to IV. price 3l. 18s. boards.
Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

No. II. of the New Beries of the

EXTRACTOR and POLAR STAR, enlarged and improved; a work whose cheepness has astounded the trade, and whose rich and solid stores of mingled information, and recreative reading, will convey inenhaustible gratification and delight to every intelligent family and man of gratification and delight to every intelligent family and man or reading.

Published every Saturday morning, price 6d. containing near a hundred columns of closely printed matter, (with new type), stitched in a wrapper. It is also published in monthly Farts, with the Magazines, price 2s. Part I. will appear the list of June.

Office, 1, Newcastle Street, Strand; and sold by Simpkin and Marshall; and by all Booksellers and Newsmen throughout the Kingdom.

M'Cullock's Commercial Dictionary.
rinted 8vo. volume of 1148 pages, with large Maps,
ll. 10s. boards, with parchment back, In a closely pr

A DICTIONARY, PRACTICAL, THEORETICAL, and HISTORICAL, of COMMERCE AND COMMERCIAL NAVIGATION.

By J. R. M'CULLOCH, Esq.

By J. R. McCULLOCH, Eq.

It has been the wish of the author and publishers of this work that it should be as extensively useful as possible. If they be not decrived in their expectations, it may be advantageously employed, as a tort of weds-mecum, by merchants, traders, ship-owners, and ship-masters, in conducting the details of their respective businesses. It is hoped, however, that this object has been attained without omitting the consideration of any topic, incident to the subject, that seemed calculated to make the book generally serviceable, and to recommend it to the attention of all classes.

London: Longman, Bees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

In 2 vols. 8ve. with Twenty-six Illustrations by Landseer, from Sketches by the Author, principally of the Field Sports of India PEN and PENCIL SKETCHES of INDIA; being a Journal of a Tour in that Country. By CAPTAIN MUNDY, Late Aide-de-Camp te Lord Comb John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Geographical Works, meman, Rees, Orme, Brewn, Green, Published by Longman, Rees, Or and Longman

NEW GENERAL ATLAS of FIFTY-A THREE MAPS, with the Divisions and Boundaries carefully coloured. Constructed entirely from New Drawings, and engraved by SIDNEY HALL.

(Completed in 17 monthly Parts, any of which may still be had separate, price 10s. 6d. each.)

be had separate, price 10s. 6d. each vasse and lettered.

Polded in half, and pasted on Guarda, in strong canvass and lettered.

As 18 6

Half-bound, russia backs, corners, and lettered.

Postero, corners, and lettered.

10 0 0

Proofs on India paper, half-bound, russia backs, corners, and lettered.

We have taken some pains to examine this new Atlas, and we can safely state our conviction of its general superiority to all other Atlases. The Sphinz, (conducted by J. B. Buckingham, and the maps are engraved in a masterly manner. New Monthly Magasine.

Price 11. 1s. reval 8vo. cloth boards.

Price 11. 1s. royal 8vo. cloth boards,
An Alphabetical Index of all the Names contained in the above Atlas, with References to the Number of the Maps, and the Latitude and Longitude in which the Places are to be found.

A System of Universal Geography. By M. Malte-Brun, Editor of the "Annales des Voyages." Parts I. to XVII. price 7s. 6d. each.
The work is now finished in the original; but, in order to render it a more complete System of Geography for the English reader, large additions will be made to the description of Great Britain, which is now in progress, and will be published in a few months.

months.
"We think the translators of M. Malte-Brun's Geography have done good service to the public, by rendering so valuable a work accessible to the English reader."—Edinburgh Review, a work accession to an any thing of its class which has ever appeared."—Literary Gazette, No. 405.

appeared."—Literary Gazette, No. 400.

In the press,

The Ninth and Last Volume, containing the Description of England, Scotland, and Ireland; and a copious General Index.

It has been found necessary to have the department of Great Britain entirely re-written for the English edition, on a scale commensurate with the importance which the English reader attaches to this portion of Geography.

The Edinburgh Gazetteer; or, Compendious Geographical Dictionary, containing a Description of the various Countries, Kingdoms, States, Cities, Tamab, Moentains, Seas, Rivers, Harbours, &c. chigfron of the Inhabitants; the Boundand Notarian Productions of each Country, &c.; forming a complete Rody of Geography, Physicial, Political, Statistical, and Commercial. Abridged from the larger work in six volumes. The 8d edition, brought down to the present time. In 1 large vol. 8vo. (with Maps), 18s. boards.

Also. The Edinburgh Gazetteer; or, Geographical Dictionary, brought down to the pre 6 vols. price 54. 5s. boards.

Also, as an Accompaniment to the Two preceding Works, Also, as an Accompaniment to the 1 wo preceding works,
A New Greneral Atlas, constructed by A.
Arrowsmith, Hydrographer to the King. From the latest Authorities: comprehended in 54 Maps, including Two new Maps, from original Drawings, with recent Discoveries. In royal 4to.
11. 10s. half-bound; or coloured, 21. 12s. 64.

COURSE of LECTURES on the A COUNSE of LECTURES on the COUNAGE of the GREEKS and ROMANS. Delivered in the University of Oxford,

By EDWARD CARDWELL, D.D.
Principal of St. Alban's Hall, and Camden Professor of Ancient History,
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Price 6s. the

FOREIGN QUARTERLY REVIEW

No. XVIII.

Contents.—I. The Reciprocity System—II. Letters of a German Prince—III. Poscolo and his Times—IV. Recent French Literature; the Handred and One; Hugo's Poems; Balzac's Tales and Romances—V. Theodosian Code—VI. Russian Poetry VII. Quintana's Spanish Blography—VIII. Penal Colonies—IX. The Northern Runes—X. Minor French Theatre; Scribe and his Coadjutors—XI. Prussian Commercial Policy—XII. Memoirs of Louis XVIII.—XIII. to XIX. Critical Steeches of French, German, and Italian Worts—Miscollaneous Literary Notices from France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, and Russia, and of Oriental Literary Intelligence; and List of the principal New Works published on the Continent from Jan. to April, 1833.

Printed for Tennical Control of Contr

Printed for Treuttel and Würtz, and Richter, 30, Soho Square; and Black, Young, and Young, 2, Tavistock Street.

Of whom may be had,
The Preceding Numbers. Price of Nos. I.
to X. 7s. 6d. each; and of Nos. XI. to XVII. 6s. each. Also, Nos. I. to X. of the Foreign Review, price Nimrod's Letters on Condition. In a handsome 8vo. vol. price 18s.

REMARKS on the CHOICE of HORSES their Management, and on the Condition of Hus In a Series of Letters, By NIMROD,

As they appeared in the Sporting Magazine, with Netse sal copious Index. London: M. A. Pittman, 18, Warwick Square; and seld by all Booksellers.

Washington Irving's New Sketch-Book, New Nevels by the Ker of Mulgrave, the Author of "Granby," &c. Just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, New Barlington Street. In 2 vols. 8vo. uniformly with the former Series, 34s.

HE NEW SKETCH-BOOK; th ALHAMBRA. By GEOFFREY CRAYON.

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Mitida," and "Yes and No." 3 vols.

Arlington. By the Author of "Granby.

Tales of the Early Ages. By the Author "Brambletys House," &c. S vols.

"It is clear that the author has been able to throw hims entirely into the age he would shew to us. These tales preser picture which Claude might have painted."—Examiner.

Stanley Buxton. By the Author of " Lav "A nevel of very considerable power, and exhibiting 1 in knowledge of the human heart."—Morning Herald.

Cavendish; or, the Patrician at Sea. 2 edition, 8 vols.

"The author has evidently mixed with the higher raths society, and his book has some striking political matter to simpablic attention."—Literary Gazatte.

Memoirs of Female Sovereigns. By Mr. Jameson. In 2 vols.

"Will be read with pleasure by all who delight in history at the study of human nature."—Cheltenham Chronicle.

Complete in 1 vol. neatly post and illustrated, price & Self-Control. By Mrs. Brunton. Forming the 15th Volume of the "Standard Nevels."

Also, just ready,
Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalie
By the Auther of "Darnley," "De L'Orme," &c. 3 vois.

Four vois, foolsom Svo.

ONTARINI FLEMING; a Psycholog cal Autobiography.

John Murray, Albemaric Street.

In 1 vol. price 5s. boards.

THE RADICAL; an Autobiograph:
Dedicated to Barea Brougham and Vaux, Lord Richancellor of England.
By JOHN GALT.
Printed for James Fraser, 215, Regent Street.
Of whom may be had, lately published, by the same Auther,
The Member; an Autobiography. Ded cated to William Holmes, Esq.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

On Monday next, in foolscap 8vo. price 5s.

THE TOILETTE of HEALT BEAUTY, and FASHION, embracing the Becomer the Best Countries of Sara, Even, Feet, Freet, Lett. Hair, Hand Lipe, Mouth Nail, Nas, Shin, Teeth, &c. &t. including the Comferts of Drass, and Decorations of the Countries of the Countries of Sarately of Select Recipes for the Dressing-room of the Resea.

Wittencom and Cremer, 4, Cornhill.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia. In monthly volumes, small 8vo. 6s. in cloth. On June 1, being Vol. XXXI. of the above,

HISTORY of SWITZERLANI

On July 2, History of Spain and Portugal, Vol. III.
Published May 1, History of Spain and Portugal, Vol.
London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, the LITBRARY GAZETTE OPPICE, 7, Wellington New Waterloo Bridge, Stread, and 18, Spoth Smollern Stort, 02. Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange: Marlborough, Aw Marls Lanne Ledgett Hill: A. Sin Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Ichiv and Co., Glasgow; and J. Commeling, Bublin.—Agent j. America, O. Rich, 13, Red Lion Square, London. J. MOYES, 28, Coatle Street, Leicester Square

Digitized by Google

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 801.

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The Life and Pontificate of Gregory the Seventh. By Sir Roger Greisley, Bart. F.A.S. 8vo. pp. 372. London, 1832. Longman and Co. DURING his travels in Italy and stay in Rome Sir Roger Greisley, it appears, imbibed from books and men a thorough abhorrence of the abominations and usurpations of the Roman see; and though he considers it to be hasten-ing to its fall, he wishes to accelerate that event by an exposition of its crimes and impostures.
With this view he has chosen to write the life of the monk Hildebrand, the famous Pope Gregory VII., who, nearly eight hundred years ago, certainly carried the arrogance and dominion of the pontificate to the acme of human assumption, bringing monarchs in abjectness to his feet, denouncing, dethroning, and excommunicating princes and prelates, and, in short, making Christendom subject to his political intrigues and absolute will. With regard to the argument against the Roman Catholic religion built upon this history, we may, without entering into the polemical controversy at all, merely observe, that it would be quite as apposite to reason on the English government from data furnished by William the Conqueror, or on the German confederation from the doings of Otho or Conrad. Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis: though the world is not so enlightened as it boasts, and fanaticism and hypocrisy can still hold millions in thrall, and make fools of other millions, the day is gone by for such sweeping prostration of the human intellect. As a historical fragment, however, and the pic-ture of an extraordinary period, when new principles and pretensions sprung up which have since exercised great influence on society, the period of Gregory VII. is one of very considerable interest, and we are well satisfied to see it illustrated by any additional information, whether gathered from MSS. hitherto unconsulted, or from other sources. But it is better for us to let the author speak for himself on these points.

"In the course (he says) of the first visit which I paid to Italy, I discovered, from conversation with many distinguished natives of that beautiful but misgoverned country, that Pius VII., on his restoration to the pontifical throne, had not forgiven all his former persecutors; some of whom had been sent into perpetual exile, - some deprived of their offices and honours, - and others imprisoned for life. Among the last class of these unfortunate victims was a certain lawyer, by name Lamberti, who had distinguished himself as attorneygeneral to the imperial government of Rome during the French invasion, and who, on the return of the pope, had written a work to prove how the predecessors of his holiness had gradually usurped the temporal dominion of Rome, while the second, having obtained his release Dante, Boccaccio, Machiavelli, Galileo, &c. as by pecuniary influence, is now well known among the merchants of Rome. Narrations and anecdotes such as this, which constantly assailed me from persons of veracity, led me, on reflection, to imagine that the descendants of the ancient Romans could never have been subdued to the dominion of priests, otherwise than by a continued series of violence and fraud through many ages; and that among them some spirit must still exist who viewed with indignation the temporal sovereignty of the church, and pitied the debasement of his countrymen, and the religious thraldom in which they were held. In pursuing this train of ideas, by chance there fell into my hands a MS, still more recent than that of Lamberti. — the production of a man of learning who had lately died, and whose effects were sold by his executors. On the perusal of this MS., it appeared to me to elucidate a period of singular interest, and of no less singular obscurity; and I ventured to hope that I might render a service to literature and to mankind, by adapting it, with some suppressions and alterations, to publication in my native tongue. I was always of opinion that the idolatrous religion of Italy was not the religion of the enlightened classes of that country; and, in examining its history, we find a continued series of learned men persecuted by the papal court for their religious opinions. In vain did Dante, Boccac-cio, Machiavelli, Diodati, Galileo, Sarpi, and, lastly, Ricci, bishop of Pistoia, (names of some celebrity,) endeavour to introduce reform into the religion of their country. One of the most interesting chapters in the 'History of Italy,' by Botta, is that which treats upon the govern-ment of Tuscany under Peter Leopold, and on the council of Pistoia, which endeavoured to bring about measures of reform, somewhat superficial, but which would ultimately have led to more important changes. The iron hand of the pontiff kept down that knot of bishops; and monkish vigilance armed itself at once with calumny and deceit. The catholic religion, as it exists in Italy, is nothing more than the triumph of fraud over ignorance and blindness. Let us look minutely into the matter, and my proposition will be proved. The history which I am about to submit to the judgment of the public will satisfy the most incredulous, that the monkish and ecclesiastical despotism, which has been established for eight centuries, is detested in Rome itself; and that the day, perhaps, may not be very far distant when the reformed churches on this side the Alps shall triumph in the extension to the Eternal City, and its minions, of the religious principles which they themselves profess.

Such then are the foundations and object of this work; and of the way in which it is executed, the quotation we have made will serve to give an idea. As for the style, it is evi-dently not free from the trammels of transby means of treachery and slaughter. This to give an idea. As for the style, it is evimanuscript having come to the knowledge of dently not free from the trammels of trans-Gonsalvi, its author and copyist were both lation; and as for some of the thoughts and ex-

the materials yet to be found in Italy, bearing on the history not only of the period chosen by Sir Roger Greisley, but on other ages, the following conveys rather interesting literary intelligence:—

"To write the history of Italy at this period with fidelity, we must not confine ourselves to the dry details of Muratori, the prolixities of Sismondi, or the labours of Giannone; but visit the libraries of Rome, and the archives in the monasteries of the kingdom of Naples and the pontifical states. There still exists in the Barberini library a number of chronicles, hi-therto unprinted, which might add a thick volume to the Rerum Italicarum Scriptores. It will not be surprising if I assert, that Tassoni, the author of the Secchia Rapita, wrote an Ecclesiastical History (which, however, was never published), with the view of confuting Baronius. The learned world had no desire to read it. It is alluded to in the life of this author as being written in Latin; whereas I have seen it in four large volumes in the Barberini library, written in a fair hand, probably the author's own, in good Italian, and interspersed with notes from chronicles which neither Muratori nor other writers had seen or referred to. Of these facts any English traveller may convince himself."

Previous to the memoir of Gregory, we have what the author calls a "prospectus" of the antecedent political affairs of Italy, compiled in rambling fashion, in which patricians and "senatresses" of Rome, counts of Tusculum, the family of the Crescenzi, Saracens, Nor-mans, Germans, and Popes, figure in admired disorder. Of this part we select a specimen. After sketches of St. Nilo, a Greek monk, and St. Romualdus, a Latin one, who died at advanced ages, early in the eleventh century,

Sir Roger says,—
"From the lives of these two most celebrated saints of their time, an inference may be drawn of the tendency of the Western church to a system of externals, applying itself solely to continual discipline and fasting, in-stead of the improvement of the heart. For the perusal of the sacred writings and spiritual lessons of the ancient fathers of the church, was substituted that of legends and decretals, and the Book of Canons, by which the whole Western church was governed. Images and relics of the saints acquired an excessive adora-tion; and continual discoveries were being made of the bodies of miracle-working saints. Impostors were to be found, appearing every day under new names and with fresh miracles, imposing on the credulity of the public, and amassing wealth by defrauding the pious multitude. Some of these impostors, too insolent in their practices, were discovered and punished, whilst others derived from them their whole fortune and subsistence. It went to Gonsalvi, its author and copyist were both lation; and as for some of the thoughts and excondemned to imprisonment; under the infliction of which the first died a few years ago; a smile—such, for instance, as the mention of for 100 talents. The head of St. John the multitude of spectators, amongst whom was even our day is not free from like absurdities.

Robert, king of France. The principal supporters of this religious mania were the cru-lowing miracle was exhibited to public venesaders; that is to say, those persons who went ration in the church of St. Peter, on occasion on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. These persons, of the sanctification of a certain Spaniard:—on their return to their own country, finding A picture was exhibited, where he was repreall their substance exhausted, exerted their sented in a kitchen, at the fire of which stood ntmost cunning to regain it; pretending that the landlord, turning a spit full of little birds, they had found some relics of the ancient all of which flew away half roasted at the dimartyrs or apostles, or some object relative to the life or death of our Saviour. By these And, "since writing the above," he adds, martyrs or aposties, or some object relative to the life or death of our Saviour. By these means an immense number of persons, excited by religious curiosity, repaired to the places friend, who was an eye-witness of it, with where these objects were exposed, and the churches and the provinces of which became strongly than the foregoing, of the justice of enriched by them. With the same motive, in the observation in the text. The narrator, a the year 1008, a portion of the rod of Moses man of veracity, is himself a Roman Catholic. was discovered in France, which attracted a For some time after the assumption of the was uncovered in France, which attracted a For some time after the assumption of the vast number of visitors, both from that country and Italy. In 1014, some monks, on their relative transfer to impress the minds turn from a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, brought of the lower classes, who are still full of ignowith them a part of the napkin with which rance and fanaticism, and believe in miracles, our Saviour wiped the feet of the apostles at the Last Supper; and, in order to prove its authenticity, they passed it uninjured through the flames. This kind of miracles, which were in such favour with the ignorant multitude in placed a figure of the Saviour as large as life, and the such ranks are the saviour as large as life, and the saviour as large as l those days, produces no effect, since chemical carrying the cross. Under its gown was conscience has enabled us to penetrate into the cealed a boy, who held a string attached to the hidden secrets of nature; and if history is di- head of this figure. After some preliminary ligently examined, we shall perceive that the discourse, the friar informed his congregation human mind was occupied in the discovery of that he was going to apply to the image to that science at this period. The alchemists, know whether Miguel was, or was not, the perhaps, although persecuted as the followers legitimate sovereign of Portugal; being quite of the devil, were not altogether extinct, and satisfied that it would perform a miracle to still read some books which laid open the dis- work conviction in the incredulous. He then coveries of the ancient Greeks and Romans. The commercial cities of Italy, in communication with the East, acquired extraordinary knowledge, of which they availed themselves disadvantageously to the morality and piety of the Christian church. About this time, too, (the year 1000), the epoch at which, according to prediction, the world was to be at an end, men began to make fresh researches, and to build new churches, to repair the old ones, and to invent novelties. The prophecy of Da-niel, which says, 'Tempus, tempora, dimi-dium temporis,' proving by experience to be inapplicable to the interpretation which the monks and ecclesiastics had generally given it, produced a new energy in the human mind: and if, at first, the wealth of the churches were aggrandised by profuse largesses, we shall hereafter see them struggling to preserve it. A disposition also to study was now induced: and a certain Guido, a monk of Pomposa, being called to Rome as a music-master, whilst very young, invented the scale or gamut of C notes, which was then esteemed miraculous. Happily for him the matter took this turn; for otherwise he would have suffered death. The religious superstition was so strong, that any unusual effects of human nature were attributed to diabolical operations; and, in such instances, the reputed authors were either beheaded or burnt. Such was the fate of an unhappy wretch who had discovered the secret of making glass malleable. This sublime ge-nius made a goblet of this glass; and, being conducted into the presence of Henry, in 1022, he threw it on the ground, when, instead of breaking, it bent, and suddenly resumed its original shape. The ignorant emperor, believing him to be possessed with the devil, ordered him to be beheaded. Such were the obstacles which were presented by a supersti-tious religion to the civilisation of mankind." translation of the Agamemnon; Medwin's ver-

Baptist was dug up, and attracted an immense: elder times; but, if we may believe our author, turned to the figure, and said, 'Is Don Pedro our sovereign?' to which he obtained no reply. 'Is Donna Maria?' No answer. 'Is Don Miguel?' Upon which last interrogatory the figure nodded its head three times in token of assent. On the third Sunday of this pantomime, the friar, on repeating his two first questions, as previously, received, as before, no answer; but on coming to his third, the same silence, unaccompanied by the expected motion of the head, continued. Indignation soon took the place of surprise and disappointment; and putting his question for the third time, in a loud and angry tone, the innocent agent of this religious farce emerged from beneath the Saviour's gown, and informed the audience, with genuine, but fatal simplicity, that his miracle-working string was broken.

As this curious story will probably amuse our readers more than any extract we could select from the life of Gregory, we shall ven-ture to conclude our notice of the volume before us without farther quotation; assuring them that they lose nothing by having a Re-view offered without a syllable from the main and staple portion of the work. A complete history of the Papal See would be one of the most imperishable productions of literature.

The Agamemnon of Æschylus, translated from the Greek; illustrated by a Dissertation on Grecian Tragedy, &c. By John S. Harford, Esq. D.C.L. F.R.S. 8vo. pp. 267. London, 1832. Murray.

Agamemnon; a Tragedy: translated from the Greek of Eschylus into English Verse. By Thomas Medwin, Esq., author of the "Conversations of Lord Byron." 8vo. pp. 90.

London, 1832. Pickering. SINCE our Review of the Prometheus, Mr.

simultaneously; and it will be a somewhat interesting task to compare the two together.

Mr. Harford's work is splendidly illustrated y some finished plates from ancient gems and busts, which throw a beautiful light on the scenery and costume of the drama; besides three exquisite designs by Flaxman, which nothing in antiquity can surpass. His prefatory Dissertation, on the Rise and Progress of Grecian Tragedy, exhibits elegant scholarship, profound investigation, and forms in itself a valu-able condensation of historical facts, which have been culled from many and curious sources. In union with our own taste, Mr. Harford professes a deep admiration for the tragic muse of Greece, and the poetical miracles which the "wondrous three" AEschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides have achieved for undying fame. We are more urgent in endeavouring to advocate a severe and critical study of classical models, because we view with regret the careless and immature productions which, under the false semblance of poetry, from time to time emanate from the pseudo-literature of the day. Verse, indeed, has become the written vanity of an idle brain; and not until poetry has been made a life, instead of a mere accomplishment. can we expect to see the "lofty rhyme" in its true and glorious perfection. In allusion to the priceless value of the ancient models, Mr. Harford ably observes :- "The tragedies of Greece were the homilies of antiquity. They reflect the feelings and the inspirations of an age the most brilliant in Athenian history, and formed the bright mine of lofty thought and moral aphorism, to which philosophers and rhetoricians in succeeding ages had recourse for materials wherewith to adorn or illustrate their compositions, and to which even the fathers of the church disdained not to apply for similar purposes."

In the essay on the history of Greek drams, there is much which merits extract: but we must limit our wishes, and by a few selections entice the reader to a perusal of the whole. The architects of the ancient theatre are supposed to have selected situations for their huge edifices, which commanded a fine view of adjacent scenery;—hence Mr. H., with much taste, remarks:—"The majestic mountains and luxuriant plains, the groves, and gardens, the land-locked and open sea, in the neighbourhood of many of the principal cities of Greece, presented the finest materials which taste could suggest or desire for such combinations. But the charm of southern landscape depends not solely on the romantic or beautiful features which enter into its composition. In that land of the sun, the purity of the atmosphere, the rich and magical hues of colour, the soft loveliness of the aerial perspective, the powerful relief of light and shadow,—produce on the senses, while contemplating the beauties of nature, impressions of pleasure rarely equalled even on our finest days in these northern regions."

On the subject of recitative, research hs expended infinite toil and learning; and even yet-adhuc sub judice lis est !- the following passage relates to this discussion : ... " It is Aristotle and Plutarch to prove the same of that of Greece. Schlegel, on the other hand, opposes the inferences drawn from those pasous religion to the civilisation of mankind." translation of the Agamemnon; Medwin's versages:—they are, in fact, of very ambiguous Such were the superstitions and tricks of sion of the same noble tragedy has appeared import, and at the utmost afford nothing beyond a plausible colouring to the hypothesis. The colloquial though dignified style of the Grecian drama, its fidelity to nature, its sim-plicity and pathos, appear directly opposed to the supposition of a highly artificial mode of delivery: yet a measured and impressive recitation, and an elevated tone of voice, must have been essential to the due transmission of sound over a vast area; and some slight musical accompaniment to regulate the pitch of the voice would not be at variance with an easy yet lofty style of declamation."

We must conclude our extracts from this essay by an anecdote recorded in Athenaus, in which the complete mastery of the drama over an Athenian audience is finely developed.

"A remarkable instance is recorded of the degree in which their imaginations were absorbed by the fictitious events of the drama. The dreadful intelligence of the complete destruction of the Athenian fleet and army under Nicias in Sicily, towards the close of the Peloponnesian war, reached the city when its numerous population was assembled in the theatre, entirely absorbed by the representation of a drama, half tragic, half comic, by Hegemon. The messenger announced the fatal news. Scarcely a person there but had lost a son or husband, a brother or friend. A moment's pause gave expression to a thrilling sensation of general grief. The next moment a signal was given to go on with the piece; and, wrapping their heads in their mantles, they con-tinued to survey, or listen to it, to the end."

We now approach the Agamemnon. Cumberland has written an admirable criticism on this tragedy in the Observer, to which we may refer the reader for a full analysis of its poetical grandeur and moral tendencies. Though the Agamemon does not present us with the sub-lime beauty and terrible graces of the Pro-methous, it boasts of qualities scarcely less attractive. The heroic mildness of the con-queror of Troy; his pious fear of the gods, exhibited in the full rapture of victory; the thrilling and overpowering pathos of Cassandra, when she chants her weird-like strains over the dark fate which is connected with the house of Atreus; together with the magnifi-cent choruses, the pictures of storm and rage, and female loveliness in the persons of Iphigenia and Helen, all these render the Agamemnon of Aschylus matchless in its effect, and mighty in its display of human passions. We agree, however, with Mr. Harford, in thinking that the character of Clytennestra is somewhat repulsively drawn; - indeed, she almost appears a lascivious virago; for, notwithstanding she excuses the murder of her husband by his sacrifice of her daughter Iphigenia, the rest cause of her bloody crime is darkly evident in her adulterous alliance with Ægisthus. The Lady Macbeth of our own Eschylus, though "no compunctious visitings of nature" at one time appalled her purpose, and "top-full" as she wished to be of "direct cruelty," yet even she could not resist the mute eloquence of sleep, as it recalled the image of her sire in the features of Duncan!—

" Had he not resumbled My father as he slept, I had done 't !"

But Clytemnestra glories with ferocious joy over the dead body of her lord:

" I struck him twice, and twice he grouned aloud:

than excaped then escaped
His spirit with a sigh; and on its breath
Came rushing forth a mighty shower of blood,
That sprinkled him all o'er with its black dew, a nat appeared sum and our with its black de Making me glad as a field newly sown, When falls the divine rain, and wakes to life The flowers."—Makein's Translation.

We cannot conclude our brief remarks on the nature of this tragedy without an allusion to the tame and almost idiotic verbiage which the chorus of Argive elders circulate among themselves when the cries of Agamemnon reach their ears. But this fault is not altogether to be attributed to Æschylus; he only shares it in common with the very nature of the chorus, which could not actively engage in the events of the drama.

After a comparison of the two versions of this play, we must, according to our judg-ment, award the palm of superiority to Med-win. We are far from denying to Mr. Harford very considerable merit as a scholar, critic, and translator; but he seems to us to want what no study can supply—the power of vivid sympathy with a poet's mind, whereby his heart may be almost said to blend itself with his author's, and thus to throb and thrill with kindred emotions, and to par-take the very essence of his thoughts and feelings. Here and there a warm energy and real felicity of phrase—ouriosa felicitas - appear in Mr. Harford's translation; but, compared as a whole with Medwin's, it is poetically uninspired. We have no reason to be biassed on either side; and when we again bestow our unaffected eulogy on the fire, spirit, and general correctness of Mr. Medwin's version, we are only gratifying that love of truth which is, and ever ought to be, the grand law of criti-

By way of illustrating our preference, we shall compare the two translators, as they exhibit their efforts in some of the choicest passages of this celebrated tragedy.

Χρόνφ μέν αί-εŭ Πριάμου πάλπ άδι πίλιυθος-πάντα δι πύργων, π. τ. λ.

Thus translated by Mr. Harford:

"Time upse on the destined hour;
The gathering clouds of battle lour:
Lo! Friam's city bends to fall;
The martial troops that guard her wall,
And all her treasured stores, await
Th' unjiving stroke of ruthless Fate.
But oh! beware, lest when that town
Reluctant wears the captive chain,
Some god assume a withering frown,
And computer's created honours stain. some god assume a windering rows,
And conquest's created honours stain.
Diana's wrath this house must feel—
Eagles, she hates your bloody meal.
Pour forth deep notes of plaintive wo—
But still? let smiling hope with views of conquest glow.

The radiant goddess of the chase
O'er the fierce lion's infant race,
O'er all the whelps of savage brood,
That provi within the umbrageous wood,
Or roam the trackless desert's way,
Extends her tutelary sway.
These signs, which joy and terror blend,
She urges to their destined end."

Epede.

By Medwin in the following style:

" Time, the hunter, shall destroy Priam and the state of Troy.

* "Sir Walter Scott, in his Essay on the Drama, has placed this portion of our subject in so humorous a light, that we must indulge in a quotation. 'When a deed of violence was to be acted, the helpless chorus, instead of interfering to prevent the atrocity to which the perpetrator had made them privy, could only, by the rules of the theatre, exhaust their sorrow and surprise in dithyrambics. This was well ridiculed by Bentley in his farce called 'the Wishes,' in one part of which strange performance he introduced a chorus after the manner of the sucient Greeks, who are informed by one of the demostic precesses that a madman with a firebrand has just entared the vanits beneath the place which they occupy, and which contains a magazine of gunpowder. The chorus, instead of stirring from the dangerous vicinity, and which contains a magazine of gunpowder. The chorus, instead of stirring from the dangerous vicinity, immediately commence a long complaint of the hardship of their fase, exclaiming pathetically—'Oh! unhappy madman—or rather, unhappy we, the victims of this madmana fury—or thrice, thrice unhappy the friends of the madman, who did not secure him and restrain him from the perpetration of such deeds of frensy—or three and four times hapless the keeper of the magazine, who done the keys in the door!"

Destiny, with eagle-hand, Sack the town and tear the land. Towers be by a tower subdued, Pregnant with a mightler brood, Should no fate-sent storm arise, To o'ercloud our enterprise; Tarnish the bright bits of steel, Break the curb our foe should fe Dian hates the hounds of Jove, Dian hates the hounds of Jove, Mother-hares are Dian's love; Dian with resentful breast; Loathes the eagle's cruel feast; Dian chaste with pitying eyes Views that embryo sacrifice. Chant the hymn, the pressge hall Chant it—may the good prevail!

Chant it—may the good prevail!

Virgin goddes! chaste and fair!
Huntres! whose maternal care
All in field and forest are,
Tender leverets, gamesome fawns,
All that range the groves or lawns,
And each cub and whelp that dwell
On the mountain, in the dell,
Let this omen cease to be
Of ambiguous augury;
For yon eagles' hapless prey
Bears an aspect of dismay,
Hear my pean, hear it now,
Send the Greeks no tempests, thou."

The exquisite description of the sacrifice of Iphigenia, commencing with-λιτάς δε και κληδότας πατρφούς nue' older, alara nuestruir r', n. r. 2.

was calculated to inspire the translators: with what different success the specimens will prove. The first is Mr. Harford's version.

"" Antistrophe.

In vain her supplicating shriek
Assalis a father's ears; in vain
Her virgin form, her youth, bespeak
Compassion from the warrior train;
He bids fierce ruffins; heath the shrine
Place as a hind's that form divine;
The prayer ascends, the victim lies
Wrapped in her flowing robe, a destined sacrifice.

Transpers as ner nowing robe, a destined sacrifice. She spoke not; words denouncing wo To all the host had utterance found, But the same hands which laid has low, Her beauteous lips with thongs had bound: Then from her arms and heaving breast Loosing her saffron-coloured vest, On each stern chief her gentle eye Shot forth expressive beams of suppliant energy.

Antitrophe.

Nought but some matchless artist's nowe Could paint, in act to speak, her face, That face which, in the feative hour, Had oft with captivating grace, And songs is high triumphal strain, Halled her loved father's happy reign."

Now for Mr. Medwin's.

"She wakens from her swoon profound— As with a chain, Her lips of love's own light As with a chain,
Her lips of love's own light
And beauty's impress, to restrain
All plaints, or accents of affright.
Or imprecations that might breathe a spell
Upon his house, or break the solema rite,
By hands of cruel priests were bound:
There, like a victim-kid for slaughter,
Enfolded in her robes of purest white,
Thay lift on high his daughter.
But see! oh see, along the ground
The deep folds of her croceate veil
In wild disorder float and trail,
And from her pleading eyes,
With tenderest beams to thrill and melt,
A shaft of pity files;
Fen the stern sacrificers round,
That look which pierced all bosoms, felt,
And wept; while, visioned in the light
Of her own loveliness, more bright
Than pictured breathing form that is but mute,
She looked as though she wished, with that pure voice,
That oft her father's halls along,
Had made full many a chieftain there rejoice,
To speak to that essembled throng."

In the description which the herald gives

In the description which the herald gives of the toils and sufferings of a siege, there occurs a magnificent description of the trance of ocean beneath a glaring sun, when-

Of this passage Mr. Harford presents us with a very spiritiess version.

What time the sea, Its heaving billows hushed in saft repose, Slept mean the blaze of noon,"

Contrast it with the noble, though somewhat paraphrastic, translation by Medwin:

"When on his noontide couch, in heavy sleep Outstretched, th' interminable ocean lay, Waveless and windless."

The tempest which scattered the Grecian fleet,—who that has perused the description of it, as shadowed forth by the picture-words of Eschylus, ever forgot the truth and awful vigour of the passage?

σῦς καὶ δάλασσα, καὶ τὰ πίστ' ἰδιιζάτην, τη τυπτί δυσπύματτα δ' ώρώρι παπά. ταϋς γὰρ πρὸς άλλήλαισι Θρήπιαι πτοαί Heurer z. T. A.

Which has been rendered in the following manner by our translators: --- by Mr. Harord—

"It fell on us by night—water and flame,
Opposing elements, exchanged a pledge
To wreak destruction on the Argive host.
'Midst brooding darkness swelled the raging deep,
Ship against ship by Thracian blasts was hurled.
Lashed by the whirlwind's fury, and engulfed
By the wide-gaping surge, their gallant forms
Were seen no more; the pilot's art was vain.
The radiant morn babeld th'. Ægean sea
With naval spoils, and with the corses pale
Of Grecian warriors, strewn."

By Mr. Medwin-

Alr. Medwin—

"In the night rushed down
A horrible hurricane from Thrace: it came,
Driving vast mountainous seas like flocks before it,
And battering vessel against vessel, they Split by the violence of the shock, and torn
By the flerce buffeting of the winds and waves,
In eddying whiripools sucked, or shepherded
By that misleading pilot, the Typhoon,
Vanished away. And when the sun rode high,
We saw the Egean, as with flowery weeds,
White with the floating corses of our friends."

These comparisons might easily be extended, but we have been already allured into a longer review than we anticipated, and must close by one more quotation - no passage in Grecian poetry has been more admired.

λίγωμ' ἄν φρόνημα μὶν νηνίμου γαλάνας,* απασπαϊον δ' ἄγαλμα πλούτου· μαλθακόν δμμάτων βίλος, dukibupar leuras ärdas, watanyirone.

Thus dismissed by Mr. Harford. "Love's fairest flower, resplendent as the morn "!

Now, we are fully aware that our language is inadequate to develop the full magic and sweetness of the original; but Mr. Medwin has at least treated his author with more truth and courtesy.

"A thought of breathless calm and silent joy,
Image of all that nature boasts, or art
Of beauty, there came also one to Troy,
Who vibrated a sweet and delicate dart
From her mild eyes, that wounded every heart,
And oped in every breast the flower of love."

Here we close our analysis; and as we have offered a grateful eulogy to Mr. Medwin for his labours, he will perhaps not despise our parting counsel: he must remodel a considerable number of lines into a more faultless and harmonious versification. Some of his terminal syllables are vile transgressions against all metrical laws; and as this carelessness is easily atoned for, his own judgment and taste will be his best advisers. In every other respect we can most sincerely dismiss him with a classical benediction—I peds fausto!

⁶ Poetry has never surpassed the ethereality of this description of female loveliness: the words seem to adum-brate the very spirit of beauty. Even Desdemona...

"a maiden never bold,
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blushed at herself"— or she who walked in Milton's paradise, on whom,

" as queen,
A pomp of winning graces waited still" are eclipsed by the unearthly grace of Helen.

Saturday Evening. By the Author of "Natural History of Enthusiasm." 8vo. pp. 491. London, 1832. Holdsworth and Ball

VALUABLE work at any time, but doubly so in the present, when infidelity, like a cholera of the mind, is rapidly destroying so much of the warmth and energy of life. We cannot do better than make some extracts from these pages, and then recommend them, as a whole, to our readers. How true is the following view of the old and decaying idolatries of this

"Nothing more remarkably distinguishes the religious state of mankind in our own times, as compared with any other eras, concerning which history enables us at all to form an opinion, than the air of dotage which belongs, without exception, to every one of the leading superstitions of the nations. There have been times when, if some were on their wane, others were in full vigour, or just starting forth from their cradle with a giant strength. If we track the course of time during the lapse of four-and-twenty centuries, we shall find this to have been the case in each period. In each there was, in some quarter within the circle of historic light, or its penumbra, one or more forms of religious error which very firmly grasped the minds of the nations that were its victims. Although our knowledge of the human race is now incomparably more extensive, and accurate, than ever has been heretofore possessed, we can descry, in no direction, a young and hale and mantling religious delusion, such as threatens to become invasive; or which attracts the eyes of mankind by the signal proofs it is giving of its sway of the imagination and the turbulent passions of our nature. The contrary is the fact, and it is so in every zone. It is conspicuous that the demons are holding the reins of their power with a tremulous hand. The spirit of counsel and might has left them: the spirit of adventure and bold imposture has also departed. It seems as if there were neither courage nor concert in the halls of aerial government. Not only is every extant form of error ancient-most of them immemorially so; but every form is imbecile, as well as old. Or, if we would seek a phrase that should at once describe the present condition of false religion, universally, we find it in the expression already quoted—The errors in the expression already quoted — The errors of mankind are now 'antiquated, and in their dotage.' Dare we so far penetrate futurity, as to add __ ' They are ready to vanish away?

"The heroic savage who stalks through the wilderness of America, and the pallid Mongul, and the feverish Tartar of central Asia, and the luxurious islander of the Southern and Pacific Ocean, are men upon whose visage, in whose customs, and in whose belief, we read the characters of a distant age : - they all may boast an ancestry, and they possess a memorial. They are not the mere progeny of the desert, born of oblivion, and destined to oblivion; but the descendants of men; and the races they belong to are the wrecks of primitive empires. A personage of princely birth and education has wandered far from his patrimony, has fallen from his rank, has endured many degradations, has forgotten his rights: nevertheless there is an inalienable greatness about him; and even the trumpery of the ornaments he wears contains proof of his noble lineage. Like every thing else that distinguishes these fallen and impoverished families, their religion is—a relic. And it is a relic, faded in colours, and de-

Tartar conquests of the middle ages, and if the imperfect notices of the ancient Scythian nations preserved by the Greek writers, may be taken as affording the means of a compsrison between the present and the past religious condition of those classes of the human family of which we are speaking, it is quite manifest that the dimness, and the incertitude, and the terrors of extreme age have come upon all their superstitions. The force of the fanaticism they once engendered is spent. The demon is less the object of terror, is less often and less largely propitiated with blood; -the priest is less a prince than he was, and more a mercenary. Yes, and symptoms have appeared, even in this class, of incredulity and reason. No phrase better describes these now fading errors, than that already quoted - they are all 'superannuated and decaying with age.' By civilisation and industry, but not in matters of religion, the Chinese is entitled to take rank above his northern neighbour, cousin, and con-queror—the Mongul. In truth, it must hardly be said that there is any thing of religion in China, if we deduct, on the one hand, what is purely an instrument of civil polity -a pomp of government; and, on the other, what is mere domestic usage, or immemorial decoration of the home economy. Ages have passed away since mind, or feeling, or passion, ani-mated the religion of China. The religion of China is now a thing, not only as absurdly gay, but as dead at heart, as an Egyptian mummy: it is fit only to rest where it has lain two thousand years: touch it_shake it_it crumbles to dust. Let but the civil institu-tions of China be broken up, and we might look about in vain for its religion. But may not at least the dark and gorgeous superstitions of India boast of undiminished strength, as well as of venerable age? Antiquated as they are, can we affirm that they totter? Less so, it may be granted, than any other forms of false religion upon earth. They were born for longevity; they are the very beings of the climate; almost as proper to it as its prodigious and venomous reptiles. But can it be said of these illusions, firm as they still seem, that they have not been placed in jeopardy during the last fifty years, and especially of late? Is there not even now, in the fanaticism of India, more of usage than of passion? And we well know that the very crisis of a profound religious system, such as Hindooism—such as Romanism, comes on, when the enormities which once were cruel and sincere, begin to be simply loathsome and farcical. Besides, ... does not the strength of the religion of India consist in the credit of the Braminical order? The beard of the Bramin is the secret of its power; but, like the locks of Samson, may it not readily be lost? The credit of the Bramin rests upon the unnatural partition of the people by caste; and this partition is hastening to decay.

We must add the consequence drawn from this view:-

"Three very distinct inferences might be drawn from the remarkable fact (which will hardly be disputed) of the now antiquated and infirm state of every existing superstition. The first of these might be termed the Atheistic inference; the second, the Evangelic; and the third, the Prophetic. There are those who, in looking abroad upon mankind at the present moment, and in gathering up the general result of all the facts to which, hastily, we have alluded, would indulge the belief that the instinct of religion in the human mind is slowly cayed. If the history of the subjugation of the wearing out—that the habitude of worship is empires of Mexico and Peru, and if that of the being obliterated, and that an age or more to come shall see nation after nation renouncing both the forms and the substance of its regard to invisible power. Against such an inference there lies the unbroken evidence of experience in all ages and all places-not to say the invincible proof of Christianity. The second, or evangelic inference, from the same facts, must be granted to be valid by every Christian; as well as, in the highest degree, momentous. Although it will by no means follow (facts prove the contrary) that because the grasp of fanaticism is becoming less firm upon the human heart than heretofore, therefore men will now readily admit the better faith we offer them; nevertheless it is unquestionably an enterprise of more promise to assail the nations in their hour of faintness and solution, than at a time when magnificent and seductive systems of worship were at their height of energy and splendour. If probabilities drawn from the state of the human mind are at all to be looked to, should we not rather, for example, carry a mission into the heart of Persia or Turkey now, than in the age of Almamon or Almansor? Or should we not rather (personal peril not considered) disseminate the word of life in the Spanish republics of America in our own times than in the times of the zealous Torquemada? In this sense the present era may justly be deemed the day of hope for the gospel. No such singular conjuncture of symptoms, throughout the world, has ever before invited the activity and zeal of Christians. And if the pressure of responsibility is at all times great upon them in this behalf, it has acquired now a treble weight; inasmuch as it seems as if the antagonist powers were fast drawing off from the field. Looking out to the long and manycoloured array of ghostly domination, as it stretches its lines across plains and hills, we discern movement—but it is the stir of retreat. Encampments are breaking up, barriers are trampled upon, standards are furled, the clarion of dismay is sounded. This then is the hour for the hosts of the Lord to snatch their weapons and be up! Ours then is 'a day of preparation' in the sense of missionary enterprise; and on this ground, notwithstanding all discouragements, it may be hoped, not feebly, that 'the Sabbath draweth on.' But there is that ' the Sabbath draweth on.' yet an inference distinct from the one we have named, which fairly may be drawn from the present religious condition of mankind. We term it a prophetic inference; because its validity rest altogether upon the ground of those predictions scattered through the inspired volume, which declare that true religion shall at length be universal. This only being assumed, we may attribute as much or as little value as we think fit to those special interpretations which bring the lines of prophecy to converge upon the present age. All such disputable in-terpretations apart, it is impossible to compare the general sense of prophetic Scripture with the movement—the laxation of the human mind, in all countries, without admitting a sentiment of awe and expectation. And this sentiment is rendered the more intense by the fact, that the decrepitude of superstition has been rapidly accelerated of late; the powers of its life have sunk apace, and mortal symptoms have appeared in quick succession."

We would especially point attention to the chapters treating of "the last conflict of great principles," to "licentious religionism," and to "the precursor;" and with this recommendation, close a work which does so much credit to its author.

The Toilette of Health, Beauty, and Fashion. 12mo. pp. 200. London, 1832. noom and Cremer.

WE confess our incompetence to the task before us...this examination into the sublime and beautiful of the toilette; and therefore shall approach its mysteries with due humility, treading its precincts with "unsandalled foot;" rather quoting the opinion of the work itself than adventuring on the expression of our own. We submit the ensuing judgment on their stability to the opinion of our fair readers.

"In every age and country, the head-dress of the ladies has been more subject to the capricious tyranny of fashion than the decoration of any other part of the body. Ancient authors abound with declamations against the absurdities committed by women in the manner of dressing their hair, and against the circumstances of their taste. 'You are at a loss,' says Tertullian, 'what to be at with your hair. Sometimes you put it into a press; at others, you tie it negligently together, or set it entirely at liberty. You raise or lower it according to your fancy. Some keep it closely twisted up into curls, while others choose to let it float loosely in the wind;'-a proof that women have ever manifested the same love of change. is, therefore, in vain to declaim against the practice of the present day, and to lay to its account a frivolity not at all peculiar to it, but the honour of which it shares with every preceding age. There is now-a-days, as formerly, the same succession of good and bad taste, of pleasing or grotesque fashions. To expect the fair sex, therefore, to relinquish the love of change, would be to require an impossibility."

To this we add St. Cyprian's decision:

"St. Cyprian, among others, lays down twelve reasons to prove that women ought not to stain their hair; out of which the following two are selected as not unworthy of notice:

'The action of staining the hair,' says he, 'is worse than adultery.' The other, equally singular with the former, is, that 'to blacken the hair argues a detestation of that whiteness which belongs to the head of the lord."

Pray is the following cosmetic meant to serve a double purpose? It seems exceedingly like a receipt from a cookery book.

" Take juice of water-lilies, of melons, of cucumbers, of lemons, each one ounce; briony, wild succory, lily-flowers, borage, beans, of each a handful; eight pigeons stewed. Put the whole mixture into an alembic, adding four ounces of lump sugar, well pounded, one drachm of borax, the same quantity of camphor, the crumb of three French rolls, and a pint of white wine. When the whole has remained in digestion for seventeen or eighteen days, proceed to distillation, and you will obtain pigeon-water, which is such an improvement of the complexion."

We are ourselves not acquainted with any old ladies; but if such there be, perhaps they would like "a wash to give the face a younger

Distil the whole in balneum mariæ, wash your self with some at bed-time, and in the morning with barley-water; and, with the blessing of God, it will not fail to give you a younger look."

We must say, the blessing seems to us very necessary. The description of the eye-brows is too eloquent to be omitted, particularly when we observe the caution at the conclusion.

paratively but little noticed, though in disclosing the real sentiments of the mind scarcely any other feature of the face can come in competition. In vain the most prudent female imposes silence on her tongue — in vain she contrives to compose her face and her eyes — a single move. ment of the eye-brows instantly discloses what is passing in her soul. Placed upon a skin and attached to muscles which move them in every direction, the eye-brows are obedient, in consequence of their extreme mobility, to the slightest internal impulses. There majesty, pride, vanity, severity, kindness, the dull and gloomy passions, and the passions soft and gay, are alternately depicted. But it would seem that the are beauty large. that the eye-brows have a still stronger expression in women than in men; as they are more easily moved, so in them the signs of internal emotions cannot but manifest themselves more speedily. 'The eye-brows alone,' says Lavater, the prince of physiognomists, 'often give the positive expression of the character.' 'Part of the soul, says Pliny the Elder, resides in the eye-brows, which move at the command of the will.' Le Bran, in his treatise on the Passions, says, 'that the eye-brows are the least equivocal interpreters of the emotions of the heart, and of the affections of the soul: and Pernette observes, that ' one of the parts of the face which ought to be considered as one of the safest interpreters of the sentiments, is the eyebrows.' A perfect vocabulary might, indeed, be composed of the language of the eye-brows, though this would be leading us too far out of our direct road. We shall merely add the following word of advice to the fair sex— Ladies, beware of your eye-brows; use them discreetly, since very frequently they are either treacherous or imprudent.""

We conclude, as in duty bound, with the morality of the book: Mrs. Hannah More herself could not have wound up better.

"Let then the ladies observe the following rules: — in the morning use pure water as a preparatory ablution: after which they must abstain from all sudden gusts of passion, particularly envy, as that gives the skin a sallow paleness. It may seem trifling to talk of tem-perance, yet must this be attended to, both in eating and drinking, if they would avoid those pimples, for which the advertised washes are a cure. Instead of rouge, let them use moderate exercise, which will raise a natural bloom in their cheek, inimitable by art. Ingenuous candour, and unaffected good humour, will give an openness to their countenance that will make them universally agreeable. A desire of pleasing will add fire to their eyes, and breathing the morning air at sunrise will give their lips a vermilion hue. That amiable vivacity which they now possess, may be happily heightened and preserved, if they avoid late hours and card-playing, as well as novel-reading by candle-light, but not otherwise; for the first gives the face a drowsy, disagreeable aspect, the second is the mother of wrinkles, and the third is a fruitful source of weak eyes and a sallow complexion. A white hand is a very desirable ornament; and a hand can never be white unless it be kept clean; nor is this all, for if a young lady would excel her companions in this respect, she must keep her hands in constant motion, which will occasion the blood to circulate freely, and have a wonderful effect. The motion recommended, is working at her needle, brushing up the house, and twirling the distaff."

There are an infinite variety of receipts of all kinds; some judicious remarks on white "The eye-brows are a part of the face com- paints, whose injurious nature is fully shewn:

is a very useful and excellent little volume for a lady's dressing-room.

A General and Heraldic Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage of the British Em-pire. By John Burke, Esq. Fourth edi-tion. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE are inclined to plume ourselves on the increased and increasing accuracy which is obvious in works of this kind; and consequently for many of the good qualities which distinguish the new edition of Mr. Burke's very useful work. So long agone as A.D. 1820, in the Literary Gazette, Nos. 179, 184, 185, and 188, the blunders in the then most recent editions of Debrett's Peerage (of 1817 and 1820) were discussed in a bantering manner; and the marriages of parties long after they were dead, the births of children long before their parents were married, or after they had been in their graves for years, and other curious accidents and errors, were facetiously pointed out, and their correction insisted upon; to which the editor, Mr. D., replied, page 504, and the matter ended, except that the John Bull newspaper, having given the public time to forget our articles (and the public has so charming a memory, that a journal runs little risk in repeating what has been said five or six years before), served them up again in a humorous réchauffé, and raised the laugh encore at the peccadilloes of Debrett. It is true enough, that in a work containing such a multitude of dates and figures it is impossible to avoid a number of mistakes; but still, up to this period, sufficient pains and care had not been bestowed where so many opportunities had been afforded, and where, for the sake of reference, precision was so essential. We presume, for we have not consulted later publications of Debrett, that corrigenda have been judiciously and effectively applied; and, at any rate, that the competition now in the field is calculated to produce better performance on all hands. Be this as it may, Mr. Burke has certainly done his duty, and given us a very satisfactory Peerage and Baronetage up to the present period.

There is, however, one thing in this book against which, upon literary principle, we decidedly protest:—it is the intrusion (only in a few cases, we allow,) of the compiler's opinions of the men whose lineage it is the purport of a family dictionary to trace, and with which he has no business, unless he thinks an arena of this sort a proper one for political dispute and argument. We beg to say, that to be accurate in facts, and very dry, is the best recommendation of such a work. A person looking, for example, to the genealogy of the Lord Chancellor, does not want to be told, that, in Mr. Debrett's, or Mr. Burke's, or Mr. Any-bodyelse's opinion (out of a newspaper or a pamphlet)-" This eminent person, after a long series of great and gratuitous public services, was constituted lord chancellor, and created a peer of the realm, upon the accession of the Grey administration, in 1830—honours which, if conferred upon any other subject within his majesty's dominions, would have been deemed the proudest and loftiest elevation; but in the solitary instance of Brougham - Henry and altogether (we say it in all humility) this lington, and enumerated the honours so nobly won by these immortal achievements, we turn from the field to the cabinet, and there find the same master-mind engaged in the still more glorious work of internal pacification; restoring domestic concord to a distracted empire, consolidating her energies, augmenting her resources, and enlarging her freedom. Called upon to preside over his majesty's councils, as first minister of the crown, this illustrious personage has hitherto most fully sustained his high reputation in this new sphere of ac-tion. To do less, might accomplish much—to do more, would be impossible. These remarks were made in 1829: the Duke of Wellington has since ceased to guide the helm of the state. His administration is no more; few, however, of its predecessors have merited so glorious an epitaph as may be inscribed upon its monu-mental tablet... 'Religious Liberty!' "

Now, these two quotations alone shew how dangerous it is to step aside from the common path, and introduce what, whether right or wrong, must be out of place. A prating (we mean an eloquent young) member of the House of Commons is an uncommon hore at a social dinuer-table; a sagacious peer (there are a few) the chill of a drawing-room; a punning fellow is intolerable in a serious company; a three-bottle man odious to a Temperance Society; and a member of the Temperance Society the very - at a convivial meeting. But none of these are more outré than declamation in an account of a man's ancestors, self, relations, and posterity. We have, however, again, in fairness, to state, that Mr. Burke falls very seldom into this lapse; and that our objection is rather to the precedent than to an aggravated offence.
In some of the other peerages there are me morials of singular curiosity; for instance, in the account of the famous Percy race:—

" Joceline, eleventh earl, married Elizabeth youngest daughter of Thomas Wriothesly, earl of Southampton, lord-high-treasurer of England, by whom he left, at his decease, 21st May, 1670, an only daughter, Elizabeth, but no male issue, when the honours created by Queen Mary ceased. King Charles II. created, in 1674, his third natural son, by the Duchess of Cleveland, George Fitzroy, Earl, and, after-wards, Duke of Northumberland; but that nobleman dying without issue, in 1716, those dignities expired. In the meantime, one James Percy, a trunk-maker, claimed the honours of the Percy family, and so annoyed the House of Lords, that their lordships at last sentenced him to wear a paper in Westminster-hall, de-claring him 'a false and impudent pretender to the earldom of Northumberland.'

Upon which Mr. Burke puts this note.

"Claim of James Percy (known as the trunk-maker) to the honours and estates of the family of Percy, extracted from a case addressed to King Charles II .- The claimant deduced his descent from Sir Ingelram Percy, third son of Henry, fifth earl, who, he alleged, left two sons, Henry and Robert. The elder, Henry Percy, married the daughter of one Tibbott, and had three sons, James, William, and Henry. The two elder died unmarried; but the younger, Henry Percy, married Lydea, daughter of Mr. Robert Cope, of Horton, in Northamptonshire, and had three sons, Henry, who died young; one John Clerk for scandal, in declaring that he had been an impostor, &c.; but upon the trial he was nonsuited, owing, he declares, to the collusion of his attorney; and he states that the Lord Chief-justice Hales, dissatisfied with the decision, stood up and said aloud in open court, 'that the claimant had proved open court, 'that the claimant nan proven himself a true Percy, by father, mother, grand-father, and grandmother, and of the blood and family of the Percys of Northumberland, and that he did verily believe the claimant was cousin and next heir male to Joceline Percy, late earl of Northumberland, only he was afraid he had taken the descent a little too late;' and Lord Hales is further stated to have said, when entering his coach, to Lord Shaftesbury, 'I verily believe he (James Percy) hath as much right to the earldom of Northumberland as I have to this coach and horses, which I have bought and paid for.' The claimant brought a subsequent action against another of his adversaries, one Wright, for slander, in declaring his illegitimacy, &c. &c.; and the case was tried before Lord-chief-justice Rainsford, when, having proved his legitimacy and pedigree, he had a verdict for 300l. damages. After this he appears to have had a long litigation, in the exchequer, with Edward Craister, Esq., sheriff of Northumberland, for the 201 annual rent out of that shire attached to the earldom; and it must be owned that all the difficulties which wealth and power could devise, were thrown in the way of any thing like a fair decision of the merits of the case."

But it will not be expected that we should fill our page with extracts from a book of mere reference. Suffice it to repeat, that this is a reference. Sumos it to repeat, that this is careful and well-arranged, and much-improved edition (our censure applies to not three pages altogether),—that the lists are complete, the mottoes newly and better translated than heretofore, and the arms engraved in a superior

A Three Months' Tour in Switzerland and France; illustrated with Plates, descriptive of Mountain Scenery, and interspersed with Poetry: with a Route to Chamouni, the Ber-8vo. pp. 263. London, 1832. Smith, Elddiard.

THE title-page of such a tour promises nothing to us. We are like post-horses on this road, and have gone over the ground so often, that he must be a clever driver indeed who contrives to make us like it. Our only difference is—to be whipped through at full speed, to jog drudgingly over the well-beaten route, or to drawl it with a bit of green here and there by the side of the way.

It must, however, be confessed, that our present conducteur is a very amiable and pleasant companion; and if he cannot shew us much that is new, he, at any rate, renders the old as agreeable as may be. His title-page explains his route; and we need only pick out a specimen or two to exhibit the manner of his travel. So early as page 12 we have a trip, where, in steaming from Havre to Rouen, we are twice told how delightful it is thus to glide down a spacious river-the boat, all the while, going up. But we pass on to Switzerland.

"The great feature which distinguishes Switzerland from almost every other country Brougham, the purest of her patriots, the boldest of her defenders, the ablest of her instructions.—England, with one accord, declared that there had been no exaltation." Nor of the Duke of Wellington.—" Having thus glanced at the military exploits of the Duke of Wel. In 1674 he brought an action-at-law against Switzeriand from almost every other country is the contrast you behold around you so frequently, where the two seasons of summer quently, where the two seasons of summer and winter are such constant companions, and harmonise together in such good fellowship. On one side, mountains clad in the verdure of summer, even to the summit; on the other, loftier still, the more imperial hills enrobed in lake, with torn garments, dishevelled hair, pies public attention, we transcribe what Capthe grander livery of winter, crowned by a carrying a flambeau in her hand, pursued by a tain Mundy says on that subject: tiara of ice, with an avalanche for the scentre of his sway,"

At one end of Muotta-thal, a village in the canton of Schweitz, we are told, " Is a marble mill, the property of a Glarnois, who gets his bread by preparing wood for musical instruments of maple or fir, the same as is used by those who make violins and pianos, by which he makes considerable profit. He always selects such trees as have grown on the highest mountains, and on the north side, as the wood which is exposed to this wind is always found to be more elastic, and to produce a finer tone, than trees which have grown in any other situation. Out of a hundred maple - trees scarcely one can be found fit for the purpose."

And on a harp made from this wood our author introduces one of the several poems with which he has studded his tour, and which we select as a fair sample of the whole.

"Who gav'st thee, Harp, that voice, that tone, So plaintive, mellow, yet so round?—
Caught listening to the echo lone?—
Or midst the rushing cataracts found?—
Where'er thou got'st thy harmony,
To thee, 'twas fatal, gifted tree! When high aloft thy green head swung To the loud music of the blast. To the loud music of the biast, When peeling anthems rocking rung, As through each branch the wild winds past, The wayfarer would stop to heav,— To the forest turn his raptured ear i Now thy leafy honours strown.

Thy proud tops lash the skies no more;
But though thy brightest charms are flown,
A second birth's for thee in store;
Melodious still, though changed thy form,—
No more responsive to the storm.

Now dulcet notes thou dost reply, Now dulcet notes thou dost reply, Invoked by the soft silver call Of heaven-born song; — thy dying fall Challenged by vocal harmony; Transplanted to a foreign strand,— Halled,— welcomed in a distant land."

We now quote another prose passage, relative to the chamois.

"Near a bridge called the Schon-Brucke a sight awaited us, new to all the party, chamois, and alive! The guide first directed our attention to a woman, standing at the time near one of those cabins that are scattered very thinly over the nearly barren spot : she beckoned to us, and, as we approached, we found her in possession of a young chamois, nearly full grown, who seemed very averse to being thus exhibited; neither was it without much difficulty she could retain her unruly prisoner. The guide confirmed the assurance she gave us, of the utter impossibility of keeping them in confinement, much less of taming them, let them get them ever so young. After a certain time, such is their wild nature, that they are obliged either to destroy them or give them their liberty.'

To the castle of Lowerts the following legend belongs :--

" In 1307, a creature of the infamous Gesler is said to have carried off by force a young girl of Art, and to have brought her to this island: the brothers of the girl having got intelligence, overtook the ruffian, and washed out the indignity in the blood of the perpetrator of the foul deed. On the first of January of the following year, the inhabitants of Schweitz seized the castle, and destroyed it. Since then an appropriate inhabitant, one of a supernatural species, is said to have taken up its abode here upon particular occasions. a certain hour (midnight, of course,) frightful cries may be heard within the walls, preceded by a clap of thunder; after which, a young female (beautiful, no doubt,) makes her ap-pearance on the ramparts, which overhang the man armed at all points. The warrior, at length, is seen to fly, in his turn, before the object of his pursuit, and finally to precipitate himself into the lake beneath, amidst the most frightful vells."

Here we close the book, which exhibits the writer, as we said at the outset, in an amiable point of view __ a lover of the beautiful in nature, and well disposed to please and be pleased. Hence both as spectator and author he deserves our kindly report.

CAPT. MUNDY'S SKETCHES IN INDIA. Second Volume: - Conclusion.

In terminating our notice of these volumes, we shall turn to the hunting and hawking descriptions of our enthusiastic sportsman, who says, during part of his peregrinations:-other kind of falcon, of which, I believe, I have not made mention. It is a very small bird, perhaps barely so large as a thrush, and its prey is proportioned to its strength. It is flown at quails, sparrows, and others of the feathered tribe, of the like calibre. The mode of starting it is different from that used with any other hawk. The falconer holds the little well-drilled savage within the grasp of his hand, the head and tail protruding at either opening, and the plumage carefully smoothed down. When he arrives within twenty or thirty yards of the quarry, the sportsman throws his hawk much as he would a cricketball, in the direction of it. The little creature gains his wings in an instant, and strikes the game after the manner of the bhause. There is a queer tribe of gregarious little birds, common in India, which afford very laughable sport with the above-described hawk. They are usually found in a chattering fluttering con-gress of ten or a dozen, at the foot of some baubul tree; where the little busy-bodies are so absorbed in the subject under immediate agitation, that the falconer may approach within six paces of their noisy court of parliament, ere they entertain a thought of proroguing it. In the heat of the debate, down comes the little hawk (like some Cromwell) into the midst of the astonished assembly, and begins to lay about him right and left; when, strange to say, the whole tribe set upon him, unquibus et rostris, and with a virulence of tongue as manifestly vituperative, to a discerning ear, as if it were couched in words. In the dust of the contest the sportsman runs up, and all the party take wing, except some two or three unfortunates, who, having caught a tartar, lie fluttering in the clutches of the feathered tyrant.

Again, boar-hunting, we are told, is much more exciting than even the tiger-chase, and more depends on the sportsman's own activity and skill.

"A hog, bent on retreat, will dash through the thickest fence of prickly pear as if it were a young quick hedge; spring over a fifteen feet ditch with the agility of a deer; and should he meet with a precipitous ravine in his path, he tumbles into it, and out of it, as if he had not got a neck to break. These same obstacles lie in the way of the rider, who has to bear it constantly in mind, that, unlike the fox-hunter, he carries a sharp-edged weapon in his hand which, in an awkward grip, he may chance to run into his steed, and which in a fall may

The usual influx of pilgrims at this epoch is immense; crowds of votaries are already assembled in the town, or are wearily plodding their way towards this Mecca of their hopes. But their numbers decrease yearly, and the sanctity of Juggernauth wanes in proportion to the progress of civilisation in India. mad fanaticism which formerly led hundreds of voluntary victims to immolate themselves beneath the wheels of the idol's car - an offering which is said to extract a ghastly smile of delight from the blood-loving Dagon — is now much sobered down. Sterling mentions that, during the four years in which he witnessed the ceremony, Juggernauth was only propitiated with three sacrifices; and that these wretches, being afflicted with some grievous bodily complaints, merely embraced that method of ridding themselves of a miserable existence, as preferable to the more common-place suicide of hanging or drowning. The average number of pilgrims annually resorting to Pooree is said to be about one hundred and twenty thousand. many of whom are destined never to return. Thousands of these poor wretches die from famine, over-fatigue during the journey, or from the pernicious climate of the rainy season; and their corpses, thrown on the sands near the English station, are either burnt, or left to be devoured by the troops of Pariah dogs, jackals, and vultures, with which this place, so rich in food for them, swarms. The chaplain of the district assured me that he had himself seen on the space of half an aere of ground, as many as one hundred and fifty bodies, with twice as many of the above-named scavengers fighting over their horrid feast,

'As they laxily mumbled the bones of the dead,
When they searcely could rise from the spot where they fed!'

"At the festival of the Rath Jattra, the idols are conducted in state to visit their country-seat, one mile and a half from Pooree a journey of three days. By all accounts, the method of inducting their worships from the temple to their raths, or cars, is not re-markably oceanonious. Ropes being fastened round their throats, they are dragged 'neckand-heels' down the grand steps, through the mud, and are finally hauled by the same gallows-like process into their respective vehicl where they are decorated by the priests, and welcomed by shouts of admiration and triumph from the fanatical multitude. The raths, on which the monster-deities are drawn, are of lofty and massive dimensions and clumsy architecture: that of Sri Jeo is nearly forty-five feet in height, has a platform of thirty-five feet square, and moves upon sixteen wheels of solid timber. At first sight it appears even worse than strange and inconsistent, that the same government which encourages the religious en-deavours of hundreds of missionaries to convert the Hindoos to the Christian faith, should virtually countenance (as the cavillers against the Company on this much-canvassed point insist that it does) the most revolting idolatry, by making it a source of revenue. It is certain that the E. I. Company, by the pilgrim-tax, secure to themselves an annual average amount of fifteen thousand pounds; that the collections are made by the Brahmins; and that in return for this extortion-startling fact !- a Christian government agrees to keep in repair, and adorn with silks and broad-cloths, a pagan idol; and prove an ugly companion to himself."

to support, for the private use of the graven
As the subject of the pilgrim-tax for the image, a stud of elephants and horses! The monstrous idoletry of Juggernauth now occudefenders of the system, on the other hand, contend that the interference of the Company is salutary in every respect; that it controls a rapacious and unprincipled priesthood by depriving them of an immense revenue; and that the mode pursued is the one best calculated to bring about the final suppression of the idol. It is, indeed, manifest, that taxation is any thing but encouraging to the thing taxed; and it is obvious to every one, that open and violent opposition to a rite so firmly rooted in the religious prejudices of the natives might shake the allegiance of our Hindoo sepoys, and thereby involve even the loss of India." it were committing suicide for very grief! The foliage of the rest is thinned and disfigured by the frequent and almost excusable depredations of visitors. Fresh cuttings have, however, been planted by the governor, who intends, proved, alas! moreover, to set cypresses round the outer fence. Madame Bertrand's immortelles have proved, alas! mortal. The fine tall old corporal who came out from England with the ex-emperor, was full of his praises: 'I saw the general often,' said the old fellow; 'I he had an eye in his head like an eagle!' He described the visit of the French pilgrims to this spot.

We conclude with a notice of the scene where closed a memorable career—the last abode of Buonaparte. "As we turned through the lodges, the old house appeared at the end of an avenue of scrubby and weather-worn trees. It bears the exterior of a respectable farm-house, but is now fast running to decay. On entering a dirty court-yard, and quitting our horses, we were shewn by some idlers into a square building. which once contained the bed-room, sittingroom, and bath of the Empereur des François. The partitions and floorings are now thrown down and torn up, and the apartments occupied for six years by the hero before whom kings, emperors, and popes, had quailed, are now tenanted by cart-horses! Passing on with a groan, I entered a small chamber, with two windows looking towards the north. Between these windows are the marks of a fixed sofa: on that couch Napoleon died. The apartment is now occupied by a threshing-machine;—

'No bad emblem of its former tenant!' said a sacrilegious wag. Hence we were conducted onwards to a large room, which formerly contained a billiard-table, and whose front looks out upon a little latticed veranda, where the imperial peripatetic—I cannot style him philosopher—enjoyed the luxury of six paces to and fro — his favourite promenade. The whitewashed walls are scored with names of every nation; and the paper of the ceiling has been torn off in strips, as holy relies. Many couplets, chiefly French, extolling and lamenting the departed hero, adorn or disfigure (according to périale : '

Du grand Napoléon le nom toujours cité lra de bouche en bouche à la postérité.'

their qualities) the plaster walls. The only lines that I can recall to mind—few are worth it—are the following, written over the door, and signed (  Officier de la Garde Im-

The writer doubtless possessed more spirit as a sabreur than as a poet. The emperor's once well-kept garden,

'And still where many a garden-flower grows wild,' is now overgrown and choked with weeds. At the end of a walk still exists a small mound, on which it is said the hero of Lodi, Marengo, and Austerlitz, amused himself by erecting a mock battery. The little chunamed tank, in which he fed some fresh-water fish, is quite dried up; and the mud wall, through a hole in which he reconnoitered passers-by, is, like the great owner, returned to earth!"

The tomb is thus described :-

"About half an acre round the grave is railed in. At the gate we were received by an old corporal of the St. Helena corps, who has the care of the place. The tomb itself consists of a square stone, about ten feet by seven, surrounded with a plain iron railing. Four or five weeping willows, their stems leaning towards the grave, hang their pensile branches over it.

The willows are decaying fast, and one of them rests upon the sharp spears of the railing, which are buried in its trunk—as though the frequent and almost excusable depredations of visitors. Fresh cuttings have, however, been planted by the governor, who intends, moreover, to set cypresses round the outer fence. Madame Bertrand's immortelles have proved, alas! mortal. The fine tall old corporal who came out from England with the ex-emperor, was full of his praises: 'I saw the general often,' said the old fellow; 'he had an eye in his head like an eagle!' He described the visit of the French pilgrims to this spottheir Kibla-as most affecting. Some are extravagant beyond measure in their grief; falling on their faces round the railing (which they never enter, as foreigners do), praying, weeping, and even tearing their hair. Whilst weeping, and even tearing their hair. we were there, my friend of yesterday came towards the spot; but when he saw our large, and, I fear me, rather unimpressed party, he turned upwards, and disappeared. After inscribing our names in a book—into which also appropriate poetry as well as ribald nonsense finds its way-we drank to Napoleon's immortal memory in his own favourite spring, and mounting our steeds, spurred towards Plantation House."

O high ambition lowly laid!

Lectiones Latine ; or, Lessons in Latin Literature, &c. &c. By J. Rowbotham. 12mo. pp. 292. London, 1832. E. Wilson.

ME. ROWEOTHAM is already well known to the public, not only as a successful teacher, but as the author of several school-books to facilitate the study of French, German, Algebra, and other branches of education. His present performance must add to his credit. Divided into four parts, the general selection is good; and the grammar, the notes, the translations, and the explanations, are all well calculated to assist the student, and impress a knowledge of the language upon his mind.

Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical

Society. Vol. IV. Part 2.
This Part of the Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, which has just appeared, is well adapted to keep up the reputation of that active body, and seems to us (along with other collections of scientific memoirs, which, among the multitude of subjects that pass before us, we have not had time to notice,) to shew the groundlessness of the complaint, that science is on the decline in England. It contains two memoirs by Professor Airy on the subject of physical opticsa science which has now taken its place by the side of physical astronomy, in regard to the union of intricacy and certainty which its calculations exhibit. In both these memoirs Professor Airy describes some complex and curious phenomena, which had never before been observed, and which were, previous to observation, predicted in their minutest circumstances by theory, and afterwards verified by experiment. Professor Clark describes a fœtus with one head and two bodies, of which he has examined the anatomy; and he connects the remarkable circumstances which this examination presents with the important doctrines on the history of the development of the embryo recently established by continental physiologists. Professor Henslow has examined a species of digitalis, produced by the mixture mixtures and the sterility of the offspring. Mr. Jenyns has described with great accuracy all the British shells of the species Cyclas and Pisidium, with their inhabitants: several of these species have been added to the list by Mr. Jenyns himself. Mr. Stephens has given an account of a splendid beetle from Brazil, which is not only a new species, but forms the type of a new genus. This paper is illustrated by two beautiful plates of the insect. The papers also of Dr. Clark and Mr. Jenyns, and that of Prof. Henslow more particularly, are illustrated by a number of engravings, drawa and coloured with eminent care and skill.

Paternal Advice, chiefly to young Men on entering into Life. London, 1832, R. Groombridge, Bowdery and Kirby; Dublin, Wakeman; Edinburgh, A. Black; Glasgow, J. Finlay.

A VERY small tome, but full of interesting instruction and good advice in the forms of aphorisms, anecdotes, &c.: a neat and useful gift for youth of either sex.

Modern Infidelity considered, &c. By the Rev. R. Hall. New edition. London, 1832 Stockley.

ANOTHER very small, but excellent production, selected from the writings of the late Mr. Hall; and with a sketch of his life and character prefixed.

The Annual Historian for 1831. By Ingram Cobbin, A.M. 18mo. pp. 322. London, 1832. Westley and Davis.

A DIGEST of the chief historical events of the world during the past year, adapted for the reading of young persons. It takes what is called the liberal side in its view of public matters, and is well arranged.

Brighton as it is. London, 1832. Wallis. BRIGHTON as it is! we wish we could see it, "with all the latest improvements in that fashionable watering place:" but as we cannot just now, we beg to commend this guide to those who can.

Rebecca; or, the Times of Primitive Christianity: a Poem, in Four Cantos. By the Rev. A. G. H. Hollingsworth, A.M. 12mo. pp. 450. London, 1832. J. Nisbet.

To the serious reader this work will have many attractions, and it does much credit to Mr. Hollingsworth's talents. It is the history of a youthful Jewess converted to Christianity, and suffering from the persecution which endeavoured to crush the early professors of the faith. The following lines of graceful description are a fair specimen of the author's style:

tion are a fair specimen of the author's style:

"Hard by the tufted bank, where Naiads poured In trickling symphonies their dripping urns; Where many a brilliant flower looked forth alone On its own solitary chosen home Of mossy quietude, or gased with joy At its soft shadow, waving brightly forth Across some aleeping eddy, girdled round By rocks, and twisted roots, and feathery stems Of fern and creeping ivy,—where, above, Trees lifted high in whispering pride of leaf Their hoary trunks, or languishingly bent As if enamour'd of the deep cool stream, Wakening new dimples on its placid face, As breezes hastening here to cool their wings Breathed gently on their leaves,—where, dark and still, As if it longed to rest between these banks Crowded with deep cool shades, the river lay In undisturbed repose, save when in joy, Flashing with burning gold or silvery scale, Forth for one instant sprang the finny king. Then plunged again, and left the startled pool To murmur on in rapture as before;—Hard by this grove and stream, a Temple lay Defaced by Time; once dedicate, and named

Appello's shrize. Its slender pillars broke
Held partially the porch; the statues lay
Despoiled, and fallen from their marble base.
Luxuriant tendrils spread from climbing plants
In gay uniformed revels o'er the halls,
O'r flung festoons of flowers through the roof,
Alluring birds and bees to murmur where
The Sun-god's votaries raised the lofty hymn.
The sacred garden now a tangled wild
Of sweets, and noxious weeds; and hither alunk
Snakes undisturbed, or golden lizards basked
Their radiant forms amid the througing trees.
Walks choked with flowers, and marble basins decked
In blossoms, crowding their bright heads beneath
Soft waters nurmuring through the matted leaves,
Gave verdant shelter to the glittering tribes
O'f birds and buxing insects, as they stooped in giddy circles round the bubbling springs;
O'r trimm'd their feathery pride beaded the brim
O'f fountains, where harmonious concords wove,
In former days, on every sunny eve,
Commingling symphonies of prayer and praise.
The vine unprun'd held dailiance with the trees,
And wreathed around their trunks her amorous arms,
Empurpling all their brows with clustering grapes.
Continuous, the orange blossoms fell
In snowy showers unbeeted, while her fruit,
With golden rind enveloped, hastened forth
To meet alone the sun's enkindling glance." Its slender pillars brok

There are some interesting notes on various religious topics.

Real Life: Pages from the Portfolio of a Chro-nicler. Pp. 326. Edinburgh, 1832, Waugh and Innes: Glasgow, Ogle: Dublin, Tims; Curry and Co.: London, Whittaker and Co. WE are exceedingly pleased with this little volume, which depicts the life of the poorer classes in Scotland with equal truth and encouragement. We recommend it as a most useful work to the rich, whom it informs of the many small charities practised by those placed, as it is called, below them. It is most disgusting to hear people who know nothing of the subject on which they are speaking, talk of what they term the want of feeling in the lower classes. The poor are very kind to the poor,-kind in often yielding to each other time, assistance, and sympathy; and it is a good feature in this work, that it gives in-stances of such conduct. We cordially recommend these sketches of Real Life.

Scenes from the Belgian Revolution. By C. F. Henningsen, author of the "Last of the Sophis." Pp. 84. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

MR. HENNINGSEN ought to be made poet laureate of Amsterdam immediately, so warmly does he embrace the Dutch cause. Some of the notes are very amusing; and we must say we agree with him in respect and admiration for the Batavian states: we know no people more entitled, from their whole history, to their own self-respect than the Dutch.

Ardent: a Tale of Windsor Forest in the Nineteenth Century. 4 vols. London, 1832, Chappel; Windsor, Moreton; Eton, Ingalton and Son.

THIS is one of those works which certainly do surprise us; for what in the world could tempt any one to fill four volumes with such solemn silliness is utterly beyond our comprehension.

The Florentine Brothers, and other Poems. By David Hobkirk. Newcastle, 1832. Charnley. THERE is much poetical feeling in this slight volume. It is a tale from the romantic annals of Italy, with one or two minor poems. work is inscribed to Miss L. E. Landon.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MR. FARADAY on the crispations of fluids lying on vibrating surfaces. After the read-drawings of remains of antiquity discovered in in Monorief's drama of that name. G. Clint, A.

ing of his paper before the Royal Society last year on certain forms assumed by particles upon vibrating surfaces, Mr. Faraday pursued the investigation, and extended the principles in explanation of the curious configurations observed by Œrsted and Wheatstone, on the surfaces of fluids on vibrating plates. By gra-dual experiment he connected these minute appearances with one form of stationary undulations, and shewed that the direct motion of the plate to and fro was with respect to the fluid converted into a reciprocating lateral motion; the fluid dividing, as it were, into quantities which, on rising, formed heaps, and on falling, gave origin to an equal set of similar interposed heaps, which again passed back into the first set, and so on continually. Various forms of vibrations were shewn :- thus, if a cylinder just touching the surface of water be made to vibrate up and down rapidly, radii form all round it to a great extent, as if elevated and depressed lines were passing directly outwards. Mr. Faraday then considered the possibility of similar effects taking place in elastic media sur-rounding the vibrating plate, in which case the elasticity allowed of what could only take place in dense inelastic media by a suddenly terminated surface; and, on the supposition that the undulatory theory of light was the true view of its phenomena, he remarked that the present effects pointed out how the direct vibrations of the luminous body might be supposed to become converted into lateral vibrations, and so produce that particular condition of the luminous ether which Young and Freswell have shewn would account for all the phenomena of polarised light.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY: ANNIVERSARY MEETING.

LORD STANLEY in the chair. From the annual address delivered by his lordship, it appeared that during the past year the Society had lost by death thirteen of its fellows, and five foreign members. Amongst these, he observed there were names, the loss of which men of science have every reason to lament. Of Baron Cuvier it was only necessary to mention the name,-no eulogy could add to his fame. Our enterprising countryman, Captain Ross, whose expeditions to the Arctic regions have been noticed in the Literary Gazette, was included in the list of deceased fellows; but the president expressed a hope that Capt. Ross might be still alive, although no accounts of him had been received for two years. From intelligence lately brought to this country, an English vessel had been discovered on the Esquimaux coast imbedded in the ice, which is supposed to be the same in which Captain Ross and his intrepid companions went out. A just compliment was paid to the memory of Sir Thomas Cullum, one of the most ancient as well as liberal fellows of the Society. During the year thirty-one members and two associates had been elected. Lord Stanley was re-elected president.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

MAY 24th .- Mr. Hamilton in the chair. The secretary announced that the 24th Vol. of the secretary announced that the 24th vol. of the Archeologia was ready for delivery to the members. The reading of Mr. Todd's paper on Flamborough Head as the Ocellum Promontorium of Ptolemy, and Filey Bay as the Sinus Salutaris, was concluded. Mr. Woodward, of Norfolk, exhibited a collection of Norfolk, illustrative of the history and habits of the early inhabitants, consisting of Celts, spear-heads, mills, ancient utensils, &c. Mr. Woodward offered the collection to the use of the Society, should they be inclined to publish it.

PINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY. [Third Notice.]

No. 346. Hawking. E. Landseer, R.A. We think we may venture to assert that this description of field-sports was never repre-. sented in this manner before. It is as if the picture had been painted in the car of an air-balloon. The birds engaged in mortal combat are brought close to the eye, and every feather is full of character and expression; while the sporting party are gasing with intense interest from below. The whole is executed in the finest style of art; but of the taste and feeling of those who delight in such spectacles we will say nothing.

No. 332. A finished Sketch of Italian Girls going in procession to their first Communion; painted in consequence of seeing a single sunbeam fall on the high altar at the moment of the ceremony. A.W. Callcott, R.A.—An incident like this is, in the eye of an artist, a pearl of great price, repaying a world of toil and travel. Without considering it, as some might, like fire from heaven falling upon an accepted sacrifice, but taking it merely in its pictorial character, it displays Mr. Callcott's powers in a very pleasing point of view.

No. 360. Phadria and Cymochles, or the Idle Lake. See Spenser's Faery Queene, Canto VI. W. Etty, R.A.—As the poem no where says the amorous couple were stinted for room in the vessel in which they embarked, we think Mr. Etty might have accommodated them better, without injury to his picture, which is, however, beautifully executed.

No. 383. Usurpation of Birds' Nests by Cupids. T. Stothard, R.A.—Not a very happy title for a design purely ornamental, which is in the style of the paintings at Herculaneum, and which exhibits this veteran artist's usual

No. 382. The Village Postman. T. Clater.

Whether the epistle be a love-letter or a valentine, or both, is left to conjecture: the expression in the features of the two girls shews that it is highly acceptable. As a work of art, it is one of Mr. Clater's best productions. The effect of chiaroscuro in the interior, and the execution of the accessories, are admirable.

No. 262. Smugglers. T. Webster.—This interior exhibits characters of a very different description from those in that just mentioned. The eager look-out of the man with the telescope, in correspondence with the expression and gestures of his companions, tells of approaching booty or danger. It is one of the most spirited performances that we have ever seen from Mr. Webster's pencil.

No. 272. Cinderella. C. Landseer. - The story is well told, and cleverly painted as respects both colour and effect. It might perhaps have been better had the costume of the sisters been of an earlier date.

No. 252. The Water-Mill. F. R. Lee. Fortunately for Mr. Lee, the reputation he has already obtained cannot suffer by the situation in which this performance is placed. It is one of many instances to shew how a good picture may be hidden from the visitors of the Exhibition.

No. 257. Mr. Mathews as Monsieur Mallet, Artista.

In style and execution, Mr. Clint's works greatly resemble those of the late Zoffany. We can hardly pay him a higher compliment.

No. 302. Portraits of two favourite Dogs, the property of J. King, Esq. T. Woodward.—Whatever the animals may be in the eyes of their possessor, we are sure the representation of them will be duly estimated by all who can appreciate excellence in art.

No. 303. Sketch of an Italian Boy. J. Hayes. There is a strong stamp of truth on this modestly named performance.

No. 319. The Procession to the Christening; a Scene at L'Ariccia, near Rome. P. Williams. In this tasteful composition there is a sufficiency of contrast in character and costume to render it highly picturesque, and a skill and care in the execution that would give interest to a less dignified subject-

No. 352. Composition, J. W. Allen; No. 353, Cattle in a Farm-yard, J. Dearman; and No. 354, Scene on the River Dart, C. Marshall; are all distinguished for their sparkling and brilliant effect.

The Ante-room (improperly termed in the Catalogue the Anti-room) contains some very clever and pleasing pictures. Among the foremost we rank-

No. 464. Puok disenchanting Bottom; Oberon and Titania reconciled; Mesers. Peachblosson, Coboeb, Moth, and Mustard-seed, bringing gifts. D. McClise.—Notwithstanding the rapid progress that we have witnessed in the practice of this able artist, in oil as well as in water-colours, we were not prepared for so admirable a work as this; in which all that is highly imaginative in conception is united with all that is skilful and splendid in execution.

[To be continued.]

BRITISH INSTITUTION.

WE have always held it expedient, pour encourager les autres to follow a good example, to make the public acquainted with those patrons of the fine arts who watch the productions of merit at our Exhibitions, and, in the best way, encourage those who thus sustain the character of our native school. The following is the list of sales for 1832	:-

Subjects.	Artists.	Purchasers.
Portsmouth, from		1
the King's Bas-	C. Stanfield · · · ·	· His Majesty.
Ruins of the House		· Earl of Aberdeen.
Scene on the River		1
Wytham] Timber - Waggon	Ditto	· Ditto.
crossing a Brook	F. R. Lee	· Duke of Bedford.
Covent Gärden Mar- ket
Sea-Shore, with Figures	T. S. Good	· Ditto.
Mole at Naples · · · ·	G. Jones, R.A. .	Marques Lansurrand al me Lil.
teenth Century taking the Veil.	S. Hart	Ditto
Interior of a High-		1
lander's House Lassie herding	E. Laddeer, K.A	W. Wells, esq.
Sheep	Ditto · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	· Ditto.
Benjamin	W. Hilton, R.A.	· Ditto.
View on the River		i
Dart, Devon The Plain Gold Ring.	F. R. Lee · · · · · · J. R. Herbert · · ·	· Ditto. · Lord Durie.
Hawking	E. Landseer, R.A	. Earl of Resex.
The Cloister	A. G. Vickers · · ·	N. W. R. Col-
An Antiquary	A. Fraser ·····	· Lord Northwick.
The Virgin with the Infunt Christ	F. Schlavone	· Lord Seleev.
Falstaff, Pistol, and	0 00-1 1 10 1	707 907-11s
MODERAGE CHARGE	C. Clint, A.R.A W. Etty, R.A	· Dr. Cartwright.
Sabrina	Ditto	· Sir F. Freeling.
POR	Miss E. Johes	Ditto
Gil Blaz and Aurers The Victim Bride	M. A. Shee
	r. Corpeau	x C. meann, esq.

	The Glower Miss Jones R. Holford, enq. Canterbury Cathe-	ľ
	dral · · · · · · · · C. Deene · · · · · · Ditto.	ŀ
	Apples	H
•	Note Ask Verms on	1
	the Tamer P. H. Rogers H. Pelle, eq. Semiramide H. Singleton Marquesse Stafford. Pecchae A. J. Oliver, A.R.A. J. Renshaw, eq.	li
	Peacher A. J.Oliver, A.R.A. J. Renshaw, esq.	li
	Hastings Fisher-	ŀ
	man J. Inskipp T. W. esq.	li
	Figures W. Shayer W. Wells, enq. Frarreners C. Hancock Lord Monson.	ľ
	A Philosopher in Search of the Wind R. Farrier Ditto. Sketch of a Cottage T. Webster Ditto.	ľ
	Sketch of a Cottage T. Webster Ditto.	ľ
	Sterch of a Otting T. Webster Ditto. Head of Loch Tay, Parthabire C. Flelding R. Vernon, esq. Scene in Boccaccio R. T. Bone Ditto.	ľ
	A Falconer Alex France Ditto.	ŀ
	A Falconer Alex. Fracer { C. R. Mainwa-ring, esq.	1
	A Spanish Gentleman	ľ
	The Pedlar Ditto Woodburne, esq. Sir Ed. Waverlay Miss Cook Woodburne, esq.	1
	Loch Lomond T. C. Hoffand J. Wollett, esq.	h ļ
į	Lum, Devon J. Burnet	ľ
	Solomon's Sacritics	1
	at the Dedication of the Temple T. H. Nixon W. H. Trant, esq. The Cathedral of St.	ľ
	Laurence, Rot-	li
	terram D. Colleger D. Colleger, eq. A Domestic Affice. Son W. E. West B. Wiggan, esq. Victo in Italy W. Cowen J. Taverner, esq. Berley Heath A. Clint Berley Heath	ŀ
	Victo in Italy W. Cowen J. Taverner, esq. Berley Heath A. Clint	li million Dista	1
	Scene at Battersea J. Stark	ľ
	Scene at Battersea J. Stark Dr. Penrose. Study from Nature Mrs. Carpenter Dr. Penrose. A Highland Puss. Miss A. Nasmyth H. Cottley, esq. Barmouth, North Walss. J. Wilson J. Stewart esq.	ŀ
	Wales J. Wilson J. Stewart, eq. Henristia, a Study R. Rothwell Countem Da Salis. The Young Student W. M'Call Lord Monson. Parties of Orters A. Marchest Large	ŀ
	The Young Student W. M'Call Lord Monson- Portice of Octa-) C. Loren B. A. (Marquess Lans-	ŀ
	Portico of Octa- via, Rome G. Jones, R.A { Marquess Lans- downe. The Challenge E. Landseer, R.A. Lord Selsey.	١
•	Dead Game Stephen Taylor H. Hoare, esq. Reading and List-	ľ
	ming T. S. Good Lord Northwick.	ľ
	Margate Sands— Sunset G. P. Reinagle Ditto. Study of Children's	1
	Heads T. Uwins A. Watts, eeq.	1
	men	ŀ
	Playing at Carde . C. Steedman Ditto. The Inner Harbour,	1
	The Inner Harbour, Dover G. Hilditch, jun J. Broadhurst, esq. The Wolr on the	ľ
	River Dart J. Tingcombe Ditto.
	narron Castie E. Childe Ditto. A Water-Mill J. Wilson Ditto. Free and Eag T. S. Good J. Webb, esq.	1
		1
	Dubati and the state of the sta	4
	Don Quisote C. R. Leslie, R.A. A. Watts, esq.	1
•	BerktshireF. H. Henshaw Rev. G. Preston. Don Quisote C. R. Leslie, R.A. A. Watts, esq. Sancho Ditto.

MRW PUBLICATIONS.

The History and Topography of the United States of North America. Edited by John Howard Hinton, A.M. Hinton.

This elaborate and valuable work is at length brought to a termination. During its progress we have repeatedly called the attention of our readers to the interest and variety of its embellishments. They have been appropriately closed with a very finely engraved head of the immortal Washington, engraved from a picture by Gilbert Stuart. Mr. Hinton gives the fol-lowing account of Stuart, and of the circumstances which attended the execution of his portrait of Washington.

"Among the most distinguished American Moon, Boys, and Graves.

painters must be ranked Gilbert Stuart. He "St. Catharing's Hill, near Guildford." was a native of Rhode Island, and, after leav. " Chatham," " Margate," and " Ashby de s ing college, made up his mind to follow painting as a profession; and not being able to find a proper master in America, (Copley being then gone to England,) he embarked for this country in 1775, and put himself under the instruction of Mr. West, who was then in the zenith of his fame. Stuart soon became a favourite pupil d his master, and graduated from his school with a high reputation: as a portrait-painter he ranked second to no one in London but Sir Joshua Reynolds. While in the metropolis, he had the good fortune to become acquainted with Burke, Fox, Sheridan, and many of their associates. These men were not only the patrons of the arts, but the friends of artists. He painted several of them in a fine style, which spread his fame far and wide. They were anxious to possess, and to give to the world a correct likeness of Washington, and they induced Stuart to visit the United States for that purpose. When he arrived at the city of Washington, the great man had retired from all office, and was in private life at Mount Vernon. When he sat to Stuart, as the latter has often stated, an apathy seemed to seize him, and a vacuity spread over his countenance, most appalling to the painter. Stuart was however, not easily overcome; he made several fruitless attempts to awaken the heroic spirit in him, by talking of battles, but in vain. He next tried to warm up the patriot and sage by turning the conversation to the republican aces of antiquity; - this was equally unsuccessful. At length the painter struck on the master-key, and opened a way to his mind, which he has so happily transferred to the canvass with the features of his face."

We regret that Mr. Hinton has not more explicitly stated what this "master-key" was ... The tender passion for five pounds!

Departure of the Israelites from Egypt. Painted by D. Roberts; engraved by J. P. Quilley. Moon, Boys, and Graves.

WHEN this magnificent picture was exhibited, we expressed our admiration of the granden with which it had been conceived, and the ability with which it was executed. The subject, replete with imposing architectural design, the picturesque and striking forms which characterise the arts and religion of ancient Egypt, and the multitude of human beings actuated by one great impulse, is altogether finely suited for the highest exercise of the pencil; nor is it less calculated for effect in the hands of the Mr. Quilley has made a faithful engraver. transcript of the splendid scene, and produced a print of very great interest and beauty, with propriety dedicated to Lord Northwick, the purchaser of the original, and always a judicious and liberal friend to British artists and their works.

St. Michael's Mount, Cornwall. Painted by H. Gastineau; on stone by G. Barnard Ackermann.

A spirited and artist-like view of an object of very peculiar pictorial attraction, the famed St. Michael's Mount. The dash of the waves, the fine break of clouds, the animation imparted by the hovering sea-fowl, the village at the foot of the rock, the shipping, and the rocky foreground, are all happily combined, and would tempt us to Penzance, were it only to look on the reality.

England and Wales. From Drawings by J. M. W. Turner, Esq., R.A. No. XIV.

Zouch," engraved by Messrs. J. H. Kernot, W. Miller, R. Wallis, and W. Radclyffe, are the plates which in the present Number attest the powers of our great landscape painter. We repeat our wish that he would attend a little more to his figures: in most cases they deform the scenes which they are intended to enliven and adora.

The Gallery of Greenwich Hospital. With Biographical and Historical Memoirs by Edward Hawke Locker, Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A. Part IV. Harding and Lepard. THE embellishments of this Part consist of

THE embellishments of this Part consist of fine portraits of Charles Howard, earl of Nottingham; George Monk, duke of Albemarle; Cuthbert Lord Collingwood; and William Locker, Esq., lieutenant-governor of Greenwich Hospital; and a very beautiful little print of Lord Howe's victory on the 1st of June, 1794, engraved by J. H. Le Petit, from the well-known picture by P. J. De Loutherbourg, R.A.

Views of the principal Seats, and Marine and Landscape Scenery, in the Neighbourhood of Lymington, Hants. From original Pictures taken on the spot, by J. M. Gilbert, Marine Painter. Drawn on stone by L. Haghe. Part I. Ackermann.

THE beauties of the neighbourhood of Lymington are well known. In the four plates of which the present Number of this new publication consists, Messrs. Gilbert and Haghe have rendered a portion of those beauties in a Boningtonian style of art highly creditable to their talents and taste.

MR. HAYDON'S EXHIBITION; EGYPTIAN HALL.

DURING the present week Mr. Haydon has added to his attractive exhibition a new picture: "Napoleon musing on his future grave." The figure is of the size of nature; and it is impossible to contemplate it without sympathising (as far as our abhorrence of mere military ambition will allow us to sympathise) with our fellow-creature; —a being now ac-knowledged, and to be acknowledged for ever, of transcendent, although of most misdirected power. He is evidently throwing his thoughts backward to the time when, like Casar, he was "the foremost man of all the earth;" and forward to the time when the meanest bombardier of the French, or of any other army, will be his equal. Humble as we are, we own we do not envy his reflections. What are they? That he might have been the greatest benefactor the world ever saw: that he chose to be the perpetuator of its most antiquated, vulgar, and injurious prejudices! -We repeat, however, that the fine abstraction which Mr. Haydon has here embodied, must interest all who game upon it.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

"OUR PRESENT MAY."

AGAIN May on her flowers shines,
Of April days the offspring sweet,
Whose opening buds their perfume breathe,
Her bright and gladdening smiles to greet.

If late she comes, with bloomy train
To deck departed Winter's tomb,
More lovely her bright days appear,
Succeeding those of gust and gloom.

The breeze now plays upon the rose, Which, like a coy and blushing maid,

Written after reading L. E. L.'s beautiful ptem und the above title in the Literary Gazette, May 12. Half smiling, trembles at each sigh
That does its fresh young heart invade.

And, like the maid, is soon deceived —
For this false rover through the day,
But lingers with the rose awhile,
Then with its fragrance steals away.—

Yes, May is come, and Hope was true
In whispering her joyous birth—
The leafy boughs are gemmed with buds,
The summer sun smiles on our earth.

Then let us not ourselves deceive, And Hope the false deluder deem— Condemning her for visions vain, And every weak impatient dream.

Though cold and bleak at first, sweet May,
Thou art not doomed like some to die,
Who, mourning o'er their shadowy days,
Let brightest hours unheeded fly.
May 23.

BIOGRAPHY. BARON CUVIER.

BARON CUVIER, as we last week stated, died at Paris on Tuesday the 15th of May. This at Paris on Tuesday the 15th of May. This illustrious naturalist, during a long and laborious career, has surpassed all who have preceded him, from the days of Aristotle, in the reform which he has effected in the sciences of observation. His religion (being brought up in the Protestant faith) put early difficulties in the way of his education; and at a subsequent period his active mind gave him, in the terman University of Heidelberg, such an unenviable polemical superiority, that he was led, by the persecutions which it entailed, to abandon the profession of the church, his original destination. The learned and eminent Geoffroy St. Hilaire was the first to discover in the pursuits of young George Cavier the indications of that superior mind which was destined even to eclipse his master; and, happily for science, obtained his appointment to the school of natural history of the Garden of Plants. Remarkable it is, that the career of these two friends should have terminated in one of the most abstract discussions that is presented by the annals of natural science. Both proceeded in the same way to remodel the principles and to fix the classifications of naturalists on an unalterable basis, viz. the anatomy of function; and yet how different are the results obtained by two observers of such undoubted intellec-tual attainments? The intimate knowledge of animated nature, obtained by a long and severe observation and reflection; the most curious experiments on the possibility of frustrating even nature in the generation of species; and a careful study of her own deviations from her ordinary or normal structures, have led Geoffroy St. Hilaire to see in the whole of the animal creation a uniformity of structure and unity of composition, which only in the changes produced in the elective affinity of organs, by the necessity of performing new functions as the circumstances become changed, lead to that infinite variety of form and aspect, with which it has pleased Omniscience to people the sea, to crowd the air, and to adorn the earth, the patrimony of man.

The characteristic of Cuvier's mind was rather accurate observation than the grasping mies of the Institut of France. Cuvier had ideality of his contemporary; and though all his researches exhibit a most comprehensive and had by her three children, two sons and a scope of thought, yet this was so well disciplined by his habits of actual investigation, His daughter died only a few years ago, and that he cannot be said ever to have committed was considered as the most accomplished and an extravagance in theoretical deduction; and the same admirable perfection of the contemplative faculties which makes genius merely the application of common sense to new ideas, prevented him from ever erring so far as to enter the domains of hypothesis. His lectures on Comparative Anatomy have been preserved by two of his pupils, and, in their earliest form, have been translated by Dr. Macartney. They exhibited an unequalled assiduity of research, and were the basis of the natural arrangement of the animal kingdom which he presented to the world in the Règne Animai. Having ascertained, by his own observation, the real situation which insects should occupy in the scale of creation, he left the arrangement of the orders and genera to Latreille, who at that time had already shown himself to be one of the most scientific entomologists of the day, and who has never ceased from applying to that branch of natural history the improve-ments which remained to be effected by the new philosophy which was then dawning upon science. The dissections of the molluscous animals, which were undertaken to ascertain the natural affinities and real importance of that singular class of beings, are consigned to a separate tome, which was published under the Baron's immediate superintendence. The constancy of form and structure, which in the course of these researches this able naturalist had perceived to characterise those separate creations which nature appeared to mark out as distinct species, led him to conceive that the lost forms of the earth, the animals of former worlds, might be grouped, and their affinities to living tribes be established by an inspection of fragments, however small, which might be collected from its rocky strata. There was no occasion to travel to test the truth of this deduction; the basin of the French metropolis contained within itself all the materials necessary for the investigation, and, to assist him in the mineralogical part of the inquiry, he associated M. Brogniart with himself; and the establishment of a new order of formations in the geological series, was one of the first results. Thus, in prosecuting one branch of science, the giant mind of Cuvier was led to effect an improvement in another, as vast as it was unanticipated. The anatomical part of this inquiry, as it stands incorporated in the museum of the Garden of Plants, and in the great work on Fossil Remains, will ever be one of the most lasting monuments to the author's genius. As secretary to the Academy of Sciences, Cuvier was called upon by the Emperor Napoleon to write the history of the modern progress of the sciences of observation-a task which he accomplished with equal ability and modesty; and the annual report of a similar nature, which it was a part of his duty to present to the same learned body, brings down that history to the present The biographical memoirs of learned naturalists, foreigners or countrymen, written during the same period, are also so numerous as to fill several volumes. His last course at the College of France-and latterly he has not lectured much at the Garden of Plants-was on the ancient history of the natural sciences, and evidenced all that crudition and learning which without precedent, a seat in the three Academies of the Institut of France. Cuvier had married the widow of the naturalist Duvaucel, and had by her three children, two sons and a daughter: none of them survive their parent. His daughter died only a few years ago, and was considered as the most accomplished and continued his lectures on comparative anatomy, and he never totally recovered the shock which he experienced on that occasion. The réunions at Cuvier's house were held on the Saturday evenings, and were a centering point for naturalists of all nations, who, having been once admitted, required only to make their appearance, that their arrival in Paris should be generally known.

Cuvier founded the Museum of Comparative Anatomy, and was extremely liberal in giving strangers access to its treasures, until some gentleman of our sister isle thought proper to remove those parts which were preserved of the celebrated Hottentot Venus; and after that he became distrustful of students from this country. In visiting him, strangers were shewn through a series of from six to seven shewn through a series of from six to seven SIR,—Allow me to trouble you with a few small apartments, which were so many lines concerning Drummond's conversations separate libraries, each having a chair and a table loaded with periodicals or prints. The last but one was the room for the preparations immediately wanted, or making under his eye, and was kept at a high temperature. The next room was his study, in which he walked about behind a desk that nearly traversed the room, and was covered with separate folios of paper; so that when examining one animal, he could put the results of the examination of the dif-ferent systems down in their appropriate places: and the same method was applied to other subjects of inquiry or of composition. Cuvier, on account of the many ungrateful offices which he filled in turn, had many enemies; but the most inveterate of these could never cease to admire the simplicity and honesty which characterised his truly great mind. His political tergiversation has been alluded to in terms of reproach; but, con-sidering the opportunities which he had, and the ambition which he shewed for scientific fame, by the immensity of his labours, we must almost say that his pride was entirely concentrated in the latter. Among other public situations which the baron filled, we find him a member of the council of public instruction, a counsellor of state, a minister of foreign worships, a censor of public writings, and, after the revolution of 1830, a peer of France. His great work on Fishes, which has always been a favourite undertaking with him, and which has proceeded as far as the sixth volume, will Valenciennes. He was born at Montheliard, in 1769; and is said to have died of a paralytic affection of the œsophagus. His body was examined by several of the most eminent pathologists of the present day; and his brain is said to have presented a mass of extraordinary volume, weighing 3lbs. 134 ozs. Phrenologists will treasure up the evidences of his great intellectual capabilities; and an admiring posterity must ever appreciate the splendid achievements which he has effected in science, and the means of improvement which he has thus left to future generations.*

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. XIV. To the Editor, &c.

with Jonson.

Unless I am greatly mistaken, your correspondent from Edinburgh, (Lit. Gas. May 5,) and the gentleman who signs himself D. A. (Lit. Gaz. May 19,) are one and the same person. In his second letter he gives you to understand, that he saw the MS. notes of Drummond's conversations " many years ago at Edinburgh." Now, sir, I can assure you only three or four years have elapsed since that curious document was discovered by Mr. David Laing, among a mass of the poet's papers!! The original appears to be irrecoverably lost; but the copy of it, so unexpectedly brought to light, is doubtless a full and accurate transcript.

Your correspondent has a very imperfect recollection of the MS. which he was fortunate enough to peruse many years before it was found. Well might H. C. L. (Lit. Gas. May 12) observe, that "though in 1613 young Raleigh might have made his tutor drunk, he could not have sent him in that state to Sir Walter, who was then a prisoner in the Tower." The truth is, the MS. says nothing of Jonson's being "sent to the Tower;" but that he was "carried, dead drunk, on a car, by pioneers, through the streets" (of Paris, perhaps). In a note on the Memoir of Shirley, prefixed to the forthcoming edition of that dramatist, I have printed the anecdote at full, in the words of Jonson, as kindly communicated to me by Mr. Laing. I am, &c. ALEX. DYCE. Gray's Inn, May 19, 1832.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

KENSINGTON PALACE.

On Saturday H. R. H. the President of the Royal Society gave another of his evening parties at Kensington Palace, which was, as before, attended by a numerous and distinguished as-semblage of rank and talent. Among the com-pany were the Lord Chief Justice of the court of King's Bench, and other judges; several bishops; the Duke of Devonshire, Earl of Munster, Lord Dover, Lord Dundas, and other noblemen. Nor were garters and stars more conspicuous than the plainer garbs of artists and scientific and literary men, of whom the number amounted to some hundreds, almost all eminent in different learned professions and the higher pursuits of intellectual life. Many objects of great interest were placed in various rooms, mechanical inventions, demonstrations in natural history, &c. &c. In the latter, an apparatus shewing distinctly the circulation of sap in plants attracted much notice.

We need not repeat how admirably we deem meetings like these calculated not only to bring men together who ought to interchange mind On Monday evening the first of three musical of refinement and general improvement, far beyond what appears on the mere surface. Observations occur, hints are thrown out, and the seeds are sown of things which fructify at a future day for the benefit of the world; for where so much of knowledge and genius come into contact, it is impossible that the result should be barrenness.

Let us say, without flattery, that the affa-bility and courtesy of the royal host are happily in accordance with the design and with our views of its utility.

> ALUM IN BREAD. (From a Correspondent.)

"GREAT cry and little wool," as the d-l said when he shaved the pig. It is well known when he shaved the pig. It is well known that the inhabitants of London are weekly, daily, hourly, poisoned by the administration of that deleterious drug called alum in the staff of life, Anglice bread; but the quantity consumed by the bakers of this deadly poison in the primary article of food has never been stated. It is, by the avowal of a highly respectable drug-broker in the city, no less than ten tons of alum per week! Now, as the unfailing action of alum on the animal economy is muscular contraction, may we not fairly attribute to the use of alum contracted limbs, distorted features, tetanus, locked jaw, paralysis, and a thousand ills to which flesh is heir, even rheumatism and gout. Wherever a particle of alum is deposited, there contraction inevitably follows: ergo, the bakers are public poisoners. And this will be the more evident, when we calculate the portion which every individual is doomed to swallow in the metropolis. The population of London, within the bills of mortality, is taken at 1,500,000: let us subtract from this number one third for children and others, who do not work their own destruction by eating bread; there will still remain 1,000,000 of poisoned patients, who eat in their bread ten tons of alum every seven days. A ton of alum contains 2240 pounds, hence ten tons contain 22,400 pounds, which, multiplied by 16, gives 358,400 ounces of alum eaten weekly, or about one third of an ounce to each person, or nearly one-twentieth of an ounce in a day - a little day, or ere the bread is old. Need we any further evidence to shew that all the London bakers deserve to be treated as offending bakers are treated in Turkey - baked in their own ovens? If we were to condescend to listen to the bakers, they would tell us that without alum, our bread would neither be so white nor so light. Light, indeed! as if the law did not wisely impose a penalty on light loaves, de-claring that if they were not full weight, the baker should be fined so much per loaf, according to the number of light loaves found on his premises: therefore, let us hear no more light bread; we want heavy bread, ay, full weight. But, add the bakers, you may est one-twentieth of an ounce of alum by itself without the slightest injury. Indeed! who can prove that? Who knows that it may not, like coffee and tea, be a slow poison, killing us off, like them, in some fifty years at least? Besides, may not alum be like oxygen, salutary when received into the system pure, but a deadly poison when combined with other sulstances, converting even what was harmless, by its combination with it, into an active poison?

MUSIC.

with each other, but to promote the great cause entertainments, so entitled, was given by Miss

^{*}We read, almost with regret, in the Paris papers, that the government has assigned a pension of 6000 francs to M. Cuvier's widow, continued her in his residence in the Jardin des Plantes, and propose to purchase his museum for the public:—our regret, indeed, is not for this just and liberal conduct of the French, but for the painful contrast it affords to the forced and unnatural economy now too common in England. Here the scholar and the man of science dies like one of the herd, without exciting gratitude for his public benefits, or compassion for those dear to him, whom he has left in sorrow. Treasures beyond price are suffered to be scattered wherever a market can be found; and our poor country sees even the petty states of the continent outstrip it in the acquisition of what constitute the true wealth of nations, and outdo it in the liberal appreciation of genlus.

Bruce at the house of Mr. Taylor, in George Street, Hanover Square, and under the direction of Sir George Smart. A number of noble ladies patronise them; and this, combined with the talents and deserts of Miss Bruce, and the musical force she has collected round her, gave her opening a high degree of interest and fashion. Cinti, Stockhausen, Donzelli, Mori, Lindley, Nicholson, Spagnoletti, Parry, jun. and Begrez, are among the musicians engaged; and we need hardly add the whole is delightful.

M. SEDLATZEK'S CONCERT,

On Monday, with the usual display of talent which this popular flutist always contrives to assemble for his annual treat, was a brilliant entertainment; though we are compelled to speak of it from report, in consequence of the late arrival of cards. Not only some of the leading Italian artists, but the most distinguished of the new German Opera, contributed their co-operation; and the Koellas (four Swiss or Tyrolean children) furnished another proof of the fruits of foreign industry in teaching the young idea how to sing. Sedlatzek himself played with remarkable beauty and effect; and the whole went off with great éclat.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

On Tuesday Mr. Mason supplied yet another novelty to the public and frequenters of the Opera, by producing an act of La Donna dal Lago, with Donzelli as Roderick Dhu, Madame Mariani as Malcolm, Cinti as Ellen, and Signor Mariani as Douglas. With so strong a cast we need scarcely add that the performance was eminently successful: it was indeed as gratifying as the lovers of finely executed music could desire, and fully sustained the manager's efforts to give both variety and excellence at the King's Theatre.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Covent Garden, May 15th .- Macbeth. When Young died, he hit his head such a bump against the wing, that Macduff went up to him, and expressed the tenderest anxiety lest he, whom he had just slain, should be hurt.
The audience would not suffer the piece to conclude, and on the curtain falling, continued to call out, "Is Mr. Young hurt?" till Mr. Ward came forward and assured them he was not. King's Theatre, May 16th .- In one scene of Der Freischütz, some window-curtains being withdrawn display a moon-light view. They subsequently close of their own accord, that a change of scene may take place behind them. But the parties most concerned have not yet learnt that they should be yet again withdrawn; and consequently, on all occasions of the performance of Der Freischütz, there has been a desperate battle between Meric and a scene-shifter; she determined on unclosing the curtains, and he as firmly resolved on holding them tightly together. On the first night, Meric got the best of it, and forcing them open, discovered that the view from her window had changed into "the wolf's glen;" and on the night alluded to, the scene-shifter, resolving not to fly as before, was discovered firmly planted in the lady's balcony, his paper cap in bold relief against the moon, to the no small mirth of the audience.

King's Theatre, May 18th .- Fidelio. When grief or long imprisonment changes the colour of men's hair, they do not, I conceive, change singer's eyes during the song from the glare of is the devotion of several pages in each to proteit like those half-dyed specimens which hair, the foot-lights, close up to which they always mote the construction of rail-roads throughout the efficacy of their nostrums. The gentlemen, however, who represent the prisoners in this opera are of the contrary opinion; for some appeared with white wigs and black beards, others with red wigs and grizzled beards, and so on, to the full amount of as many variations as are attainable through grizzled, red, black, white, &c., multiplied by wig and beard. Haitzinger, the hero, supposed to have been imprisoned for many a long year in a loathsome subterranean cell, appeared with squalid face and fainting limbs, and decked in a profusion of linen of a primness that (had there been one in the house) would have made a quaker burst with envy. He should see how O. Smith and other picturesque dressers of the English stage

Covent Garden, May 19th.—The many repetitions of the Hunchback render an absurd blunder in its text the more remarkable. In the last scene, Miss Taylor exclaims,

"I'll ne'er wed man if not my cousin Modus;"

to which Abbot, instead of responding

" Nor woman I, save cousin Helen's she," answered.

" No man shall marry me but cousin Helen."

The comedy being duly concluded, the green curtain began slowly to descend—the gentle-men bowed, the ladies curtseyed—the curtain stuck mid-way — the audience laughed and hissed-the green curtain slowly ascendedthe ladies curtseyed, the gentlemen bowed—the act-drop was lowered. I am sure the green curtain is old enough, and has been in sufficiently hard practice, to have fully learnt its part by this time.

Covent Garden, May 21st .- Young being called for at the end of the Man of the World, tried to come forward; but, the green curtain being down, could only introduce his leg, which, in a white stocking and red velvet breek, appeared to be actually making its obeisance to the house as its owner's representative. At last, by the co-operation of unseen agents, he was squeezed and thrust on the stage, from whence, on retiring, his leg was again trapped, and continued kicking and struggling in the drollest manner imaginable.

Drury Lane, May 22d .- Charles the Twelfth. In that scene in which Muddlework examines Charles, Cooper, Wallack, and others, having evidently preconcerted the joke, entirely divided Harley's part between them in the most systematic manuer. Whenever it was his turn to speak, one or other of the gentlemen alluded to, snatched his sentences out of his mouth, and delivered them for him. Harley, who is seldom at fault, had no resource but on each occasion to gag to the secretary somewhat in this manner—"Write down, that Adam Brock interrupts me—write down, that this man won't let me speak write down, that they're plotting against me, and taking the words out of my mouth," &c. &c.; and at last, "We'll add it all up presently, and see what it all means."

I presume that when he did call them to account in the green-room, it turned out that some wager had depended on it; but I really think that an explanation was equally due to the audience, more especially as by their impatience they seemed to be blind to the merits of the joke.- I have often wondered why Eudiga always sings "Rise, gentle moon," with a letter about a foot and a half long by a foot broad in her hand. Miss Pearson resolved me in the most satisfactory manner: it is to shield the dressers exhibit in their windows as proofs of advance, and to hide the whole face when it is politic to conceal the evidences of an indulgence in the voce di testa. A more reasonably shaped and sized article might suffice: it looked on the occasion to which I allude, like Captain Polhill's lease of Covent Garden, which, it was being buzzed in the house, he had purchased.

VARIETIES.

The Theatres. - The removal of all legal restrictions on dramatic entertainments in London has been incidentally mooted in the House of Commons, and Mr. E. Lytton Bulwer, the author of Devereux, Pelham, and Eugene Aram, &c., has given notice of a motion on the subject. In discussing it we trust that reference will be had to the rights of dramatic writers, who are allowed to have very slight property in the produce of their brains in this country.

The Naval and Military Library and Museum .- We have frequently noticed the Institution to which these excellent appendages belong, and expressed our satisfaction at a union and an object which promised so much benefit to both services, and so much good, generally, to the country, deeply interested, as it is, in these branches of its power. The annual report has been forwarded to us; and we rejoice in the account it gives of the progress and prosperity of the design. Hence it appears that nearly 2400 members are enrolled; that the annual subscriptions are above 650L, and the life almost 12001. Prefixed is a brief report of the speech delivered at the meeting by Sir J. Hobhouse, secretary at war; of the talent displayed in which, and the strong effect it produced on the company, we heard so much at the time from parties who were present, that we longed for an opportunity to quote it in our Gazette; and only lost sight of the intent through the pressure of other matters.

Tom Cooke again ran away with the prize offered by the Catch Club for a glee, on Tuesday last. His composition for five voices, called "An Ode to Joy," was declared the best, out of six candidates. This is the fourth prize Mr. Cooke has gained, exclusively of the two goblets given last season by the Melodists' Club for a song and a duet.—Sunday Times.

Muniments of St. Bride's Parish.—We are clad to see it stated that Mr. Elmes, architect, had discovered some important data relative to old London, before the great fire, in St. Bride's church. The MS. paragraph reached us after it had appeared in all the newspapers.

Epitaphs from Père la Chaise. - The first falsehood. Alexandrine Juillet, aged four years. " Près de mourir, elle nous disait: 'Ne pleure pas, papa, ne pleure pas, maman; je me sens mieux; et elle mournt!" On the point of death she said to us: "Do not cry, my father, do not cry, mother; I feel better;" and she died !-Georgina Mars, aged nineteen.

"Vertus, graces, talents, tout dort sous cette plerre;
Oh vous qui visites cet asile de pleurs,
Sur son tombeau jetes des fleurs;
Gardes vos larmes pour as mère t" i. e.

Goodness, grace, and mind, sleep beneath this stone: oh thou who visitest this asylum of sorrow, fling your flowers on her tomb, but keep your tears for her mother.

New American Journal .- We have to thank the Editor of a new New-York weekly paper, called Rail-Road Journal, for the first seven Numbers, published between January 2 and February 11. The chief novelty of the plan promoting these important means of internal communication, the results of which he certainly well deserves to feel in the extent and facility of his own circulation. Other parts are given to literary and miscellaneous matter, from which we make a selection; premising that we further learn that Sinclair had a capital benefit in January; that Clara Fisher was playing with great success; and that Gouffe, of ape notoriety, was astonishing the natives.

Snake-Fight .- " The late Major T. of the army, a gallant officer, who was severely wounded at the sortie of Fort Erie, and died afterwards from the effect of his wound, while a representative from his native state in congress, used to relate the following account of a battle which he once witnessed between a black and a rattlesnake. He was riding on horseback, when he observed the snakes in the road, a short distance ahead of him. They were moving round in a circle, and apparently following each other. A gentleman who was with the major, and who had witnessed a similar scene before, remarked that it was the prelude to a fight, and worthy of the loss of a little time to witness. They accordingly stopped their horses and watched the snakes. The cautious manœuvre of following each other, in a kind of circle, was pursued for some time, closing at each round, until, when within a few feet, the black snake was observed to stop, coil, and place himself in an attitude to strike. The rattle-snake now passed round his antagonist two or three times, lessening the distance at each round, when he also stopped and began to coil. But before he was ready to strike, the black snake suddenly darted upon him. His evolutions were too rapid to be detected, and when he was again distinctly observed, both snakes were stretched out at full length—the rattle-snake enveloped in the folds of the black, which had also seized the rattlesnake at the back of the head and held him there. After a short interval, the black snake gradually unfolded himself, loosened the grip with his mouth from the rattle-snake's head, and moved away. On examination, the rattle-snake was found to be dead, and apparently every bone in his body was crushed. The black snake is a constrictor, and usually destroys its prey by enfolding and crushing it."

The American Republics..... There are now eleven republics upon the American continent, and at the head of every one of them is a 'mili-tary chieftain.' The following, we believe, is a correct list of the presiding officers:

,	United States	·Gen.	Jackson.
	Mexico ·····	· Gen.	Bustamenta.
	Guatemala	· Gen	Morazan.
	New Grenada	··Gen.	Obando.
	Venezuela	Gez.	Paez.
	Ecuador · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	· Gen.	Flores.
	Peru	⊶ Gen.	Gamarra.
	Chili	• Gen.	Prieto.
	Bolivia	· Gen.	Santa Cruz.
	Buenos Ayres	·· Gen	Rosas.
	Hayti	·· uen.	BOVET.

Bustamenta and Obando are vice-presidents. acting as presidents. Rosas has tendered his resignation, but being still in power at the date of the last accounts, and it being uncertain whether his resignation will be accepted, we have put him down accordingly."

Ogdensburg, Jan. 24. Earthquake.... "The shock of an earthquake was felt at this place on Sunday evening last, at about half-past eleven o'clock. Houses were shaken so much as to awaken many from sleep, and the tremulous motion of every thing was painfully perceptible to every person awake. The rattling of stoves, crokery, and windows, with the vibration of every thing movable, together with a sound like the Union; and the writer labours very ably in | distant thunder underneath the surface of the earth, was distinctly witnessed by all who had not retired to sleep. There were three distinct shocks, the second being the most violent, at intervals of about half a minute, and the rumbling noise continued two or three minutes."

Survey of the Coast ._. "In 1807 an act of congress was passed, making provision for the survey of the coasts of the United States. A fine set of instruments was procured, and we know not what other steps taken; but the business was, after all, left undone. Mr. Hoffman, from the committee on naval affairs in the house, has brought in a bill reviving the former act (the coast of Florida to be included in the survey), and appropriating 20,000 rix-dollars to carry the object into effect."

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

[Literary Gazette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXI. May 20th, 1888.] An Account of Anne Jackson, with Particulars con-cerning the Plague and Fire in London, written by Her-seif.

The Rev. Richard Cattermole has in the press, Becket, an Historical Tragedy; the Men of England, an Ode; and other Poems and other Poems.

An Historical and Topographical Guide to the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Britton's Topographical Sketches of Tumbridge Wells, with Maps and Views, is mearly ready.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Gressley's Life of Gregory VII., 8vo. 18s. bda.—Heaningsen's Scenes in Belgium, 8vo. 5s. bds.—Dowling's Introduction to Goldsmith's Grammar of Geography, 18mo. 3s. sewed.—Liddiard's Tour in Switserland, 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Trotter's Key to Ingram's Mathematics, 18mo. 8s. 6d. bd.—Hilley's Grammar of the English Language, 18mo. 4s. bd.—The Record of Family Instruction, 18mo. 2s. cloth.—Hawes's Lectures to Young Men, 18mo. 2s. cloth.—Stowell's Missionary Church, 18mo. 2s. cloth.—Colton's Manual for Emigrants, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Doddridge's Family Expositor, imperial 8vo. 21s. cloth.—The Little Library, Vol. VIII., "The Farm." by Jeffrys Taylor, 18mo. 4s. cloth.—Hobart's Analysis of Burnet on the Thirty-aines Articles, 18mo. 4s. cloth.—History of South Africa, 18mo. 3s. 6d. cloth.—Clement's Observations on Surgery and Pathology, 8vo. 8s. bds.—Memoirs of the Rev. Leir Parsons, 18mo. 3s. 6d. sloth.—Roscoe's Novelist's Library, Vol. XIII., "Tristram Shandy, Vol. 2," 6s. cloth.—They, Vol. XIII., "Tristram Shandy, Vol. 2," 6s. cloth.—Edisburgh Cabinet Library, Vol. VI., "British India, Vol. 1," 5s. cloth.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

May.	Thermometer.			1 Barometer.
Thursday · · 17	From	34.	to	55.	29-76
Friday · · · · 18	• • • • •	36.	••	62.	30-00
Saturday · · 19	• • • • •	29.	٠.	66.	30-07
Sunday 20	••••	34.	••	66.	30-16
Monday . 21	••••	39.	••	70.	30-18
Tuesday 22		44.	• •	70.	30-15	••	30-13
Wednesday 23	1	40.	••	71.	30.15	• •	80-22
W771 4	~

Wind variable, S.E. prevailing.
Except the 17th, generally clear.
Rain fallen, 25 of an inch.
On the afternoon of the 17th instant we were visited by another storm of thunder and lightning, though not of so alarming a kind as on the 15th instant. At Enfield, a town about two miles N.W. of this place, hallstones fell of an extraordinary size, measuring three quarters of an inch in the broadest part.

Edmonton. CHARLES I Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude ... 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich. CHARLES H. ADAMS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The passage alluded to by a Constant Reader was a complete oversight.

T. T. L. is declined.

To C. W.—We have no doubt but that a numerous public meeting would assemble to pay a tribute to Mr. Young, as was done to Mr. Kemble, on his retirement from the stage; but in so far as the Garrick Club are concerned, we differ from our correspondent, and are of opinion, that it is more consistent in its members, and more complimentary to the party, to invite him to their own house, than to place a deputation at the head of a meeting elsewhere. And bosides, the act of the Club need not prevent a more general expression of regard for this gifted and esteemed individual.

We are ready to correct our mistake: the air on the

We are ready to correct our mistake: the air on the barp, by Mr. Parry, in Mr. Wigley's concert, was not, we find, a Weish composition, but a modern bailad, "Where is she now?" by Mr. George Linley.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

THE EXHIBITION of the NEW

WEST of SCOTLAND EXHIBITION VEST OF SCUTLAND EXHIBITION of the FINE ARTS.—The Pith Ammual Exhibition of the Works of Living British Artists, under the patronage e the Glasgew Diestand Society, will span in the Society's new Rooms, Buchanan Street, on Monday, 9th July. Works of Arintended for this Exhibition will be received from the lith to the 30th June, addressed to the Secretary. By order of the Com30th June, addressed to the Secretary. By order of the Com30th June, addressed to the Becretary. By order of the Com30th June, 10 the Secretary of the Secretary.
The Works of Art which the Directors hope to be favoured with from London, may also also the Wharf, Lower Hermitage, London, by whem they will be forwarded to Glasgew.

MINIATURE PAINTERS, MINIATUKE PAINTERS, and ARTHER separally, are solicited to impect his very extensive and degnant fleeck of Or-Mein Ministure Pranses, Mass, Morocco Cases, &c., by W. Misers
Her Majesty), at Ne. 111, Strand, where, by appelintment, to Her Majesty), at Ne. 111, Strand, where, by appelintment, to Her majesty), at Ne. 111, Strand, where, by appelintment, to Her majesty have been been supplied to execute Orders in the shortest possible time, as well as to regulate his Prions lever than any other Malver.
A liberal Allowance is made to Artists and to the Trade, and on Country and Poreign Orders.
W. Misers, Ne. 111, Strand, near Waterice Bridge.

TO AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, SOLI-CITORS, &c.—B. Descon, Country Newspaper and general Advertising Agent, respectfully enancusces his Removal to No. 3, Walbroots, near the Mansion House, where Advertise-ments are received, and the Newspapers from all parts of the Kingdom regularly filed for the inspection of Advertisers. Soli-citors may rely on punctual insertions of their Advertisements under legal preceedings in the London Gazette and Newspapers generally. A Printed List of the Papers may be had.

A SHARE of a WEEKLIX NEW OF PAPER, of a very large Cincolaction, is to be Disposed of. None but Frincipals, and Persons of great respectability, with be treated with, and, to prevent trouble, Applications must be made by letter only, pose-paid, to Mr. John Hebbs, at Dick's Coffee-house, Temple Bar, with real Names and Addresses, and Appelantments will be made.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL

THE PHRENOLUGICAL JOURNAL and MISGELLANY, No. EXXII.
Contents:—Harmony between Philmosphy and Religion—Punituritary Disciplion—Universal Peace—Utility of Elementary Instruction in Natural Sciences—Royal Leve School of Justice School of Landa Resemblances —Parisian Phrenological Journal—Netico of Coeffried, executed as Beenem for Mardé-Repul Society of Edinburgh, and the Phrenological Journal—Phrenology in 5 weders and Germany.
John Anderson, jun. 84, North Bridge Street, Bellaburgh; and Simplin and Marshall, London.

ROYAL NAVAL BIOGRAPHY; or, MOVAL BIOGRAPHY; Or,
Memoirs of the Services of all the Flag Officers, Superannuated Reer-Admirals, retired Captains, Poet-Captains, and Commanders, whose Names-appeared in the Admiralty List of Sen Officers at the commencement of the Year 1822, or who have almost been Promoted illustrated by a Series of Historical and Explanatory Notes, which will be found to contain an Account of all the Naval Actions and other important Events from the commencement of the Year 1970 to the Present Period. With oppious Addenda.

No. Y. of Alexandre.

copious Addenda.

No. X. of this elaborate and highly patronised Work is this day published by Longman and Co., to whom early application should be made for the preceding Paris, of which only a few Copies remain unsoid. Price of each Paris, 15c
All Communications on the subject of the said Work must be addressed (post-paid) to the Author, Lieut. John Marshall, R.N.
16, John Street, Addepth, London.

THE UNCHANGED.

By SELINA DAYENFORT,

Author of Proference, Donald Mestellis, Queen's Page,

Hypocrise, an Angel's Form, do.

Printed for A. K. Newman and Co. London,

Where may be had, Ancient Records, by T. J. H. Curties, Esq. Ethelwina, by the same, 3 vols. 2d edition,

Scottish Legend, by the same, 4 vols. 2d tton, 14. Se. Romance of the Hebrides, by F. Lathom, Jessy; or, the Rose of Donald's Cottage,

Bravo of Bohemia, by the same Author,

Books published by J. Vincent, Oxford; Whittaker, Trescher, and Arnott; Simpkin and Marshall; and Sherwood, Gilbert, socks published by a value of the property of

Mape and Plans,
Dedicated, with permission, to the Rev. Dr. Russell, Head
Master of Charter House School, Lendon.

TLAS of ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY, containing Seventy Plates, illustrative of Harodottas, anophides, Xenophon, Polybius, and Livy. To which is added, ynoptical Table, from the Creation to the end of the Peloponian War. 4to. half-beaud, price St. 2t. outlined.

The Same on a reduced Scale, for the Use of hools, half-bound, price 18st outlined.

Maps and Plans, illustrative of Thucydides, boards, 2d edition, price 12s.

Mans and Plans, illustrative of Herodotus.

o. boards, 5d edition, price 12s.

The Same, coloured, half-bound, price 14s.

Maps and Plans, illustrative of Livy, 8vo.

Maps and Plans, illustrative of Polybius and Maps and Plans, illustrative of Polybius and Kenophon, price 2s. 6d.

"If we were desired to mention a series of works calculated to assist the student in his progress, we should refer him to some publications which have lastly appeared at Oxford. Of these, the Atlases before us are not the least useful. They contain not only the general maps necessary for the study of Grecian history, but also plans and sections, illustrative of particular passages is the authors above mentioned. These choregraphical tressures, long lackeds up in expensive publications, are now given to the world. Gail and Remai are the principal setherities, and the engraver has executed his task and modeline. We exmently recommend to the classical studied as a modeline acquaintance with the maps under review."—Classical Journals.

Questions on Divinity, 18mo. cloth boards,

Questions on Herodotus, 2d edition, price

Questions on Thucydides, 2d edition, price

Questions on Livy, Books 21 to 30, price 1s. Questions on Logic, with References to the st popular Treatics, 19mo. interleaved, price 2. 6d.
Key to the Questions on Logic, 12mo. price

Questions on the Old Testament, with Refer-Questions on the New Testament, with Re-ences to the most approved Commentators, 3d edit. price 1s.

The Articles of the Church of England, with Notes, compiled from the Writings of the most eminent Divines of the Church of England, confirmed by Texts of the Holy Scripof the Church of England, confirmed by a new of the Church of the control of the total transport of the total transport of the total transport of the total transport of the transport of transport of the transport of the transport of the transport of transport of the transport of the transport of the transport of transport of the transport of the transport of the transport of transport of the transport of the transport of the transport of transport of the transport of the transport of the transport of transport of the transport

An Analysis of the Historical Books of the Cold Testament, with Nose and Reference to the most approved Commentators, 13mo. price & boards.

"This is a useful and impertant listle week. It is adapted to give the young a clear idea of the course of Scripture Missery, and the more advanced reader will find great advantage with the assistance it offers to the recollection. The notes are well assected, and all highly useful. We recommend the work to general attention, not as superraeding the Sibbs in its proper form, but as a key to its connects."—Allements.

The Articles of the Church of England, with s, price la Key to the Questions on the Articles of the Key to the Queenvan-arch of Engind, price 1s. Chronology of the Principal Persons and rents in the History of the Jove, from the Creation to the final estruction of Jerusalem, on a Card, price 1s. struction of Jerusalem, on a Card, price 1s.

Harmony of the Miracles, Parables, Sayings, of Christ, contained in the Four Gospels, on one Sheet, price is. 6d.

Harmony of the Old and New Testaments, shewing the Prophecies in the Old Testament, and their Fulfilment in the New, price 8r. beards.

Historical Introduction to the several Books of the Old and New Testaments, compiled from the most eminent Divines of the Church of England, price 2s. 6s. bested Historical and Typical Connexion between the Old and New Testaments, shewing the Types in the former, and their fulliment in the latter, the didtion, price 1s.

and their fulfilment in the latter, sta edition, price is.

Manual of Divinity, compiled for the Use of Students, s vots. 18me, 5th edition, cloth boards, price So.

The Same, bound in morocco, gilt leaves, price 15c.

"This is a media and comprehensive Manual, and will be four
"This is a media and comprehensive Manual, and will be four "This is a unterland comprehensive Mannal, and will be found of considerable advantage for the purpose of general information, as well as for refreshing the memory of the student, by laying before him a compensions digest of his more extended researches. It contains also a carefully compressed epitems of the authors, subjects, and dates of the several bedox in the Bible; and such other topics of its general history, with which every student should be acquainted, though be may not have leture for the critical examination of its contents."—Christian Remembraner.

Natural Theology, by William Paley, D.D. intairrated by a series of 41 Plates and Explanatory Notes, by James Paston, Member of the Reyal College of Surgeons, London: 52 college, by Additions, 8 vols. 570. price U. 57.

"Mr. Paxton has executed the task in a manner so satisfactory, as well deserves the thanks of the public. We are the more perticular in reconnting the nature of the illustrations, because we are desirous of recommending Mr. Paxton's work; and knowing the reluctance of mest purchasers of a work to take a new edition, which seems thereby to render their former purchase useless, our author has very properly accommodated these unwilling buyers, by publishing a series of his prints, with letter-press descriptions, in a separate form. It is therefore to be hoped, that no reader of the original book will be without it."—Edinburgh Review.

Oliver's Scripture Lexicon. A new edition.

corrected and improved, 18mo. extra boards, price 4s. 6d.

A Series of Thirty-six Engravings, with Descriptive Letter-press, illustrative of Paley's Natural Theoogy, 8vo. boards, price 16s.

8 A few Froof Impressions may be had, price 1s. 1s.

Prophetical Connexion between the Old and

A rupnetical Connexion between the Old and New Testaments, with a Table of the Prophecies and their Pulliment, the edition, price 1s.

Religio Medici, by Sir Thomas Browne, Knight, new edition, price 4s. beards.

"Bir T. Browner Meligio Medici is a work as extensive in its fame among the well informed, as it is little known to casual readers: it is a volume abounding in wisdom and beauties; and to him who may not have read it, promising the richest harvest of delight of any work we could recommend."—Atherseum, April 21, 1828.

Short Notes on the Four Gospels, selected from the best Divines of the Church of England, by the Rev. R. B. Panl, late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. 18mo. price 4s. 6d. beards. Miscellanem

Analysis of Aristotle's Ethics, with Quesns, 19mo. boards, price 10s. 6d.

Analysis of Aristotle's Rhetoric, with Ques-

Analysis of Herodotus, with Questions, 12mo.

ards, price 10s. 6d. Analysis of Thucydides, with Questions, 18mo. boards, price 10s. 6d.

Grey's Memoria Technica, or Method of Artificial Memory. A new edition, revised and corrected, 18mo.

Treatise on Logic, on the Basis of Aldrich, by the Rev. John Huyshe, M.A. of Brasennose College, Oxford. ad edition, &c.

se edition, &c.

"This treatise is intended to easist those who wish to study.
Aldrich's Logic in order to pass their examination in the Oxford schools. The author's sole endeavour has been to render the Aldrich's Logic in order to pass their examination in the Oxford schools. The author's sole endeavour has been to render the study of the science as easy as he could; and he has freely made use of the segrections of others, wherever he thought that they were calculated to elucidate any difficulty."—Profice.

Rudiments of the Art of Logic, literally instated, with Notes, 4th edition, price 3s. 6d.

The Antiquities of Greece, for the Use of Schools, by the Rev. R. B. Paul, late Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College, Oxford. 18mo. extra boards, price 5c.

Oxford Latin Prize Poems, being a Collection of such Poems, as have at various times obtained Prizes in the University of Oxford. Poolsoap 8vo. uniform with the English Prize Poems, price 6s. boards.

Oxford English Prize Poems, being a Collection of such Peems as have at various times obtained Prizes in the University of Oxford, complete to 1830; with Illustrations. 8th edition, cloth bearin, 6c.

Bucolics and Georgics of Virgil, with Literal Translation, Explanatory Notes, and Illustrative Plates. By John Martyn, P.R.S. Prefusor of Betzny in the University of Cambridge. 12mo. extra boards, price 10s. 6d.

The same, without the Translation, for the The same, waterous the Aramsanton, for the Upse of Schools, Sime, extra cloth beards, price 7a.

"The object of the present edition of Martyn's Becoiles and Georgies of Virgin being to combine cheapness with utility, it has been deemed necessary to omit or curtail the numerous quotations from ancient authors, which have been inserted at great length in the former editions: these only are retained which appeared essential to the clear understanding of the author."—

EXTRACTOR and POLAR STAR enlarged and improved; a work whose cheepness has astounded the trade, and whose rich and solid stores of mingled information, and recreative reading, will convey inexhantible gratification and delight to every intelligent family and man of gratification and using to very intelligent family as a man or reading.

Published every menth, price 2s. containing near 400 columns of closely printed matter, (with new type), in a handsome wrapper. It is also published in weekly Nos. every Saturday, price 6d. Part I. will appear the ist of Jame.

Office, I, Newcastle Street, Strand; and sold by Simpkin and Marnhall; and by all Booksellers and Newsmen throughout the Kingdom.

AILEY'S RETURN of the VICTORS, a Poem. dingham Wilcon, London; Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh; and Talboys, Oxford.

TRANSACTIONS of the CAMBRIDGE
PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY, Vol. IV. Part II.
Price to the Pablic, One Guinea.
Contents:—Mr. Stephens on the Type of a New Genus of Lucasideous Insection-Professor Clark on a case of Humana Montential Contents of the Contents of

In 1 vol. 19me. 4s. cloth boards,

A N ANALYTICAL EPITOME of BISHOP BURNET'S EXPOSITION of the THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES; with Notes, and a Chrenological Table of the chief Pathers, Heresies, Councils, &c. By RICHARD HOBART, A.B.

By RICHARD HOBART, A. B.

"Were all books reduced to their quintessence, many a bulty unthor would make his appearance in a pamphler. There would se scarce such a thing as a folio, and the ovice of an age would se contained on a few shelves."—Addison.

Printed fer John Comming, Dublin; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London.

In 1 thick vol. 5th edition, revised throughout, and considerably enlarged, price 15s.

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; or, V.I. a Sepaint Treaties, exhibiting the Nature, Symptoms, Causes, and most effections Treatment of all Discoses, embearing all the modern Improvements in Medicins. Containing also a sill the modern Improvements in Medicins. Containing also a meet of Children, Reter will be very present the Medical Management of Children, Reter will be very present the Medical Management of Children, Reter will be very present the Medical Management of Children, Reter will be very present the Medical Guide for the Use of the Clergy, Families, and Invalids.

Ret. J. GRAHAM M.D. &c. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D. &c.

"We conscientiously recommend it. We shall preserve the volume as the advice of an invaluable friend, to which we can refer in the heur of need, without any doubt of being benefited by its wisdom."—Literary Chronicle.

"In the opinion of a respectable physician, well known in our connection, it is enriched with much of all that modern practice has accertained to be valuable, and is not only incomparably superior to Buchan's, but also to every similar work in our language."

—Westewan Magazine.

Also, by the same Author, 2d edition, revised and enlarged, price 8s. 6d.

2. A Treatise on Indigestion; illustrating 2. A Treatise on Indigestion; illustrating the Symptoms, Varieties, Causes, and correct Treatment of the prevailing Disorders of the Stomach and Liver; with Practical Observations on some Fainful Complaints originating in those disorders, as Tio Douloureux, Gont, Fulness of Blood in the Head, &c. "We sincerely recommend it."—London Medical Journal. "It is very evidently the result of closs attention to, and deep experience in the subject. Mr. Abertouthy speaks of it in terms of high praise."—British Magazine, Jan. 1839.

1 vol. duedecime, 4s. bound,

PETIT COURS de FRANCAIS, in Four

PETIT COURS de FRANCAIS, in FourPerts; namely, Prenunciation—beginning with Approximate Standards; Grammas—the Rules of which are illentrated, each, by an Exercise having Figures pointing the Fuprospective and Retrospective Places or Rules to be consulted; Reading—with Italic Characters shewing the Silent Letters of every Paragraph, the Translation of which is half Interlinear, half in the shape of a Dictionary; Conversation—consisting of Words and Sentences, whose Fronunciation is marked out by Italic Letters.

By GABRIEL SURENNE, F.A.S.E.

Tencher, Ediaburgh; French Master in the Socitish
Royal Military and Naval Academy.

Edinburgh: sold by Oliver and Boyd, Tweedaie Court; Simplin and Marshall, Lendon; and W. Curry, jun. and Co. Dublin.

Now Berles of Museum Criticum. Price 5s.

PHE PHILOLOGICAL MUSEUM,

THE PHILOLOGICAL MODEL OF No. 11.

Contents — Inniginary Conversation; Bolen and Pidstratus—Inniginary Conversation; Bolen and Pidstratus—Inniginary Conversation; Bolen and Pidstratus—On Xenophen's Helianica, from the German of Niebuhr; Xenophen Niebuhr, and Delbrueck—On certain Passages in the Fourth and Fifth Books of the Architecture of Viterwiss—On a Passage in Xenophen's Helianica, i. 6; the Comic Poet Antiphenes—On the Names of the Antichellenic Inhabitants of Greece; De Passanine Siyle, August Beschhif Prolusio Academica—On certain Fragments quoted by Herodian the Grammarian—On English Orthography—On English Dinningitives—Mitcellaneous Observations.

Printed for Deightons, Cambridge; Rivingtons, London; and Farker, Onlord.

Of whom may be help.

Of whom may be hel,
The First and second Nos. price 54. each, or the First Volume complete, price 15s. boards.

In 2 vols. 8ve. price One Guinea in boards SKETCH of the HISTORY of the

A CHURCH of ENGLAND to the REVOLUTION, 1686.
By TROMAS VOWLER SHORT, B.D.
Student of Christ Church; and Rector of Kings Worthy, HantsPrinted for J.H. Parker, Oxford; J., G., and F. Rivington,
London; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge.

In 18me, neatly bound in green rean, embellished with Maps of Ancient and Medern Europe, 2.

Mape of Ancient and Medern Europe, 5c.

A S U M M A R Y of A N C I E N T and MODERN HISTORY, originally abridged from the Elements of General History of Freenest Tyles. 6th edit. with considerable Additions, especially a Continuation to the Accession of the present King, and Questions for Exercise.

By the Rev. T. D. HINGES,
Professor of Hebrew, Betfast Institution.
Printed for John Cumming, Dubbin; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lene.

In crown 8vo. 10s. cloth boards,

REBECCA; or, the Times of Primitive Christianity. A Peem, in Feer Cantes.
By the Rev. A. G. H. HOLLINGSWORTH, A.M. Member of the Stablished Churth.
Whitat the blood of our Lord was warm, and recent faith was fervent in the believers."—St. Jerost.
London James Niebet, Barners Street.

EDITED BY THE HON. MRS. NOBTON, AUTHOR OF "THE UNDYING ONE." A NEW AND IMPROVED SERIES, INCLUDING THE PORTRAIT GALLERY OF THE FEMALE NOBILITY.

ASSEMBLEE, BELLE

COURT MAGAZINE.

EDITED BY THE HON. MRS. NORTON,

From July 1, which commences the New Volume. Price 3s. 6d.

This Work, which addresses itself in a peculiar degree to the rank, fashion, and beauty of England, has already attained a high celebrity through its graphic embellishments, which, besides their acknowledged individual sexellence, present the advantage of celebrity through its graphic embellishments, which, besides their acknowledged individual sexellence, present the advantage of certain the control of the most of the Englash Female Nobility. The success established intiting to form a brilliant Collection of Portraits, representing the flower of the Englash Female Nobility. The success established through this feature of the Work, has led to the intention now announced, of carrying the claims of "Le Belle Assembles" yet considerably further, by means of such improvements in the nature and style of its literature, as may piece this essential department on an equality—in grace, spirit, and general attraction—with the decrative portion of its content of the sessential department in order to give complete effect to this design, the most active exertions have been made the most liberal arrangements. In order to give complete effect to this design, the most active exertions have been made the most liberal arrangements for the first sensitive of a higher order of talent; and it is witherest affect on the Proprietors have to state, that formed, so as to ensure contributions of a higher order of talent; and it is witherest to the first of the first to undertake the superintendence of the Work Herry contents of "La Belle Assembles". The intermediate in favour of the future tone and character which will make which the first intermediate in favour of the future tone and character which will make the best illustrations and descriptions of English and The same care and diligence will be devoted to the object of furnishing the best illustrations and descriptions of English and Portrace of the most contained to give an extra half-sheet with each Number, which will add nearly 100 pages to the yearly volume.

The Proprietors, t

m table. The engraved Pertraits already preduced are from Pictures by Lawrence—Jackson—Shee—Pickersgill—Chalon—Mrs. Robert —Mrs. Carpenter, &c.

COMPLETE SETS OF LA BELLE ASSEMBLÉE.

In order to afford New Subscribers an opportunity of obtaining, at a very mederate cost, the whole of the Engravings of La Belle Assemblée, which form the Portrait Gallery of the Female Nobility, the Proprietors have come to the resolution of offering complete Sets of the Work at Half-price; and any former Subscribers who may be induced to continue the Work under the new management, are allowed the privilege of purchasing separate volumes to perfect their Copies upon the same terms: it is necessary, hewever, that the earliest advantage should be taken of the present offer, to prevent disappointment. Each Volume, beautifully printed on royal Sro, containing between thirty and Forty Engravings of English and Poreign Costumes, finely coloured, and not less than Six Fortraits, by the mest celebrated Painters and Engravers, is new offered at

ONLY HALF-A-GUINEA.

London: Published by Edward Bull, 26, Holles Street; Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh; and Cumming, Dublin.

Concentration of Talent.—Sixteen Engravings by Seymour for One Shilling.

THE COMIC MAGAZINE.—No. III. of THE UUMIU MAGAZINE.—No. III. of this popular and very original Periodical will be ready with the Magazines, on the 31st instant, and will contain, among enters, Articles by John Poole, Eq. (Author of "Paul Pry")—R. B. Peake, Eq. (with an illustration by Himself)—The Editor of "Figure in London"—The Author of "Absurdities"—The Great Unmentionable," &c. &c.
Negotiations are also pending with Thomas Hood, Eq. (Author of "Whims and Oddities")—Horace Smith, Eq.—Miss L. Sheridan—and other comic Authors of celebrity.

NB. The subsequent Numbers will be conducted by the Editor ann—and other comme Authors or casebrity.

N.B. The subsequent Numbers will be conducted by the Editor of "Figaro in London."

Pablished monthly, by W. Kidd, 288, Regent Street; and sold by every respectable Bookseller in the Kingdom.

Washington Irving's New Sketch-Book, &c.
Just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley,
New Burlington Street.
In 2 vols. 8vo. uniformly with the former Series, 84s.

THE NEW SKETCH-BOOK; the ALHAMBRA.
By GEOFFREY CRAYON.

The Fair of May Fair. 3 vols.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Matilda," and "Yes and No." 8 vots.

Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"

Also, just ready,
Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier.
By the Author of "Darnley," "De L'Orme," &c. 3 vols.

Lights and Shadows of American Life.

Turner's Sacred History of the World. In 8vo. 3d edition, 14s. boards,

THE SACRED HISTORY of the WORLD, from the Creation to the Deluge, attempted to be Philosophically Considered, in a Series of Letters to a Sen. By SHARON TURNER, F.S.A. and R.A.S.L. London, Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Standard Novels, Vol. XV.
Complete in 1 vol. neatly bound and illustrated, price 6:-

S E L F - C O N T R O L.

By Mrs. BRIDATON

By Mrs. BRUNTON.
Among others, the following have aiready appeared in the
The Pilot, the Spy, the Last of the Mohicans, and the Pionee by Cooper-Caleb Williams, and St. Lean, by Godwin-Thadde of Warraw, and the Soottish Chiefs, by Miss Jane Porter-Fran easted, by Mrs. Shelley-and Lee's Canterbury Tales.

And on the lat of June, complete in 1 vol.

Discipline. By Mrs. Brunton, with a Menoir of her Life and Writings, by Dr. Brunton.

a Mest of the above, revised by their respective Authors, are complete in a single volume, price &c.

Heary Colbara and Elchard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

PSSAYS, MORAL and POLITICAL.
By ROBERT SOUTHEY, Esq.
Post-Laureau.
Also, by the same Author, a new edition. 2 vols. 2vo. 20

Colloquies, on the Rise, Progress, and Prospects of Society.

John Marray, Albemarie Street.

A new edition, dedicated to the King, by His Majesty's gracious permission, 2 vels. 8vo. 30s. with Portraits, &c.

MEMORIALS of HAMPDEN, his PARTY, and his TIMES.
By LORD DUGENT.
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Published by R. Ackermann, 96, Strand,
NOTES upon NOTES, with Cuts upon
Copper and Music; illustrated with 7 coloured En-

Also,
A Series of Sketches taken in the King's Theatre by Levasseur, price 2s. 6d. each. Nos. I. and II. Signor
Samengo and Madame Brugnoll in the grand Ballet L'Anneau Magique. No. III. Mons. Albert and Midle. Heberle in the Divertissement of Daphnis et Cephise.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE, corrected to the present time, with the Arms of the New Peers

price 11. 5s.

Debrett's Baronetage, including the New Baronets, with their Arms, 11. 5s.

Printed for Rivingtons, Longman and Co., Baldwin and Co., and the other Proprietors.

SCENES from the BELGIAN REVO-

DENES from the BELGIAN REVOLUTION.

By C. F. HENNINGSEN.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

By the same Author,

The Last of the Sophis. A Poem. Post
870. 5s. 6d. boards.

Sir R. Greisley's Life of Gregory VII. In 8vo. price 12s. boards,

IFE and PONTIFICATE of GREGORY

the SEVENTH.

By Sir R. GREISLEY, Bart. F.A.S.

Printed for Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman

MANUAL for EMIGRANTS to AMERICA.

By CALVIN COLTON, A.M. of America.
i vol. 18mo. price, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d.
on: Frederick Westley and A. H. Davis, Stationers' Court.

Cessful. TRATED: or, the Infant System progressing and successful. By SARUEL WILDERSFIN.

1 vol. 18mo. price & boards.

London: Frederick Westley and A. M. Davis, Stationers'
Hall Court.

Price 6s. the

POREIGN QUARTERLY REVIEW No. XVIII.

L' Ne. XVIII.

Contenta.—I. The Reciprocity System.—II. Letters of a Ge man Prince.—III. Poscolo and his Times.—IV. Recent Presc. Literature; the Hundred and One; Hugo's Posens; Baine Tales and Romanoss—V. Theodesian Code—VII. Ressian Post VIII. Quintant's Spanish Biography.—VIII. Penal Colonieria. The Northern Rusea.—X. Minor French Theatre; Scrivand his Coadjutors.—XI. Frussian Commercial Palicy.—XI Memoirs of Louis XVIII.—XIII. to XIX. Critical Sketches French, German, and Italian Works.—Miscellaneous Literature. Notices from France, Germany, Italy, Beigium, Switzerlane and Russia, and of Oriental Literary intelligence; and List. the principal New Works published on the Continent from Jau to April, 1828.

Printed for Treuttel and Würtz, and Richter, 30, Soho Square and Black, Young, and Young, 3, Tavistock Street.

Of whem may be had,
The Preceding Numbers. Price of Nos. 1 to X. 7s. 6d. each; and of Nos. XI. to XVII. 6s. each. Also, Nos. I. to X. of the Foreign Review, pric

THE ANNUAL HISTORIAN; a Sketc of the chief Historical Events of the World for the Ye 1851, principally designed for Young Persons.
By INGRAM COBBIN, M.A.
In 18mo. neatly bound, price 4s.

By the same Author,
Moral Fables and Parables, embellished wit nearly 100 Engravings on Wood, price 2s. neatly bound in cloth London: Frederick Westley and A. H. Davis, Stationers' Hall Court.

ROYAL LADY'S MAGAZINE, for June

Embellishments.

A Portrait, by Cochran, of Her Royal Highness the Duchess Gloucester, after Fanny Corbaux.

A Portrait, by Smith, of His Royal Highness the Duke

A rottest, by cause, and any contest, and any contest, by cause followester. The sixth beautifully coloured specimen of Flericulture, at the usual Fashions. The summer of St. Albase's Miss Pardos—and the most distinguished writers in Blackwes of the summer of the summ

New National Work.

Dedicated, by permission, to the King,

IVES of ILLUSTRIOUS and DISTIN

IVES of ILLUSTRIOUS and DISTIN
GUISHED SCOTBMEN, from the Barliest Period the Present Time; arranged in Alphabetical order, and formit a complete Scotish Biographical Dictionary.
By ROBERT CHAMBERS,
Author of "The Picture of Scotland," "Traditions of Edinburgh," "Histories of the Scottish Rebeillons," &c. &c.
The Work will be completed in about Twenty-two Parts,
St. cach, embellished with Portraits. The V. cach St. at
Vol. I. Part I. price &c. &c. are now ready.
Simplin and Surhall Joseph Tolly and Co. Dublin, and Blackie and Son, Olssgow and Edinburgh.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

On the 50th of June will be published, Sro.

HISTORY of the WAR of the SUCCES
510N in 6FAIN. SION in SPAIN.

By LORD MAHON.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

In a few days, in 8 vols. pest 8vo. 94s.

RICHARD of YORK; or, the White Ros of England. An Historical Novel.
2. The Adventures of Barney Mahoney, b

T. Crefton Creker. 1 vol. 8s.
3. Santarem; or, Sketches of Society an Manners in the Centre of Portugal. 1 vol. 8s.
Looden: Fisher, Son, and Co.; and Simpkin and Marshall.

At the end of May will be published, post 8vo. price 8s. 6d. dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty, the MESSIAH, a Poem, in Six Books.

By the Author of the "Omnipressence of the Deity." John Turrill, 250, Regent Street, London.

New Edition of Miss Edgeworth's Works, in Menthly Folumprice 5s. each, with superb Engravings, to correspond with a Waverley Novels and Lord Byron's Life and Press.

On the lat of June will be published, ornamented with a Frost piece illustrative of the Prussian Vase, exquisitely engraved Charles Rolls, and a fine Vigneste by T. S. Engleheurt,

VOL. II. of the TALES and NOVELS

MARIA EDGEWORTH, being the First Volume Moral Tales, price 5s. eigenstly bound in cloth, and lettered.

London: Baldwin and Cradock, and other Proprietor.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, the LITERARY GAZETTE OPPICE, 7, Wellington Sire Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 18, Sunth Montron Street, 03th Street; seld also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchapet: Marilerough, Ave Merie Lane, Ledgate Rull: A. Min Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Alkies and Oo. Glasgow; and J. Curmoning, Dublin.—Agent J America, O. Rich, 13, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 20, Castle Street, Lelcoster Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 802.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1832.

PRICE 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The Messiah; a Poem, in Six Books. By Robert Montgomery, author of "the Omnipresence of the Deity," "Satan," &c. &c. 12mo. pp. 300. London, 1832. Turrill. [Inscribed, by gracious permission, to the Queen. l

A MODEST and well-written preface introduces this work to the public; and the author concludes it in a tone which seems as if the greatness and sanctity of his subject had so imbued his own mind, that the petty eavils and dissensions of literary hostility could find no entrance there;—that his disposition had been calmed down to remember at no more than its worth, forgetfulness and forgiveness, the bitter enmity which pursued his earlier efforts. We are glad to see this __for nothing can contribute so well in promoting the reaction which injustice always creates; and when the impartial world beholds a young and ardent poet, only sustained by his own strong impulse to struggle in noble attempts against the depressing effects of malice and severity, it will be very apt to take his side, and estimate him even beyond his deserts. For ourselves, we may state we have never been the indiscriminating panegyrists of Mr. Montgomery; but, on the contrary, have freely censured what we thought to be his faults: but we should have been ashamed of ourselves, of our station and influence in literature, and of the character of the Literary Gazette, had it been possible for us to shut our eyes to the high and honourable nature of his efforts, had they been upheld by less than half the talent and genius he displayed. We would not discourage such adventurers by paltry criticisms, nor vent baser passions upon them in the shape of personal wrong. It is among the worst signs of the press, when the mere common generosity which ought to cheer on bold endeavour, is sacrificed to chill- finer :ing censures, to envious irony, and to yet more abhorrent individual scurrility. When we have read these attacks, we have been prone to ask ourselves what grievous offence this youthful bard had committed? To us his crimes appeared to be few and venial:-the themes chosen for his principal compositions were not only moral, but sublime; and with all their faults of inexperience, they were redeemed by many beauties, and gave promise, at least, that the writer would not disgrace the vocation to which he had devoted his energies. To point out his imperfections, was an honest critic's duty; but to pour upon his head all the vials of exasperation and hate, was, in our humble opinion, out of proportion to the sin of publishing a sacred and epic poem. Nay, so humane and merciful are we, that a second misdeed of the same kind looked to us to be insufficient to produce the ire and abuse which followed it; and though the title of the piece was against it, we could not fancy it enough to justify our visiting and persecuting the unhappy writer as if he were the very personage whose name it bore.

But we will have done with the past,—over room in discussing the point. Coming home which we have simply thrown this brief retro- more closely to human feelings, we now select spect, in order to repeat our sentiments, and set ourselves fairly forward as Reviewers who do not consider Mr. Montgomery to have forfeited (quite the reverse) his claim to the best esteem of his country by any thing he has yet done; who think that his principles entitle him to the approbation of the good, his ability to the regards of the enlightened, and his unflinching enthusiasm to the admiration of all, and especially of those who can appreciate the sensitiveness and intensity of poetical feeling.

The Messiah is, in our judgment, equal to any of Mr. Montgomery's productions, and a lasting monument to his fame. It must be read deliherately; for the vastness of the ideas seems occasionally to have overwhelmed the conception of the writer, and to have led to his expressing himself in a rather obscure style, which requires attention to be clearly understood; and this particularly applies to the first two books. Afterwards, when there is more of narrative,—the birth and early history of the Saviour—the temptation—the sermon on the Mount-the miracles-the betrayal and the crucifixion, - the sense is necessarily more obvious than where exalted devotional emotions and abstractions occupy the verse. Quotation will, however, serve our purpose better than remark; and we now proceed to glance through the volume.

The opening is worthy of the subject :-

The opening is worthy of the subject:—
The great Redeemer and the glorious Cross
I sing: oh, Thou I by whom the worlds were made,
Be with me in this high attempt and theme
August of all-surpassing love divine;
That with no daring eye, or step profane,
The Muse may wander where the Saviour trod:
If e'er at morning, noon, or solemn night,
Thy shadow on my soul hath been, or prayer
Or praise before Thy hymn'd throne prevail'd,
Almighty! sanction, and my song inspire."

And the following, a few pages on, is still

"Oh! ye, who in the choir of Cherubim
Divinely shaped, upon your sapphire thrones,
That in the palace of Jehovah blaze,
One anthem of seraphic bliss prolong;
Attune my lyre, triumphantly to sing—
Who, sun-like, dawn'd upon the gloom of death,
The majesty of dreadful Justice saved,
And roil'd away God's thunders from the world!

And roll'd away God's thunders from the world!
But say, hath ever hymn by angel sung,
Hath thought divined, or human voice express'd,
This miracle of miracles profound—
A world redeem'd, and Christ redemption's Lord?
I've seen the sun, creation's paramount,
Rise o'er the waves, and lead the march of day:
Alone have mused, when tempest roof'd the heavens
With blackness, and the tragic main revered,
Till every wave drew worship from my soul,
The dark sublimity of deepest night
Hath girdled, and the giories of her sky
O'erwhelm'd nie: in humbleness and awe,
Before the maiesty of human worth O'envhelm'd nie: in humbleness and awe, Before the majesty of human worth I've bow'd, and felt how lovely virtue is 1—But poor and powerless, dim and undefined The adoration born of scenes or hours Below, to that which o'er the spirit comes, When silent, Lord! it thinks alome of Thee, And looks Perfection in her godlike face, As on she moves in mercy o'er the world, To shed the music of salvation round!"

The personifying "Perfection" as female in this otherwise beautiful invocation and context is questionable; but we shall not waste an original view of Death.

original view of Death.

"Though Mercy, when a malediction fell
On life and matter from the lips of God,
That Woman's seed should bruise the Serpent's head
Predicted,—still in ghastly vision came
The shadows of thy then unenter'd world,
O Death !—but time hath half thy gloom unveil'd:
Though yet invisible, no more thy realm
A desert seems, where nothing human dwells:
By ages peopled, 'tis the haunt of Dreams
Forsaking earth, to roam and muse awhile
With shapes of being, that did once imbite
The vital breath; there prophet-spirits be,
Whose words were mightier than thunder-tones
When Nature trembles! there the good abide,
The glorious, gifted, and immortal are!
And who of death would all-oblivious be,
When friends are tomb'd, and parents smile no more?
In that eternity where they repose,
Our fancy wanders, and our feelings dwell!
Yet 'twas not thus when new-created Earth

Our fancy wanders, and our feelings (well!
Yet'twas not thus when new-created Earth
From chaos rose, with sumptuous verdure clad:
Flower, fruit, and tree, in primal beauty waved;
No tint of death, no touch of sad decay,
To mar the freshness of the lovely scene,—
That dread announcement; Perish! dust thou art,
And unto dust shalt thou again return,'
To Adam sounded like creation's knell!"

The author goes on contemplating the majesty and power of God, as developed in the scheme of mercy, and utters this fine reflection:

heme of mercy, and utters this fine reflection. "When Nature in her awful doubt creates Myst'ry and madness for the heart and brain, In all that life endures, let mortals feel, That man, the infant of cternity, By wo is nursed, and strengthen'd for the skies; And a brave soul, though earth and hell combine To ecatter tempest round its blighted way, Beholds a God in all things but despair! In hours of sadness, when Oppression rules, And each pale sunburst of unwonted joy Breaks o'er the spirit, like derisive beams Of summer playing round a wintry realm, Let Grief remember how the patriarch cried, With voice that travell'd o'er the sea of time, 'Oh! that the graven rock my words impress'd, And iron stamp'd them with eternal truth! For though in dust my body be dissolved, That my Redeemer liveth, and shall stand, When time is ended, on this mortal earth, I surely know!—on Him mine eye shall gaze, And in my flesh shall I a God behold!"

Our next selections are more allied to natu

Our next selections are more allied to natural scenery and images.

"There is a God! the Universe exclaims;
There is a God! the heart of Man replies;
And round the world that mighty answer rolls!
And thus Creation, while the spirit throbs
In full response to her sublime appeal,
Can teach the mind imagination's creed,
Till all her splendours to the soul become
The faint reflections of a vast Unseen!

Vet vainly beautiful the god of Earth.
Whom Nature's worship for the soul creates:
Our homage is material; and the mind,
While in the light of elemental pomp
It lives and moves, may still her darkness keep,
Unvisited by that perpetual ray
Of hope divine, from revelation born.

Of hope divine, from revelation born.

There is a haunt whose quietude of scene Accordeth well with hours of solemn hue—A churchyard, buried in a beauteous vale, Besprinkled o'er with green and countless graves, And mossy tombs of unambitious pomp Decaying into dust again. No step Of mirth, no laughter of unfeeling life Amid the calm of death, that spot profanes; The skies o'erarch it with serenset love; The winds, when visiting the dark-bough'd elms, An airy anthem sing; and birds and bees, That in their innocence of summer joy Exult and carol with commingling glee, But add to solitude the hull of sound:
There is an ocean—but his unheard waves, By noon entranced, in dreaming slumber he;

Or when the passion of a loud-wing'd gale Hath kindled them with sound, the stormy tone Of waters, mellow'd into music, dies, Like that which schoes from the world afar, Or lingers round the path of perish'd years "

Again :-

Or lingers round the path of perish'd years?

Again:—

"The past survey,—and what hath Reason done? Passion and Doubt her waning light withstood; And stubborn ages, as they swept along. But mock'd her impotence with blind misrule, Of creed or crime begot. Man look'd abroad, And on his spirit rush'd one wast bellef! From life and matter, from the sun and moon, And the deep waters, did a power appeal, Attesting God, and teaching His domain: But how to worship, how His law obey. In vain would philosophic Reason find, In pensive shade, or academic bower. The world was deified! terrestrial gods, In all that apprehending sense believed, A mystic reign for adoration held. Thus, Neptune on his occan-car appear'd, Apollo gloried in the realm of light, And Dian, with her starry nymphs begirt, The virgin moon inspired. There breathed no wind, There waved no grove, no fountain-music play'd, No river in his march of waters joy'd,—But Superstition lent a listening ear To hail her fancied god: each city claim'd Presiding deities, and built her fances For monesters imaged out of monstrous thought, Where dark Pollution fed her secret free. At length Idolatry the mind subdued, From tombs evoked the undeserving dead, Or round the statues of her living greet. In sycophantic homage knelt and pray'd. Religion thus in clouds of error lost, Morality no sacred power assumed. To harmonise the wheels of social life; The world without, to that far nightler world without, a secondary station held, And action was alone the source of law; While thought and impulse, those creative springs On which the conduct of our being turns, In secret wildness kept unholy sway.

Men learnt to live, but were not taught to die: Each hour proclaimed its own peculiar heaven—The heart might covet what the hand revered; And in the soul a thousand years of sin Lie floating, in a see of fancy tose'd, And throning conscience in the heart of man.

Then who can wonder that a darkness hung Round heathen ages, by no hand unveiled? Magnificent and mighty was the past,

And throning conscience in the heart of man.
Then who can wonder that a darkness hung
Round heathen ages, by no hand unveiled?
Mignificent and mighty was the past,
In learning, prowess, and devoted arts;
Yet ne'er was hero, in his sun-bright car,
With all his panoply of gorgeous hue,
And shouting thunders from a nation's lip
To tell his conquest,—so sublimely great
As dying Stephen, when his spirit quenched in glorious faith the agonies of death,
Beheld the sky, and for his murd'rers prayed!

Befield the sky, and for his murd'rers prayed!
Bright as the morning of primeral day
Burst on the waters of chaotic gloom,
Came revelation on the darksome world;
Then error vanished in celestial truth,
Hushed were the oracles, and quenched the fires
That savage bigotry for ages fed:
New light, new order, new existence rose!
The pangs of wo, the wrongs of patient worth,
Were now no more, as once their truth had been:
Eternity would pay the debt of time,
The soul redeem, and justify her Ged.*

And again:

And again:

"A sunset! what a host of shapes and hues
In cloudy lustre multiplied and flashed,
And flung their beauty in reflected tints
On dimpling waters, musically calm;
And then concentred in one pomp of light,
Like that which girdles an Almighty throne!
But ere the sun behind you see withdrew,
A thunder-gloom with silent threat advanced,
And the loud hiss of the exulting rain
Was heard, till universal freshness beamed;
The meadow sparkled, and the sun retired
On waves of glory, like an ocean god;
From out the billows beamed a rainbow form
That died in saure o'er the distant hills;
The sea-guil fluttered on his foam-like wing,
And, like some fairy of the minute born,
A wind exulted over trees and flowers.

An hour with Nature is an how with Hauses.

A wind exulted over trees and flowers.

An hour with Nature is an hour with Hames,
When feeling hallows what the funcy views;
And thus, of twilight! may the spirt learn
From thy fond stillness what the day denies.
Now Mem'ry too, divinest mourner, wakes
The soul's romance, till years of verdant joy
Revive and bloom around the heart once more.
Bright forms, by greeting childhood so beloved!
Maternal tones, and festures, of whose smile
In blissful rivairy our own was born,
And voicas, echoed in our dreams of heaven,
Around us throng, until th' unliving past
Our being enters, and is life again.

Of no false weakness is the inward sigh of mem'ry, for the days of spring-warm truth Departed; beautiful regret is there! To love the past but makes the present dear; The mourful wisdom of our discontent, Can they unteach what young delusion taught Alone; for who that lives, and living thinks, But adds another to an endless train Of sad confessors since the world began? A life of glory to a dream fulfilled, That pines in acting, as a gargeous cloud, Een as it dazzles, is but dying air?" Of no false weakness is the inward sigh

Indeed, all the last pages of Book II. (in which and the preceding, the prophets, and the types of Christ in the Old Testament are treated of) are of equal merit; and we wish we could do them the justice of quotation-but we can only take two snatches.

Solitude :-

"But nobly true, inexplicably deep,
That mournfulness our better nature feels,
When solitude is silent poetry,
Read by the soul, interpreted within."

Evening:-

Evening:—

"In pale omnipotence of light the moon Presides, too brilliantly for meeker stars To venture forth—save one bright watcher, seen O'er you lone hill to let his beauty smile; The clouds are dead, and scarce a breeze profanes The bliasful calm, save when some rebel dares On fitful wing to wander into life, Awhile, and make unwilling branches wave, Or moonlight flutter through the boughs, and fall In giddy brightness on the grass beneath; Then earth is soundless; and the solemn trees In leafy slumber frown their giant length Before them—Night and Stillness are enthroned!"

We will here add a few similar examples from other parts of the poem. Human ties broken:

Human ties broken:

At length Affliction—that behind our joys A grinning spectre masked in savage gloom Is seated—frowned upon his haughty way: And one, the beatings of whose heart were his, Re-echoed!—she who walked with angel step, Her looks the living sunshine of his soul, Her tones the music of his memory, Whose printless foot made consecrated ground—The hope and heaven of all—lay still in death! Then came that worldless, dread eclipse of mind, The agony that curdless soul and sense, As though annihilation had begun, Or (and) man were mould'ring into dust again!"

Tempest :-

"Tremendous are ye, ever-potent storms,
In wild magnificence of sound and scene!
Watched on the mountains, in convulsive play,
Or from the ocean-margin, when the sea.
With her Creator wreatles, and we hear
The fancied wings of everlasting Power
In wrath and gloom fly sweeping o'er the world?"

The miracle of healing the sick :-

"When the sun's expiring gleam Flashed o'er Capernaum, round Messish's door Disease assembled all her ghastly troop Of martyrs. In an instant, ere a sound Or martyrs. If an instant, etc. a sound Could perish, health's untainted blood returned! The lame and sightless, paisied, deaf, and dumb, Recovered—fiect as resurrection's change!"

on the control of the Crucifixion :-

"McHixion:—

"And thus they crucify the Son of Man!
Those hands are bleeding which have blessed a world,
Those feet are tortured, which have never moved
Except on exrands of celestial love;
Those brows are throbbing, and those eyes bedimm'd,
Where light and immertality were throned;
And, ah! that pure, unspotted, perfect soul,
Divine as Deity on earth could be,
Doth agonies beneath th' insputed curse,
Whereby a ransons for the world is paid."

But now the spirit of mysterious night
Comes forth, and, like a ruined angel, seems
All dimly glorious, and divinely sad;
And Earth, forgetful of her primal fall,
Lies in the beauty of reflected heaven.
Oh! night creates the paradise of shought,
Enchanting back whatever time has wronged
Or exiled, touched with that celestial hue
Which faith and fancy on the dead bestow,
Emotions which the tyrant day destroys

Can now awaken, like reviving flowers:
And, oh! the darkest of unheavenly souls
Must feel immortal, as his eye receives
From all its views, a loveliness that comes
To light the dimness of the spirit's depth;
As when at morning oft a sunrise pours
As stream of splendour through the window-panes
Of temple vast, to cheer its barren aisles,
And on the gloom of monumental sleep
To gitter, like a resurrection morn!"

Reflections:

Imagery:-

magery:—

"And the young moon looks on the quiet sea, Tranced like a mother, with her doating eye Intently fixed upon a cradled child; While round, and full, and ravishingly bright, A planet here and there the sky adorns; A path of lustre has o'erlaid the deep, And heaves and glitters, like a wisard shore For sea-enchanters, when they rise and walk The waves in glory. Voice nor foot profunes This dreaming silence; but the metites sign of dying waters on the beach dissolved, Makes ocean-language for the heart and hour."

If these selections do not satisfy our readers that we have not over-praised the writer's poetical powers, we must yield to that variety in taste which leads to want of agreement on matters irresponsible to direct proof, and whose only demonstration lies in the breast of the judge. With us they are perfectly conclusive; and with the memory of the immortal bard of Paradise Lost, with the more recent exquisite polish and pathos of Pope, and the grandeur and depth of the German Klopstock, all fresh in our mind, we have no hesitation in asking for the still young author of these quotations s niche, neither distant nor undistinguished, in the temple of their immortality. At the same time, we can heartily wish that the crudeness of many portions, both of thought and diction. had been submitted to a more rigid revision and deliberate polish.

Before we conclude, and, indeed, to shew that we have not gone through our task merely to eulogise, we will specify some of the blemishes we have noted in this volume.

Alasi for doubt, that still no answer finds
When dust would fathom Deity, and cite
From darkness of eternal depth, the truths
Whose mystry makes the awfulness of time—
Let Nature hope, and while her blessings thrive,
To secret heaven resign the vast unknown."

The obscurity of this exposes it to comment: also the vagueness of a phrase in the preceding page, "a breeze-like sense of joy," (what is that?); and the immediately following line—

"The mind was grander than the universe, And when it fell convulsed a world,"

We have watched for the word "grand," which we saw was such a pet in the Oxford; and though it occurs only three or four times, it is curious enough, that wherever it does occur it is a stumbling-block. Thus-

"Awe The universal mind to grand heliofs" (p. 42.)

" With voice Sepulchral, grand as when a tempest dies," (p. 165.)

are both distinctly poor epithets. We will not, however, go into mere verbal objections: in [&]quot;A demon shadow, by his anguish bred,

O'er all things brooded; in the light no light Appeared—e'en melody no music brought!"

[•] We know not, however, what to say to "serened and "paragon" as verbs, pp. 37, 197; to "commitic" as an adjective, p. 136; to a form "witheringly fail; "p. 40; to "universe of things," same page—indeed, this whole page and p. 41, where "dead-like flow" and "fine free hair occur, present more objectionable phraseology than any fifty elsewhere—with one splendid exception in the paragon—truth, there are very few to find fault with. The following is a grammatical oversight :-" The mind.

While in the light of elemental pomp
It lives and moves, may still her darkness keep." Our next short quotation we throw out for the moralist:

" For what is virtue but a vice withstood, Or sanctity but daring sin o'ercome?"

having, ourselves, strong doubts of the accuracy or orthodoxy of the opinion. The effect of Elizabeth's salutation to the Virgin Mary, p. 71, also strikes us as erroneous—the author should have recollected that the unborn Christ was God. "Soothing plance" is a mean phrase (p. 152), where the Saviour looked upon the bereft mother whose daughter he was about miraculously to restore to life. But we have done; and demonstrated, that if we have erred in our review, it has not been for want of minute care in perusing the Messiah. We have only to add, in this light, that there are some half-dozen of lines of imperfect rhythm,* which should be amended in future editions, through which we predict this poem will go.

In conclusion, we again desire the poet to speak for himself.

"My theme is o'er, the great Messiah sung,
And this attempt, whose vast persuasion filled
My being with a dread delight, concludes.
How often, in some pause of holy fear,
Hath Fancy folded her advent'rous wing,
And my soul bowed with this unuttered thought!
That He, whose mediatorial love I sang,
Beheld me, fathoming the spirit's depth;
And now, as girt with glory, in the heaven
Of heavens, the Son of Man his throne resumes,
A dread comes round me, like a shadow cast
From waning tempest o'er a tranced sea!

Another gase, ere earth and nature die.
The spirit of eternity descends.
Seven thunders speak, to heaven he lifts his arm,
And utters—' Time and earth shall be no more!'
Creation withers at his dread command,
And, like a shade, the universe departs!

Oh! in this agony of Nature's death, May he who dared from fancy's gloom To lift his spirit to the Light of light, And shadow forth the lineaments divine And anadow forth the lineaments during Of God Incarnate, by redemption seen—
Unblasted look upon the Lord he sang;
And in some world unutterably bright,
Where thought is holy as the heaven it breathes,
By angels taught, around the throne renew
The song eternal fleeting time began."

These are high and holy feelings; and they breathe throughout this work, mingled with a beautiful sense of natural loveliness, and a lofty poetical inspiration. To soothe and elevate the soul is the least of the commendations we can bestow upon it; for there is not a page which can fail to purify the heart and raise the spirit above and beyond the vicissitudes of mortal life to an eternal and unchangeable sphere-

Where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary

The Adventures of Barney Mahoney. By T. Crofton Croker. 12mo. pp. 299. London, 1832. Fisher and Co.

THE characteristic of this work is humour-and humour is always attended by good plain sense— and a vein of feeling. The difference between humour and wit is, that humour is natural, wit artificial; the one does, and the other says humour is dramatic, wit epigrammatic; and all these marks are to be found on the little volume which sets forth the adventures of Barney Mahonev-for these adventures are simple, actual, and comic. Barney Mahoney is the real and ideal of the Irish character, whether in high or low life. But let our author's quaint verses speak for themselves.

"My novellette I hold to be quite national;
And, in its inward spirit, truly metaphysical.
From it my countrymen may draw a moral.
And see themselves, for they have small opacity;
Theirs is ambition—silver-tongued loquacity,
Empty profession; but, we shall not quarrel—
I do believe, with fault and folly teeming,
The Irish heart, when tried, will shine with bright redeeming."

This youth sees "a deal of sarvice;" and the various families in which he lives are sketched with great spirit. First, there is the benevolent merchant, the very epitome of respectability, and his family the very romance of comfort. Then the unfortunate single lady of quality; or the science of following the old saying, "appearances are every thing, every where, and with every body." Mrs. Temple, with two daughters come out, and the number of the deadly sins in younger ones, kept, as such things should be, carefully in the back-ground; for "Mrs. Temple never obtruded the seven Lincolnshire damsels, rising, as the farmers say, next grass." Then gentility, in a small way, in Montague Place, in the persons of Mr. James Jones and his two sisters; people who keep two maids and a man, who always have "a glass coach," and who make a boast, "they had never in their lives passed a summer in London, or a winter out of it,"—a great mistake, by the by; for fashion would rather say, "we never spent a summer in the country, or a winter in London." These "places" of Barney bring us into contact with two Yorkshire cousins of the Jones', most exquisite specimens of "unsophistication," and a dry-salter and his son, the latter of whom has had a college education—to the outward disdain and inward pride of his father, a good-hearted, bad-tempered, well-todo-in-the-world citizen. Having thus given the bill of fare, we will proceed to try the dishes, and shall quote the opening dialogue, which leads to Barney's being installed in Mr.

Stapleton's service. Scene, an Irish hovel.
"' You have a large family, my good woman !' 'Tis I that have that same thin, yer honor, be the blessin' o' Providence. Chilther' comes as thick as poverty, most times, but, thank God! we've not known to say want, for 'tis seldom but we've a praty to put in their mouths; an' shoore 'tisn't the likes of us that could ixpect to be havin' mate onst a week like our betters. Though, may-be, if we got a habit of atin' it, we'd think it hard to be widout it; so we would. 'How often do you get a joint of meat, pray?' 'Is it a jint o' mate, yer honor! The Lord be betune us an' all harum, where 'ud we come be a jint o' mate? Barrin' it may be a pig's head, or some small matter o' that kind, at Christmas or Easter, I niver seen a rale jint o' mate sin' the blessed day I was married to Murty Mahoney, so I haven't,and that's three an' twenty years cum next Lady-day.' 'Your children appear strong and healthy, nevertheless.' 'Oh! thanks be where due, they are that; an' why wouldn't they? They've no stint of de prates any how; an' onst a week, or on a saint's day, mostly a herrin' or a sup o' milk wid them. Sorro' wud I wish to see de day a child o' mine 'ud grumble while he'd a bowl o' Carrigaline beauties, or good red-nosed kidneys planted down upon de table, wid a relish now an' then, or may be onst a week - ' 'The rain still continues as heavy as ever,' said the gentleman; 'may I ask leave to remain under the shelter of your roof until the storm has passed off?' 'Yerhonor'd be kindly my neck, sir?' 'Only just round this corner, de county I had afore ye. Judy! rache me de prauskeen 'till I wipe a stool for his honor to here you will reach it in a moment, and the sit down upon.' 'Do not trouble yourself. It view from it will, I assure you, amply repay the (P. 62.) is quite clean, I dare-say,' replied Mr. Staple-trouble.' 'If I do if I ... No, sir, I am not ton, for such was the gentleman's name. 'Beggin' yer honor's pardin', but I've hard say, 'quite clane' aint clane enuff for de Englishers, an' I'm thinking, be yer honor's tongue, that ye doesn't belong to this part of the counthree, any how.' 'You are right,' said Mr. Staple. ton; 'Lam an Englishman, and a stranger in Ireland, and I feel deeply interested by what I have seen of the country. Indeed, my admiration is excited by the numerous instances I meet, where apparently extreme poverty is supported with a degree of cheerfulness and patience, in vain to be sought for in my own more favoured land.' 'Oh! where 'ud be de use of bein' onpatient, yer honor? What 'ud we get be that? The Lord knows best what's good for us all; an' shoore, if we've his blessin', 'tis all we want.' 'That's true, perhaps; but now, tell me,-you have been married three-andtwenty years, you say. You have reared—how many children?' Tirteen, yer honor. Tisn't often ye'll find a smaller family,-that's among the poore o' the county. They tell me chilther's scarcer in de county Limerick, but I dunnow. Murty thought it best to settle where his work was; an' may-be 'tis right he was.' 'How does he gain his living, and support this large family?' 'He attinds de masons, that's ' He attinds de masons, that's de masther buildhers,' said Mrs. Mahoney, willing to express in the most imposing terms the occupation of her husband. England we call a bricklayer's labourer, I suppose?' 'I niver hard himself say he was that same,' returned the poor woman, a little wounded by what she considered to be so harsh an appellation. 'He just mixes up de morthar an' dem things for de working men, an' does any odd job that 'ud be for helpin' 'em, an' de likes o' that, an' -' 'Carries a hod for his amusement, I suppose?' said Mr. Stapleton, smiling. Is it a hod o' morthar? In coorse he'll do that same in de way o' bis'ness, an' de niver a worse man is he for it, any way,' continued the still more offended dame. 'Do not imagine I intended any offence to his or your feelings, by carelessly mentioning an old subject of jocularity with us in England. A man's usefulness ought to be the truest source of his pride; and neither yourself, nor your husband, I am sure, need blush to own the means of support that have enabled you to bring up this fine family of well-grown girls, and their still more sturdy brothers.' 'Yer honor's words are like honey, shoorely, replied Mrs. Mahoney, com-pletely mollified by this saving speech."

For the sake of contrast, we give the testy drysalter's dialogue with his son, who has per-suaded him, by way of passing the morning, to visit "the Lover's Seat" at Hastings. We must observe that the old gentleman's tongue is not quite obedient to its master, who stutters pretty considerably"-a novelty, we may note, on paper.

"Arrived, after much toil, at the edge of the precipice under which this celebrated seat is placed, the old gentleman exclaimed, as he observed his son marshalling the way down the little path leading to it, (one, by the by, certainly not well calculated for gouty pedestrians, and requiring considerable command of head and foot,) 'Hollo! sir; hollo; where - where the deuce are you going now, air? Do you do you suppose — suppose I am coming after you down the cliff? Do you want me to break welcome, shoore, if 'twas de grandest house in sir; take my arm; the seat is under the ledge de county I had afore ye. Judy! rache me de you are standing upon. If you come round

^{} Ex. gr,—

" He listened for a leaf-fall on the charmed air," (p. 49.)

" The fulness and the flow of her ecstatic thoughts," quite such an idiot as you think me; and you, sir, - you would have a fine view, too, I take it. Yes, yes, sir, to see your old father go headover-heels into the sea. How did you dare, nine-and-fifty years, and over. I never was so sir, to bring me up this mountain? Yes, moun-far as Lovers' Seat myself; but the gentlefolks tain, puppy! No grinning, sir; knowing the state of my head, and that _and that I _ I the summer; I've often talked of going there, never go up to the top of St. Paul's for a prospect without being sea-sick.' 'I am very sorry; I really forgot the giddiness of your head. Shall we turn back, sir? or would you like to come down by Covehurst Cottage, the descent is quite easy, and home by the beach. It will be a change. 'Any thing—any thing but the same way back; that's if its shorter, Master Tom. I should never get home through those broiling lanes again.' 'It is much shorter, sir, and good sands all the way, when the tide Poor Tom, however, had omitted is down. any observation on this particular; and, on guiding his grumbling and ill-humoured father to the beach, he was dismayed to perceive it planned, boat hired, band engaged, and dinner was high-water, leaving them no means of passage except close at the foot of the cliffs, where the shingles and rocks afforded a most unpleasant and fatiguing footing. 'Well, sir! where tionable, the tide favourable, wind ditto—even are—where are the sands you spoke of?' 'I her majesty the moon congenial; and not a fear the tide is against us, father; it appears to single 'severe cold' or 'violent headache' smooth and firm as a floor. It happens very These are things that may occur occasionally, smooth and firm as a floor. It happens very unfortunately __' 'I see, sir __ I see __ I see that's the plan. So, because I would not tumble explanation I can imagine of such an event is, over the cliff to please you, I am to get the that it comes to give the lie direct to a certain gout, scrambling over these cu-cu-cursed rocks, delightful dramatist of our times, who boldly and wet my feet. Oh, I see it all, in hopesin hopes of flinging it into my stomach. Oh! that ever—ever I should be such a fool, such a bo-bo-booby, as to go trampoozleing out with a co-co-co-collegian. Well, sir, you'll come into co-co-co-collegian. Well, sir, you'll come into a pretty—pretty little property. I've made my—made my will, so there's no more occasion for me, I suppose; but remember, sir, I expect to be buried decently; I won't be left rain upon those injudicious wights who had your sister would be a fitter person to come here, mind that. Your poor mother lies in Shoreditch, and — 'My dear father, pray do not talk in this manner. Sit down on this rock to rest a little, and you will be able to proceed better when you have taken breath.' 'Under this chalk cliff, not a breath of air, and the sun reflected down upon me! but I see, sir—I see. Did I—did I not hear you, only last Monday, telling Miss Stapleton it was enough to give a ... give a person a cow di solyle to sit close under the cliffs? Oh, I'm a murdered man, that's very clear. Go on, sir, walk on. I'll reach my bed, if possible. I should wishshould wish to - wish to die in bed, if its agreeable to you.' The walk, in itself, was assuredly toilsome enough; and the old man rendered it still more painful to both parties by his peevish murmurings; so that, on arriving at their lodgings, he was completely exhausted, and retired immediately to bed, declaring, if able to bear the journey, he would go to London the following day, that he might die creditably in his own house, and evade the fees exacted for the passing of a corpse on so long a journey. Too much exasperated against his son to accept even the composing draught he recommended to him, he angrily ordered him to leave the room, and send their landlady to him. 'I am a-a murdered man-a murdered man, Mrs. Kilderkin. Give me a glass of cordial before I go; there, that revives me. Now sit down, Mrs. Kilderkin. I want to—want to speak to you. Tell me, now, if there really—really is such a place as 'Lovers' Seat,' or if—if its all an invention of my son Tom's.' Lauk-a-day, 'Every body goes, you know, by the steamer tion to be drawn! and there is no moral language. yes, sir! 'Lovers' Seat;' sure and certain to Margate; so easy, so pleasant; and there a consequence. Byron's journals and lette there is, sir. Not as ever I see it myself, | you find coaches and carriages of all kin though I was bred and born in Hastings, and never ha' been out on it all my life, which its all goes there, and very much it's frequented in but somehow I always find something better else to do.' 'I believe you... I believe you, Mrs. Kilderkin. Well, I'm glad... I'm glad. at any rate, I have not been deceived. I really suspected __' 'Oh dear, no, sir. Your son was quite correct, sir; for my grandmother often told me the whole story."

Now for two or three diversities. Water parties.

"A party to Richmond was proposed and formed; which, by some unaccountable contingencies of will, weather, water, and welfare, actually met with no obstruction in its execution. And, notwithstanding its having been ordered, at least a week beforehand, yet, by some almost incredible chance or other, it came to pass that the day appointed was unexcep-These are things that may occur occasionally, 'Naw, cuzzen, agh'm nut; agh was only thi one does not know how, and can scarcely accept ing—' 'Ah! I was sure there was someth even ocular demonstration of; and the only asserted, no longer ago than last summer, upon an impromptu embarkation, that 'Water parties should be managed with masonic mystery, inasmuch as rivers (that hight the Thames more especially) were to be taken only by surprise; never failing to turn their tides to the most unpropitious point; to summon the winds to that one ought never to feel too confident their billowy aid; and call down a deluge of one's own security; but perhaps, my de was thrown open to travellers, the opening head than your own, (for I am older by phrase of 'When I was in Faris' gave a man a certain lead in conversation, and effectually and indeed I am never ashamed, for my personal conversation, and effectually and indeed I am never ashamed, for my personal conversation, and effectually and indeed I am never ashamed, for my personal conversation, and effectually and indeed I am never ashamed. closed the mouths of those who had not yet of owning to my age; every one cannot acquired the power of flourishing off by that once imposing sentence. The provoking nonchalance with which every one now talks of,-When I was last at Florence,' 'During my second visit to Moscow,' and so on, leaves a person no chance of attracting the attention, or opening the ears of the company, by any thing short of, 'I remember, the first time I saw Jerusalem,' or, 'From the summit of the Andes, one often sees-' whatever may occur to the fancy at the moment, for the chances are Watering-places.

"That convenient place, Broadstairs, so situated, that persons of few friends and small incomes may make it their professed residence, while their actual one shall be in the obscurity of some impenetrable back street, in that most unnameable of all places, Margate. Accommodating Broadstairs! thy post-office offering colour and credibility to the deceptive visitors waiting your landing, to carry you to Brosstairs. No distance! down to dinner! all the sort of thing."

The Yorkshire cousins ought to be taken a whole, but, at the risk of disjointing, must have a bit; only premising that agh provincial for I, and that Miss Jones is one these soft-headed and kind-hearted individu with many words and no thoughts, but a tl roughly good creature—one who constan palliates the faults, follies, &c. of her acquai ance, by the observation, "It's very natural "It occurred to the hospitable recollect of Miss Jones, that she had been deficient catering for the amusement of her other gu who had been so long absent from the parlo that she found it incumbent on her manners go in search of her. In the spare room found Miss Betsey Pearson seated, and, wit melancholy aspect, gazing on the square alle ance of sky to be commanded from the situat she had chosen. 'What is the matter, Bets my dear? You do not look well.' agh'm well enuff, thenk you, cuzzen Grizz 'You must be dull here alone : let me preon you to come down stairs; or, if you i indisposed, tell me if there is any thing I offer you. I am sure you are in pain, my de amiss, you looked so anxious and unhappy. do not wish, my dear, to pry impertinently i the subject of your distress; but, if there any thing I could do to alleviate—for, as I of say to Julia, though the world has always g smoothly with us, that is no reason why should refuse to sympathise in the griefs others. I am sure there are few women fortunate as we are, and in most families th will occur something or other unpleasant. published a previous intention of adventuring you. Shall I ask her to come to you?' thereon.'" nay; it'll do presently, agh expect. A recon."

Travellers.

"For some few years after the continent but if you will listen to advice from an ol young, you know-at least, always you But what I was going to observe, my d cousin, is, that I do think it a wrong thing give way to melancholy, and seclude your in this manner, refusing to open your hear your own sister. Surely, if there be any to whom one's thoughts may safely-' sake, cuzzen! what a fuss about nowt! A was only thinking agh wondthered what wer te put on te day.'"

We now le So much for sympathy. ten to one that no one present is qualified to enter the lists with you."

Barney Mahoney to his fate, which will be v favourable if he meets with his deserts; conclude by hoping that its future readers n be as much amused as we have been with entertaining pages.

> The Works of Lord Byron: New Editi Vol. VI. 12mo. pp. 416. London, 18 Murray.

> This volume completes the life of Lord Byr and in so doing furnishes, with all its exc how admirable they are! what knowledge of society, what happiness of illustration, what pleasant abandon, do they display! they reflect his common, acting, work-a-day self as in a glass: his poetry gave the mind, but his letters give the man. It has been beautifully said—

"Oh what are we,
Frail creatures as we are, that we should sit
In judgment man on man: and what were we
If the All-merciful should mete to us
With the same rigorous measure wherewithal
Sinner to sinner metes?"

We all profess such humility; it were well if we also acted upon it. It would seem that a wast debt of delight would be a claim as to indulgence; but literary gratitude thinks that praise, like love, should be "spoken low." The Pharisee takes the judgment-seat; and envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness, form the jury; and idle reports, and hasty inferences, are the witnesses. The noble passage relating to Burns, in the Siamese Twins, is equally appropriate to Byron: let it be its own apology for quotation.

ogy for quotation.

"But he, who serves all earth,—whose mind Stars the dark wanderings of mankind; And from lone Thought's empyrean height Exalis the soul, its glories light—For him no grateful memory lives; No justice weighs, no love forgives; For him, the Universal Eye, Each heart he cheered, hath grown his spy. The very lustre of his fame Betrays the specks upon his name; The columns of his triumph stand. As pasquins for each vulgar hand. For him the wonted shades which hide Home's reverent secrets are denied, Exposed, dissected, canvass'd o'er, Each household wound and hidden sore; His very heart hung forth a prey To the sharp-tongued 'remorseless day.' The temple he hath built will yield For him alone no shrine to shield: Nay, round the altar where he flieth, The coil'd and venom'd slander lieth—Crush'd by the serpents of his doom, Behold his temple walls his tomb!"

There are but two causes for thus unearthing the faults and follies of the gifted: to excuse our own by high example, or to triumph in our own immaculateness—without considering that we have neither the palliation nor the temptation—not even the means! At least, let us respect a grave—

"Where death and glory their joint Sabbath keep."

The present volume contains a sweet view of Newstead Abbey, though we could gladly dispense with the ladies and parasols in the foreground. The fountain vignette is a pretty specimen of old architecture; and in the body of the book is an interesting engraving of Hucknell Church, the place of Lord Byron's interment. Its miscellaneous contents are a review of Wordsworth, common-place enough; but Byron was no critic; he had none of that spirit of warm appreciation which is the best qualification for such an office; his temper interfered with his justice, and he praised only from whim or personal friendship. Next come his review of Gell's Troy, and his speeches, together with his letters to Bowles on the sub-ject of Pope. The question whether a poetical image should be taken from nature or art is in itself an absurdity; it is association with human thought or sentiment that constitutes the charm, and that association is as likely to be with the fallen column as the fallen oak. The accusation brought against Pope, that he wanted an eye to the beauties of nature, would seem incredible from any one who had read his works, did we not know, from all experience, that the more lightly an assertion is made, the more strenuously it is defended. How many images which shew such intimate observance of, and feeling for, nature, crowd upon us at this moment! Who does not remember "His grapes long lingering on the sunny wall;" or the exquisite picture of the sylphs, embodied as in the form of insect life, when from the sunbeam they catch

"Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings?" and where will be found a more poetical description of a rookery than in

"Towns aerial on the waving tree?"

But we are well content with the prejudice or the criticism that called forth two such letters from Byron's pen, filled as they are with the keenest sarcasm, the most judicious argument, a true love of poetry, and touches of the most generous and warm feeling. The last of these letters is published for the first time, and we shall proceed to lay some of its most striking passages before the reader.

Sensibility to criticism.—"There is no moral turpitude in such acuteness of feeling: it has been, and may be, combined with many good and great qualities. Is Mr. Bowles a poet, or is he not? If he be, he must, from his very essence, be sensitive to criticism; and even if he be not, he need not be ashamed of the common repugnance to being attacked. All that is to be wished is, that he had considered how disagreeable a thing it is, before he assailed the greatest moral poet of any age, or in any language."

The ensuing passage is very characteristic: "To me it appears of no very great consequence whether Martha Blount was or was not Pope's mistress, though I could have wished him a better. She appears to have been a coldhearted, interested, ignorant, disagreeable wo-man, upon whom the tenderness of Pope's heart, in the desolation of his latter days, was cast away, not knowing whither to turn, as he drew towards his premature old age, childless and lonely; like the needle, which, approaching within a certain distance of the pole, becomes helpless and useless, and, ceasing to tremble, rusts. She seems to have been so totally unworthy of tenderness, that it is an additional proof of the kindness of Pope's heart to have been able to love such a being. But we must love something. I agree with Mr. B. that she 'could at no time have regarded Pope personally with attachment,' because she was incapable of attachment; but I deny that Pope could not be regarded with personal attachment by a worthier woman. It is not probable, indeed, that a woman could have fallen in love with him as he walked along the Mall, or in a box at the opera, nor from a balcony, nor in a ball-room; but in society he seems to have been as amiable as unassuming, and, with the greatest disadvantages of figure, his head and face were remarkably handsome, especially his eyes. He was adored by his friends-friends of the most opposite dispositions, ages, and ta-lents—by the old and wayward Wycherley, by the cynical Swift, the rough Atterbury, the gentle Spence, the stern attorney-bishop Warburton, the virtuous Berkeley, and the 'cankered Bolingbroke.' Bolingbroke wept over him like a child; and Spence's description of his last moments is at least as edifying as the more ostentatious account of the deathbed of Addison. The soldier Peterborough and the poet Gay, the witty Congreve and the laughing Rowe, the eccentric Cromwell and the steady Bathurst, were all his intimates. The man who could conciliate so many men of the most opposite description, not one of whom but was a remarkable or a celebrated character, might well have pretended to all the attachment which a reasonable man would desire of an amiable woman. Pope, in fact, wherever he dipped in hell."

got it, appears to have understood the sex well. Bolingbroke, 'a judge of the subject,' says Warton, thought his 'Epistle on the Characters of Women' his 'masterpiece.' even with respect to the grosser passion-which takes occasionally the name of 'romantic,' accordingly as the degree of sentiment elevates it above the definition of love by Buffon-it may be remarked, that it does not always depend upon personal appearance, even in a woman. Madame Cottin was a plain woman, and might have been virtuous, it may be presumed, without much interruption. Virtuous she was. and the consequences of this inveterate virtue were, that two different admirers (one an elderly gentleman) killed themselves in despair (see Lady Morgan's 'France'). I would not, however, recommend this rigour to plain women in general, in the hope of securing the glory of two suicides apiece. I believe that there are few men who, in the course of their observations on life, may not have perceived that it is not the greatest female beauty who forms the longest and the strongest passions. But, apropos of Pope. Voltaire tells us that the Maréchal Luxembourg (who had precisely Pope's figure) was not only somewhat too amatory for a great man, but fortunate in his attachments. La Valière, the passion of Louis XIV., had an unsightly defect. The Princess of Eboli, the mistress of Philip II. of Spain, and Maugiron, the minion of Henry III. of France, had each of them lost an eye; and the famous Latin epigram was written upon them, which has, I believe, been either translated or imitated by Goldsmith:

'Lumine Acon dextro, capta est Leonilla sinistro, Et potis est forma vincere uterque Deos; Blande puer, lumen quod habes concede sorori, Sie tu caecus Amor, sie erit illa Venus.'

Wilkes, with his ugliness, used to say, that 'he was but a quarter of an hour behind the handsomest man in England;' and this vaunt of his is said not to have been disproved by circumstances. Swift, when neither young, nor handsome, nor rich, nor even amiable, inspired the two most extraordinary passions upon record, Vanessa's and Stella's:

Vanessa, aged scarce a score, Sighs for a gown of forty-four.'

He requited them bitterly; for he seems to have broken the heart of the one, and worn out that of the other: and he had his reward, for he died a solitary idiot in the hands of servants. For my own part, I am of the opinion of Pausanias, that success in love depends upon Fortune. 'They particularly renounce celestial Venus, into whose temple, &c. &c. &c. I remember, too, to have seen a building in Ægina in which there is a statue of Fortune holding a horn of Amalthea; and near her there is a winged Love. The meaning of this is, that the success of men in love-affairs depends more on the assistance of Fortune than the charms of beauty. I am persuaded, too, with Pindar (to whose opinion I submit in other particulars), that Fortune is one of the Fates, and that, in a certain respect, she is more powerful than her sisters.' Grimm has a remark of the same kind on the different destinies of the younger Crébillon and Rousseau. The former writes a licentious novel, and a young English girl, of some fortune and family (a Miss Strafford), runs away and crosses the sea to marry him; while Rousseau, the most tender and passionate of lovers, is obliged to espouse his chambermaid."

To this we can only add the old proverb, "that if matches are made in heaven, they are Angedote of Cribb..." I remember, (and do you remember, reader, that it was in my ear-liest youth, 'Consule Planco'?) on the morning of the great battle (the second) between Gullev and Gregson-Cribb, who was matched against Horton for the second fight, on the same memorable day, awaking me (a lodger at the inn in the next room) by a loud remonstrance to the waiter against the abomination of his towels, which had been laid in lavender. Cribb was a coal-heaver-and was much more discomfited by this odoriferous effeminacy of fine linen, than by his adversary Horton, whom he 'finished in style,' though with some reluctance; for I recollect that he said, 'he disliked hurting him, he looked so pretty,' Horton being a very fine fresh-coloured young man.

How to be revenged on a Hackney Coachman -" It is of little use to call him a 'rascal, a scoundrel, a thief, an impostor, a blackguard, a villain, a raggamuffin, a-what you please;' all that he is used to-it is his mother-tongue, and probably his mother's. But look him steadily and quietly in the face, and say-' Upon my word, I think you are the ugliest fellow I ever saw in my life,' and he will instantly roll forth the brazen thunders of the charioteer Salmoneus You a gentleman! Why....! So much easier it is to provoke... and therefore to vindicate... (for passion punishes him who feels it more than those whom the passionate would excruciate) - by a few quiet words the aggressor. than by retorting violently. The 'coals of fire' of the Scripture are benefits; but they are not the less 'coals of fire.'"

Beautiful Passage.—" In my former letter l have remarked upon the editor's forgetfulness of Pope's benevolence. But where he mentions his faults it is 'with sorrow;' his tears drop, but they do not blot them out. The 'recording angel' differs from the recording clergyman. A fulsome editor is pardonable though tiresome, like a panegyrical son whose pious sincerity would demi-deify his father. But a detracting editor is a parricide. He sins against the nature of his office, and connexion; he murders the life to come of his victim. If his author is not worthy to be mentioned, do not edit at all: if he be, edit honestly, and even flatteringly. The reader will forgive the weakness in favour of mortality, and correct your adulation with a

Pope's Feeling for Nature .- " It is true that Pope was infirm and deformed; but he could walk, and he could ride (he rode to Oxford from London at a stretch), and he was famous for an exquisite eye. On a tree at Lord Bathurst's is carved, 'Here Pope sang,'—he composed be-neath it. Bolingbroke, in one of his letters, represents them both writing in the hay-field. No poet ever admired nature more, or used her better, than Pope has done, as I will undertake to prove from his works, prose and verse, if not anticipated in so easy and agreeable a labour. I remember a passage in Walpole, somewhere, of a gentleman who wished to give directions about some willows to a man who had long served Pope in his grounds: 'I understand, sir,' he replied: 'you would have them hang down, sir, somewhat postical." Now, if nothing existed but this little anecdote, it would suffice to prove Pope's taste for nature, and the impression which he had made on a commonminded man. But I have already quoted Warton and Walpole (both his enemies), and, were it necessary, I could amply quote Pope himself for such tributes to nature as no poet of the present day has even approached. His various excellence is really wonderful: architecture, painting, gardening, all are alike subject to his genius. Be it remembered, that English garden ing is the purposed perfectioning of niggard nature, and that without it England is but a hedge-and-ditch, double-post-and-rail, Houn-slow Heath and Clapham Common sort of country, since the principal forests have been felled. It is, in general, far from a picturesque country. The case is different with Scotland, Wales. and Ireland; and I except also the lake counties and Derbyshire, together with Eton. Windsor, and my own dear Harrow on the Hill, and some spots near the coast. In the present rank fertility of 'great poets of the age,' and 'schools of poetry'—a word which, like 'schools of eloquence,' and of 'philosophy,' is never introduced till the decay of the art has increased with the number of its professors, in the present day, then, there have sprung up two sorts of naturals; the Lakers, who whine about nature because they live in Cumberland; and their under-sect (which some one has maliciously called the 'Cockney School'), who are enthusiastical for the country because they live in London. It is to be observed, that the rustical founders are rather anxious to disclaim any connexion with their metropolitan followers, whom they ungraciously review, and call cocknevs, atheists, foolish fellows, bad writers, and other hard names not less ungrateful than uniust. I can understand the pretensions of the aquatic gentlemen of Windermere to what Mr. Braham terms 'entususmusy' for lakes, and mountains, and daffodils, and buttercups; but I should be glad to be apprised of the founda-tion of the London propensities of their imitative brethren to the same 'high argument.'"

We are here rather tempted to take up the defence of Londoners, whom, as a body, we do firmly believe have a keen relish for the country. Whither is the Sunday walk invariably directed, but where a green field and hedge may be seen? and certainly no where are the environs of a metropolis so beautiful as those of Landon. The view from the Surrey hills is as perfect a panorama of a well-wooded valley, varied by garden, meadow, and human dwelling, as could be seen? and on a sunny day, how finely does the cloudy cupola of St. Paul rise dim and dark in the distance! Take the Thames, viewed in all the varieties of an English atmosphere. for instance, with a crimson sunset mingling with its glowing waters, and the Hammersmith suspension-bridge flung across the reddening air, the work of mark -- but such maric as suits the day, the work of man's skill and man's industry. Look at Greenwich Park, with its trees of a hundred years' growth-its observatory, a watch-tower, where the mystery of the stars becomes knowledge—and the noble palace, dedicated to the noblest employ - the shelter of the old age of those whose youth was spent on the far and stormy sea in the defence of their country. Take Barnes Common, with its golden furse bright as any that was ever washed with summer rains in the vales of Windermere, the silvery gossamer that covers it at early morning as with a veil, fragile and glittering as that of hope; its hordes of wild flowers, the delicate bine veronica, the exquisitely moulded blossom of the wild thyme, the dandelion with its cobweb-like tuft, to be dispersed with a breath (and woe to them that need to give two, for they will not have their wish this time!); the little fountain in the centre, almost choked up with its ruined walls, buried beneath what made its former security, yet welling through the turf, rather marked by every variety of blossem from the many pleasure grounds about : the laburnum, with its falling and golden bloom, like a sudden shower of raisdrops through which the sun is shining: the horse-chestnuts, with their pyramids of cimson-lined flowers, like the gigantic tree of which travellers tell us in the East; the profusion of lilacs, the pink and white May, and the ash, to which we may apply what Wordsword says of the birch.

" The weeping ash, the lady of the woods." Add to these scenes a deep blue sky, only broken by white clouds; an entire repose, with perhaps a distant and hollow marmur telling of the mighty capital, heard though unsem; and who will deny that the environs of London are full of nature, and beauty, and consequently of poetry? That these green fields and shadowy lanes are enjoyed is obvious, by the many pedestrians that on a Sabbath may ke met in their depths, and the more enjoyed perhaps from the force of contrast. The country is very dear to him who during the week has been "in crowded cities ment." There is poetry enough about London, if its poets did but feel it; and if they have not done it justice, the fault is with their school, not with their scenes. Lord Byron sets forth the truth with equal strength and shrewdness.

"The grand distinction of the under-forms of the new school of poets is their relgarity. By this I do not mean that they are coarse, but 'shabby-genteel,' as it is termed. A man may be coarse, and yet not rulger, and the reverse. Barns is often coarse, but never vulgar. Chatterton is never vulgar, nor Wordsworth, nor the higher of the Lake school, though they treat of low life in all is branches. It is in their finery that the ner under-school are most vulgar, and they may be known by this at once; as what we called a Harrow 'a Sunday blood' might be easily distinguished from a gentleman, akhough his clothes might be the better out, and his boot the best blackened, of the two ; - probably because he made the one, or cleaned the other, with his own hands. In the present case, I speak of writing, not of persons. Of the latter, I know nothing; of the former, I judge a it is found. Of my friend Hunt, I have already said, that he is any thing but vulgar in his manners; and of his disciples, therefore, I will not judge of their manners from their veres. They may be honourable and gentlemanly men, for what I know; but the latter quality is stodiously excluded from their publications. They remind me of Mr. Smith and the Miss Broughtons at the Hampstead Assembly, in 'Evelina' In these things (in private life, at least) pretend to some small experience; because, in the course of my youth, I have seen a little of all sorts of society, from the Christian prince and the Mussulman sultan and pasha, and the higher ranks of their countries, down to the London boxer, the 'Aash and the swell,' the Spanish muleteer, the wandering Turkish dervise, the Scotch highlander, and the Albanian robber;to say nothing of the curious varieties of Italian social life. Far be it from me to presume that there ever was, or can be, such a thing as an aristocracy of peets; but there is a nobility of thought and of style, epen to all stations, and derived partly from talent and partly from education — which is to be found in Shake-speare, and Pope, and Burns, no less that in Dante and Alfieri, but which is no where to be perceived in the mock birds and bards of Mr. Hunt's little chorus. If I were asked to define what this gentlemanimess is, I should say that verdure than moisture. Then wander through the quiet lanes, where hedges were filled with it is only to be defined by examples—of the who have it, and those who have it not. In life. I should say that most military men have it, and few naval; -that several men of rank have it, and few lawyers :—that it is more frequent among authors than divines (when they are not pedants); - that fencing-masters have more of it than dancing-masters, and singers than players; and that (if it be not an Irishism to say so) it is far more generally diffused among women than among men. In poetry, as well as writing in general, it will never make entirely a poet or a poem; but neither poet nor poem will ever be good for any thing without it. It is the salt of society, and the seasoning of composition. Vulgarity is far worse than downright blackguardiem; for the latter comprehends wit, humour, and strong sense at times; while the former is a sad abortive attempt at all things, 'signifying nothing.' It does not depend upon low themes, or even low language, for Fielding revels in both: -but is he ever vulgar? No: you see the man of education, the gentleman, and the scholar, sporting with his subject — its master, not its slave. Your vulgar writer is always most vulgar the higher his subject; as the man who shewed the menagerie at Pid-cock's was wont to say — 'This, gentlemen, is the eagle of the sun, from Archangel, in Russia; the otterer it is, the igherer he flies.' But to the proofs. It is a thing to be felt more than explained. Let any man take up a volume of Mr. Hunt's subordinate writers, read (if possible) a couple of pages, and pronounce for himself if they contain not the kind of writing which may be likened to 'shabby-genteel' in actual life. When he has done this, let him take up Pope; — and when he has laid him down, take up the Cockney again — if he can."

We conclude with the generous tribute paid to Pope.

"Neither time, nor distance, nor grief, nor age, can ever diminish my veneration for him, who is the great moral poet of all times, of all climes, of all feelings, and of all stages of existence; the delight of my boyhood, the study of my manhood, perhaps (if allowed to me to attain it) he may be the consolation of my age. His poetry is the Book of Life. Without canting, and yet without neglecting religion, he has assembled all that a good and great man can gather together of moral wisdom clothed in consummate beauty. Sir William Temple observes, 'that of all the members of mankind that live within the compass of a thousand years, for one man that is born capable of making a great poet, there may be a thousand born capable of making as great generals and ministers of state as any in story.' Here is a statesman's opinion of poetry: it is honourable to him and to the art. Such a 'poet of a thousand years' was Pope. A thousand years will roll away before such another can be hoped for in our literature. But it can want them --- he himself is a literature."

On one point only can we not agree with his lordship, who urges past license of expression as an extenuation for divers coarse words and phrases. Our objection is simply this,—it is no longer the custom of the day to permit it; and surely such restriction is an improvement. Why should we go back upon former faults ? What was custom in an earlier writer, is bad taste in one now. Because Dryden used epithets no longer tolerated, it is no reason that Lord Byron should employ them. Nothing can be more ridiculous, or more false in reason. ing, than to urge what is reprehensible in the past as an excuse for the present persevering in its practice. An Account of the Life, Lectures, and Writings of William Cullen, M.D., &c. By John Thomson, M.D., &c. Vol. I. 8vo. pp. 668. London, 1832. Cadell.

THE papers of the celebrated Dr. Cullen, after his decease, remained in the possession of his son, Lord Cullen, who, probably with the intention of himself doing justice to his father's memory, was unwilling, during his life-time, that they should be intrusted to any of his numerous acquaintance; but at the death of the latter, they were placed, by the surviving family, at the disposal of the present professor of pathology in the University of Edinburgh, who has discharged himself, in part, of his trust with that credit which might have been anticipated from his well-known, though longneglected, talents. It is gratifying, in these days of brief and superficial biographies, to peruse a work of so elaborate and finished a character; which fills up a gap in our scientific literature, and adds another career of discovery and improvement to the long list of those whose names belong to history, and reflect honour on the country in which they lived. Dr. Cullen's progress in life was slow, and it was a tedious time before he overcame the difficulties which were put in his way to preferment in the University of Edinburgh, so celebrated for its tenacity to old opinions and old teachers.

He was born at Hamilton in 1710, and the early part of his life was passed at Glasgow, at sea, in attendance upon the Duke of Hamilton, and at Hamilton itself, where he began to practise, a short time previous to his marriage, which took place in 1741. Here, however, he did not remain for more than seven years; the medical school of Glasgow presented too fair a field for his talents and industry; and, in 1746, he was already engaged in delivering a course of lectures on the theory and practice of physic in the university of that town. He instituted, at the same time, lectures on chemistry, in conjunction with Mr. Carrick. During this period he had the singular good fortune to guide the early studies of Dr. Hunter and Dr. Black, who continued, during a long series of years, on terms of intimacy and friendship with their preceptor. Dr. Cullen succeeded Dr. Plummer to the chair of chemistry in the University of Edinburgh, in 1756, chiefly through the instrumentality of the celebrated Lord Kames; but it was not till 1766 that he was admitted a professor of the institutes or theory of medicine. "Such were the difficulties," says his learned biographer, " to be overcome, and such the exertions required to procure, first a place in the University of Edinburgh, and afterwards the proper situation in it, for the man whose genius, talents, and industry, shed such a lustre over the institution, and contributed, in so remarkable a degree, to extend and to perpetuate the fame of its medical school!"

The comprehensive view which Dr. Thomson has taken of the history of medicine previous to the time when Dr. Cullen began to lecture on the institutes of that science, while it throws lustre on the labours of that great man, is, as a philosophical essay, highly creditable to the biographer. The animism of Stahl, who supposed all the animal functions and all actions. whether animal or intellectual, to be under the direct control of the rational soul, is dwelt upon at too great length, and has, in the metaphysical part of the discussion, entailed some unnecessary repetitions. Totally overthrown by the physicians, surgeons, and general practitioners, powerful mind of Haller, these doctrines did not in the nature of the diseases which these praccessary repetitions. Tetally overthrown by the require, that comparative anatomy, or the mo-dern discoveries in the physiology of the nervous system, should have existence, to be deprived of that credit which nothing but the great repu-tation of their author could have given them. Not so with regard to the doctrines of Hoffmann and Boerhaave, both of whom had perceived and stated the difference between mind and body; and the first, though led astray by the chemical and mechanical theories of Leibnitz and his school, yet preserved the doctrine of Aristotle, in teaching the existence of a rational, a sentient, and a vegetative soul. The schools of medicine founded by these great teachers have been very properly dilated upon; for the metaphysical pathology which serves them as a basis had hardly begun to be put to the test of observation when Dr. Cullen was called upon to bring his vigorous understanding to march in the steps of Haller and Whytt, and assist in reforming the sciences of medicine and physiology. We shall not follow the professor through his triumphant career, "armed (as a French writer has remarked) with a regular body of elementary medical doctrine, which was constantly improved in every successive public course"—the results have now long been before the world; and when we remember that the sciences of observation cannot proceed directly to perfection, we must, with the excep-tion of some physiological points, always contemplate with pride and admiration the vast details which he had accumulated in a long and laborious life devoted to the interests of science, and the philosophy and method with which he had brought these to bear upon a system which was destined, for a lengthened number of years, to stand unrivalled in any school of medicine.

The learned professor of pathology has made this work the vehicle for some detailed remarks on the present state of the medical profession, more particularly its division into two branches. Nothing was more natural than that reflections of this kind should force themselves upon a teacher of that branch of science; for once the great principle granted, that there is no morbid action without a corresponding pathological condition, and the theory of unknown agencies disappears before the anatomy of function, and the essentiality of fevers, the prevalence of humours, the existence of hereditary diseases, days of crisis, &c. are swept from the pages of modern science. It is only a few years since a professorship of pathology has been established in the northern university, and it is easy to foresee that this innovation will lead to many others; for a school so long celebrated cannot remain far behindhand in those opinions which are now placed in an impugnable situation. The separation between physic and surgery took place in the dark ages, when the former was entirely in the hands of the clergy, who made it the means of emolument by involving it in superstition, and shunning, as is even done to the present day, the naked evidences of pa-thology — by making surgery a distinct and lower branch of the healing art, and intrusting the care of the wounded and lame to barbers and ignorant pretenders.

"The most superficial acquaintance," says the doctor, "with the symptoms, progress, and termination of the various morbid, acute or chronic, febrile or inflammatory affections to which the human body is liable, must be sufficient to convince every unprejudiced in-quirer, that there is but a slight foundation, if indeed there be any, for the distinction between of treatment by which the diseases themselves may be cured or relieved. Experience has long shewn, that on the one hand the use of internal remedies is required in a large proportion of the diseases which are regarded as strictly surgical; and on the other, that there are few diseases which come under the care of the physician, in which morbid affections reouiring the manual aid or practical skill of the surgeon do not practically occur."

Again, a little farther on:

" Distinctions between the members of the medical profession have been recognised by the legislature, founded not on the different departments of practice to which they profess more particularly to direct their attention, but on the constitution of the different corporate bodies from which they derive their licenses to practise, and on the different titles which these bodies are pleased to bestow upon them. By means of such distinctions, the practitioners of the healing art in these kingdoms, instead of enjoying equal and reciprocal privileges, as members of one great community, are, as it were, divided into a number of petty companies, each possessing a monopoly in some particular branch of the trade, which, in too many instances, it watches with the utmost jealousy, and defends with the utmost keenness against the encroachments of its rivals."

And our last quotation:

"Of distinctions and privileges, such as those which have been mentioned, it is enough to ask, whether they really indicate, even in the remotest degree, the respective qualifications of those who possess them, for exercising with security and advantage to the public the responsible duties of their profession? Or whether, supposing they did indicate such differences in the qualifications of their possessors, can any thing be conceived more absurd than for a nation to fix a different standard of acquirements for its military, for its provincial, and for its metropolitan physicians?

With these observations, then, upon a most interesting subject, to which we cannot do justice on the present occasion, we conclude our notice of the first part of a work of very great merit, and deserving the attention of all classes of readers.

Tales and Novels of Maria Edgeworth, Vol. II. Moral Tales, Vol. I. London, 1832. Baldwin and Co.

How many of the volumes with which we delighted our youth, do we now open with astonishment, ay and disdain of our former enjoyment, marvelling how we could ever find delight therein! Not so with those of Maria Edgeworth; we read them again with renewed pleasure, and only do more entire justice to their many and varied merits. Some of the follies against which her shafts were directed are now obsolete, and some sketches of manners and fashion are now no more; but this makes us see more forcibly the life that truth and sense can impart to satire. No one ever managed circumstances, and their consequences, better than Miss Edgeworth; no one ever developed a moral theory more completely; and in her hands utility becomes as amiable as it is expedient: the right course, and the advantages of that right course, are placed in the most striking point of view; and the effects of energy and integrity become as apparent in the fiction as they are in real life. We know no more valuable present to a young person than the works of Maria Edgeworth. The present titioners are required to treat, or in the mode and a vignette by Englehart, both very pretty; and most cordially do we recommend this neat and excellent publication to the favour of our readers.

> Richard of York; or, the White Rose of England. 3 vols. Lond. 1832. Fisher and Co. THERE is considerable cleverness in this work; but it wants both the originality and the interest which give life to these creations. The subject is hackneyed; and Mrs. Shelley's failure in Perkin Warbeck might well have deterred another adventurer. The language is easy, and the sentiments unexceptionable; but the people want life, and the scenes effect. The character of the Franciscan is an exaggeration. A man does not set all his wits to work to destroy a whole family, merely because their mother, who was not even aware of his love, has wedded another. There is a deceitful easiness about writing in the present day: command of language is given by well-known rules, an idea is taken from one, a hint from another, a character from a third, and an image from a fourth. The materials all seem ready; but, alas! there is no master-hand to bind them together; and the fabric soon sinks into the sands of oblivion,—as all will that are not built on the firm rock of genuine talent.

Roscoe's Novelist's Library, Vol. XII. Sterne, Vol. II. Cochrane.

THE conclusion of Tristram Shandy and the Sentimental Journey, with four of George Cruikshank's most humorous designs, recommend this volume as fully worthy of the succession and success of its predecessors. Slop and Susannah in battle is quite a hit; and the amoking batteries, with Uncle Toby and Trim, full of character. There are no illustrations of the Sentimental Journey: in Cruikshank's hands what might there not be?

Family Classical Library, No. XXX. Valpy. A RICH and various little volume, with Hesiod from Elton, Bion and Moschus, Sappho and Museus, by F. Fawkes, and Lycophron, by Lord Royston. It is a pretty library in itself.

Juvenile Sunday Library, Vol. I. Lives of the Apostles and early Martyrs of the Church. By the Author of "the Trial of Skill." Pp. 207. Hatchard and Son.

THE first specimen of a well-devised and wellperformed design. It does great credit to the writer, and will do great good to the reader. Let our young friends make it a Sunday book for their enjoyment.

Family Feuds; or, Fragments of a Tale of many Centuries. 8vo. pp. 57. London, Ridgway.

A CLEVER jeu d'esprit, and, what is more when we consider its subject, a temperate and, (if the salutary counsels couched under its pleasantry are attended to as they deserve) likely to be a very useful one. It personifies the Bull and Patrickson families, and casts a just, though amusing retrospect, over the past history of England and Ireland, as well as their present position; recommending conciliation instead of agitation, and rational agreement instead of ill-will and fury. We heartily give it our best report, and trust it may produce good effects where graver arguments have failed. There is both wit and humour in the execution; and it makes us smile where it we quote a whimsical passage from the preface, as an example of the writer's sportive talent.

"But for the advice of a friend, in whose judgment and taste I have great reliance, the reader would have found, among other novelties in this little volume, the mottoes placed at the end instead of the beginning of the chapters, for I do not yet quite understand why they are ever placed otherwise. Mottoes have been compared to sign-posts, held out to tempt the entrance of the traveller, by explaining what is to be found within; but I never heard of any person going into an inn with the expectation of encountering a red lion, or a blue boar, still less an angel or the Duke of Wellington, though they might not be surprised by being greeted by a Belle Sauvage. The motto should be appropriate to the subject you have read-till then it is like any other scrap of learning or of taste. In perusing Sir Walter Scott's novels, where the mottoes form such an interesting feature, I always return to enjoy them theroughly after I have finished the chapter."

Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia, Vol. XXII.
The History of Switzerland. London, Long. man and Co.

Or this new monthly arrival, we have but time to observe, that it is very complete in itself, and a very eligible part of the series which it belongs. A spirited vignette, by H. Corbould and E. Finden, represents the death of Gesler.

Descriptive Sketches of Tunbridge Wells, &c. By John Britton, F.S.A. 8vo. pp. 148. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

This volume is what we could have expected from Mr. Britton's pen, — miscellaneous, descriptive, neatly embellished, useful, and amusing. Tunbridge Wells, under the liberal enterprise of Mr. Ward, the owner of the Calverley estate, seconded by a similar spirit in Messrs. Bramah and Mr. Decimus Burton-the whole carried into effect with excellent tastehas entered upon a new and splendid era in the race of fashionable places of resort, where health is sought in salubrious springs, and re-tirement or society are at the option of the inhabitant. In former Gazettes we have noticed the immense improvements here carrying on. so immense as almost to deserve the name of national. Of these, in their more complete state, Mr. Britton gives a clear account, as he does of every thing around which can engage the attention-geology, antiquities, early history, topography, accommodations, neighbouring curiosities, and objects worthy of visits. In short, all matters that can make a guidebook pleasing are touched upon with the skill of an experienced hand, and hold out strong temptations to a trip to the Wells, over whose varieties they are so well contrived to lead us. We speak con amore, for Tunbridge Wells is a very favourite retirement of ours.

Two Lectures on the Circulation, Respiration, and Mode of Nutrition in Animals and Plants. By W. H. Robertson, M.D. 8vo. pp. 32. Chesterfield, 1832.

IT is only by such works as the above that we are now and then reminded of the effects of however slight a removal from the working community in science. These lectures were written for the members of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Chesterfield; and though an unpretending account of facts, accompanied by much moral reflection, they the works of Maria Edgeworth. The present makes us ponder on bygone follies and existing have nothing that can give them a claim to volume has a frontispiece engraved by C. Rolls, absurdities. Unconnected with the main subject more than local interest.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MAY 25 .- Mr. Brockedon gave an account of the Pering anchor, preceded by remarks upon the use and general form of the common anchor, which, he said, had scarcely varied during 2000 years, though in its structure some changes had taken place, chiefly from the increased magnitudes now required,-that its bulk, amounting even to five tons for a first-rate, rendered it an instrument of extremely difficult formation, from the thickness of those parts which, in welding, the force of the hammer seldom reached. The old mode of obtaining these large forged masses, was by forming faggots of iron bars, kept together by rings, which, at a welding heat, were cemented by tilt-hammers and other heavy percussive powers; but the force of the blow seldom effectively reached the inner bars. The consequence was, that the stretching of the outer bars exceeding that of the inner, the tenacity of the bars was unequal, and of the mass defective. This difficulty of welding a large mass was increased at the crown of the anchor, where the shank was joined to the arms, where it was thickest, and where the increased quantity put for security increased the difficulty of making it secure, and it was in this part that most of the old anchors broke.

Mr. Pering's first improvements were in the formation of the parts, by flat plates or bars of iron placed edgewise to the line of resistance. By this structure, it is not necessary to the strength of the anchor that the inner plates should be welded together; compared with an anchor fagotted in the usual way, and rendered completely solid by welding, it is very much stronger; as the flat plates, by succes-sive rolling, become fibrous, and acquire a greatly increased strength over a more crystallised iron. When these flat bars are firmly welded on the outside, the greatest strength is attained in the direction of each part, and every part of Mr. Pering's anchor is thus formed of layers of plates placed edgewise to the strain to which it is liable. This is accomplished at the crown, or joining of the shank to the arms, in an admirable manner: the plates at the lower end of the shank are split through their sides and turned, edgewise of the layers, on either side, so as to form the inner part of the arms. The outer is formed likewise of plates turned edgewise, and overlaying the inner part, thus continuing the fibrous course and strongest resistance of the iron through that part of the Pering anchor which had always been the weakest in the old one.

Some improvements in the form have also been made by Mr. Pering, by giving a curve to the arms from the fluke or palm, to the crown, which places the fulcrum nearer the resisting end of the lever, at the moment when its resistance is greatest in raising the anchor. It is difficult to convey an idea of these differences of structure and form without diagrams, which, though exhibited at the Royal Institution, cannot be given here. Many beautiful models in wood and iron were shewn by Mr. Brockedon, to illustrate the subject. Mr. Pering's first improvements, chiefly in structure, were patented in 1813, and are now entirely adopted in his Majesty's navy. Last year Mr. Pering pa-tented an improvement in the form of his anchor, in which, by increasing in the direc-tion of the strain, the depth of the metal, in an anchor of the same weight, he gained strength as he increased the line of resistance. Numerous trials against other anchors, of the same, or greater weight, proved the superior advantages of the Pering anchors.

Several trials have taken place at Plymouth, Portsmouth, and Chatham dock-yards, before Commissioners Fanshawe, Grey, Barlow, and Ross. The first, April 1813, of 24 cwt., it broke a 24 cwt., 29 cwt., and 35 cwt. At Chatham, 11th April, 1815, against one of 25 cwt.; Portsmouth, in May 1816, 48 cwt.; at Plymouth, 1831, of 53 cwt. In the last, the trial was made against a hollow-shanked anchor of Mr. Rogers: the two anchors opposed bore great power. The mode of trial was by placing the toes or points of the flukes against two large bollards firmly propped; two three-fold blocks were then lashed and reeved to the ring of each anchor by a nine-inch hawser; the standing parts of each were carried to two capstans, one on either side, which capstans were manned by one hundred men to each; on the two first heaves, the two toes or points of the arms of the hollow-shanked anchor gave way; on the two last heavings, the two arms of Mr. Rogers' anchor gave way in three places, the whole of which was sustained on one arm only of Mr. Pering's. The strain was so great that it brought the hundred men at each capstan to a stand-still, and may be calculated at about 350 tons dead weight.

The cost of anchors for the public service is immense: to supply the navy once only, requires a sum above 500,000/. Each first-rate anchor employs twenty men forty days; forty per cent of metal is wasted in the forging; and the cost of such an anchor is 400/.

It is difficult to imagine any improvement of which the anchor is now capable; the experience of ages has proved its general form to be the best. The enormous size of modern anchors presents great difficulties in their manufacture; for a first-rate, weighing 2,600 tons afloat, requires, not merely strength enough in the anchor to prevent its drifting, but to oppose the enormous momentum of such a bulk in motion, produced by the pressure of the wind on her rigging and the sea on her bows, and forming an aggregate of power to be restrained, which the mind can scarcely conceive. The old mode of structure, now so clearly proved to be defective, has been superseded; and the Pering anchor leaves nothing that is obviously imperfect to correct. Mr. Brockedon closed his remarks by observing, that when the immense importance of this instrument is considered. the improvements made by Mr. Pering in its form, and most especially in its structure, must be to him a source of honourable pride and gratification, and to his country (the greatest as a maritime power) one of the most important benefits ever conferred for the preservation of life and property. Many valuable additions have been made to our means of production in manufacture—new wants have been created by the facility of gratifying them, in calling to our aid new mechanical combinations from our powerful resources; but, however ingenious these may be, however they may raise the character of this country for skill, and increase the capital of our manufacturers, they sink in interest when compared with the anchor. The steam-engine, with all its wonders, was not essential to the maritime intercourse of nations; but the anchor is indispensable, and without it the steam-engine itself would be comparatively worthless, since the excess of its productions would soon destroy its utility if these were limited in their use to the country which produced them.

GEOLOGICAL AND ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETIES.

In noticing critically the proceedings of the Geological and Zoological Societies, we are happy at the opportunity which is presented to us of doing more justice to the labours of these active and learned institutions, than we can at all times effect in our hurried reports. This is a plan which we have some time had in contemplation, and which, we have every reason to hope, in its practical application, will prove equally advantageous to the societies and to the public. Mr. Hutton's paper on the stratiform basalt associated with the carboniferous formation of the north of England, was concluded on the 4th of January (see Lit. Gas. No. 781). The deductions obtained by the author have excited much controversy. Mr. Hutton conceives the great whin sill to be one of the oldest basaltic eruptions of that neighbourhood. Professor Sedgwick, from a careful examination of High Teasdale, considered the same great mass to have been injected laterally, and to be posterior to the deposition of the limestones and slates, the metalliferous deposits of those districts. In this opinion Professor Sedgwick is supported by Mr. Murchison, who, from an examination of the same vicinity, asserts the overlying depositary bed to be quite as much altered in structure as those immediately below the basalt. At the late meeting of naturalists held at York, Mr. Phillips argued the probability that the sill had been ejected by an active volcano during the deposition of the metalliferous limestone; and was thus anterior to some beds, and posterior to others. And in an investigation we made of the situation of the same wedge-shaped beds at Alston Moor and in western Northumberland, we certainly found the same phenomena to characterise the position of the whin as occur in similar deposits in Derbyshire, in Mid-Lothian, and in Dumfriesshire; though it is not at all improbable, as advanced by Mr. Murchison, that, in the elevated region of the first-mentioned district, currents of submarine volcanic matter found issue at intervals, which were continued even beyond the period when the oolitic deposits were accumulated over the Yorkshire moorlands.—The close relation traced by Mr. T. Bell between the fossil tortoise of Eningen, and the Chelydra serpentina, or snapping tortoise, of North America, is curious on several accounts; and reminds us that the tapir of the same country, discovered by Mr. Roulin, was found to have a much greater resemblance to the palæotherium than to any known species. Some authors have stated that the mastodon probably still exists in the higher valleys of the Cordilleras....The next memoir in importance, and the only one we shall notice, is that of Professor Sedgwick, who has resumed his laborious task of explaining the varied and complicated relations of the oldest secondary and transition rocks of the north of England. The further conclusions to which this able geologist has arrived, are, that in Cumberland, Durham, Yorkshire, and Shropshire, there is the same succession of deposits overlying the carboniferous order; that the lower red sandstone represents the lowest division of the red sandstone series; that the magnesian conglomerates are on the higher parallel of the formation of magnesian limestone; and that the succession of deposits overlying the south-western coal-fields is imperfect, inasmuch as the lowest division of the new red sandstone series is entirely wanting.

Though Mr. Murchison's annual address is not distinguished by the same comprehensive grasp of intellect as the similar report of Professor Sedgwick, yet it is characterised by sound judgment and an intimate acquaintance with practical details. The attempt to anathematise the miserable production of Dr. Macculloch is a failure. But we were most amused with some peculiarities in style; as, " we may say that fossil botany is at length taking root among us;" and, "the venerable Count Montlosier, being desirous of proving that the fire of his youth, during which he wrote on old volcanoes, still burns within him, has sent a lively account of Vesuvius." It affords us pleasure to hear that the proceeds of the Wollaston fund have been adjudged to Mr. Lonsdale, to enable him, during the ensuing summer, to continue his researches on the colitic formations in the north of England; and we are still more happy to find, in the report of the council, the most irrefragable proof of the flourishing and prosperous condition of the Society.

The proceedings of the committee of science and correspondence of the Zoological Society bear testimony that all is not mere ornament in that institution; and that there are, among its members, some who take a pride in advancing the real interests of science, as well by slow investigation and observation as by the more alluring diffusion of superficial or popular information. The most important additions to science have been made by Mr. H. Cuming, during a voyage undertaken in 1827, 28, 29, and 30, for the purpose of obtaining subjects in natural history on the western coast of South America, its adjacent islands, and many of those which form the archipelago of the South Pacific Ocean. Among the mammalia, Mr. Bennett pointed out as new, an otter, to be called Lutra Chilensis. It does not differ much in appearance from the European otter. Its fur is composed of woolly and silky hairs; its colour glossy brown, paler on the belly, darker towards the rump and tail. Its length 2 feet 4 inches. Also a mouse, (Mus longi-caudatus), whose tail is nearly double the length of its body. This pretty animal is covered with a fur of a deep ashy-grey at the base, and fawn-coloured or pale rufous at the tips. Its moustaches are silvery-tipped. And another beautiful little animal of the rat tribe, with tufted tail, formed the basis of a new genus Octodon (O. Cumingii.) They are the food of the horned owl of Valparaiso. Mr. Vigors described several birds, from the same collection, as new; and Mr. Bennett a new Syngnathus (S. fucicala), nearly allied to the S. acus of Linneus. The collection is extremely rich in crustacea, mollusca, and other invertebrate animals inhabiting the sea; which will be laid before the Society as the descriptions are completed. Four new species of humaming. birds have been described, from the collection of Mr. J. Gould, as inhabitants of Popayan. The Moormi cat, a new species, of a rich brown red, or bay colour, was described, from the collection of Mr. Hodgson, as inhabiting Nepal; also a new species of antelope, (A. bubalina,) from the same collection. A Lemu-ridous animal, from Madagascar, has been placed by Mr. Bennett in a new group, under the name of Propitheous (P. diadema); and Mr. Gray described a new animal, of the rat tribe, from New Holland, as the Pseudomys Australis. Mr. Cunningham also brought from the same country two undescribed reptiles, of one of which Mr. Gray forms a new genus in the family of Geckos, under the name of Diplodactylus vittatus; the other is a species of Tiliqua (T. Cunninghami).

These are the principal additions made to science since the commencement of the year. Many of the animals which have died at the gardens have been dissected; and the details, n most cases, reflect much credit upon Mr. Owen as an anatomist; though we are at a loss to discover why the serms adopted by G. St. Hilaire, to express the variety of conformation which is met with in the hyoid bone, has not been used in the comparison instituted between that organ in the jaguar and in the ocelot, when it would certainly have rendered the author's views so much clearer. Mr. W. Daniell, R.A., has announced his intention to publish twenty engravings of antelopes, from drawings made by his brother from living animals, in his different journeys in Africa. The antelope of the desert has been so long a symbol of beauty, that we have every reason to hope this undertaking will meet with extenaive patronage.

BOYAL COLLEGE OF PHYSICIAMS.

SIR H. HALFORD in the chair. The registrar read a communication from the physician to the embassy at Constantinople, dated March 1832, on cholera, and mode of treatment, - particularly in reference to the use of the lancet. The author properly enough considers the disease as one of congestion: for restoring the lost balance of the circulation, he recommends bleeding and dry friction. When the disorder was ravaging Constantinople last year, so beneficial were these means, that vast numbers of persons in the earlier stages of attack were seen crowding the surgeons' and barbers' shops, and after submitting to the operation of blood-letting, going away as if nothing had happened. When the blood has assumed that tar-like appearance which characterises putrid blood, friction with towels dipped in spirits was found to be an excellent restorative; internally brandy and laudanum were admi-nistered, and in the convalencent state mild mucilaginous liquors. The author observes. that immunity from attack depends considerably on the state of the mind. The inhabitants of Pera, he says, suffered dreadfully, consequent on the alarm occasioned by the great fire which happened there last August .- A portion of a paper on perspiration was then read; it was written by the elder Dr. Heberden nearly a century ago. The son, in a note to Sir Henry Halford, draws attention to the advances which science has made since that period, and therefore apologises for bringing forward a communication of so eld a date.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENA FOR JUNE. 20d 23h 29m - the Sun enters Cancer. 50d 21h - the Earth at its greatest distance from the

Lunar Phases and Conjunctions.

		н.
First Quarter in Leo ······	5	8	29
O Full Moon in Ophluchus	12	19	44
C Last Quarter in Pisces	20	23	14
New Moon in Gemini	27	18	56
		_

The Moon will be in conjunction with

•	D.	Ħ.	Ħ.
Saturn in Leo		16	27
Uranus in Capricornus	18	1	Ò
Jupiter in Pisces	20	18	20
Mars in Pisces	21	23	40
Venus in Taurus	97	5	4
Mercury in Taurus		7	42

month as a morning star. 5d - greatest south we noticed in our 792d Number. It is a work latitude. 24d—ascending node. 25d 18h—in conjunction with Venus 2 difference in declination 21'. 29d-in perihelion.

7d—Venus in conjunction with 2 " Tauri 1 difference of latitude 2'. 274-ascending node. 284 - in conjunction with H Geminorum: difference of latitude 13'.

74-Mars attains his greatest south latitude. 304_perihelion.

The Asteroids. - 14 - Vesta 23° south of 1 Leonis. 44—Juno 40' north of ¿ Leonis. 144 — Pallas a degree north of 28 Piscium. 94— Ceres in conjunction with a Piscium.

18d 2h 15m Jupiter in quadrature.

Eclipses of Jupiter's Satellites.

First Satellite, immersion - 13 14 1
Third Satellite - 19 14 30

94...Major axis of Saturn's ring 49".28: minor axis 3''-93.

1d ... Uranus west of 42, 44, and 45 Capricorni.

Destind.

J. T. BARKER.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

DAVIES GILBERT, Esq. in the chair.-Part of a communication on certain experiments with the pendulum, by F. Baily, Esq. was read; the title of the paper was indistinctly heard The scientific author, to ensure greater accuracy, and for the sake of convenience, had forty-one pendulums swung in his own house, where he could pursue his experiments without interruption. In the outset of his paper, he draws the attention of the Society to the everoccurring anomalies in the oscillations of pendulums,—no two having yet been found in exact accordance,—which hitherto have baffled the care of the most ingenious. To remedy these discrepancies as much as possible, various experiments in air and in vacuo were tried. In this portion of the paper the results are not given, it being taken up chiefly with descriptions of the pendulums employed by Mr. Baily. On the table was placed Professor Ritchie's apparatus, by which the spark from a common horse-shoe magnet is made to detonate the oxygen and hydrogen gases. The chairman gave notice of the ballot for Lord Spencer Churchill, Lieut. Stratford, R.N., and several others; and as foreign members, Baron Damoisseau, &c.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

MAY 31. Mr. Gurney in the chair .- Mr. Knight exhibited drawings by Mr. Brooke of Roman pottery, and other remains of antiquity, found in the bed of the Thames in preparing for the foundations of New London Bridge. A paper from Mr. Logan was read, accompanied by two drawings descriptive of an ancient fort in Scotland. Mr. Gage communicated an account of the present state of St. Alban's abbey church; and Mr. Ellis copies of three documents in the British Museum, addressed to Queen Elizabeth in the year 1582 - one from the Stationers' Company, praying for support in their exclusive rights; the others on the opposite side of the question, complaining of the monopolies of the stationers and booksellers.

PINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

[Fourth Notice.]

No. 452. Archimedes. H. Wyatt. - The same head, upon a larger scale, as that now Mercury is visible in the early part of the exhibiting at the Suffolk Street Gallery, which of a very superior class, and combines some of the best qualities of the Italian and Flemish schools.

No. 445. One Girl listening to another who plays on a Guitar. J. Z. Bell.composition, to which a little more warmth and brilliancy of colour would be beneficial.

No. 435. The Revels of Bacchus and Ariadne; a finished Sketch for a more extensive Composition. J. M. Leigh .- If somewhat hard, yet manifesting powerful indications of high talent. Of this the female on the left is a striking proof.

No. 439. A Decoy. J. Inskipp.—Is this sporting, or peaching? Is it fair game, or a fair subject for the cognizance of the gamelaws? In either case, whoever may become the possessor of this clever picture will have no reason to complain of being "decoyed."

No. 427. Othello, Act. 5, Scene ii. E. D. No. 427. Otheuo, Act. o, book ... Leahy...The character of the Moor, to use a leahy...The picture is well sustained. The picture is well sustained. theatrical phrase, is well sustained. The picture throughout is well coloured; but, with reference to the figure of Desdemona, and to the tout ensemble as a composition, we do not think it equal to some of Mr. Leahy's former

No. 424, Scene on the River Itchin, F. W. Watts; No. 426, Some in Worcestershire, T. Creswick; No. 434, Regnard's Cave, Dove Dale, Derbyshire, F. C. Lewis; and No. 446, Coast Scene, Misty Morning, J. Tennant; are among the best landscapes in this room.

Before we leave this floor, we must briefly notice the portraits. Although that department of the fine arts has not been entirely "shorn of its beams" by the death of Sir Thomas Law-rence and Mr. Jackson, it has certainly suffered a temporary eclipse. Many admirable portraits adorn the walls of Somerset House in the present year; but it cannot be denied that the taste and elegance of Sir Thomas, and Mr. Jackson's vigorous and faithful hues, are sadly missed.

No. 71. Portrait of his Majesty King William IV. D. Wilkie, R.A.; No. 197. His Majesty. Sir W. Beechey, R.A.—The position of these royal whole lengths necessarily induces a comparison between them:

" Which king, Besonian? speak, or die!" Opinion will in this, as in most cases, vary. Each has its merits; and they present different expressions. Mr. Wilkie's has more of energy in countenance and bearing, and has more of an historical cast, than Sir William's. The latter possesses domestic character, and conveys a look of care and anxiety, which, if it did not formerly belong to his Majesty, may well have been produced by the events that have occurred since his accession.

No. 1. Cheerfulness: Portrait of a Lady. J. Partridge. — If of Mr. Turner's "Jessica," in the Exhibition of 1830, it was justly said by a contemporary, that it smacked of the mustardpot, we cannot help thinking that this sparkling production has had a sprinkling from the creamjug. It is, nevertheless, a very clever effect of reflected light and transparency of colour.

No. 15. Portrait of General Lord Hill, Com-mander-in-Chief. H. W. Pickersgill, R.A.— In this masculine performance, the artist maintains his ground in the field of art with the vigour with which his subject would maintain his ground in the field of battle, were his services again required there. The attitude is easy and unaffected; and although the sword is in the left hand, we have no doubt that it is in the right, and that the action is one of etiquette or physical necessity.

No. 122. Portrait of Eyre Coote, Esq. M.P.; No. 158. Portrait of J. B. Morritt, Esq. in the costume of the Archmaster of the Society of Dilettenti, and pointed by their desire. Sir R.A. J. Linnell.—An excell M. A. Shea, P.R.A.—These pertents, disth... and painted with great spirit.

-A tasteful | guished as the originals are in rank and character, stand equally high as works of art, and are among the best samples of the president's

> No. 67. Portrait of the Rev. Dr. Buckland, Professor of Geology, Oxford; No. 202. Portrait of the Rev. A. Sedgwick, Woodwardian Professor of Geology, Cambridge; No. 342. Portrait of Miss Pearson. T. Phillips, R.A. -If to either of the first two of these fine pictures we should give a preference, we might bring upon ourselves the anger of the rival university. We will content ourselves, therefore, with saying, that they are among the artist's best productions. With respect to the last-mentioned work, we cannot but express our surprise and regret that a gentleman of Mr. Phillips's high character should condescend to send to the Exhibition an original portrait by Vandyke, with his name attached to it! Seriously, it is worthy of the pencil of that great master.

No. 166. Portrait of Mrs. Opie. H. P. Briggs, R.A. elect.—Celebrated for her literary talents, and the widow of an eminent painter, whose taste she is said to have greatly improved, and whose susterity she is said to have much softened, Mrs. Opie well deserves a place among the distinguished public characters of this country. We are glad that it has fallen to the lot of so able an artist as Mr. Briggs to give a resemblance of her; although we must say, that in the expression there is something which appears like "calling up a look."

No. 128. Portrait of Lady Mary Fox. G. S.

Newton, R.A.—The only production of Mr. Newton's pencil in the present exhibition; a circumstance which its excellent qualities, both of character and of execution, compel us to ament.

No. 93. Pertrait of Miss Carlisle. H. Howard, R.A.—Beautiful; yet Mr. Howard ought to remember, that the incessant repetition of the same style cannot fail to become mono-

No. 92. Portrait of Mr. Harley, of the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane; No. 44, Portrait of Henry Robinson, Esq.; No. 238, Portrait of Mrs. Armine Herring. G. Clint, A.—Admirable specimens of Mr. Clint's talents: placing him in the foremost rank of our portrait painters.

No. 409. A Group: Portraits of the Earl of Munster, Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, Lord Augustus Fitzclarence, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Lady Sophia Sydney, Lady Mary Fox, Lady Errol, Lady Kennedy Erskins, and Lady Faulkland. J. Hayter.—We have already adverted to the difficulty of such a pictorial arrangement as the present. Whatever may be thought of this composition in that respect, the sentiment of the picture is of an amiable character; the eyes of most of those who form the group being fixed with affectionate regard on the bust of their sovereign and father.

No. 415. Portrait of Lord Warren de Tabley. Mrs. Carpenter.-This admirable portrait appears to us to unite the qualities of the two amented artists, Lawrence and Jackson, to whom we lately adverted. When, in conjunction with it, we look at No. 280, Portrait of an Officer in the 2d Life Guards, and No. 293, Portrait of Stephens Lyne Stephens, Esq., Mrs. J. Robertson; we really feel doubtful whether the palm of superiority in portrait-painting ought not at the present moment to be worn by the ladies.

No. 362. Portrait of A. W. Callott, Esq. R.A. J. Linnell.—An excellent resemblance,

No. 87. Portrait of Viscountess Hood; No. 216, Portrait of Viscountess Hood. Sir W. Beechey, R.A.—Equal in colouring and execution to this veteran artist's more vouthful works.

No. 19. Portraits of the Children of a Gentleman amusing themselves in a garden. R. R. Reinagle, R.A.—They could scarcely have been better employed, or better depicted.

There are a number of other clever portraits by G. Beechey, R. T. Bone, Geddes, Harrison, Joseph, Lane, Leahy, Phillips, Pickersgill, Renton, Rothwell, Shee, &c.

[To be continued.]

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Penny-Wedding. Painted by D. Wilkie; engraved by James Stewart. Moon, Boys, and Graves.

WE have here a large, bold, and fine engraving of one of Wilkie's most characteristic pictures. The Penny-Wedding was always popular in real life, and must be so when so admirably represented by art. The merry dancers, the lookers-on, the fiddlers, the old folks chatting their remarks, the children or peeping or enjoying the scene more broadly, the little accidents and events affecting various parties, the eating, the drinking, and all the accessories, are true to actual life: we have seen the thing, and can swear to every person and circumstance, to every fling and motion, to every look and gesture, to every stitch of clothes, and every trait of countenance. So much as refers to our incomparable Wilkie: with regard to Mr. Stewart, his performance requires a few words more. He has accurately and ably placed a transcript of the original before us, and in a high style of art. The general effect is perfectly satisfactory, and there are parts (nearly every part) of admirable workmanship. Yet there is something in his method which does not entirely his our fancy; and which gives many of the faces, even in the foreground, a sort of scambled look, instead of the finish we could wish. Artists may perhaps dwell on this as a beauty; seeing that the general effect, as we have noticed, is fully preserved, and that the manner of the painter may, in several instances, be faithfully imitated; but it does appear to us that, from the thickness of the lines, an indistinctness of feature results, which had better have been avoided.

The Hon. Mrs. Frederick Irby. Engraved by J. Cochran, from a Painting by J. P. Davis. Bull.

THE 90th of the Series of the Female Nobility, published in La Belle Assemblés of the present month. It is full of animated and pleasing feminine expression.

Characteristic Sketches of Animals, drawn from the Life and engraved by Thomas Landseer: with Descriptive Notices by John Barrow, Esq. Part VIII. Moon, Boys, and Graves.

THE Part before us closes this entertaining and valuable publication; and closes it with unebated spirit. That " rare union of a mastery of the pencil and of the burin, which has enabled Mr. Thomas Landseer to infuse into these etchings so much vigour, power, and fidelity," was never more finely exemplified than in his plates of "The Puma," "The Striped Hyena," "The Hippopotamus," and "The Camel;" with their accompanying and appropriate vignettes; and in the Descriptive and Illustrative Notices Mr. Barrow has, as in former instances, completely succeeded in his endeavour "to combine, with a popular method of stating facts and discussing properties, an adherence to scientific classification, as well as to natural arrangement." The work is one that must be highly interesting to every lover of natural history, and that ought especially to be in the library of every member of the Zoological Society.

Trial by Battle. By H. Andrew. Lithography. London, F. Kennedy.

A VERY cleverly conceived and executed design from the well-known description of the fight between Harry Gow and Bonthron, in the Fair Maid of Perth. It reflects credit on Mr. Andrew's graphic invention.

ARTISTS' BENEVOLENT FUND.

This excellent charity held its seventeenth anniversary on Saturday last, when we were sorry to hear an apology for his H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, (who was to have filled the chair), on the score of ill health: his office, however, found a very able substitute in the President of the Royal Academy, who went through the duties of the day with great judgment and éclat. The various loyal, benevolent, and complimentary toasts, were appositely and eloquently introduced; the utmost harmony prevailed; and the subscription reached to between five and six hundred pounds!

THE GARRICK CLUB PAPERS, NO. XV. Garrick Club Dinner to Mr. Young.

This most agreeable of clubs gave a dinner on Thursday to Mr. Young, on his retirement from the stage. The Marquess of Clauricarde took the chair, and was supported by about sixty members, lovers of the drama, and admirers of their honoured guest. Among the company were Lords Castlereagh, Kinnaird, W. Lennox, Edward Thynne, Henry Fitzroy, and the Hon. Mr. Stanley; Messrs. Macready, C. Kemble, Farley, Charles Taylor, Sheridan Knowles, Abbott, Harley, Duruset, C. Mathews, &c. &c. Mr. Young's health, which was introduced by the noble chairman in an appropriate and pointed speech, was received with enthusiasm; and that distinguished actor returned thanks with feeling and eloquence. The memories of Garrick, of Shakespeare, and of John Philip Kemble, were afterwards given. Charles Taylor sang many humorous songs, and was rewarded with a bumper and three tirnes three. Harley, Duruset, and Charles Mathews, also shewed by their exertions that they were determined not only to enjoy themselves, but also to impart merriment to others. Lord Kinnaird, on the retirement of the Marque as of Clan-ricarde, took the chair, and the meeting did not separate till a late hour - too late for us to do more than give it this brief notice.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

METALLIC PRWS.

Our notice of a newly invented pen in a recent Number has procured us the favour of a communication from Mr. Perry, not only the patentee, but the "Double Patentee" of the Perryian pens; a favour which demands our attention in return. Comparisons, it is well known, are odious; and there never was, nor ever shall be in our day, any thing odious in the Literary Gazette. Therefore, having said our say respecting the oblique pens, our course is straight forward touching these, not birds of a feather, which go direct to a point without angle or inclination. We have tried them, and we have tried their powder, or limpidum, for liquefying the ink; and being, as the phrase goes, put upon our metal, our writing was clear and unambiguous, as the reader may readily perceive. But we confess we cannot go all the length of Mr. Perry's printed prospectus and description: we are so stupid, that we doubt if a treble patent could open our talent to this extent. It may be expedient to explain—and we do so, after using every one of the nine pens in the packet, upon our conscience and veracity. Our worthy correspondent, the inventor of these articles, gives us a statement of the "features which distinguish all sorts of Perryian pens from those of the goose-quill, and from all other kinds of pens whatever." He assures us, inter alia, that "they write better than any other pens whatever," and "every page written with them is as uniform in its appearance as a printed page." This looks very much as if these pens directed the hands, and not hands these pens! But we are all aware of the power of the pen; and in fact, according to the same authority, "the excellence of these pens speedily establishes elegance in the current hand of every person who habi-tuates himself to their use," which entirely establishes the truth of the assertion.

The next "feature," we own, startles us a trifle,....

"Unlike all other pens, they (the Perrylan) do not impede but assist the progress of thought!"

What would the author of "Thinks I to Myself" have written had he employed these wonderful coadjutors? Would he have stopped short of a thousand editions? We have a great mind to make a book, entitled "Our Thoughts; assisted by A Pen." Or, perhaps, considering the nature of the aid, we had better publish in the shape of a Pen-ny newspaper or magazine, and rival our late friend Perry Morning Chronicle with a piece of Perrylan mechanism, at the small cost of a halfpenny! Indeed, we are inclined to be of opinion that it is the qualities of these pens that have recently led to the produce of so many cheap periodicals, which uninformed persons have erroneously ascribed to scissors and paste. The ideas they contain are so evidently not from the human brain, that it is easy to believe they proceed entirely from pens which have a sort of knack of thinking for themselves. As we talk of pen and ink sketches, so may we talk of pen and ink thoughts ; ... and this very original notion is itself a proof that our pen, not we, is the author of the present paper.

But why dwell on these extraordinary pretensions—it is egotistical—suffice it to conclude, in Perryian quotation, "these pens save a third of the paper;" "these pens save a third of the time of the writer;" "the most illegible hand written with these pens is much more easy to read than when written with any other kind;" these pens are "recently infinitely improved." Vide, as the prospectus has it, the "daily, weekly, and periodical press of the entire empire, with scarcely a single exception."

SIGHTS OF LONDON.

COSMORAMA; WORKS OF ART, &c.

ONE roof in Regent Street attracts the country cousins in London, and the natives themselves, just now with a variety of attractions, and a lounge can hardly be more amusingly bestowed than upon the spectacles it presents. — The Cosmorama has a new set of seven views, all of them of considerable beauty and interest. Among these, Interlacken is a fine and clear landscape, giving a perfect idea of Swiss scenery; the point whence Versailles palace and gardens are taken is not particularly judicious, but the details are accurate. Constantinople on fire introduces to the spectator a novelty in the actual representation of the flames flashing up and subsiding at intervals, so as to produce extraordinary effects upon the surrounding buildings and country. This is a great treat for the juveniles; but the best of all these pieces is, that they convey to the mind correct notions of different people, and the aspect of the lands in which they live.

Collection of Works of Art. — This is a numerous, rich, and very superior collection of productions in various classes of art; principally fine Italian carvings in ivory, such as chalices, cups, &c. by Cellini and others; enamels, French silver chasings of the time of Louis XIV., and also some of German workmanship; wood carvings by Albert Durer, and, in short, a multitude of articles of choice virte; such as we have never before seen in the possession of any private individual. We shall probably enter more into the merits of the most prominent objects here offered to public inspection; but in the meanwhile must notice a superb cup, and Susannah and the Elders, by Cellini; a wreath of Cupids on the former is surpassingly free and bold; and the expression and execution of the latter beyond belief, until seen, in this material. A wood (pear-tree) carving of birds is so charmingly done, that every feather is nature, and the creatures alive and in action. A remarkable crucifix, where the means of the miracle of dropping blood is exhibited; - but there are several hundred subjects, which would require a long time to examine, and a long paper to describe. Therefore we shall only add, "Go to this collection."

In a third apartment our old friends the Fleas are as laborious and lively as ever, manning their navy, horsing their carriages, fighting like troopers, and performing all those exploits which belong to the march of intellect and improvement in these well-educated animals. The whole family appear to be in good health, and unaffected by their daily exertions to entertain the curious visitor.

MR. BURFORD, indefatigable in providing novelty as well as interest in these attractive exhibitions, has this week opened a panoramic view of the city of Milan. It is one of those upon a smaller scale than some others to which we have of late been accustomed, and is sketched in an extremely clever manner, so as to afford a very accurate idea of the architecture, &c. of this celebrated place. The surrounding country and the mountains have a fine effect; though in parts, we think, the painting approaches rather too closely to the eye.

to read than when written with any other kind;" these pens are "recently infinitely im- Among the other sights of the day, we have inspected this model in Leicester Square, which is certainly well worth seeing by those who take a concern in theatrical building and machinery. The first gallery of this, said to be the largest theatre in Europe, is between the pit and dress circle: there are some excellent contrivances about the boxes, which might be copied with advantage: the stage is one movable combination of traps and slides, and the depth below capable of working any apparatus. Altogether, the model gives a curious idea of stage management, as well as of the general appearance of the house.

MUSIC.

MR. BOCHSA'S CONCERT.

On Wednesday in last week Mr. Bochsa's concert assembled a host of professional talent and a crowded auditory at the King's Concert Rooms. The entertainments were of the highest order; and to particularise the various pieces which were listened to with delight, would be simply to reprint the whole bill of fare. Paisiello's "Ah! maiden fair," a duet, by Mrs. Bishop and Braham, was charmingly executed. A grand scena from Le Concert à la Cour (new to us), by Cinti, was most pleasing; and the same accomplished songstress was more than most in "Sull' aris," with the no less accomplished Meric. Native talent fol-lowed, and finely competed with this beautiful duet; for Phillips sang a new air, "The best of all good company," in a spirited style, and accompanied (as its title deserved) in an admi-rable manner. "Gentle airs," by Braham, with Lindley on the violoncello, was another striking treat; and also Guglielmi's "Ah compir," by Mrs. Bishop, with Mori's violin obligato, and a German scena from the Freischütz, by Meric. We shall only add, that Tosi, in "Come innocente," displayed fine taste and feeling; and that Bochsa himself, on the harp, by his masterly touch and brilliant effects, made the whole concert go off in a style to be enjoyed, but not to be reported.

DRAMA.

KING'S THEATRE.

On Saturday we had La Cenerentola, and with it another proof of the good faith and strenuous exertion of Mr. Mason in redeeming his opening pledges to the public. The upper parts of the opera were delightfully cast. M. Tamburini made his début in Dandini, and was eminently successful. His voice is a rich baritone, extending nearly, if not quite, two octaves. He walks the stage capitally, and otherwise showed himself to be a very good actor; though we have understood that the serious is more his forte. Altogether, he is a welcome addition to a corps which had already combined a greater variety of talent than has often been seen in this theatre. But we had also our old and sweet favourite, Donzelli, whom even a severe cold on this occasion could not prevent from charming our ear in the amorous prince. Then Cinti, a pretty Cinderella, warbling like a nightingale throughout the night; her last aria was exquisite. In the Stators, Castelli had not sufficient power for her task; and the other amused us more by signs of admiration with her hands when the principal singers elicited applause, than by notes of her own worthy of any admiration whatever. A crowded and very aristocratic house, from upper box to pit and stall, we rejoice to say, rewarded the manager for his liberal effort to please.

DRITEV LAND.

This theatre closed its lamentable season last Friday with the benefit of Mr. Bucke, whose obliging qualities and activity well entitled him to the test of popularity—a bumper. The loss is estimated at more than 12,000l. We scarcely remember such a succession of failures as the bills of this theatre for the past season furnish us with a list of. The Olympic triumphed over this unfortunate establishment in the rival versions of Dominique and the Philtre; the Adelphi out-deviled its Demon; the Easterpiece at Covent Garden is running at the moment we write; and the Hunchback, which the Drury Lane managers were weak enough to slight, has positively closed their doors a month before the usual period. The spectacle of the Lions of Mysore was a costly failure, the opera of the Alchymist a beggarly one; the Self-Tormentor, and Lords and Commons, were still-born; My own Lover lan-guished for seven nights, and the Tyrolese Peasant five; the Compact was suddenly put out of the bill on the fifth night, to make room for the Merchant of London, which lived nine: out of fourteen productions, independent of the pantomime, but two have survived-the Bride of Ludgate and the Rent-Day; and the latter is the only one that has brought a shilling to the treasury. Yet the bills have been alternately black and scarlet with the exertions of puffery: all the stale, ungrammatical commonplaces of theatrical parlance have been pressed into the printer's service, and "fashionable, crowded, and overflowing houses" have nightly appeared in the daily advertisements only! Cui bono? we put the question to the puffers themselves—Have they benefited by it one farthing? To cry "stale fish" would be an act of folly no one expects them to commit; but surely to advertise that it is, beyond all comparison, the best and freshest that ever came out of the sea, is a gross and inexcusable fraud upon the public, which cannot be commented upon or punished too severely. In these days of reform, let us hope that they will reform this altogether: let them try to deserve, if they cannot command success, and let all puffs, as well as orders, be in future suspended, "those of the public press (if they please) excepted." We regret to perceive, by the last speech and confession of Afr. Wallack, that he does not intend to return next season: his loss will be severely felt. Liston and Dowton left Drury last season, Madame Vestris and Jones the season before; now Wallack is gone. No wonder the drama declines, when its best supporters one by one drop away. The list of the pieces produced is as follows :---

Oct. 8. Dominique, Drama, 9 acts: Kenney and Poole. Oct. 17. Hyder Ali, or the Lions of Mysore, Spectacle:

Nov. 3. The Love-Charm, Opera, 2 acts: Planché.
Dec. 8. The Bride of Ludgate, Drama, 2 acts: Jerrold.
Dec. 20. Lords and Commons, Comedy, 5 acts: Mrs.
Sors.

Dec. 26. Harlequin and Little Thumb, Christmas Panomime. Jan. 11. My own Lover, Musical Drama, 3 acts: Rodrell.

well.

Jan. 25. The Rent-Day, Drama, 2 acts: Jerrold.

Feb. 16. The Self-Tormentor, Farce, 2 acts: Kenney.

Feb. 20. The Demon, Opera, 3 acts: Beazely and

F. Mills.

March 90. The Alcyhmist, Opera, 3 acts: Baily and Bail.
April 5. The Compact, Play, 3 acts: Planché.
April 33d. The Magic Car, Easter-piece: Reynolds and April SM. The Magic Car, Easter-piece: Reynoids and Sunn. April 26. The Merchant of London, Play, 5 acts: Searle. May 8. The Tyrolese Peasant, Opera, 2 acts: H. Payne.

STRAND THEATRE.

WE hardly know of what changes of season, of Un Jour après les Noces, broken band-boxes, now-o'-days, consist; but on Tuesday we had torn gowns, &c. are always left outside the our regular deputation at the Strand Theatre, to report to us the commencement of the reformed era, the old government having ceased the night before. Mr. Rayner had bid farewell, and Mrs. Waylett succeeded. Our account is favourable; the amusements were amusing, and the manageress deserving of all applause. The only complaint we heard was, that on this particular, and particularly wet, evening, it so happened that the reign of Rainer was not over; and from some flaws in the roof, it would have been well if Teddy the Tiler had been performed à priori.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Coburg, May 23 .- Extreme sang froid was the pervading characteristic of the Spanish performance. A child that should have been discovered sleeping on a bank, walked on, adjusted itself, and then rolled about ad lib., till a don entered with the utmost coolness, and pomelled, nay almost kneaded, the naughty child into the desired position. The heroine having duly died outside the curtain, curled herself up, on its descent, like a touched caterpillar, and then quietly walked off the stage. A gentleman then came on to deliver a recitation, which he ended by stabbing himself and dying, as per example, out of bounds. On seeing the descending baize, he scampered up and rushed off with a terror truly ludicrous. His consternation, however, was nought to that of the whole corps, when, having first quietly suffered a large flag to hang against the gas-lights at the wing till it was in flames, they gave themselves up to the very extravagance of fear, and gesticulated with a despair that was particularly amusing to a Coburg audience. The entertainments were to conclude with an English piece; for which, an overture having been played, the house waited till their patience was exhausted. At last, one of the actors came forward and announced that the delay was owing to the non-arrival of Mr. Searle. A man in the pit, with the laudable ambition of using a fine word, called out, "It's unexcusable!" and the apologist having retired, another dreary pause ensued. What was to be done? - another overture!! 'Twas achieved, and lo! another yet gloomier pause. What new device to while away the time? — why, yet another The third overture being finishoverture!!! ed, the play began, and I trembled for the reception of the author of The Merchant of London. He contrived, however (thanks to the nature of his part!), to slip in in such a manner that no one could say how or when he first appeared or spoke; and he would have escaped altogether, but, on one of the characters addressing him, in the course of the piece, with, "O, there you are !--we all thought you were lost!" a universal peal of laughter ensued, and so ended the affair good-humouredly.

Covent Garden, May 24.—I could always furnish you with as many absurd anecdotes as there are introduced songs on benefit nights. The following on the above night struck me as particularly whimsical. Braham, as Truemore, in the Lord of the Manor, came in eager search of his lady-love; but on her entering from the opposite side, he, merging all other considerations in a wish to introduce a song, dismissed the object of his search with, "Dear charmer! I'll meet you on this spot presently."

Haymarket, May 25.— The French folks never clear the stage, which, therefore, by the end of the third piece, is generally adorned with an accumulated and varied litter. The wrecks of Un Jour après les Noces, broken band-boxes, torn gowns. &c. are always left outside the heterogeneous mélée of bouquets, guns, mugs, bran (coolly sifted by an actor through a sieve, on the stage), loaves and broken victuals, &c. &c. A cocked hat was a long time one of the items; but it was eventually kicked by Madame Albert fairly into the stage-box, saluting the alarmed occupant thereof on his nose!

Coburg, May 28. - Byron, in a note to English Bards, laughs at the concealing of Tekeli in a tub. How would be have laughed to have seen, on this occasion, the earth open beneath him when the tub was about to be placed as an extinguisher over him, and the hero mysteriously, but complacently, vanishing through the ground. The party of soldiers who arrive to search the millers suspected of concealing Tekeli, were sad bare-faced traitors to their commander; for they actually dis-guised themselves as the miller's men, and so aided their intended victim's escape in a sack. The whole of them afterwards enlisted as Tekeli's soldiers, and in such haste that their military trousers were still covered with the flour wherewith they had deceived the eyes of their own commander better than those of the audience. Alonso, in Alonso the Brave, owing to some odd reversing of the scenes, re-appeared, and went through two scenes, after having fairly been carried down a trap-door au diable. Imagine the consequent obscure conclusion of the piece. Great mirth was excited by the scampering on of a dilatory corpse, that should have fermed one of a motionless group on the opening of a scene.

VARIETIES.

A White Donkey. - In the village of Hampton Wick a poor man is possessed of a young female donkey, perfectly white, without spot or shade of any kind; it is a lively sportive animal, now about six weeks old. The only peculiarity observable in its formation is a remarkably small and narrow mouth, more like the mouth of the sheep than the ass; its coat, of which much care is of course taken, is full and soft. The Queen sent for it to Windsor, and was much pleased with the little creature. It is likely to prove a valuable acquisition to its poor master, who, in addition to the donkey, is blessed with a wife and nine small children

Tapir.—" A particularly fine specimen of the auge elephantike animal of our hemisphere, called the danta or tapir, is about to be embarked at this port in the brig Mercer, as a present from Sir Robert Ker Porter to the Zoological Society of London. The Conquistadores of the days of Columbus named it " the great beast!" in comparison with some others, equally strange, to be met with in this then world of new wonders. From its strength and sagacity, it is very difficult to be taken alive in its wild state, when it has attained any considerable size; and when caught young, it is no less difficult to rear. Hence, as this one is arrived at maturity, and been three years in a tamed state with Sir R. K. Porter, it is the more desirable it should reach its destination in safety. It was brought a wild creature to Sir Robert from the other side of the country; having been fifteen nights in slow march, (for it rested during the days,) under a careful escort, over the stupendous mountains which lie between its native plains near Calaboda, and the city of Caracas. It is now quite docile, and a striking proof of the judicious military plans that of what I have desired into the holy the city of Caracas. It is now quite docile, and a striking proof of the judicious military plans a great pet with us all; we therefore hope you, on your side the Atlantic, will use it with the kindness you usually pay to an assiable tents, as given in the Russian journals, exhibits that is not any and that he had entered into the holy bands of wedlock upon such another. Having thus disposed of what I have deemed a misunce of those times." The table of containing the plans, and that he had entered into the holy bands of wedlock upon such another. Having thus disposed of what I have deemed a misunce of the certain the first plans, and that he had entered into the holy bands of wedlock upon such another. Having thus disposed of what I have deemed a misunce of the certain the first plans of the certain the first plans of the first pl curtain; and on this night there was a most stranger. Sir Robert accompanies his favourite tapir with two other rare animals of the fox and peccary kinds, and means to follow them with some other presents, zoological and botanical, likely to prove interesting, or in future useful, to his country."—From a Correspondent at La Guisa in South America.

Sir Walter Scott, the newspapers say, has left Rome for Florence, on his return homeward.

Sir James Mackintoch. - We mention the death of this distinguished individual, which took place in Langham Place on Wednesday, with feelings of deep regret. In mind and acquirements he was one of the great lights of our time; a statesman, a legislator, a scholar, and a gentleman. Of his public and literary career we will not attempt such a sketch as could be produced within the period now at our command—indeed, the leading events in both are familiar to the public; but content ourselves with saying, that in social life he was, perhaps, more unequalled for the wonderful stores of his memory, his most exten-sive reading, and the quickness and abundance with which he brought these endowments to illustrate almost every topic of taste, interest, literature, and philosophical inquiry. He was a most delightful and instructive companion.

Sir William Grant, another man of extraordinary talent, has been taken from us. Learned, profound, clear-sighted, and eloquent, he was one of the greatest civilians that ever adorned the judicature of our country; and so long as civilised nations need the direction of just principles in their mutual relations, so long will his name be venerated.

More London Archives .- A correspondent of the Globe, referring to Mr. Elmes's discovery in St. Bride's church, states that Mr. George Warriner has made a similar discovery at St. Michael's, Cornhill, only from an earlier period, viz. 1420, and replete with curious information, both regarding the private manners of the citizens, and their public proceedings, shows, &c. &c.

Russian Literature. - 1. Short memoirs of Admiral von Schischkow, written while he was in attendance on the Emperor Alexander, in 1812 and the following year. This work is in the Russian language, and is spoken of in the journals as extremely interesting, and written with great impartiality; giving a very lively picture of the important events and extraordinary scenes of that ever-memorable period .- 2. Memoirs of the years 1814 and 1815, by Majorgeneral Alexander Michaelowski Danilewski, aide-de-camp to his Majesty the Emperor Alexander. 1 vol. 8vo. (in the Russian language.) This work, of which two volumes have appeared in a very short time, does not pretend to give a complete account of the events of those two years. "I have related," says the author, "only those things of which I was an eye-witness, or which, for some particular reason, impressed themselves on my memory. I had no time to write till last year, when a wound which I received at the battle of Grochow, obliged me to keep my room for a couple of months. I have annexed many official documents hitherto unpublished, such as the intercepted letter of Napoleon to the empress his consort, which led to the movement of the combined armies against Paris in 1814, and the plan of operations which the emperor drew up with his own hand at Heidelberg, in 1815. This plan, which affords a striking proof of the judicious military plans an attractive panorama of a period so inte-esting to humanity, and especially for the pr-sent generation. The work itself is in Russ sent generation. the documents in the appendix, except two three, in French. Among these document thirty-one in number, we observe Napoleon letter to Maria Louisa; letter from the Emperto the Emperor of Austria; plan of operation drawn up by his Majesty; letter from his Majesty to the Duke of Wellington; letter fro Louis Buonaparte to the Emperor Alexander

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Literary Gasette Weekly Advertisement, No. XXII. June 24, 188 Mr. Schloss, of whose anatomical works and other pu into school, ow note anatomical works and other pulications in lithography we have had occasion to spervery highly, amounces illustrations of the Surry Zool gical Gardens, under the patronage of the Duke of Some The animals are to be drawn on stone by Mr. W. I

The animals are to be drawn on stone by Mr. W. I Kearney.
Mr. Lewis Goldsmith, long and well known to the lit rary and political world, is priming the first volume of work entitled, the Statistics of France; and we con name no writer so competent to the task, if long residen in the country, laborious research, access to the best a thorities, and individual ability, can fit a man for excuting it satisfactorily.
Qanoon-e-laism, or the Customs of the Moosekmans India: by Jaffur Shurreef, of the Deccan, temeslated in Jr. Herklots, Madras Establishment.
The Private Correspondence of a Woman of Fashion.
The Third Volume of the English Translation of the Memoirs of Madame Junot (the Duchess of Abrantes).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia, Vol. XXXI. (Switze land, in 1 vol.), fcp. &c. cloth.—Britton's Description Sketches of Tunbridge Wells, &c., with Fourteen Prin of Maps, View, &c., 8vo. &s.; royal 8vo. &c.—Edgeworth Novels and Tales, No. 11. (Moral Tales, Vol. L.), fcp. 5 cloth.—The Frugal Housewife, 18mo. &c. bds.; 2s. 6 roan.—Gallery of the Society of Painters in Water Colours, No. 111., Prints 10s. &d.; Proofs, colombier 4m 18s.; india Proofs, 31s.; before letters, IL 11s. &d.—The Village Poor-House, by a Count Curate, fcp. 2s. &d. bds.—Questions concerning Paris mentary Jurisdiction, by M. &e Psynomet, fcp. &s. & ds.—Uses of Balboa and Pisarro, by Mrs. Hudson, fc. 7s. bds.—Iolande and other Poems, 8vo. 5s. &d. bds.—Th Messiah, a Poem, by Robert Montgomery, post 8vo. 8s. &c. bds.

meteorological journal. 1832

May.	1 7%	Thermometer.) Barometer.
Thursday 24	From	45.	to	71.	30-23
Friday · · · · 25		45.	• •	71.	30-16
Saturday · · 26		46.	٠.	70.	30-07
Sunday · · · · 27		39.	• •	67.	29-96	٠.	29-8
Monday · · 28	• • • • •	43.	٠.	72.	29-96		29-8
Tuesday · · 29		40.	••	69.	29-84	Stati	OBLT
Wednesday 80	1	41.	••		29-65

Prevailing wind S.W.
The 99th and 30th cloudy, with rain at times; other wise generally clear.
Rain fallen, 425 of an inch.

CHARLES H. ADAMS Latitude · · · · · 51° 37′ 39″ N. Longitude · · · · 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

There is much feeling and merit in β 's lines; but hor came he to think that the sphynx lived on its own flame

" My bosom's grief, Which sphynx-like lives on its own fiame." We functed that it was the phonix which expired in it flame, and rose a new bird from the sales.

We must decline M. K.'s poetical contributions.

We must decline M. K.'s poetical contributions.

Burkés Pessage.—To the Bilitor, &c.

Sia,—In the observations which you have made upor the new edition of my Peerage and Baronetage, you have fallen into a mistake as to the nature of the work, which I shall take the liberty of rectifying. The book is not nor has it ever been, confined to the mere detail of name and dates. When I first contemplated writing upon such as ubject, I determined that my work should be one that might be read, as well as referred to—accurate by all means; dry, by none—in fine, a Blographical as well a Genealogical Dictionary. I have avoided, I trust, by my impartiality, rendering it an arena for political dispute but I should feel that I had ill discharged my duty had passed over a name like that of Brougham by merej stating, that the individual who had ennobled it was bor upon such a day, and that he had entered into the holy bands of wedlock upon such another.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

erintradence of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. To be continued Monthly, ALLERY of PORTRAITS, No. I. ALLERY of PORTRAITS, No. I.

Perhaps no species of knowledge has a more direct temdeery twards true refinement that an acquaintance with the fine arts. The Committee of the Society for the Diffusion of Discful Knowledge, therefore, consider themselves as acting strictly within the scope of their powers in publishing a Gallery of Portraits. They begin with Portraits, because the authentic likenesses of great men are equally interesting to the lower of art, the general reader, and even to these who have but a limited acquaintance with past events of personages, but who may probably be stimulated to read by the sight of the Print. For such, and to refresh the memory of others, a short Memoir will be given with each Portraits

The Gallery of Portraits to be published by the Society although similar in form, and not inferior in execution, to one or two Series of Portraits now have likenesses it is thought desirable to make familiar to all.

different from any other in the sweeteness of the same shose likenesses it is thought desirable to make familiar to all.

The Committee have to acknowledge the ready assistance of many distinguished personages and public bodies, in furthering their plan, by permitting copies to be made, for engraving, from original pictures in their possession. Artists of ability have already finished many copies from the Collections of His Majesty, of the King of the French, of the Royal Society, of the French, institute, of the Duke of Devonshire, the Duke of Mariborough, Lord Egremont, Lord Holland, and Lord Dover. The execution of the engravings from many of these pictures has been confided to some of the most eminent engravers of the day.

Each Number will consist of Three Portraits, with accompanying Blographical Memoirs, occupying, upon an average, Twentyfour pages of Letter-press. The size of the Work will be superroyal octavo, corresponding with the small-paper copies of Lodge's Portraits. The price of each Number will so Half-a-Crown. No large-paper copies will be printed.

London: Charles Knight, 18, Pail Mall East.

CERMAN SPA, BRIGHTON PARK.

The Pump Room is now open for the Season, till November. Hot Mneral Waters, Carlebad and Emis; Cold Mineral Waters, Carlebad and Emis; Cold Mineral Waters, Spa, Pyrment, Bger, Mariembad, Seitzer, &c. The efficacy of the Mineral Waters of this Betablishment, in nany obstinate Chronic Diseases, has been fully established, ander the observations of several eminent Physicians; and their ovenedical influence in divesting also the Chesters of its futal concequences, was amply proved at Mescow, during the late spinlengic.

demic.

London Agents for the sale of the Bottled Waters—Mestra. J. and G. Waugh, Chemists to their Majesties, 177, Regent Street; and T. Lucas, Chemist, 65, Cheapside, of whom, the Prospectus may be had, gratis.

Just published, price St.

Just published, price St.

ONGMAN, REES, ORME, BROWN,
GREEN, and LONGMAN'S CATALOGUE of SECONDHAND BOOKS, for 1883, comprising a Collection of useful and scarce Works, in various Languages, and in every Branch of Literature.

20, Paierraceter Rew,

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

THE QUARTERLY JOURNAL of AGRICULTURE, and of the Prize Besays and TE as of the Highland Society of Scotland.

actions of the Highland Society of Societad.

I. The Quarierly Journal of Agriculture...I. On the Agricultural State of Ireland, by Mr. Stephens...II. On Improving Cottage Gardening in Socitand, by Mr. J. S. Monteath...III. On the Laylag-out and Improving of Country Residences, by Mr. Main IV. The Larch and the Sprace...V. Notes made during a Visit to the United States and Canada in 1831, by Mr. Pergusson of Woodhill...VI. On the Trusting of Hay...VII. On New Seath Wales...VIII. On the Small Flowgh as a Drill Plough...IX. On the United States and Cay, by Mr. Dett, Veterinary Surgeon, Edinburgh...X. On the Washing and Sbearing of Sheep...XI. Emigration to British America...XII. Miscollaneous Notices...XIII. Quarterly Agricultural Seport...XIV. Tables of the Fricas of Grain, Seeds, Sutsher-Mest, and Wool; and of the Monthly Returns of Foreign Corn. and of the Revenue...XV. Feesign Corn. Markets.

Markets.

II. The Prize Essays and Transactions of the Highland Society of Scolland.—I. Account of the Carse of Gowrie, by Mr. Archibaid Garrie, Annat Garden, Perthshire—II. On the Culture of the Potate, by Bir George B. Mackensie of Coul, Bart.—III. Remarks on the Culture and Utility of several Kinds of Homerown Timber, by Mr. B. Mentesth—IV. Report on the Manner in which Two Fields at Invernay were laid down to Permanent Patture in 1838, by A. H. M. Beishee, Eq. of Invernay.—V. Report of Experiments on Feeding Stock, by Mr. A. Howden-VI. Description of Saving Machines for Felling Timber, laid before the Society in the Competition for Premiums in 1831.

Frinted for William Black wood, Edinburgh T. Cadell,
London; and W. Carry, Jan. and Co. Dublin.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Belieted by B. L. BULWER, Beq.
The June Number of the Jeurnal contains, among many others, Papers under the following heads of the Lass Petitical Revent.—The Death of Goethe, with a Patrialt of that ordebrand Writer—The Unstractor of the House of Commons in regard to Secrecy of Debate—Vernacular Literature—Resent Dramas—The Character and Administration of Neckar—New Facts regarding Gerrick—The Salcide of St. Valery, a Tale—The Court of Egypt, a Sketch—Our Ameedstage—Schiller's Fietko—The Creation of Man, a Peen—Menthly Commonstray on Men and Things; &c. &c. &c.

Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

To the Ciergy, Magistrates, Landowners, and Perochtal Officers.

THE BRITISH MAGAZINE of Religious

THE BRITISH MAGAZINE of Religious and Ecclesiastical Information, Parochial History, Documents respecting the State of the Poor, Progress of Education, &c. No. IV. for June, contains—Original Papers: 1. On the Principles of Dissent—8. Biography; Memoir of William Hales, D.D.—3. Irish Tithes, and the Candid bistements of the Roman Catholice—4. Hodnet Church, Shrophire, (the late Blabop Haber's Rectory), with a Engraving—Notices of the Olden Time—Sacred Postry—Correspondence: Letter on Dr. Burton, Regins Professor of Draw Programs of the Quadratic of Programs of the Burton, Regins Professor of Draw Draw Correspondence: Letter on Dr. Burton, Regins Professor of Draw Draw Correspondence of Programs of the Sacred Postry—Correspondence of Programs of Tibes—On the Bartal Service—On the Emoluments of the Established Church—Jahn the Bartal Service—On the Emoluments of the Established Church—Jahn the Bartal Service—On the Emoluments of the Stabilished Church—Jahn the Bartal Service—On the Emoluments of the Stabilished Church—Jahn the Bartal Service—On the Emoluments of the Stabilished Church—Jahn in Patmos — "Temperature of the History of Philosophy —" Temperature of the Soul"—" The Pleasures of Religions —" The Christian's Family Library — "Records of a Good Man's Life," &c. &c. —Reports of Religious and Basevolent Meetings and Societies—Plans for the Amelleration of the Condition of the Poor—Ecclesiastical Triale—Important Church Documents; Irith Unions—Letter of "N. C." on Fachial Tars, &c.—Pursilites—Emigration, &c. &c. Scriptistics—Ecclesiastical Intelligence—University News—Events of the Month, &c. &c. John Turrill, 350, Regent Street, Londen; Parker, Oriford, Canta, Cambridge; Bullies, Brothers, Edinburch; M'Phun, Olissow; Waleman, Publin. Oriera received by all Beaksellera and Newsmen.

Portreit of Louis Bustache Uds.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE for June, price 2s. dd.

PRASER'S MAGAZINE for June, contents.—On the Present Condition of Public Affairs.—The American Chesterfield.—Bits of Classicality, No. 3.—The Schoolmaster's Experience in Newgate—Tozor of a German Prince, Vois3 and 4.—The Archbishop of Canterbury's Bill on Pluralities.
Discoveries of the Modern Geologists, No. I.—Rencontres on the Road, No. IV.; Saturday.—On the Doctrine of Free Trade.—Lay of the Twaddle School, No. III.; A Classic Chant between Francis Leveson Gower and Alaric Attila Watts.—Gallery of Literary Characters, No. XXV.; the Author of the Freen Cook.—Some Account of Celeridge's Philosophy; "Aids to Reflection"—On the Domestic Manners of the British. By Col. Richard H. Hickory, of Cedar Swamp. In Letters. The First from Greenock, the Second from Paisley—On Political Parties, No. II.—A Cool Dialogue on Passing Events, between Oliver Yorke and his Chun —A drovel at the Lords. By Sir Morgan O'Doberty, Bart.
James Fraser, Sifs, Regent Street, Loadon; John Anderson,
James Ernser, Sifs, Regent Street, Loadon; John Anderson,
Jun. Edinburgh; W. B. M'Phun, Glasgow; and Great and Belten, Dablin.

WORKS published by the ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND.
Rold by J. Murray, Albemarie Street; and Parbury and Allen, Leedenhall Street. The Works may also be had at the House of the Reyal Asiatic Society, Ne. 16, Grafton Street, Sond Street.

1. The Travels of Ibn Batuta: translated from the Arabic, and illustrated with coptons Notes, by the Rev.
Prefesser Lee. Ibn Batuta; sport above twenty pears in travelling, in the Fourteenth Centry.
4th 18.

9 Memoirs of the Emperor. Ishangmair

2. Memoirs of the Emperor Jahangueir, written by Elmself, and translated from a Persian Manuscript, by Major David Price. 4to. 12c.

The Travels of Macarius, Patriarch of atloch, written by his attendant Archdeacon, Paul of Aleppo, Arabic. Part I. Translated by F. C. Belfour, A.M. 4to. 10c.

4. The Travels of Macarius, Part II. 4to. 10s. 5. History of the Afghans, translated from Persian of Neamet Ullah, by Professor Dorn. Part I. 4to. 14c.

6. Han Koong Teew, or the Sorrows of Han; Chinese Tragedy: translated from the Original, with Notes, d a Specimen of the Chinese Text, by John Francis Davis, R.B. 4to. 5to.

7. The Fortunate Union, a Romance, translated from the Chinese Original, with Notes and Illustrations: to which is added, a Chinese Tragedy. By John Francis Davis, F.R.S. 2 vol. 2vol. 2vol.

8. Yakkun Nattannawa, and Kolan Nattannawa; Cingalese Poems, descriptive of the Ceylon System of Demonology, and of the Characters in a Masquerade: illustrated with Plates, from Cingalese designs. By John Callaway. 8vo.

9. The Adventures of Hatim Tai, a Romance.

uniated from the Persian by Duncan Forbes, A.M. 4to. 16.

10. The Life of Sheikh Mohammed Ali Masin, written by Himself, and translated from the Perusa, with Notes and Illustrations, by F.C. Belfour, A.M. Sve. 10. 64.

11. The Life of Sheikh Mohammed Ali Hazia; the Persian Text: edited from two Persian M88. by F. C. Belfour, A.M. 870. 10s. 6d. boards.

12. Memoirs of a Malayan Family, written by Themestva, and transisted from the Original by W. Marsdan, F.R.S. 8ve. 2s. 6d. beards. 13. History of the War in Bosnia, during the Years 1737, 8, and 9, transisted from the Turkish by C. Fraser. 8ve. 4s. beards.

14. Autobiographical Memoirs of the Moghul Emperor Timer, written in the Japany Turky Language; turned into Persian by Abt Tailb Hussain, and translated into English by Major Charles Stewart. With a May of Transoxania-dio. 12s.

15. The History of Vartan and of the Battle the Armenian, translated from the Armenian by C. P. Neu-

16. The Life of Hafiz ul Mulk, Hafiz Rehmut Khan, written by his Son, Nuwab Must'ujab Khan Buhadur. Abridged and transleted from the Persian by Charles Elliott, Esq. 8vo. 5s. beards.

eq. Byo. 5s. beards.

17. Miscellaneous Translations from Oriental

17. MISCOLIBRISCUS I PRINSELIMIS IT UNIT VIRGINIAL Languages, Vol. I. Svo. St. boards.

Centents.

I. Notes of a Journey into the Interior of Northern Africa, by Rall Ibn addin Al Aghwasti. Translated from the Arabic by W. B. Hedgeon, Eq.

II. Extract from the Sakaa Thevan Sasataram, or Book of Fate. Translated from the Tamul by the Rev. Joseph Etheris.

III. The Last Days of Krishna and the Sons of Pandu, from the concluding Section of the Maha-bharat. Translated from the Persian Version by Major David Priom Uversion of a Collection of Ancient The Sanctri Language. Translated by Bin of Ancient The Sanctri Language. Translated by V. Indian Cookery, as upractised by the Natives of the East. Translated by Sandford Arrect.

18. The Algebra of Mohammed Ben Musa: Arabic and English. (This is the earliest system of Algebra etant in Arabic.) Edited and translated by Frederic Rosen. St

19. The History of the Maritime Wars of the Turks, translated from the Turkish by James Mitchell. Part I. 4to. 7s.

20. Translations from the Chinese and Armenian, by Charles F. Neumann. Svc. 18s. boards.

Contasts.

I. History of the Pirates who infested the China Sea from 1807 to 1810. Translated from the Chinese, with Notes and Illus-

1807 to 1810. Translated from use Linese, win Notes and Instrations.

11. The Catschism of the Shamans, or the Laws and Regulations of the Priesthood of Baddha, in Chinese. Translated from the Chinese, with Notes and Illustrations.

111. Vahram's Chronicle of the Armenian Kingdom in Cilicia during the time of the Crusades. Translated from the Armenian, with Notes and Illustrations.

The following are nearly reacy for publication:

The Shah Nameh, translated by James Athinson, Esq. This orientated Persian Poem comprises the History of Persia, from its first Hovereign to A.D. 695, and is replete with chiralrous adventures and descriptions of ancient manners.

The Siyar ul Mutakherin of Mir Gholam

Hussein Khan, translated by Lieut.-Col. John Briggs. A valuable Persian work, comprising the Annais of Hindustan from the time of the Emperor Aurungzebe to the Administration of War-

The Tahkik al Iráb, and Takwim al Buldán; two Geographical Works by Sadik Isfabání. Translated by J. C. from the original Persian MSS. in the Collection of Sir William Oussley, the Editor.

The Hoe'l lan ki; ou, l'Histoire du Cercle de Crale. Translated by M. Stanialas Julien. An interesting Chinese Drams, founded upon a story similar to that of the judg-ment of Solomon.

ment of Solomon.

The Raghu-Vansa, translated by Dr. Stenzler. A highly celebrated Epic Foem by Kalidasa: it will be accompanied by the Samerit Tera.

The Annals of Naima, translated by Charles Fraser. This Turkish History comprises the period between 1692 and 1694, and constain accounts of the Turkish havasion of Germany, the sleges of Buds, Vianas, &c.

The Memoirs of the Emperor Humayún, translated from the Persian by Major Charles Stewart.

Price 2s. in bards, or Sc. 6d. bound, with an Allowance to the Nobility and Gentry who are desirence of distributing the Book among their poor Neighbours, THE FRUGAL HOUSEWIFE, dedicated

"HE FRUGAL HOUSE WIFE, dedicated to those who are not ashamed of Boonemy.

By Mrs. CHILD,

Author of the "Mother's Book," the "Little Girl's Book," &c.

"Economy is the poor man's revenue—extravagance the rich man's ruin."

The eighth edition, newly arranged by the author, to which is now added, Hints to Persons of Moderate Fortune, &c. This little work is reprinted and published at the suggestion of a highly distinguished Member of the Bociety for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. distinguished Member of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. London: Printed for Thomas Togg, Chempdde; N. Halles, Piccadilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; B. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; and W. F. Wakemas, Dublin.

Mesdows's French Processoring Dictionary.

Beautiful printed, price 7s. in cleth, or 7s. 6st. bound, a new TRENCH and ENGLISH PRONOUN—CING DICTIONARY, on the Basis of Negent. In Two Parts—I. French and English; a English and French; with the New Words in general use, Principles of French Pronunciation, and an abridged Grammar.

By F. C. MEADOWS, M.A.

Of the University of Paris.

"Mr. Mesdows's performance does him infinite credit, and is an honour to Glesgow and its University. Simple and able in every respect, the student of the French language cannot commit a better crack: "Litterry Gusteix.

Glasgow: Frinted at the University Press, for Thomas Tegg. Chespiela, London; E. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; and W. F. Wakeman, Dublin.

THE MONTHLY MAGAZINE for June contains—I. The Political Education of the People—II.
Stanzas, by James Sherdam Knowles—III. Hints to Portrait rainters—IV. Translated Moties—V. Scenes in the Irith Islands
—VI. Assecdates of German Courts—VII. The Peor's Prisen—
VIII. The Human Cackes. By the Author of Three Courses and a Dessert—IX. Autoblegraphy of St. Simes—X. Senset to Neon—XI. Medicine as a Secience and as a Trade—XII. Weesen
Next the Devill—XIII. Notes on America, No. 1—XIV. On the Natural Depreciation of the English Nobility—XV. FreelegXVI. Cuvier and his Cabinet—XVII. The Nafages, by the Auther of the Meschant in Londen—XVIII. The Poriste Dector
XIX. Our Anniversary "The Mestalty" to the Public—XXII.
Notes of the Month—XXIII. Review of Beets, Dramus, Sc.—
XXIV. Wear's in the Free, Agricultural Repert, Sc.

Whittaker and Co. London—Price St. 64.

In 3 vels. Svo. Paris, 1838, and may be had of Mr. Douville, 110, Strand, London,

TRAVELS to the CONGO, and through the INTERIOR of EQUINOXIAL AFRICA, in the Years 1888, 1889, and 1880; with an Atias, containing a large Map of a part of Equinoxial Africa, and Twenty beautiful Flar, representing the different Costumes, Habitations, &c. of the People of a part of the World marked on our Maps as unknown. By J. B. DOUVILLE, Secretary of the Geographical Society of Paris, and Member of many French and Foreign Learned Societies.

Price Me SERIES of LESSONS on the GAME of CHESS; with Reasons for every Move. By W. LEWIS.

By W. LEWIS.

Also,
Also,
A Second Series, for the Higher Class of Players, containing several New Methods of Attack and Defence: to which are added, Fifty original Games actually played, and an Account of the Village of Stroebeck in Germany. By W. to with the College of State of Lewis. Price 20s.
Published by Simpkin and Marshall.

TOLANDE; a Tale of the Duchy of Luxembourg: and other Poems.

Printed for T. Cadell, Strand; and W. Blackwood, Edinburgh.

ON the ECONOMY of NATIONS, a Sketch.

By BRITANNICUS.

Printed for James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond Street.

Printed for James Carpenter and Son, Old Bond Street.

4th edition, comprising the recently created Peers and Baromets, in 3 vols. dedicated, by permission, to His Majesty.

DURKE'S GENERAL and HERALDIC DICTIONARY of the PEERAGE and BARONETAGE of the BRITISH EMPIRE.

This New Edition of Mr. Barke's popular work, in addition to comprising, exclusively, the whole Hereditary Rank of England, Ireland, and Scotland, (exceeding Fifteen Hundred Families), has been so extended, as to embrace almost every individual in the remotest degree allied to those eminent houses; so that its collateral information is now considerably more copious than that of any similar work hitherto published. The Lines of Descent have likewise been greatly enlarged, and numerous historical and biographical anedotes, together with several curious and rare papers, have been supplied. The Perages under discussion in the House of Lords (a new feature in such a work) are minutely detailed, and the claims upon which the respective petitioners to Parliament pray the restoration of suspended honours, are fully explained. To these is annexed a Genealoctal Sketch of the illustrious House of Guelph. The Armorial Engins have been re-engraved, upon a plan of incorporation with the Latterpress; so that the existing state of each family, with its lineage and arms, will be found all together. Amongst the illustrations is a fine head of his present Majesty, from Sir Thomas Lawrence's celebrated drawing, engraved, by permissione, exclusively for this work.

Frincet for Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

this work. Printed for Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

MAGAZINE of NATURAL HISTORY and Journal of Zoology, Botany, Mineralogy, &c. Conducted by J. C. LOUDON, F.L.S. &c.

Conducted by J. C. LOUDON, F.L.B. &c.
Also, price &t &t. No. 88 of the Gardener's Magazine, and Register of Rural and Domestic Improvement. Conducted by the same.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

S vols. small 8vo. 12c.

ESSAYS, MORAL and POLITICAL.

By ROBERT SOUTHEY, Esq.

Poet-Laureal.

Also, by the same Author, a new edition, 3 vols. 8vo. 20.

Colloquies, on the Rise, Progress, and Prospects of Society.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

A new edition, dedicated to the King, by His Majesty's gracious permission, 3 vols. 8vo. 30s. with Portralis, &c.

MEMORIALS of HAMPDEN, his PARTY, and his TIMES.
By LORD NUENT.
John Murrsy, Albemarle Street.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE, corrected to the present time, with the Arms of the New Poers

Debrett's Baronetage, including the New Baronets, with their Arms, 11. 8s.
Printed for Rivingtons, Longman and Co., Baldwin and Co., and the other Proprietors.

ART in NATURE and SCIENCE ANTICIPATED.
By CHARLES WILLIAMS.
1 vol. 18mo. neatly bound in cloth, price 4s. 6d.
London: Frederick Westley and A. H. Davis, Stationers'
Hall Court.

New Series of Museum Criticum. Price 5s.

THE PHILOLOGICAL MUSEUM,

THE PHILOLOGICAL MUSEUM,
No. III.
Contents:—Imaginary Convertation: Solon and Plaistratus—
On the Historical References and Alusions in Horace, from the German of Nebuhr; Xenophon, Niebuhr, and Delbrucck—On certain Passages in the Fourth and Pifth Books of the Architecture of Vitravius—On a Passage in Xenophon's Hellenica, i. 6; the Comic Poet Antiphanes—On the Names of the Antehelienic Inhabitants of Greece; De Passanine Stylo, Augusti Boeckhil Prolusio Academica—On certain Fragments quoted by Herodian the Grammarian—On English Orthography—On English Diminutives—Miscellaneous Observations.
Printed for Delightons, Cambridge; Rivingtons, London; and Parker, Oxford.
Of Whom may be had

The First and second Nose, price 5s. each, or the First Volume complete, price 1ss. boards.

the First Volume complete, price 15s. boards.

In 8 vols. 8vo. price One Guinea in boards,

SKETCH of the HISTORY of the CHURCH of ENGLAND to the REVOLUTION, 1688.
By THOMAS VOWLER SHORT, BJ.
Student of Christ Church; and Rector of Kings Worthy, Hants.
Printed for J. H. Parker, Oxford; J., G., and F. Rivington,
London; and J. and J. J. Deighton, Cambridge.

Standard Novels, Vol. XVI.

Complete in 1 vol. with a Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Author, by Dr. Brunton, neatly bound and illustrated, price &c.

ISCIPLINE.

By Mrs. BRUNTON.

Self-Control, by the same Author, forms the 18th Vol. of the "Standard Novels," just published.

15th Vol. of the "Standard Novels," Just published.

Among others, the following have already appeared in the

The Pilot, the Spy, the Last of the Moltans, and the Pioneers, by Cooper—Caleb Williams, and St. Leon, by Godwin—Thaddens of Warsaw, and the Recutish Chiefs, by Miss Jane Porter—Frankenstein, by Mrs. Shelley—and Lee's Canterbury Tales.

Vol. XVII., to be published on the 1st of July, will contain the Prairie, by Cooper, beautifully embellished, from Designs by Pickering.

Best of the above, revised by their respective Authors, are complete in a single volume, price &.

Henry Colbura and Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Part I. of the

Part I. of the

Part I. of the

DOLAR STAR and EXTRACTOR

MAGAZINE, price 2s.

"A mass of reading unprecedented."

Office, No. I, Newcastle Street, Strand; Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Court; and by all Beeksellers and Newsmen throughout the Kingdom.

Washington Irring's New Sketch-Book, &c.
Just published by Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley,
New Burlington Street.
In 8 vols. post 8vo.

THE FAIR of MAY FAIR.

2. The Alhambra. By Geoffrey Crayon.

The Contrast. By the Author of "Matilds," and "Yes and No." 8 vols.
4. Arlington. By the Author of "Granby,"

&c. 3 vols.

5. Lights and Shadows of American Life.
Edited by Mary Russell Mitford. 3 vols.

6. Stanley Buxton. By the Author of "Lawrie Todd," &c. 8 vols.
"A novel of very considerable power, and exhibiting a deep knowledge of the human beart."—Morring Meredd.

Also, just reedy,

1. Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier.
the Author of "Darnley," "De L'Orme," &c. 3 vols. By the Author of "Darnley," "De L'Orme," &c. s vons.

2. The Private Correspondence of a Woman

The Third Vol. of the English Translaof the Memoirs of Madame Junot, (Duchess of Abrantes). prising the entire 5th and 6th Volumes of the Paris edition.

THE METROPOLITAN MAGAZINE,

HE METROPOLITAN MAGAZINE,
for June let,
Rdited by THOMAS CAMPBELL, Eqq.
Contains, among many other interesting Articles,
I. Verses by Thomas Moore, Eq. addressed to Caroline, Viscountess Valletor on her Marriage.
II. Chit-Chat.
IV. The Crown Colonies.
V. Spring; by the Hon. Mrs. Norten.
VI. Abuses in the Pablic Hespitals.
VII. Irish Grand Juries—Mr. bianley's Bill.
VIII. Clavering's Autobiography.
IX. Italy in 1862.
XI. The Pacha of Many Tales.
XI. The Waggener; by the Auther of the "Diary of a Physician."

sician."

XII. The Tax-Gatherer, &c. &c.
Saunders and Otley, Conduit Street.

Published by Colburn and Bentley, New Burlington Street.

SIR JONAH BARRINGTON'S PER80NAL SKETCHES of his OWN TIMES. The Third and concluding Volume. 8ve. Nearly ready.

Memoirs of Sir James Campbell, of Ardkinglas, (formerly Sir James Callander). Written by Himself. In s vols. Svo. with a Portrait, 24c.
"Sir James Campbell is the father of Mrs. Thomas Sheridan.
He served during the greater part of the Seren Years' War in Germany as Aide-de-camp to General Mostyn—visited most the German Cours—had familiar intercourse with Voltaire—was a member of the most celebrated London Clubs the "Savoir vive," the "Fandemoism," &c..—hedd the post of Secretary to the British Embasy at Paris on the eve of the Revention—journeyed extensively in the East, and was again mixing in Parisian society during the Ailled occupation of France."—Globs.

III.

III.

The Ex-Queen of Holland.

In 1 vol. price 25s. bound,

Mémoires, Romances, et Musique, de Hortense, Duchesse de Saint Leu, Ex-Reine de Hollande; embellished with Twelve Plates of the Sones of the various Romances, beautifully engraved on Steel, from the original Designs of the Duchess: her Memoir, Portrait, and Fac-tamile.

N.B. As a very few copies of this unique and interesting publication have been printed, those who desire to possess it are requested to send their orders forthwith to their respective Book or Music-seliers.

New Edition of Miss Edgeworth's Works, in Monthly Volumes, price 5s. each, with superb Engravings, to correspond with the Fraveire, Novets and Lord Byron's Life and Powns.

On the lat of June was published, ornamented with a Frontispiece illustrative of the Prussian Vase, exquisitely engraved by Charles Rolls, and a fine Vignette by T. S. Englehart, VOL. H. of the TALES and NOVELS of MARIA EDGEWORTH, being the First Volume of Moral Tales, price 5s. elegantiy bound in cloth, and lettered.

London: Endwin and Gradock, and other Proprietors.

TURNER'S ENGLAND and WALES, Part XIV.; containing—St. Catharine's Hill, near Guild-ford—Chatham—Margate—and Asby de in Zouch. Royal etc. 14c; imperial Proofs, etc. 11. 1a.; imperial etc. India, 11. 14.

Part XV. is in considerable forwardness, and will complete the First Volume.

London: Moon, Boys, and Graves, 6, Pall Mall.

ST. JOHN in PATMOS; a Poem, by one of the OLD LIVING POETS of GREAT BRITAIN.
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH
MAGAZINE, No. CXCV. for June 1832.

I. Christopher at the Lakes; Fiight First—II. Immense and Leander; In Three Balleds—III. Tom Cringte's Leg; Scenes is Jamaica—IV. M'Gregor's British America—V. Calappa, the Republican—VI. The Hour of Fartune; in Three Nicki—
VII. Letter from the Right Hos. Thomas Ferregrine CountreasyVIII. Lines written at Kelburne Castle, Ayrahire, by DetaIX. What is an English Somset? by S. T. Coleridge, SeqX. Living Ports and Poetasses—XI. Salvandy on the Late Frech Revolution—XII. The Maid of Elvar.

Edinburgh: Printed for William Blackwood, No. 43, George Birreet; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

TAIT'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE,

No. III. for June.

Contents.

1. Our Three Days—2. Cultivation of the Fancy—2. What will the Army do?—4. Miss Edgeworth's Works—5. The Botheratise of the "Personnel"—6. To a certain Ex. Minister—7. The Bast Charter—6. Goethe—9. To a Tame Deer—10. Firsh Education—11. Power and Prospects of Russia—13. My Native Isle—13. Jan Jacques Rousseu—14. The Fourth Estate—15. The Contrast—16. Notes on the Crisis—17. Monthly Register.

Printed for William Talt, Edinburgh; Simpkin and Marshall, London; and John Cumming, Dublin.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinel Cyclopadia. In monthly volumes, small 8vo. 5s. in cloth-Just published, being Vol. XXXI. of the abov

HISTORY of SWITZERLAND,

(1 vol.)
In July 8, History of Spain and Portugal, Vol. III.
Zublahed May 1, History of Spain and Portugal, Vol. II.
London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In the press, and speedily will appear, in Sve.

FRANCE, in the LIVES of her GREAT MEN.

MKANCE, III tille LIVES OF RET GREAT

MEN.

By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.

Vol. I. containing the History of Charlemagne.

*O" The purpose of this Work is to exhibit the General History and Progress of Society in Europe, by the Lives of some of the most celebrated Public Men of France. Each Life will be preceded by an Introduction, containing a Sketch of the Interval between the Epoch about to be depicted and that which was last tempied. The state of the Control of the

On Tuesday next will be published,

LA COQUETTERIE; or, Sketches of Society in France and Belgium. 3 vols. post 8 vo.
"La coquetterie? cest ce que les hommes méprisent, et ce qui les attire."—De Genlie. T. and W. Boone, 26, New Bond Street.

In a few days will appear,

E D O O M E

Smith, Bider, and Co. 65, Cornhill. E

On the 30th of June will be published, 8vo.

HISTORY of the WAR of the SUCCES610N in SPAIN. SION in SPAIN.

By LORD MAHON.

John Murray, Albemaric Street.

Montgomery's New Poem.

At the end of May will be published, post 8vo. price 8s. 6d. dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty, the MESSIAH, a Poem, in Six Books.

By the Author of the "Ountpresence of the Deity."
John Turrill, 250, Regent Street, London.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, et the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Stret, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulton Street, Opin Street: aold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange: E. Marlbornogh, Ave Maria Lane, Ludgate Hill; A. Elet. Edishurgh: Swith and Son, D. Roberton, and Attinon and Co. Glazpow: Sand J. Camming, Debtim.— Agent for America, O. Eich, 18, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 803.

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

A Narrative of a Nine Months' Residence in New Zealand, in 1827; together with a Journal of a Residence in Tristan d'Acunha. By Augustus Earle. 8vo. pp. 371. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

EARLY addicted to the arts, and educated as an artist, Mr. Earle (now on board the Beagle, as draughtsman, on its scientific voyage) exhibits, in its most ample and ardent development, that energy of character which devotes the possessor to a life of wandering and peril. A rover in heart and soul, he has traversed the globe, as another person might perambulate a village. From 1815, when his brother Captain Earle's and some other interest at the Admiralty procured him opportunities, he visited Sicily and Malta, and many parts of the Mediterranean,—accompanied Lord Exmouth on his first expedition against the Barbary states,-went to see the ruins of Carthage and a little of Libya,-took another turn to Mount Etna, and thence to Gibraltar,-rambled two years through the United States of America, afterwards called at Rio de Janeiro, Chili-Lima, and again at Rio; whence proceeding in a worn-out Margate hoy for the Cape of Good Hope, he was thrown upon Tristan d'Acunha, where he was obliged to stay, nolens volens, having no vessel to enable him to prosecute his erratic rambles, for upwards of six months. The account of this forms a portion, and a very interesting portion, of this publication.

A ship, "the Admiral Cockburn, Capt. Cooling," at length released him from this island prison; and he engaged himself on a trip to Van Diemen's Land, New South Wales, and New Zealand. Returning to Sydney, he made the drawings for Mr. Burford's interesting Panorama, lately exhibited in Leicester Square; and next, by way of a slight travelling variety, took a look in at the Caroline Islands, paid his respects at Guam one of the Ladrones, touched at Manilla, left his card with the resident at Sincapore, said how d'ye do at Pulo Penang, and stopped a while at Madras, where fame and fortune attended his practice as an artist, and where he made the drawings so admirably copied into a panorama by Messrs. Daniell and Parris. His health, however, having declined, he resumed his locomotiveness, went down to Pondicherry, and embarked for England by way of France. But it seemed as if his journeying must be extended involuntarily where he did not voluntarily desire to prolong his excursion. The vessel for Bourdeaux was obliged to go to, and was condemned at, the Mauritius; and our countryman reached England by a different route. He has since sailed, as stated, in the Reagle; and we presume, if the members have not been asleep since their congregation at home, with the first honorary degree of a member of the Travellers' Club!

a very simple and agreeable manner. volume is a perfect treat, whether we ramble with its author among the savages of New Zealand, with whom he chose to spend a few pleasant months, in despite of their cannibalism and other elegant propensities; or companion him when almost a modern Crusoe in Tristan d'Acunha, hunting goats, sea elephants, albatrosses, and penguins, while, from that speck on the ocean, he anxiously watched for the sail which was to restore him to civilised life. We will endeavour to communicate a portion of our gratification to our readers in the ensuing extracts.

In October 1827, Mr. Earle, with his friend Mr. Shand, left Sydney in the brig Governor Macquarrie, Capt. Kent, for New Zealand; and among the passengers were several persons, male and female, going to form a Wesleyan missionary establishment at E. O. Ke Anga. They landed at the native village called Parkuneigh, where they soon found something out of the ordinary course of things to surprise them. Taking a walk (agreeably to his instinct of perpetual motion), Mr. Earle relates:
"I had not rambled far, before I witnessed a scene which forcibly reminded me of the savage country in which I then was; and the great alteration of character and customs a few days' sail will make. The sight to me so ap-palling was that of the remains of a human body, which had been roasted, and a number of hogs and dogs were snarling and feasting upon I was more shocked than surprised, for I had been informed of the character of the New Zealanders long before my arrival amongst them; still, the coming suddenly and unexpectedly upon a sight like this completely sickened me of rambling, at least for that day; and I hastened back to Mr. Butler's, eager to inquire into the particulars of the horrid catastrophe. That gentleman informed me, that the night of the arrival of our ship, a chief had set one of his kookies (or slaves) to watch a piece of ground planted with the koomera, or sweet potato, in order to prevent the hogs committing depredations upon it. The poor lad, delighted with the appearance of our vessel, was more intent upon observing her come to anchor, than upon guarding his master's property, and suffered the hogs to ramble into the plantation, where they soon made dreadful havoc. In the midst of this trespass and neglect of orders, his master arrived! The result was certain; he instantly killed the unfor-tunate boy with a blow on the head from a stone hatchet; then ordered a fire to be made, and the body to be dragged to it, where it was roasted and consumed!

Having pretty well enough of Parkuneigh, our countrymen made up a sort of caravan, and crossed the country to the Bay of Islands. On their way, they arrived at a village belonging to a son of a chief called Pationi, and the picture of their reception is striking.

template its appearance, and to give time to arrange our party for passing the stream, and also for my making a sketch. The red glare of the setting sun, just touching the top of every object, beautifully illuminated the land-scape; and its rays, bursting through the black woods in the back-ground, gave the woods an appearance of being on fire; while a beautiful rainbow, thrown across the sky, tinged the scene with a fairy-land effect. As soon as they perceived us from the opposite shore, a loud shout of welcome was raised, and all the inhabitants came out to meet us. They carried us over the stream, conducted us to their huts, and then sat down to gaze at and admire us. As we were very hungry after our fatiguing walk, we soon unpacked our baggage, and in so doing made an unavoidable display of many valuable and glittering objects, which roused the attention of our savage spectators, and caused them, on the unfolding of every fresh object, to make loud and long exclamations of wonder and admiration. As I was then 'a stranger in their land,' and unaccustomed to their peculiarities, I felt a little alarmed at their shouts; but, on a longer acquaintance with them, I found my fears had been groundless. Here we saw the son of Pationi, accompanied by thirty or forty young savages, sitting or lying all round us. All were exceedingly handsome, notwithstanding the wildness of their appearance and the ferocity of their looks. Let the reader picture to himself this savage group, handling every thing they saw, each one armed with a musket loaded with ball, a cartouch-box buckled round his waist, and a stone patoo-patoo, or hatchet, in his hand, while human bones were hung round each neck by way of ornament; let the scene and situation be taken into consideration, and he will acknowledge it was calculated to make the young traveller wish himself safe at home: but when I suspected, I wronged them; for after admiring every thing we had brought with us (more especially our fowling-pieces, which were very beautiful ones), they begged a little tobacco, then retired to a distance from the hut which had been prepared for our reception, and left us to take our supper uninterrupted; after which they placed all our baggage in the hut, that we might be assured of its safety. It proved a rainy, miserable night; and we were a large party, crowded into a small smoky hut, with a fire lighted in the middle; as, after our supper, the natives, in order to have as much of our company as possible, crowded in till it was literally crammed. However annoying this might be, still I was recompensed by the novelty and picturesque appearance of the scene. Salvator Rosa could not have conceived a finer study of the horrible. A dozen men, of the largest and most athletic forms, their cakahoohs (or mat-dresses) laid saide, and their huge limbs exposed to the red glare of the fire; their faces rendered hideous by being tatoned One who has seen so much must have much to tell; and Mr. Earle's journal does give us much curious and entertaining information, in time under the shelter of a large tree, to conintense curiosity. All my fears had by this time subsided, and being master of myself, I had leisure to study and enjoy the scene: we smoked a social pipe with them (for they are all immoderately fond of tobacco), and I then stretched myself down to sleep amidst all their chattering and smoke. But all my attempts at slumber were fruitless. I underwent a simultaneous attack of vermin of all descriptions; fleas, musquitoes, and sand-flies, which, beside their depredations on my person, made such a buzzing noise, that even the chattering of the natives could not drown it, or the smoke from natives could not drive them away. Next morning, at daybreak, we took leave of our hosts, and proceeded on our journey."

Onward they arrived at the Kiddy Kiddy river, where there is a Church Missionary establishment; and we grieve, in the annexed passages, to be obliged to contrast the welcome of countrymen and Christians with that of cannibals and pagans.

" Occasionally (the narrative proceeds) we met groups of naked men, trotting along under immense loads, and screaming their barbarous songs of recognition; sometimes we beheld an uncouthly carved figure, daubed over with red ochre, and fixed in the ground, to give notice that one side of the road was tabooed. An extraordinary contrast was now presented to our view, for we came suddenly in front of a complete little English village. Wreaths of white smoke were rising from the chimneys of neat weather-boarded houses. The glased windows reflected the brilliant glow from the rays of the setting sun, while herds of fat cattle were winding down the hills, lowing as they leisurely bent their steps towards the farm-yard. It is impossible for me to describe what I felt on contemplating a scene so similar to those I had left behind me. According to the custom of this country, we fired our muskets, to warn the inhabitants of the settlement of our approach. We arranged our dresses in the best order we could, and proceeded towards the village. As the report of our guns had been heard, groups of nondescripts came running out to meet us. I could scarcely tell to what order of beings they belonged; but on their near approach, I found them to be New Zealand youths, who were settled with the missionaries. They were habited in the most uncouth dresses imaginable. These pious men certainly have no taste for the picturesque; they had obscured the finest human forms under a seaman's huge clothing. Boys not more than fifteen wore jackets reaching to their knees, and buttoned up to the throat with great black horn buttons, a coarse checked shirt, the collar of which spread half-way over their face, their luxuriant, beau-tiful hair was cut close off, and each head was crammed into a close Scotch bonnet! These half converted, or rather half covered youths, after rubbing noses, and chattering with our guides, conducted us to the dwellings of their masters. As I had a letter of introduction from one of their own body, I felt not the slightest doubt of a kind reception; so we proceeded with confidence. We were ushered into a house, all cleanliness and comfort, all order, silence, and unsociability. After presenting my letter to a grave-looking personage, it had to undergo a private inspection in an adjoining room, and the result was, an invitation 'to stay and take a cup of tea!' All that an abundant farm, and excellent grocer in England could supply, were soon before us. Each person of the mission, as he appeared during our repast, was called aside, and I could hear my own letter read and dis-

with a look of good temper, commingled with cussed by them. I could not help thinking intense curiosity. All my fears had by this (within myself) whether this was a way to receive a countryman at the Antipodes! smile beamed upon their countenance; there were no inquiries after news; in short, there was no touch of human sympathy, such as we of the world feel at receiving an Englishman under our roof in such a savage country as The chubby children, who peeped at us from all corners, and the very hearty appearance of their parents, plainly evidenced that theirs was an excellent and thriving trade. We had a cold invitation to stay all night; but this the number of our party entirely precluded; so they lent us their boat to convey us to the Bay of Islands, a distance of about twenty-five miles. As the night proved dark and stormy, and as our boat was crowded with natives, our passage down the Kiddy Kiddy river became both disagreeable and dangerous. The river being filled with rocks, some under, and others just above the water, we were obliged to keep a good look-out. After experiencing many alarms, we arrived safely at Koraradika beach about midnight, where an Englishman of the name of Johnstone gave us a shelter in his hut.

" A few days after my arrival in the bay, I crossed to the opposite side, to visit the Church Missionary settlement, and to deliver a letter of introduction I had to one of the members. Here, on a beautiful bank, with a delightful beach in front, and the entrance of the bay open to them, the clear and blue expanse of water speckled over with fertile islands, reside these comfortable teachers of the Gospel. The name they have given this spot is Marsden Vale. They very soon gave us to understand they did not wish for our acquaintance; and their coldness and inhospitality, I must ac-knowledge, created in my mind a thorough dislike to them. The object of the mission, as it was first planned, might have been attained, and might have proved highly beneficial to the New Zealanders; but as it is now conducted, no good result can be expected from it. Any man of common sense must agree with me that a savage can receive but little benefit from having the abstruse points of the Gospel preached to him, if his mind is not prepared to receive them. This is the plan adopted here; and nothing will convince these enthusiasts that it is wrong, or induce them to change it for one more agreeable to the dictates of reason. Upon inquiring who and what these men were, I found that the greater part of them were hardy mechanics (not well-educated clergymen), whom the benevolent and well-intentioned people of England had sent out, in order to teach the natives the importance of different trades -- a most judicious arrangement, and which ought to be the foundation of all missions. What could be a more gratifying sight than groups of these athletic savages toiling at the anvil or the saw, erecting for themselves substantial dwellings; thus leading them by degrees to know and to appreciate the comforts resulting from peaceful, laborious, and useful occupations? Then, while they felt sincere gratitude for services rendered them, at their leisure hours, and on certain days, these missionaries should attempt to expound to them, in as simple a manner as postible, the nature of revealed religion! In New Zealand, the 'mechanic' missionary only carries on his trade till he has every comfort around him; his house finished, his garden fenced, and a strong stockade enclosing all, to keep off the 'pagan' savages. This done, then commences together) in a small New Zealand hut, filed the easy task of preaching. They collect a few with filth and vermin of all kinds, while stragged urchins of natives, whom they teach to only two miles' distance from us stood a new read and write their own language, the English tongue being forbidden; and when these chil dren return to their families, they are despise by them, as being effeminate and useless. life, sitting in the midst of a group of savage. attempting to expound to them the mysterie of our holy redemption - perplexing his own brains, as well as those of his auditors, with the most incomprehensible and absurd opinious How much better would he have been employed in teaching them how to weld a piece of iron or to make a nail! What causes much disapprobation here, is the contemptuous manner in which they treat their own countrymen, as they receive most of them on the outside of their stockade fence. On our return from Marsien Vale, our savage friends laughed heartily at us. They had warned us of the reception we should meet with; and their delight at seeing us again formed a strange contrast to that of their Christian teachers, whose inhospitable dwellings we determined never to re-enter.

Some time after, when their house had been burnt and their stores plundered, during an invasion of another tribe, Mr. Earle adds:-

" Our two really tolerably good house were reduced to a heap of smoking ruins, and the greater part of what belonged to us was taken away by the Narpooes. This calamity had made us acquainted with another of their barbarous customs; which is, whenever a misfortune happens to a community or an individual, every person, even the friends of his own tribe. fall upon and strip him of all he has remaining. As an unfortunate fish, when struck by a harpoon, is instantly surrounded and devoured by his companions; so in New Zealand, when a chief is killed, his former friends plunder his widow and children; and they, in revenge, il use and even murder their alaves: thus one misfortune gives birth to various crueltes.

During the fire, our allies proved themselves the most adroit and active thieves imaginable; though previously to that event we had never lost an article, although every thing we pessessed was open to them. When we quetioned them about our property, they frankly told us where it was; and after some difficulty in settling the amount of its ransom, we got most of our things back again, with the exception of such as had been carried off by the Natpooes. Upon the cruelty of this custom I shall make no comments: probably I should have remained in ignorance of this savage law, had I not had the misfortune to become its victime By redeeming from the natives what they had purloined from the fire, we had restored to " some of our boxes, deaks, and clothes; but at our little comforts towards housekeeping west irretrievably lost. When the fire was ore, we received a visit from one of the missionaris, who made us a cold offer of assistance. We accepted a little tea, sugar, and some fer articles of crockery from them; but although they knew we stood there houseless, amongst s horde of savages, they never offered us the shelter of their roofs. I am very sure that had the calamity befallen them, we should immediately have offered our huts, and shared with them every thing we possessed. Here an opportunity of practically shewing the gans' (as they termed the New Zealanders) ibs great Christian doctrine of 'doing to others' we would they should do unto us. I mus acknowledge I was sometimes mortified at being obliged to sleep (three of us huddled up together) in a small New Zealand hut, filed with filth and vermin of all kinds, while s village, abounding in every comfort that a bountiful British public could provide; and we members of that community, and, indeed, partly contributors to the funds for its support.

The author rivets the nail, by declaring he never saw one Christian proselyte.

In his intercourse with the natives, Mr. Earle speaks always favourably of them, and is, indeed, more their apologist than, in our opinion, the scenes and events he describes warrant him in being. For though there are many causes operating against them,—such as their want of a government, their natural and unrestrained fierceness, their system of slavery, their utter disregard of human life, their having no religion, their customs, among the most bloody of which is the necessity and pride of retaliation and revenge, &c. &c. ; -still they are so barbarous and treacherous, that it is difficult not to wish they were either much more improved than Mr. E. pretends they are, or that they were exterminated from the face of the earth. But our informant must speak.

"I made (he tells us) several excursions into the interior, and each confirmed me in the good opinion I had formed of the natives: 1 felt myself quite safe amongst them. There is a great peculiarity in rambling through this country; namely, the total absence of quad-rupeds. There are abundance of birds, which are so numerous at times as almost to darken the air-many of them possessing very sweet notes; and wild ducks, teal, &c. cover the various streams. Wherever I went I did not discover any grass, almost every part being covered either with fern or flax; the former yielding the natives their principal article of food, and the latter their clothing. To this dearth of animals may be attributed the chief cause of their ferocity, and propensity to can-

"I witnessed a specimen of their summary method of executing justice. A chief residing in the village had proof of the infidelity of one of his wives; and being perfectly sure of her guilt, he took his patoo-patoo (or stone hatchet) and proceeded to his hut, where this wretched woman was employed in household affairs. Without mentioning the cause of his sus-picion, or once upbraiding her, he deliberately aimed a blow at her head, which killed her on the spot; and as she was a slave, he dragged the body to the outside of the village, and there left it to be devoured by the dogs. The account of this transaction was soon brought to us, and we proceeded to the place to request permission to bury the body of the murdered woman, which was immediately granted. Accordingly, we procured a couple of slaves, who assisted us to carry the corpse down to the beach, where we interred it in the most decent manner we could. This was the second murder I was very nearly a witness to since my arrival; and the indifference with which each had been spoken of, induced me to believe that such barbarities were events of frequent occurrence; yet the manners of all seemed kind and gentle towards each other: but infidelity in a wife is never forgiven here; and, in general, if the lover can be taken, he also is sacrificed along with the adulteress. Truth obliges me to confess that, notwithstanding these horrors staring them in the face, they will, if opportunity offers, indulge in an intrigue."

But worse remains behind. "The New Zealanders have been long charged with cannibalism; but as no person of importance or celebrity had actually been a rejected, and much has been written to prove the non-existence of so hideous a propensity. It was my lot to behold it in all its horrors One morning, about eleven o'clock, after I had just returned from a long walk, Captain Duke informed me he had heard, from very good authority, (though the natives wished it to be kept a profound secret,) that in the adjoining village a female slave, named Matowe, had been put to death, and that the people were at that very time preparing her flesh for cooking. At the same time he reminded me of a circumstance which had taken place the evening before. Atoi had been paying us a visit, and, when going away, he recognised a girl whom he said was a slave that had run away from him: he immediately seized hold of her, and gave her in charge to some of his people. The girl had been employed in carrying wood for us; Atoi's laying claim to her had caused us no alarm for her life, and we had thought no more on the subject; but now, to my surprise and horror, I heard this poor girl was the victim they were preparing for the oven! Captain Duke and myself were resolved to witness this dreadful scene. We therefore kept our information as secret as possible, well knowing that if we had manifested our wishes, they would have denied the whole affair. We set out, taking a circuitous route towards the village; and, being well acquainted with the road, we came upon them suddenly, and found them in the midst of their abominable ceremonies. On a spot of rising ground, just outside the village, we saw a man preparing a native oven, which is done in the following simple manner :—A hole is made in the ground, and hot stones are put within it, and then all is covered up close. As we approached, we saw evident signs of the murder which had been perpetrated; bloody mats were strewed around, and a boy was standing by them actually laughing: he put his finger to his head, and then pointed towards a bush. I approached the bush, and there discovered a human head. My feelings of horror may be imagined as I recognised the features of the unfortunate girl I had seen forced from our village the preceding evening! We ran towards the fire, and there stood a man occupied in a way few would wish to see. He was preparing the four quarters of a human body for a seast; the large bones, having been taken out, were thrown aside, and the flesh being compressed, he was in the act of forcing it into the oven. While we stood transfixed by this terrible sight, a large dog, which lay before the fire, rose up, seized the bloody head, and walked off with it into the bushes; no doubt to hide it there for another meal! The man completed his task with the most perfect composure, telling us, at the same time, that the repast would not be ready for some hours ! Here stood Captain Duke and myself, both witnesses of a scene which many travellers have related, and their relations have invariably been treated with contempt; indeed, the veracity of those who had the temerity to relate such incredible events has been every where questioned. In this instance it was no warrior's fiesh to be eaten; there was no enemy's blood to drink, in order to infuriate them. They had no revenge to gratify; no plea could they make of their passions having been roused by battle, nor the excuse that they eat their ene-mies to perfect their triumph. This was an action of unjustifiable cannibalism. Atol, the chief, who had given orders for this cruel feast, had only the night before sold us four pigs for Duke and myself had consulted with each other, we walked into the village, determining to charge Atoi with his brutality. Atoi re-ceived us in his usual manner; and his handsome open countenance could not be imagined to belong to so savage a monster as he had proved himself to be. I shuddered at beholding proved himself to be. I should be as be abusing the unusual quantity of potatoes his slaves were preparing to eat with this infernal banquet. We talked coolly with him on the subject; for as we could not prevent what had taken place, we were resolved to learn, if possible, the whole particulars. Atoi at first tried to make us believe he knew nothing about it, and that it was only a meal for his slaves; but we had ascertained it was for himself and his favourite companions. After various endeavours to conceal the fact, Atoi frankly owned that he was only waiting till the cooking was completed to partake of it. He added, that, knowing the horror we Europeans held these feasts in, the natives were always most anxious to conceal them from us, and he was very angry that it had come to our knowledge; but, as he had acknowledged the fact, he had no objection to talk about it. He told us that human flesh required a greater number of hours to cook than any other; that if not done enough, it was very tough, but when sufficiently cooked it was as tender as paper. He held in his hand a piece of paper, which he tore in illustration of his remark. He said the flesh then preparing would not be ready till next morning; but one of his sisters whispered in my ear that her brother was deceiving us, as they intended feasting at sun-set. We inquired why and how he had murdered the poor girl. He replied, that running away from him to her own relations was her only crime. He then took us outside his village, and shewed us the post to which she had been tied, and laughed to think how he had cheated her : - ' For,' said he, 'I told her I only intended to give her a flogging; but I fired, and shot her through the heart!' My blood ran cold at this relation, and I looked with feelings of horror at the savage while he related it. Shall I be credited when I again affirm, that he was not only a handsome young man, but mild and genteel in his demeanour? He was a man we had admitted to our table, and was a general favourite with us all; and the poor victim to his bloody cruelty was a pretty girl of about sixteen years of age! While listening to this frightful detail, we felt sick almost to fainting. We left Atoi, and again strolled towards the spot where this disgusting mess was cooking. Not a native was now near it : a hot fetid steam kept occasionally bursting from the smothered mass; and the same dog we had seen with the head, now crept from beneath the bushes, and sneaked towards the village: to add to the gloominess of the whole, a large hawk rose heavily from the very spot where the poor victim had been cut in pieces. My friend and I sat gazing on this melancholy place; it was a lowering gusty day, and the moaning of the wind through the bushes, as it swept round the hill on which we were, seemed in unison with our feelings. After some time spent in contemplating the miserable scene before us, during which we gave full vent to the most passionate exclamations of disgust, we determined to spoil this intended feast: this resolution formed, we rose to execute it. I ran off to our beach, leaving Duke on guard, and, collecting all the white men I could. I informed them of what had happened, and asked them if they would assist in dewitness to the disgusting act, in pity to our a few pounds of powder; so he had not even stroying the oven, and burying the remains of nature such relations have been universally the excess of want of food. After Captain the girl: they consented, and each having profriends had by some means been informed of our intention, and they came out to prevent it. He used various threats to deter us, and seemed highly indignant; but as none of his followers appeared willing to come to blows, and seemed ashamed that such a transaction should have been discovered by us, we were permitted by them to do as we chose. We accordingly dug a tolerably deep grave; then we resolutely attacked the oven. On removing the earth and leaves, the shocking spectacle was presented to our view, -the four quarters of a human body half roasted. During our work clouds of steam enveloped us, and the disgust created by our task was almost overpowering. We collected all the parts we could recognise; the heart was placed separately, we supposed as a savoury morsel for the chief himself. We placed the whole in the grave, which we filled up as well as we could, and then broke and scattered the oven."

And when they were gone, the natives disinterred their favourite dish, and ate it; for,

"The next day our old friend King George paid us a long visit, and we talked over the affair very calmly. He highly disapproved of our conduct. 'In the first place,' said he, 'you did a foolish thing, which might have cost you your lives, and yet did not accomplish your purpose after all, as you merely succeeded in burying the flesh near the spot on which you found it. After you went away, it was again taken up, and every bit was eaten' - a fact I afterwards ascertained by examining the grave, and finding it empty. King George further said, It was an old custom, which their fathers practised before them; and you had no right to interfere with their ceremonies. I myself,' added he, 'have left off eating human flesh, out of compliment to you white men; but you have no reason to expect the same compliance from all the other chiefs. What punishment have you in England for thieves and runaways?' We answered, 'After trial, flogging or hanging.' 'Then,' he replied, 'the only difference in one large in the contract of th in our laws is, you flog and hang, but we shoot and eat.' After thus reproving us, he became very communicative on the subject of cannibalism. He said, he recollected the time prior to pigs and potatoes being introduced into the island (an epoch of great importance to the New Zealanders), and stated, that he was born and reared in an inland district, and the only food they then had consisted of fern roots and kumera; fish they never saw, and the only flesh he then partook of was human.

The scene (continues Mr. E.) I have just described brings into consideration the subject of slavery, as it now exists in New Zealand. That slavery should be the custom of savage nations and cannibals, is not a cause of wonder: they are the only class of human beings it ought to remain with. Here slavery assumes its most hideous shape. Every one they can effect a slave of the captors. Chiefs are never made prisoners; they either fight till the last, or are killed on the spot, and their heads are preserved, by a peculiar method, as trophies. Children are greatly prized: these they bring to their dwellings, and they remain slaves for life. Upon the number of slaves a chief can muster he takes his rank as a man of wealth and consequence in society; and the only chance these wretched beings have of being released from their miseries, is their master get-complexion and the dresses of all are alike. The free Zealander is a joyous, good-humouredlooking man, full of laughter and vivacity, and is chattering incessantly; but the slaves have invariably a squalid, dejected look; they are invariably a squalid, dejected look; they are invariably a squalid, dejected look; they are never seen to smile, and appear literally half starved. The beauties characteristic of a New Zealander are his teeth and hair: the latter, in particular, is his pride and study; but the slaves have their heads half shorn. The male slaves have their heads half shorn. slave is not allowed to marry; and any intercourse with a female, if discovered, is generally punished by death. Never was there a body of men so completely cut off from all society as these poor slaves; they never can count, with certainty, on a single moment of life, as the savage caprice of their master may instantly deprive them of it. If, by chance, a slave should belong to a kind and good master, an accident happening to him or any of his family will probably prove equally fatal to the slave, as some are generally sacrificed on the death of a chief. Thus these poor slaves are deprived of every hope and stimulus by which all other classes and individuals are animated; no good conduct of theirs towards their master, no attachment to his person or family, no fidelity or long service, can insure kind treatment. If the slave effect his escape to his own part of the country, he is there treated with contempt; and when he dies, if a natural death, his body is dragged to the outside of the village, there to be made sport of by the children, or to furnish food for the dogs! But more frequently his fate is to receive a fatal blow, in a fit of passion, and then be devoured by his brutal master! Even the female slaves, who, if pretty, are frequently taken as wives by their conquerors, have not a much greater chance of happiness, all being dependent upon the caprice of their owners."

All this is very horrible; but we ourselves, a refined, a religious, an enlightened people, - we would not commit nor hear of such last Monday :-

"The Humanity and Policy of Imprisonment for Debt.—
There are three persons at this time in confinement in Whitecross Street prison whose ages conjointly amount to nearly 259 years, and whose debts in the whole altogether do not exceed 41. 10s., by which a charge is thrown upon the county for their maintenance for forty days each, costs of the court, and other expenses, not less than 15t. It was only last Christmas, a man, with a family of children, was brought from Enfield, for a debt of freepence! The expense to the county, including conduct money per mile to the officer, was about 15s. Another man, with a family of six children, for a debt of 1s. 6d., was brought from a distant part of the county, the expenses consequent to the county were not less than 50s."

We about a list to park whether the Screen

We should like to ask, whether the Savage, braining, roasting, ay, and, if you please, eating his victim, can display so disgusting, so heartless, and so cruel a spectacle as is thisthe heart of London, the capital of a glorious people,-if not all professors of the meek doctrines of Jesus, at least all philosophers and philanthropists! Alas! for the difference, we might go to New Zealand; and when we found them bad there, to Tristan d'Acunha, where there are only five or six individuals and beasts; and when Tristan d'Acunha offended us, go to our graves.

But suppose, in the first instance, as critics, we leave our cannibal friends for a while, to see how our author fared at the aforesaid Tristan, &c. — which caunot be till next week; and though we have allotted so much of ting into a rage, and murdering them without our well-crammed sheet to this single volume, further ceremony. On entering a village, a we are sure our return to it, for another no-vided himself with a shovel or a pickaxe, we stranger instantly discovers which portion of tice, will be welcome: yet we would rather repaired in a body to the spot. Atoi and his its inhabitants are the slaves, though both the advise our readers, within reach, to anticipate us, by reading the volume itself.

and Bentley.

If there be one period of our history more the peculiar property of the novelist than another, it is the era of the Stuarts' dominion; for the domestic tragedy, the romantic adventure, the intrigue of the court, the excitement of the battle, mingle together, till, amid abundance of material, the chief puzzle is, where to choose. But the easiness of the task is more apparent than real; for when a reader's expectations have been so highly raised, they are not easily satisfied; and the ill-nurtured harvest of a very fertile soil is often disappointment. It is very difficult to make an historical character act up to a previously conceived idea; and a second difficulty is, using events whose interest has already become familiar, or diverging too much —thereby shocking old habits and beliefs. Mr. James has most happily steered clear of all these shoals and rocks "of old romance:" the scene is historical, the personages ficitious (with the exception of a spirited sketch of Ireton); the colouring of that adventurous period is excellently preserved, and the interest of the story maintained to the last. Masterton is, in our opinion, a great improvement on Philip Augustus; it has more individuality, consequently more attraction of character; the scenes are more dramatic, and the novelist is never forgotten in the antiquary: we enter into the identity of the reserved yet impassioned Frank Masterton, the beautiful Eleanor, the reckless, the ambitious, and guilty Dixon; while the boy, Ball-o'-fire, is a new and striking picture of what such a being would be, with the daring temper worked upon by strong attachment. In giving the felatrocities among ourselves? We copy the following scene, we shall only say there are many lowing paragraph from the Morning Herald of like it; and premise, by way of explanalowing scene, we shall only say there are many tion, that the two brothers are on the march to join Lord Goring, from whose forces the younger is just returned, after a successful skirmish, which should have been led on by the elder one. Henry Masterton is narrating to his brother the details of the preceding day.

"Who, bred and nurst In danger's face, has dared its worst,"

"As I proceeded, the countenance of my brother changed; the sentiments of duty, patriotism, and honour, which had been smothered in other feelings, but not extinguished, blazed up again in his bosom; the aspiration for glory and distinction, which all feel or have felt, revived; the colour came and went in his cheek with a fitful rapidity, almost equal to the flickering of the summer lightning on the verge of the evening sky; and as I spoke of strife, and conquest, and success, and triumph, he cast himself down on the cushions, and hid his face immediately for Maidstone; he expects you there to meet him by to-morrow morning, at eight o' the clock, as he intends, if possible, to make a stand there. A general battle must immediately take place; the former was but a skirmish. March with all speed, command your regiment in the moment of danger and difficulty, and win glory that will render all mistakes forgotten at once.' was awakened, and starting up from the couch, my brother declared he would go, if-he was resolved to go, but— I feel sure that I could have soon dissolved those ifs and buts, far more easily than Hamilcar's son reduced the rocks of the Alpine passes. All might have been explained, all might have been remedied, but at that moment Lady Eleanor entered the room, and Frank's good resolves were petrified in a moment. The inferior soul resumed its ascendency; the confidence between us was destroyed; and he felt ashamed, I am sure, at having yielded, even as much as he had done, to the counsels which would have freed him from the mental thraldom that bound him down. 'I fear I interrupt you, gentlemen,' said Lady Eleanor, pausing in her advance; 'I fear l break in upon some matter of deep import, and her eye glanced from the now animated countenance of my brother to mine, striving to read whether the feelings that sparkled in each were amicable or angry. I was silent; for I felt that she not only interrupted my discourse, but all my best designs. Frank, however, replied with a smile, 'Not in the least, dearest lady! not in the least!' and as he spoke he took her hand, and led her to her seat near the window, adding, 'Our conversation will soon be over on important subjects. Harry, I can and will join Lord Norwich tomorrow, but it cannot be by eight o'clock.' 'Then you may as well not join him at all, Frank,' I answered somewhat impatiently, as I saw new delays blighting all that I had accomplished. 'Lord Goring's orders are, that the regiment be at Maidstone by eight at latest, and they must be obeyed.' Lady Eleanor passed her hand twice across her eyes; and Frank replied, resuming at once the cold, stern tone he had been accustomed to use, 'That, sir, is my business: the regiment cannot be there by eight—no, nor by nine.' I was now convinced that all would again be lost, without-some great effort to change his determination; and I made one, which nothing but the painful circumstances in which I was placed could justify— which nothing else could have induced me to attempt. Not that that measure was one of thought and calculation; on the contrary, it was one of impulse, the last resource of my mind, in despair of seeing a brother act as his duty, his honour, and his name required.

'Lady Eleanor Fleming,' I said, advancing to the spot where that lady sat, with the tears clustered in her beautiful eyes, and scarcely withheld from running over, even by all wo-man's habitual command of her own feelings, Lady Eleanor Fleming, mine is a hard task! I speak to my brother, who is as dear to me as ever brother was to brother - I speak to him as advocate for his own honour, for his own duty. Do not interrupt me, Frank, for pity's sake! for indeed I would interest a more persuasive voice than mine, to plead the same cause. Lady, I bear him the direct orders of his commander-in-chief, to march his regiment a short and easy distance, by a particular hour, in order to share in movements and efforts, on which the safety of the king and the realm depend, as the last stake which can be played for the crown of this country. Speak, lady, if, as I believe, you hold him dear, and urge him to the straightforward duty that lies before him! Speak, for the love of Heaven! for he is rnining himself, and casting away his honour as a soldier!' No language can express the bright but beautiful colour that overspread her face, at an appeal which touched, perhaps too boldly, 'This, sir, is, I suppose, the first-fruits of on feelings that I was supposed not to know; your fraternal intercession,' he said. 'It is lage is thus introduced to us?

The good spirit | but it was my last hope of influencing my bro- | truly creditable to your heart.' ther by gentle means, and, as far as engaging her voice also. I was successful - unexpectedly successful. 'Colonel Masterton,' she said, with her cheeks still glowing, 'I know not, I cannot imagine, that my voice should have such power as your brother supposes; but yet, as he has spoken boldly, I will not dissemble; and, as your interest and your honour are dear to me —most dear—for both their sakes I advise, I pray you, to obey the orders you have received.' While she spoke, she fixed her eyes full upon him; and her words flowed with rapid and energetic eloquence, while her cheeks, her neck, her brow, were all crimson, with feeling and with consciousness; but the moment she ceased, she dropped her eyes to the ground, resumed her seat, the colour faded in her cheek, and, instead of the eager fire that had but a moment before sparkled in her glance, the tears burst forth and overflowed the long dark curtain of her eyes. 'Dear lady,' replied Frank, in a soft but determined tone, 'it must not and it cannot be. I will be responsible to Lord Norwich for my own conduct. As for you, sir, he added, turning sternly towards me, have taken this day an unwarrantable liberty with me and with this lady; and though, like many other offences, I resent it not because I am your brother, as your commanding officer I will not have my commands disputed, or my will cavilled at. Go, sir, to the regiment; see that all be prepared to march at nine tomorrow. Answer me not, sir! for I am at least colonel of the regiment, and will be obey-ed. 'The liberty I took with that lady, Frank,' I replied, 'was solely, through her persuasion _I may say, her noble and generous counsel_ to save you from a far greater pain, that you must now suffer. You are not, as you suppose, colonel of this regiment; and, whether you will or not, it marches for Maidstone to-morrow, at five in the morning.' 'How now, sir?— you are mad!' exclaimed he, advancing towards me, with his eyes flashing as if they were full of lightnings. 'You are surely become insane, and have lost what little wit you ever possessed! Or is this mere insubordinate insolence?' he added. 'We will soon see whether I am, or am not, colonel of the regiment. Ho! without there.' He called from the open window to the sentinel on the steps-' Order up a sergeant's guard with all speed. By Heaven, I will bear with it no longer!' You had better calm yourself, Frank Masterton,' I replied; 'the guard must be turned to other purposes than that for which you called it. Yet one word more, Frank: will you march to-morrow at five?' 'I will not!' he anshield your honour and to promote your wel-fare. He held my hand as if he were about to speak; but the words failed him; and, turning swered, striking his clenched hand upon the table. 'Well then, sir, rejoined I, 'from George Lord Goring, Earl of Norwich, you reWe will just mention that Frank ceived your commission, and from George Lord Goring I bear you your supersedure; and if you follow my advice, you will make the best of your way back to Devonshire; for if you fall into the hands of the Roundheads, they will probably shoot you for active loyalty you have too little displayed; while if you fall into those of Lord Goring, even a brother's inter-cession I do not think would save you from death, for treachery that you did not intend to practise.' Frank had turned deadly pale while he gazed upon the copy of his supersedure, which I handed to him; and I could see the struggle for firmness which was long going on unsuccessfully in his bosom. At length, how-

'Oh, Frank!' cried Lady Eleanor, laying her hand tenderly upon his arm, ' do not embitter your own feelings and your brother's by useless taunts. with him! go with him! in God's name! Do not I make a sacrifice?' she added, in a lower voice, whose tone was sunk, not for conceal-ment apparently,—for I could distinguish every word, but from deep feeling, and the consciousness of much that could not be forgotten. Do I not sacrifice hope, and joy, and affection, by that very counsel? Do I not give myself up to tears, and memory, and regret?'
'Ellen!' said my brother, pressing her hand in his, 'it cannot be! I cannot, and I will not, be commanded by a boy,—and that boy a brother, who has wronged me.' Indeed, indeed, Frank!' I replied, pained and softened by the deep agitation under which I saw him writhe-'indeed I have not wronged you, nor do I seek to command you, as you fancy; no, not for a moment. Look here! But promise me to march to-morrow at five, and I tear the supersedure at once, resume my place at the head of my troop, and serve under your orders as before. This permission I extorted from Lord Goring, and it was granted, as the re-ward of what I had done in that morning's skirmish. If you will march, the supersedure is at an end. Indeed, Frank, I act from affection, and not from rivalry or ambition.' I spoke I laid my hand on his, which was as cold as death. His first impulse was to snatch it hastily from me; but a moment after, he gave it me again, saying, in a tone of deep me-lancholy, 'I believe you, Harry! I believe you, after all! I feel I have done you wrong. But it matters not: I am ruined and undone for ever! My honour and my character are lost, and must be lost_I cannot go! Do not press me further—I cannot go. I know the risk and the consequences—but I cannot go. Take the command, Harry; go and gain ho-nour and glory, and distinguish your name! Fate plays the game against me, and I must lose.' I tried to persuade him to better things: I used every argument, every motive, every reason, that I could devise. Lady Eleanor forgot all, and clung to his arm in tears, beseeching him to obey the orders he had received: but it was in vain. He grasped my hand firm in his; he pressed her to his bosom; and then turned to the door, repeating, 'It cannot be ! Well,' I answered, 'be it as you would, Frank; and believe me - oh believe me, that in all I have done, my first wish has been to

We will just mention that Frank has become entangled in a duel, his duty and his honour being thus at variance; and we now leave our readers to their curiosity, increased, we hope, by our hearty commendations. We have always thought highly of Mr. James's talents, and we consider Henry Masterton as their most finished production.

The Village Poor-House. By a Country Curate. 18mo. pp. 61. London, 1832. Smith, Elder, and Co.

IT is of no use mincing the matter: upon the present occasion (as every person says in every public speech) we proclaim ourselves to be Radicals. How can we be otherwise, when " Here might the pensive sinner creep, To mourn his wicked courses; Here might the pensive sinner creep.
To mourn his wicked courses:
Here o'er his 'youth's fond errors' weep;
What matter, though the rector keep
His carriage and four horses?
Weep on, thou man of sin and tears!
But trouble not the rector's ears.
The rectory stands all aloof,
And rears its proudly shated roof
In middle of a stately park
(Five acres and a perch):
The porter's lodge, where lives the clerk,
Gives entrance by an iron gate, The porter's lodge, where lives the tierla, Gives entrance by an iron gate, Wide opened upon days of state, When my lady drives from church; For my lady's knees are so stiff with kneeling, And her nerves so strain'd with devotional feeling, That she sends for the carriage and takes a drive, And comes home to dinner at half-past five."

But the rector, after all, is not so pestiferous a fellow as the lawyer, thus cleverly sketched :-

sllow as the lawyer, thus cleverly sketched:

"That house on 'tother side the green,
So proud of its verandah screen,
That it almost seems to sneer
(If its stone-and-mortar looks you watch)
On the clay-built walls and roof of thatch
Of its humble neighbours near,—
That house the attorney calls his own,
And he coloured it all like the best Bath stone,
And raised two pillars of painted wood,
And on either side of his door they stood it,
And built a high wall with rails upon 't—
For he could not endure that his windows should lie
Exposed to every vulgar eye:
The principal gate is always barred,
But a door leads through the stable-yard;
And see! just over the wall, you can get
A view of the roof of his barouchette,
Blasoned and gilt for his lady's rides,
And he keeps a green gig for himself besides."
These are contrasted with the poor-house: These are contrasted with the poor-house:

These are contrasted with the poor-house

"Within yos paper-windowed room
A group in sadness and in gloom
Is sitting; and, though no one speaks,
Look only on their eyes and cheeks!
It needs not language to express
Their tale of misery and distress;—
The village poor-house, paupers they,
Men, young, and sinewy, and strong,
Condemned to see, day after day,
Their moments creep along
In aloth, for they have nought to do,
And, start ye not, in hunger too!
Yes! hunger gnawing like a worm,
Yet armed with more than reptile fangs,
Wearing away the manly form,
While scarce tobacco soother its pangs.
And women—young,—they might be fair,
Save that the blackness of despair
Is shed o'er every feature there,
And gives to lips that might have smiled
A curl of desperation wild,
To eyes that might have beamed,—a look
Which virtue cannot wear nor brook!
Such are they in that chamber dim,
Sileat, and desolate, and grim.
There's a wit at the parson's board to-day—
How fast he speaks, and the party how gay!
The gentlemen roar at a college joke,
The ladies blush at an équivoque,
And ever as livelier leaps the champagne,
Still merrier grows the jester's strain:
Ha ha!—how his puns would fall flat and dead,
If his auditors souls were faint for bread;
How shudderingly from his quips they'd start,
If hunger and thirst were gnawing the heart!

If his auditors' souls were faint for bread;
How shudderingly from his quips they'd start,
If hunger and thirst were grawing the heart!
Music!—a lady's jewelled finger
Fondly seems to love to linger
O'er the harp's enamoured string,
Ere she opes her lips to sing
Rosies, posies, blies, and kiss.
Every hand is raised in praise
Of the sentimental lays,
And tears, ay tears, are seen to pour
O'er the mock miseries of Moore!"

Our author proceeds to make the paupers sing songs. One Will Somers, a stout fellow, begins, and swears he'll turn poacher; a pretty child of nine years old is starved, because the overseers take a shilling a-week from her mother to defray a dead sister's funeral; a well-fed farmer, who grumbles at paying tithes and rent, looses his mastiff to tear down a beggar soliciting charity; Will Morley (another songster) has an amour, a consequence, a gaol, and turns a hardened felon; the 'squire also has an amour, but he marries off the lady's maid to the butler, and there is a fine wedding; despair, and excused crime, on the lower orders. It is a strange production, much exaggerated; but there is too wide a curse of wretchedness abroad over the land, not to force the earnest prayer that there were less grounds for pictures and statements so fearfully calculated to stir up every bad passion, and make bad worse: we cannot say white black, and we will not black white.

Lights and Shadows of American Life. Edited by Mary Russell Mitford. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Colburn and Bentley.

WE are delighted with these volumes; the stories they contain are varied, graphic, and thoroughly American; we feel that we are on a new soil, and that new fruits are around us. The characteristics of these tales are as different as the tales themselves. "The Politician," by Mr. Paulding, is admirable for its mixture of sound and lively satire; it ought to be in every Transatlantic library-and as for that, it would be equally valuable here; for never was there a time when the quicksands of popularity and politics more required a beacon. "Azure Hose" is very lively, but seems to us exaggerated; still, when we do know how silly people are near us, we need not doubt that they are just as silly at a distance. However, we enter our protest against the commonplace declamation about Lord Byron's misanthropy. "Elizabeth Latimer" is a singularly touching story. "Modern Chivalry" is a pleasant impossibility, but narrated with so much animation by Miss Sedgewick, that the impossibility never occurs to us till afterwards. But our favourite is "The Young Backwoodsman"
—a story perfect in its kind; it is the history of a family struggling under every difficulty, but supported by a trusting, earnest piety, joined to an ardent spirit of honest exertion, and is written with a beautiful truth and simplicity: it is, moreover, a most exact picture of life in those vast wildernesses, where even now similar events are passing, and of which we know so little. This story alone we should think a treasure to any youthful reader; it has not only the utility of Miss Edgeworth's pages, their stimulus of duty and industry, but at the same time a tone of deep and poetical feeling which is perhaps her only deficiency. We now proceed to a few lively extracts from Mr. Paulding's "Politician;" beginning, however, with a serious but very just remark.

"One of the most dangerous characters in the world is a man who habitually sacrifices the eternal, immutable obligations of truth and justice, and the charities of social life, at the shrine of an abstract principle, about which one half of mankind differs from the other half. Whether this abstract principle is connected with religion or politics is of little consequence; since, after all, morals constitute the essence of religion, and social duties the foundation of government. Whatever is essentially necessary to the conduct of our lives, the performance of our duties to our families, our neighbours, and our country, is easy of comprehension; and it requires neither argument nor metaphysics to teach us what is right or what is wrong. These are great fundamental principles, modified indeed by the state of society and the habits of different nations; but their nature and obligations are every where the same, inflexible and universal in their application. A close examination of the history of the world in every age will go far to convince us that a vast portion of the crimes, and miseries, and oppressions of in short, there is nothing but corruption and mankind has originated in a difference, not in mental principles, but vague, indefinite abstractions, incomprehensible to the great mass. and having not the remotest connexion with our moral and social duties. When men come to assume these contested principles, these metaphysical refinements, as indispensable to the salvation of the soul or the preservation of the state, and to substitute them in the place of the everlasting pillars of truth and justice, they cast themselves loose from their moorings. drift at random in the stream, the sport of every eddy, the dupes of every bubble, the victims of every shoal and quicksand. Instead of sailing by the bright star of mariners, which sparkles for ever in the same pure sphere, they shape their course by the fleeting vapour which is never the same; which rises in the morning a fog, ascends a fantastic cloud, and vanishes in the splendours of the noontide sun."

Political Candour. — " The wife of my guardian made it a point of faith never w believe any thing good of the females of the opposite party; and though she was too conscientious to invent scandals herself, she religiously believed the slanders of others. Her candour never went beyond acknowledging that she believed ignorance, and not wickedness, was at the bottom of their want of political principle.

Parties. - " At the time I am speaking of. parties were at the height of contention, and the demons of discord, in the disguise of two editors of party newspapers, flapped their soo; wings over the little state. There was a great contest of principle, on the decision of which depended the very existence of the liberties, not only of our little state, but of the whole union. I never could find out what this principle was exactly; but it turned on the question, whether a certain bridge about to be built should be a free bridge or a toll bridge. The whole state divided on this great question of principle. The Honourable Peleg Peshell was at the head of the free bridge, on which depended the great arch of our political union; and the Honourable Dibble Dibbles, whose principles were always exactly opposite, forth-with took the field as leader of the toll bridge party. The Honourable Peleg declared it was against his principles to pay toll; and the Honourable Dibble Dibblee found it equally against his principles to apply any part of his money to building a bridge which was to bring him nothing in return. Both sides accused the other of being governed by interested mo-tives. Such is the injustice of party feeling! There was a Tertium quid party, growling in an under-tone, which was opposed to having any bridge at all; upon the principle, that as it would be no advantage to them, and at the same time cost them money, it was their interest to oppose the whole affair. The leader of this party was the Honourable Tobias Dob, a ruling elder of the principal church in Dobsboroughvilleton."

Wanting a Place .- " I was called out of my bed early one cold winter morning, by a person coming on business of the utmost consequence. and dressed myself in great haste, supposing it might be a summons to a cabinet council When I came into my private office, I found a queer, long-sided man, at least six feet high, with a little apple head, a long queue, and a face, critically round, as rosy as a ripe cherry. He handed me a letter from his Excellency the Honourable Peleg, recommending him particularly to my patronage. I was a little inclined to be rude, but checked myself, remembering that I was the servant of such men as my profligacy in the upper classes, inflicting misery, morals, but in abstract ideas; not in funda- visiter, and that I might get the reputation of an aristocrat if I made any distinction between was rolling onwards in the path of improveman and man. 'Well, my friend, what situa-tion do you wish?' 'Why-y-y, I'm not very particular; but some how or other, I think I should like to be a minister. I don't mean of the gospel, but one of them ministers to foreign parts.' 'I'm very sorry, very sorry indeed, there is no vacancy just now. Would not something else suit you?' 'Why-y-y,' answered the apple-headed man, 'I wouldn't much care if I took a situation in one of the departments. I wouldn't much mind being a comptroller, or an auditor, or some such thing.' 'My dear sir, I'm sorry, very sorry, very sorry indeed, but it happens unfortunately that all these situations are filled. Would not you take something else?' My friend stroked his chin, and seemed struggling to bring down the soar-ings of his high ambition to the present crisis. At last he answered, 'Why-y-y, ye-e-s; I don't care if I get a good collectorship, or inspectorship, or surveyorship, or navy agency, or any thing of that sort.' 'Really, my good or any thing of that sort.' 'Really, my good Mr. Phippenny,' said I, 'I regret exceedingly that not only all these places, but every other place of consequence in the government is at present occupied. Pray think of something else.' He then, after some hesitation, asked for a clerkship, and finally the place of mes-senger to one of the public offices. Finding no vacancy here, he seemed in vast perplexity, and looked all round the room, fixing his eye at length on me, and measuring my height from head to foot. At last, putting on one of the drollest looks that ever adorned the face of man, he said, 'Mister, you and I seem to be built pretty much alike, haven't you some old clothes you can spare?' 'Oh, what a falling off was there!' from a foreign mission to a suit of old clothes, which the reader may be assured I gave him with infinite pleasure, in reward for the only honest laugh I enjoyed for years afterwards."

How Eggs are boiled .- " Mr. Lightfoot Lee was exceedingly particular in boiling his eggs, which he was accustomed to say required more discretion than any other branch of the great art of cookery. The preparations for this critical affair were always made with due so-lemnity. First, Mr. Lee sat with his watch in his hand, and the parlour-door, as well as all the other doors down to the kitchen, wide open. At the parlour-door stood Juba, his oldest, most confidential, servant. At the end of the hall leading to the kitchen, stood Pomp, the coachman; at the foot of the kitchen stairs stood Benjamin, the footman; and Dolly, the cook, was watching the skillet. 'It boils,' cried Dolly: 'It boils,' said Benjamin: 'It boils,' said Pompey the great: and 'It boils,' echoed Juba, Prince of Numidia. 'Put them in,' said Mr. Lee: 'Put them in,' said Juba: 'Put them in,' said Pomp; and 'Put them in,' said Po in,' said Dolly, as she dropped the eggs into the skillet. Exactly a minute and a half afterwards, by his stop-watch, Mr. Lee called out 'Done;' and 'Done' was repeated from mouth to mouth as before. The perfection of the in which the volume is got up, and the pains whole process consisted in Dolly's whipping bestowed upon its contents, we could not refer out the eggs in half a second from the last echo of the critical ' Done."

Pattern Friends. _ " These two gentlemen had a sincere regard for each other, kept up, in all its pristine vigour, by the force of contrast. One took every thing seriously; the other considered the world and all things in it a jest. One worshipped the ancients; the other maintained they were not worthy of tying the shoestrings of the moderns. One insisted that the world was going backwards; the other, that it book was published in his name, for he had ment, beyond all former example. One was a violent federalist; the other a raging democrat. They never opened their mouths without disagreeing, and this was the cement of their friendship. The mind of Mr. Lee was not fruitful, and that of Mr. Fairweather was somewhat sluggish in suggesting topics of conversation. Had they agreed in every thing, they must have required a succession of subjects; but, uniformly differing, as they did on all occasions, it was only necessary to say a single word, whether it conveyed a proposition or not, and there was matter at once for the day. 'A glorious morning,' said Mr. Fairweather, rubbing his hands. 'I differ with you,' said Mr. Lee. 'It is a beautiful sunshine.' 'But, my good eir, if you observe, there is a cold, wet, damp, hazy, opaque sky, through which the sun cannot penetrate; 'tis as cold as December.' 'Tis as warm as June,' said Mr. Fairweather, laughing. 'Pish!' said Mr. Lee, taking up his hat mechanically, and following his friend to the door. They sallied forth without saying a word. At every corner, however, they halted, to renew the discussion; they disputed their way through a dozen different streets, and finally returned home, the best friends in the world, for they had assisted each other in getting through the morning.

Mr. Lee invited Mr. Fairweather to return to dinner, and he accepted. 'Well, it does not signify,' said Mr. Lee, bobbing his chin up and down, as was his custom when uttering what he considered an infallible dictum - 'it does not signify; that Fairweather is enough to provoke a saint. I never saw such an absurd, obstinate, ill-natured, passionate ——' 'O father,' said Lucia, 'every body says Mr. Fairweather was never in a passion in his life.' Well, but he is the cause of passion in others, and that is the worst kind of ill-nature."

As we intend, if possible, referring to these volumes next week-for Mr. Flint's " Young Backwoodsman" deserves a review of itself we shall now conclude, by especially pointing the reader's attention to "The Isle of Flowers," a story of great beauty; and to "Pinchon," a curious sketch of an Indian trader.

Scottish Proverbs. Collected and arranged by Andrew Henderson: with an Introductory Essay by W. Motherwell. 12mo. pp. 255. Edinburgh, 1832, Oliver and Boyd; London, Longman and Co.

THE genius, wit, and spirit of a nation are discovered in their proverbs (quoth Lord Bacon); and the editor of this very complete collection, Mr. Motherwell, has, in a preface of eightyeight pages, given us an excellent key to the same, in so far as regards Scotland, though done in an off-hand, flourishing, care-we-not style. His cursory glance at earlier works of the same kind, and extracts from several MSS., are interesting to the antiquary and general reader; and, altogether, for the neat fashion to a performance more deserving to be set by the side of Ray, or any other proverbial worthy, than this edition of Andrew Henderson.

Beaton, archbishop of Glasgow, set the example, by printing a collection of Scots proverbs above two hundred years ago; which David Ferguson, minister of Dunfermline, a friend and follower of John Knox by the by, seems to have republished with additions, if not an entirely different work, in 1642 (or rather, the been long dead). Of this Ferguson Mr. Motherwell savs.

" Respecting his facetions turn of mind, we have the following aneodotes:-A number of Ferguson's witty sayings are recorded by his son-in-law, John Row. James VI. who resided frequently at Dunfermline, used to take great delight in his conversation. 'David,' James to him one day, 'why may not I have bishops in Scotland as well as they have in England? 'Yea, sir,' replied Ferguson, 'ye may have bishops here; but remember ye must have us all bishops, else will ye never content us. For if ye set up twelve louns over honest men's heads (honest men will not have your anti-christian prelacies), and give them more thousands to debauch and mispend than honest men have hundreds or scores, we wil never al be content. We ar Paul's bishopis, sir, Christ's bishopis: ha'd us as we are.' 'The deil haid bishopis; ha'd us as we are.' 'The deil haid aills you,' replied James, 'but that ye would all be alike; ye cannot abide ony to be abone you.' 'Sir!' said the minister, 'do not ban.'— Row's Coronis to his Historie of the Kirk, p. 314. Ferguson seems to have amused himself with some of those incidents which were generally reckoned ominous. The king having once asked him very seriously what he thought was the reason that the master of Gray's house shook during the night? He answered, 'Why should not the devil rock his awin bairns?"

James Kelly is the next on the list. He published in London, 1721, and has since, recently, been republished. Allan Ramsay also gave the world a work of the same kind, of which our author speaks unfavourably; but we need not travel into detail.

A production of this kind is neither for onward reading nor critical quotation; but we will dip here and there for a specimen. " The three great manuscript treasuries of ancient Scottish poetry, are the Asloan MS. preserved in the Auchinleck Library, written about the year 1515; the Bannatyne and the Maitland MSS., the first of which is in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, and the latter in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge." In the Advocates' Library is a MS. of proverbs or maxims, by George Bannatyne, compiled in 1568, of which the following is an example :-

" Quha handillis pik or tar "Quha handillis pik or tar he is nocht hasty cleme; a wound quhen it is grene Is the soner heilit; a byle that is lang beilit Brekis at the last; auld kyndness past, Suld nocht be forzett; be blyth at thi mest, Devoit in distres; ffor littill mair or less mak thow as debait; bettir is the hie gait nor the by-rod; he that douttis nocht god Sali nocht faill to fall; he that cuvatis all Is abill to tyne; about myne and thyne rysis mekle stryfe; he hes a gratius lyfe That can be content."

In 1586, John Maxwell, younger, of Southbar, Renfrewshire, also made a MS. collection called Proverbs and Reasownes, which has been preserved. We annex two or three of them.

reserved. We annex two or three of them.

"He that wald reache the sweite rose sould now and then be scratched with the scharpe bwers.

"Enwy schotsch always at byth markes.

"The panther with his gay colours and sweit smell allureth wther beistis wnto him, and being witin his reache he rauenouslie dewoireth thame.

"Perfect lowe can newer be without equalitie.

"Ewery dram of delyt hath a pound of spite, and ewery inche of joy hath and ell of annoy sanexed wnto it.

"He careth not for eiss ouths was negle trubled with

- He careth not for eiss quhe was neuir trubled with

- "He careth not for eiss quha was neuir trubled with discis.
 "Wnder most greene grasse ly most greate snakes.
 "Those that lowe most speak least.
 "They that haif ance passed the boundes of schame-fastnes may ewer after lawfullie be impudent.
 "The mastive newer loweth the grewhounde.
 "The fische bred in durtie pooles will taist of mwde.
 "Set a beggar on borsback and he will newer alyt.
 "The camelion hath maist guttis, and draweth leist breath.

"The finest edge is made with the blwnt whetstone."

These must suffice as curious antiques. We is profitable to cultivate, that would not raise differ, perhaps, from Mr. Motherwell in his fault to find. The only other observation we to witches or fairies in old proverbs; which, considering the force of the superstitions concerning both, is certainly strange.

The proverbs in this volume are arranged according to subjects. It is hardly necessary to extract any of them, but we copy a few of the gems of rhyming wisdom.

"When I did weel I heard it never, When I did ill I heard it ever.

"He that thy friend has bene ryt lange, Suppose sumtyme he do the wrange; Condeme him not, bot aye him meine, For kindness that before has been.

" When Adam delved and Eve span, Where was then the gentleman?
Upstarted a carl and gathered gude,
And thence came a' our gentle bluid.

"Do what ye ought, and come what can: Think o' ease, but work on.

March borrows frae April, three days, and they are ill;
 April borrows frae March again, three days o' wind

pril borrows frae March again, three days of and rain.

March said to April,
Leud me days three;
I see three hogs upon you hill,
I'll try to gar them die.
The first day was wind and west;
The second day was snaw and sleet;
The third day was sto a freeze,
It frose the bird's nebs to the trees:—
But when the three days were come and gane,
The three little hoggles cam toddling hame.

"If the first of July be rainy weather,
It will rain mair or less for four weeks together.
If the twenty-fourth of August be fair and clear,
Then hope for a prosperous autumn that year."

We have only to add, that there is a good glossary, and some very clever and characteristic prints.

An Historical and Practical Treatise upon Elemental Locomotion, &c. By Alexander Gordon, Civil Engineer. 8vo. pp. 192. London, 1832. Steuart.

THE commercial, political, and moral advantages of inanimate over animate power - the methods by which an elementary power is ob-tained — the rise, progress, and description of steam-carriages — the roads upon which they may be made to travel, and the ways and means for their general introduction,—are the objects of the work before us — a work full of interest and valuable information. The improvement of commerce, and the increase of the strength, wealth, and happiness of a nation, being connected with facility of communication, our author shews, with no small degree of plausibility, how it might be ensured by the adoption of an elementary locomotive power, instead of unproductive animal transportation; by which substitution, an increase of food, equivalent to the consumption of sixteen millions of mouths, would, he asserts, be obtained. This statement is founded upon the argument that every horse consumes, on an average, as much as eight human beings, and that two millions of horses are actually employed in commercial transportations in this great kingdom. But, as a whole, it forms an erroneous aggregate; since, allowing for the money sunk in horse-purchase, we cannot see that the remainder is unproductive capital, as not being the produce of an extended agriculture and proportionate outlay; for all grass lands will not bear tillage—though we may agree with Colonel Torrens (Evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons) that it is doubtful if there be any land which it some other agricultural produce than oats. argument in favour of the coarse sententious. The important truisms which may, however, ness of some of our ancestors; but as he does be deduced from the contemplated improvenot act upon his own reasoning, we have no ment in our commercial and political relations, from these sinews of a greater fabric of wealth have to make is, that Mr. M. notices as a reand prosperity, are deserving of the highest markable fact, that there are very few allusions attention; and the moral advantages which would accrue to society in dispensing with the three-years' life of a suffering stage-coach horse, in the diminished casualties, the increase of convenience, and the constancy of communication, are not of that trifling importance which some would appear to urge. We said diminished casualties; and there can be no doubt, notwithstanding the fearful accidents which have marked the first introduction of railways into this country, that even in their present state, independently of the morbid influences of exposure on the outside of a coach, that the dangers are fewer in vehicles impelled by the power of gases or vapour than by animal exertion; and the very great perfection which has been attained in the construction of boilers prevents almost the possibility of any thing like bursting, of which a glance at the designs accompanying the work before us would, we think, satisfy the most timorous. It appears, as a result of Mr. Gordon's historical labours, that the introduction of inanimate for animate power would be the fair and only means of temporarily remedying pauperism in this country; that the elementary power best adapted for locomotion appears as yet to be steam; and that the enormous pressure of gases has hitherto offered an insuperable obstacle to their adoption, though, among these, the ammoniacal gas gives the best prospects; and it farther appears, we are grieved to say, that the modern improvements effected in the machinery by which locomotion is to be obtained, do not afford hopes that, in this present condition, they can effectually rival stage-coach conveyance in cheapness, whatever they may effect in swiftness and in power. In this state of things, with the preliminary considerations of great national advantages, the perfection already at-tained, and the alluring promise of the progressive and certain improvement which is given to us by the results of past efforts, the great public benefit, which, at a more prosperous period, would have been carried into operation by individual philanthropists, the difficulties of the times demand, according to our author, to be taken up as a government measure. ever diversity of opinion may exist on this subject, we can but in justice recommend this excellent elementary and historical treatise to all who feel an interest in great national improvements.

> Sir Simon League, the Traveller; Canto I. 8vo. pp. 83. Paris, 1832. Bennis.

THIS production in English, and of the Juan kind, issues from the French, English, and American Library established on a grand scale in the Rue Neuve-Saint-Augustin, Paris. It opens with considerable talent, and has many smart hits; but there seems to be no definite object, and we tire towards the close :- perhaps Canto II. may let us more into the secret. We quote a few stanzas as a sample of its cleverness.

The priests in Spain :-The priests in Spain:—
"Thicker than ants ecclesiastics crawl,
But less industrious are they; every store
Laid up within their monastery wall
They take from foolish folks, as heretofore,
And glad are such on whom the chance may fall
Of being pillaged most; from all skdes pour
All kinds of luxuries (the seeds of sin);
So monks are fat, and laymen very thin."

The hero's character :--

"A gastronomic tourist on a tour
With many a tit-bit lards his lean narration,
And his rich readers savory treats secure;
Though better things, with moody irritation,
They leave, however tander, for the poor,
Or for the poet, or his observation,
Where love (whose usual ballast is a purse)
Sails smoothly down a rivulet of verse, Launches two joyous creatures on a lake, And lands them on an emerald-girded isle; And lands them on an emerator groces use; Being much better where blue pigeons shake. Their wings, and flowers their pyramids up-pile; Where tender beams untroubled slumbers break, And solitude is startled at a smile; Than with ten thousand pounds a-year, or more, A country villa and a coach and four. A country vina and a coach and rour.

In early days, when duns and debts increased,
The heiress of an earl our hero woosd;
Cards had been issued for the marriage-feast,
Cooks and confectioners their tasks pursued
The company assembled, and the priest
Waited, his finger upon marriage gheat:
Sir Simon League, who quite forgot the day,
Was at a race-course, twenty miles away. Was at a race-course, twenty miles away.
There from her ladyship, but half a bride,
Two letters came, which turned the quivering sca
Of love, and set this absent man aside;
From out her proud heart, cased in fleshly mail,
She turned his image with a toss of pride,
Nor let derogatory thoughts assail
Her injured honour; and Sir Simon soon
Found clouds enough, without a honey-moon. Found clouds enough, without a noney-moon.

Renounced! our jockey in his saddle sate,
And there renounced the sex—but not for wo,
For water, and for roots, but for the fat
Of turtle and of venison, for noyau,
Champagne, and port, and claret, and muscat,
(Just as it rhymes, for he pronounced it so);
Coursing and scouring all the county round,
Until the farmers wished him under ground."

Samouelle's Entomological Cabinet. Nos. III. IV. and V. London, 1832. Andrews.

THIS pretty little publication continues to deserve the praise which we bestowed on it at its first appearance, and we are further glad to see that it has been taken under the patronage of the youthful Princess Victoria. We hope that the support thus given to such undertakings will assist in diffusing the love of natural history. The Cleniocerus aulicus, figured in the third number, is an Austrian insect, of which two specimens alone have as yet been obtained from the county of foreign insects and plants_Devonshire. The isochimenic lines, or lines of equal winter temperature, appear to have their parallel in this country, but not the isotheric, or equal summer heat; and hence the causes of this peculiarity of vegetation, and of the adaptation of the district as a summer residence for invalids. The Gonophocerus rufus, a rare species of the grasshopper tribe, is to be obtained in the month of August on the sloping bank above the Red House, in Battersea Fields. The changes which some species of the Gryllide undergo from local situation, render the distinctions of species sometimes very arbitrary. The Reduvius personatus is recommended to extirpate bed bugs : - how is this insect to be preserved? The brilliant colours and radiance of certain insects, as the Chrysis stroudera, we cannot conceive, any more than in a flower, to afford protection by dazzling the eyes of their enemies. In some cases the representative of analogy of function and habit, as in the wasp and the tiger; in other cases corresponding with ground or foliage; the colour of insects in all instances is more or less connected with the history of their manners. The bee called Andrena nigro-ænea, figured in No. V. (in which we also see a well-timed illustration of the common cockchafer), is attended by a curious parasite, the stylops, of which six different species have been described. Mr. Kirby, who first discovered the nature of this parasitical insect, took them for a kind of acarus, and was astonished, on disengaging one with a pin, to draw forth from the body a white fleshy larva; but his astonishment was increased | France, and the statements it contains. "Menon producing a second, to see its skin burst, and a head as black as ink, with large staring eyes, and antennæ consisting of two branches, break forth, and move itself briskly from side to side. "It looked," he says, "like an imp of darkness just emerging from the infernal regions." We were forcibly struck with the absurdity of giving to the animal kingdom the names of persons, in seeing the figure of Nomada Goodeniana, the bee of silent flight, named after the late Bishop of Carlisle. We remember a gentleman being both extremely frightened and annoyed by a compliment of a similar nature, which Geoffroy St. Hilaire proposed paying to him, by transmitting his name to posterity in connexion with one of the bat tribe; and we wonder that good sense does not point out to every one the folly of trivial names, without meaning in them selves, and certainly no creditable representatives of any of God's most favoured creatures .. We wish this little work prosperity.

An Argument against the Gold Standard; with an Examination of the Principles of the Modern Economists — Theory of Rent, Corn Laws, &c. By D. G. Lubé, M.A. Trin. Coll. Dublin, and of Lincoln's Inn, Barristerat-Law. 8vo. pp. 192. London, 1832. Ridgwav.

In this work, which displays as much ability as any publication of its class upon the various and vitally important questions which it discusses, Mr. Lubé takes his stand against those measures by which our circulating medium, and, with it, our national enterprise and strength, have been crippled; and contests their leading positions with the whole band of political economists. The points at issue forbid our interference (for a small part of one of them would occupy a whole Gazette, and be left unfinished, to boot); but we will say, that this production merits the best attention of the country and its lawgivers, whether friendly or averse to the principles it enforces with so much skill and intelligence.

The Dogmas of the Constitution. By Professor Park, of the King's College, London, and Barrister-at-Law. 8vo. pp. 150.

SELECTED from the professor's recent course of lectures, and a powerful effort to stem the tide of popular opinion at the present period. Without taking either side, we may justly say that it is a production of great ability and research; there is much of constitutional knowledge to be acquired from it, applicable to all

The First Batch; being Minutes taken at a private Meeting of a Society for selecting and returning Delegates to the Chamber about to be elected for the purpose of extirpating the Ten old-fashioned Prejudices. To commence the New Era, Anno 1. Pp. 27. London, 1832. Kennett.

A POLITICAL jeu d'esprit of an original character, in which the wildest schemes of revolution are held up to ridicule with ludicrous effect.

Political Reflections on the Present Crisis, &c. Pp. 88. Edinburgh, Blackwood; London, Cadell.

TRANSLATED from the French of Prince Polignac, this pamphlet has, from the station of its writer, strong claims to public attention, for the view it takes of the political affairs of tal tranquillity," says the author, in lamenting the political excitement of our luckless time, "is requisite to science. Heart's ease is necessarv to literature." Cordially do we unite with him in wishing both restored to an agitated world.

Lives of Nunez de Balbao and Francisco Pisarro; from the Spanish of Quintana. By Mrs. Hodson, author of "Wallace," &c. Edinburgh, Blackwood; 12mo. pp. 359. London, Cadell.

WITH a most panegyrical dedication to Southey, this volume gives us a tolerable translation of the adventures of the early conquerors and butchers of America. The narrative is full of horrors; and we do not think the effect so good as in Trueba's recent work.

The Doomed. 3 vols. London, 1832. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE fictions of which the tradition of the Wandering Jew has been the fertile source have all one radical defect-we can give our sympathies but once, and all human interest is destroyed when the individual takes a lease, as it were, of afflictions. We know that custom is every thing, and to such a being death and sorrow would in time become mere matter of habit. Croly's Salathiel was but the stirring life of an individual encountering only mortal dangers, and of which we at least witnessed but the period of one mortal life. Captain Medwin's Ahasuerus was a brief and terrible outline, where no small minutiæ destroyed the awful whole. Mrs. Norton's Undying One was but a succession of love-affairs; and The Doomed is formed on the same plan, though, from the hero mentioning Babylon, &c. he seems rather intended to represent Cain. Many of the separate scenes are well written, with much wild and rich imagination; and though vague and chaotic as a whole, there are passages which make us anticipate much more from the author's future efforts.

On the Phenomena of Dreams, &c. By W. C. Dendy. 18mo. pp. 154. London, 1832. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.

WHAT is life ?- a dream; but as it passes we are exposed to minor visions and illusions, which have always been subjects of interest, and into some of which Mr. Dendy here inquires. Without going very deeply into the subject, his investigation is of a popular character, and displays both observation and talent. A note upon the phrenological hypothesis may be quoted in proof.

"In Dr. Spurzheim's beautiful demonstraion of the brain, he exhibits it almost as one large convoluted web. While the ultra-phrenologist is unravelling these convolutions, it is strange that he sees not the inconsistency of his cranial divisions. The boundary lines of his organs are drawn across these convolutions. Should we not rather draw them in the direction of their fibres?-for if the faculty be seated in one convolution, that faculty would proceed in the course of its fibres, and not across the fissure, from one lobule to another.'

We have been somewhat amused in a philosophical work to find so many arguments drawn from poets-as if their imaginings were realities; but, altogether, consider this to be a pleasing little volume, on a familiar and inexhaustible topic.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

[In our No. 756, p. 459, last July 16th, was inserted a curious dissertation on the word "Pyne," and referring to its use by Sir W. Scott. Upon this subject the worthy baronet addressed a letter to our very intelligent friend and correspondent, Baron von Fahnenberg, which, as it contains character stic and interesting remarks upon the philological inquiry, we have much pleasure in also giving to our readers.]

SIR, - I am honoured with your most obliging packet, and beg to offer my sincere thanks for its contents. The Liliputian Almanac is cerrainly one of the least ever printed. It defies my old eyesight, unless with the use of powerful magnifying glasses. The list of German poets is extremely interesting, and gives a much more extensive catalogue of names than I was prepared to expect.

The etymological discussion is conducted with research and talent, though I do not feel satisfied as yet that "pyne" is the same with "byrne;" the last is a word well known to the Lowland Scottish, but I have never seen it used as an adjective, which your ingenious theory would infer. I have found it also used as an adjective in the word "pyne-pig," a piece of crockery with a slit in it, in which children hoard their money. I am therefore edified, but not yet quite satisfied with your learned etymology. But the derivation of words is so uncertain and various, that you, Mons. le Baron, will be under no surprise at an old hunter of derivations being hard to please in such a matter.

I readily admit, however, your attempt to be a fair and probable one, and better than one which I made to deduce the word from the French "peine," as if the pyne-doublet was a defence worn in time of necessity and distress. I think I had a quotation from Regi-nald Scot's Discovery of Witchcraft, to prove that your German word. "noth" was used somewhat in the same sense. But as I am obliged to remove from this place to Edinburgh for two months, and have a good deal to do about packing up books and the like, I must entreat you not to let my slowness of faith make you suppose me ungrateful for your kindness, of which no one can be more sensible than your WALTER SCOTT. obliged humble servant, Abbotaford.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

MR. FARADAY on the Bramah lock, and Morden's apparatus for its manufacture. The lock in its principle he stated to be perfect, and its mode of manufacture did not fall short of the beauty of that principle. As the nature of the lock has been long before the public, although it is seldom understood, and as the beautiful machinery employed by Mr. Faraday in the lecture-room to illustrate his subject cannot be here introduced for a similar purpose, we are afraid no useful end would be obtained by enlarging upon it in this notice.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.

THE anniversary of this Institution, which has done more to foster youthful genius for upwards of half a century than any other in the metropolis, took place in Exeter Hall, Strand, in the course of the week. Sir Edward Codrington was called to preside; and the gallant admiral with great suavity delivered the prizes to the successful competitors. There were nearly three thousand persons present, of which number the greater portion was composed of ladies.

Similar to that noticed in L. G. No. 785.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

MAY 30th. — R. I. Murchison, Esq. in the chair. A paper was first read describing a large boulder stone, which occurs on the shore of the Appin, in Argyleshire, by J. Moxwell, Esq. and communicated by W. Smith, Esq. A paper was next read on bones of rhinoceros and hyæna, found in Cefn Cave, in the valley of Cyffredan, by the Rev. E. Stanley. A third paper was read on the basalt of the Titterstone Clee Hill, in Shropshire,—being the concluding part of a memoir on the Ludlow district, begun at a former meeting, by J. Robinson Wright, Esq. employed on the ordnance trigonometrical

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

H. R. H. the President in the chair. The remainder of Mr. Baily's paper on pendulums was read; as were also the conclusion of Mr. Lubbock's on physical astronomy, and another. This was a very numerously attended meeting; several gentlemen were elected and re-elected into the Society. The interruption occasioned by the carrying of three ballot-boxes at the same time round the room,—the mention of each name for ballot at short intervals by the secretary,—its announcement by the president,—the same formula observed after election, all during the reading of elaborate and abstruse papers, render the giving of an outline of them a task from which the most scientific would shrink. H. R. H. noticed the interruption. There will be no meeting in Whitsun-week.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

JUNE 7th. - Mr. Hallam in the chair. Mr. Cole presented a drawing of a bronze figure of a bull found in Cornwall. Lieut.-Col. Juan Gillindo, whose discoveries at Palenque have been mentioned in former Gazettes, presented some antiquities found in central America, consisting of four plaster tablets taken from an ancient tower, a jar, a head of pottery, and some masks or faces of idols. The Rev. T. Rackett communicated an account of several discoveries of Greek coins at Abbey Milton, Five Barrows, and other places in Dorsetshire, several of which, in fine preservation, he exhibited; some were of Seleucus I., who founded the kingdom of Syria, A.c. 312, and others of very remote antiquity. Sir Thomas Philips communicated copies of an ancient chartulary, and other documents relative to the priory of Trenly, (such was the name, as near as we could catch it,) in Kent, discovered at St. Omer's, in France. These documents will be of assistance in completing the new Monasticon. The Society adjourned their meetings to the 21st inst. on account of Whitsun-week.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

JUNE 16th .- Colonel Leake in the chair. A paper was read on Panathenaic vases by J. Millingen, Esq. The writer illustrated with great learning the following subjects of inquiry, in regard to these beautiful remains of ancient art, vis. 1. the various purposes to which vases were applied by the Greeks; 2. reasons peculiar to the Athenians for proposing fictile vases as rewards to the victors in the public games; 3. the true reading of the inscriptions on the Panathenaic amphoræ. His Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify to the Society his intention to contribute 100% annually for the furtherance of the objects of the institution.

THE JAVANESE LANGUAGE.

THIS tongue prevails over nine-tenths of the island of Java; in the mountainous districts the Sundee is spoken, which is, in fact, only a dialect of the former, with a greater admixture of Malay words. The Javanese is in a higher state of cultivation than any other language of the southern archipelago; and its literature is by no means inconsiderable, though Europeans have not hitherto attempted to furnish us the means of studying it, with the exception of the Malay, Javanese, Bali, and Lampung Vocabulary which Sir Stamford Raffles has annexed to his invaluable History of Java. A Javanese Grammar has, however, just appeared, for which we are indebted to M. Gerike, a young and learned Dutchman, who, during a residence of several years in Java, devoted himself to the study, and intends shortly to publish further particulars relative to the language, history, and literature of Java. The Javanese is in this grammar throughout written in the original characters, which form perhaps the most singular Asiatic alphabet. The alphabet, called Tjarakan, in its fundamental features shews its Indian origin, and seems to be derived rather from the ancient Buddic than from the Dewanagari, although it is differently arranged. It is read from left to right, and consists originally of twenty consonants, each of which (as in the Sanakrit) is united to a vowel which was originally a short a, but is now pronounced as a middle tone, between a and o. Besides these twenty audible consonants, there are also twenty mutes, which are added to the latter to indicate the absence of a vowel. There are still five vowel-accents and four semi-vowels annexed to the consonants. The Javanese language has its peculiar modifications of expressions founded on the difference of rank; and these peculiarities constitute, as it were, varieties of dialect. M. Gerike has been careful to distinguish those respective expressions. Thus, a superior in addressing an inferior uses a different term, and vice versa-thus, too, there are expressions for persons of the same rank in familiar conversation, &c. The grammar is extremely simple, as in all the languages of the Indian archipelago. The substantive has neither gender nor number; and even the different cases are not always distinguished by distinctive particles. The adjective undergoes scarcely any change, and the conjugation is but little varied. Hence the entire grammar, though sufficiently detailed, occupies only sixty-nine pages. appended Chrestomathia contains some remarkable pieces; among others, a pretty long official document from Mengku Negoro to the Dutch governor Vanden Bosch. It concludes with the Papali, an extract from a long poem by the famous Prince Kyahi Hagenq Sesselo, who lived about three centuries ago. A very ample index adds to the value of the work. complete Dictionary of the Javanese, by the same author, is announced.

PINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY. [Fifth Notice.]

On descending into the Antique Academy, we are reminded of purgatory, if not of a worse place. The light enters this room so obliquely, and in most parts so scantily, that, to many an unfortunate cornered artist, of public notice "hope can never come." Its general arrangement also is such, and makes one year so closely resemble another, that we them; and in the present instances that intecan hardly persuade ourselves we are not look- rest is greatly increased by the skill and taste ing at the last exhibition. Such as it is, however, we shall proceed to particularise some of its contents.

No. 491. His Majesty Charles X., King of Francs. The original by Gerard; the ename painted in 1829. H. Bone, R.A.—No one can doubt Mr. Bone's fidelity to the original pic-ture. The piece is full of "the pomp and cir-cumstance" of royalty, and is a splendid work of art.

No. 488. Portrait, in enamel, of H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex, from T. Phillips, Esq. R.A. J. Lee.—We have frequently noticed Mr. Lee's rising talents: but we do not recollect to have ever seen them displayed to so much advantage as in this able performance.

No. 501. Virgin, Child, and Angels; enamel, after the original by Carlo Maratti, in the Collection of J. Neeld, Esq., M.P. H. P. Bone.—Subjects like these deserve to endure. They are for all times, and their beauties appeal to all understandings. Mr. Henry Bone has most skilfully done his part, in thus perpetuating one of the principal ornaments of a collection, the varied excellence of which is, we believe, in a great measure the result of his judgment and taste.

